May Report on Winter Wheat Highly Optimistic—Farmers of Ohio Suffer Large Loss by Floods—Roads Prepare for Big Crop.

Earlier predictions as to the progress of crops are reenforced by the May government report on the condition of grain over the country. The indications are that the winter wheat crop will be the largest ever known—513,571,000 bushels, or 143,000,000 bushels more than that of a year ago. A considerable portion of this increase has come through the comparatively larger yields of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, where winter wheat last year was not much of a success. The prospect for spring wheat is also good. Recent rains have been beneficial in the Northwest, although corn planting has been slightly delayed.

It is estimated that the farmers of Ohio have suffered a loss of $16,000,000 on account of the recent floods. High winds in the northern part of the state unroofed many buildings and demolished windmills. The washing away of soil caused a considerable portion of the total damage. The secretary of the state board of agriculture, who made this estimate, recommends that more trees be planted to conserve the moisture and hold the soil. The planting of trees has been urged by many investigators, but little attention seems to be paid to the repeated admonitions.

Go to Australia for Meat

Raising cattle and sheep in Australia by Texans for the American trade is one of the latest developments of the demand for more meat in this country. It is said that arrangements have already been made for the use of 1,000,000 acres in Australia. The meat is to be frozen and sent to San Francisco, where already there is something of a market for foreign meat. The amount of live stock in this country seems to be steadily diminishing, although more than $1,000,000 worth is received every day at the Chicago stock yards. Approximately 1,200 raisers come with consignments to the stock yards daily and 40,000 persons are employed in the packing houses.

An indication of the importance placed by the railways of the Northwest on the increasing crops of North Dakota and Montana and near-by states is shown by the estimated total of $25,000,000 to be spent in new rolling stock already ordered by the Great Northern, Northern Pacific and Northwestern roads. Included in this order are 7,500 box cars. Much better railway facilities are being provided for North Dakota, specially in the western part, where branches are gridironing the space between the Great Northern and Northern Pacific lines.

It is expected that the roads involved in the territory between Chicago and New York will shortly ask the interstate commerce commission for permission to raise freight rates about 5 per cent. On account of the influence on other districts, this increase, if granted, will affect practically all freight rates in the country. A similar request was denied a year or more ago, but there are minor indications that the roads will be listened to more favorably now.

Brief Bits of Business News

—There is something to consider in an investment besides the rate of interest.

—Another mail order concern, capitalized at $10,000,000, has been formed in Chicago, fostered, say the organizers, by the parcel post rates.

—A New York stenographer named Kelly, who was a "dummy" in the reorganization of the Dayton Light and Power Company, has refused to give up the stock deposited in his name and is fighting in the courts for what he says was given to him. Similar action by figureheads may reduce the tendency to conceal real operators.

The Quality Investment

The firm of J. L. Pettyjohn & Co. stands for the Quality Investment only—the investment that is bound to return both the investor's capital and interest.

The Quality Investment guarantees a peaceful mind—less profit, but a certainty that your money will be affected neither by panic, nor catastrophe, nor mismanagement.

This company deals in First Mortgages placed on highly improved farm lands in Eastern Kansas—a territory whose productiveness and consistency of crop yield have been tested throughout a period of many years.

We have operated in this one field for 35 years and have loaned over $25,000,000. We have confined our loans to this territory, because here we knew the investor was assured safety for his money.

We shall be pleased to tell you about our "Quality Investments." Best financial and clientele references. We guarantee our Mortgages.

Address

J. L. PETTYJOHN & COMPANY
OLATHE, :: KANSAS

6% SECURITY, RATE AND SERVICE 6%

Is what we offer YOU in our FIRST LIEN REAL ESTATE MORTGAGES. They are placed only on income bearing property on a basis of 40 per cent actual value.

INTEREST and PRINCIPAL remitted on due date by NEW YORK check.

EIGHT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES attest the soundness of these mortgages by purchasing in increasing volume.

Write for list, information and references to

REYNOLDS MORTGAGE CO.
R. B. BISHOP, Vice-Pres.
FORT WORTH TEXA

6 and 7 % Sure

When you purchase from us a mortgage on Improved Georgia City or Farm Property you take as little chance as is humanly possible. You receive from 6 to 7 per cent and you can be sure of receiving it regularly. Our property appraisals are the work of successful experts. We are extremely careful in our estimates of the moral hazards. We protect your principal with ample security. Let us send you our list of loans and interesting literature. Address "Dept. F."

Sessions Loan & Trust Co., Marietta, Ga.

FIRST MORTGAGE FARM LOANS

6% We offer only select first mortgages on improved Northeastern Oklahoma farms at 40% value of farm. Interest collected semi-annually and remitted investor without charge. 6%

SEND FOR BOOKLET.

PARKER-WISE INVESTMENT CO.
VINITA, OKLAHOMA

Stability, Courtesy and Efficiency

Have Been the Factors in the Growth of the

Illinois Trust & Savings Bank

Without the Assistance of Mergers or Consolidation of Other Banks

Capital and Surplus
$15,000,000.00

LA SALLE ST. &
JACKSON BLVD.

ILLINOIS TRUST SAFETY DEPOSIT COMPANY

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

Selected FARM LOANS

I offer only First Mortgage Farm Loans made by thoroughly reliable firms who have stood the Test of Time. I diversify as to climate, rate and crop yield. Interest and principal collected free.

Ask for Circular No. 101

G·F·CARSON
717 JEFFERSON BUILDING, PEORIA, ILLINOIS.

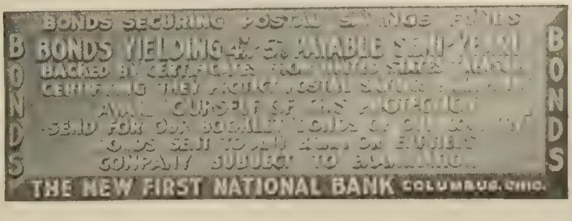
FARM MORTGAGES
6½% and 7% NET

Security double amount of the loan. Title examined and certified by responsible Attorney. Will collect and remit free of charge both interest and principal. I feel sure I can satisfy you. If you have money to loan one to five years, write me and I will explain fully and give you list of references; over thirty years experience and no client ever lost one dollar

B. F. CULP,
P. O. Box 493. Walla Walla, Washington

High Grade Farm Loans
Oklahoma Farm Mortgage Co., Oklahoma City U. S. A.

4 Per Cent



BONDS SECURING POSTAL [illegible]
BONDS YIELDING [illegible]
[illegible]
THE NEW FIRST NATIONAL BANK COLUMBUS, OHIO.

5 Per Cent

6½% First Mortgages
Net
on improved OKLAHOMA FARMS from $200 up are safe investments. I have sold them for years to ultra conservative investors with entire satisfaction. Write today for list and interesting BOOKLET "E." Refer to Dun or Bradstreet.
GEO. R. FISH, "Investment Banker," Ardmore, Okla.

6% 7%
We offer, subject to prior sale, First Mortgages on Improved Farms, also on City Residences and Business Property. Titles guaranteed. Interest collected without expense to investor. Descriptions mailed on request
JEFFERSON TRUST CO.
McAlester - Oklahoma

6% NET GUARANTEED AS WELL AS BACKED BY 20 YEARS OF SUCCESS
Farm Mortgages sold by us net six per cent, and we guarantee their payment. Interest remitted the day due. Write today for booklet and references and ask your local banker to investigate us.
BROAD & BOMAR, Bankers, Ft. Worth, Tex.

$33,000,000 INVESTED IN ALBERTA MORTGAGES
by insurance, trust and loan companies. The Associated Mortgage Investors, Inc., has applied the FORTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE of its Officers to making Alberta loans, which yield 6% NET and have many advantages, including GOVERNMENT GUARANTEED TITLES. Inquiries are welcomed and imply no obligation.
ASSOCIATED MORTGAGE INVESTORS
KINGMAN N. ROBINS, Treasurer, Granite Bldg., Rochester, N.Y.

5½% and 6% Interest
The most careful investor always selects a choice farm mortgage when placing funds. Ask for detailed information, references and list of offerings.
G. W. HART, Pres. The Merchants Bank
BRYANT SOUTH DAKOTA

REAL ESTATE LOANS
6% Safest, Most Promising and Profitable Investment on the Market Today 6%
During the Past 30 Years no Client has Lost a Dollar.
BEVERLY H. BONFOEY
Send for Booklet B UNIONVILLE, MO.

7% FARM MORTGAGES 8%
Title guaranteed. On choice farms in Panhandle and fertile valleys of Eastern New Mexico. No loan made for more than thirty per cent of value, nor closed until examined and approved by our experienced examiner who is an officer of Company. We collect and remit interest free. Larger loans drawn to net investors 7 per cent; small ones, 8 per cent. Write for sample application, references, etc.
The Union Mortgage Company, Clovis, New Mexico

Farm Mortgages 6%
Your money safe and your income sure. Send for descriptive pamphlet "C" and list of offerings. 30 yrs. experience. Highest references
E. J. Lander & Co. Grand Forks, N. D.

The Common Communion Cup Forbidden in Churches

A recent order issued by the Ohio State Board of Health regarding the uses of the public drinking cup prohibits the use of the common communion cup in church services. The same or similar laws have been passed by many other states, and it would now appear that the time is not far distant when the use of the common drinking cup, whether in church, school or other public place, will be against the law in every state in the union.

For a number of years the prejudice against the common communion cup in churches has been growing. Today thousands of churches all over the country are using the individual cup service, with the result that participation in this service has been materially increased by doing away with the very natural fear of contagion.

"Cleanliness is next to godliness," and certainly the church is to be commended for adopting reforms that promote cleanliness.

What Presbyteries Are Doing

Lehigh Presbytery met in Bridge Street church, Catasauqua, Pa. Rev. Harvey Klaer of Easton was elected stated clerk. A popular meeting was addressed by Rev. G. G. Mahy, secretary of General Assembly's committee on evangelism. The evangelistic committee reported the largest additions by examination in the forty-three years of the presbytery's history. Henry Stanley Welty, son of Rev. H. S. Welty of Portland, was received as a student. An overture was sent to General Assembly asking that the Board of Education arrange that some students of foreign speech shall be trained in the homes and under the care of pastors in actual work. The first five overtures from General Assembly, which had been affirmed, were reconsidered and negatived.

Erie Presbytery at Franklin, Pa., elected Rev. J. A. Cunningham, Jamestown, moderator. Walter B. Purnell was licensed. J. Basil Murray of North Warren was taken under care of presbytery. Dr. Samuel A. Cornelius, ex-moderator of synod, addressed presbytery in the interest of Lafayette College and presbytery adopted resolutions indorsing the campaign for $1,000,000 endowment. Rev. A. M. Reed of Greenville was placed on honorably retired roll. Presbytery instructed its committee on church erection to ask a liberal appropriation for a church building for use among the Bohemians and Slavs near Albion.

Encouraged by Revival

Lackawanna Presbytery met in Washburn Street church, Scranton, E. Flack, D. D., pastor. The greatest revival ever known in presbytery has encouraged many ministers in their work, as they are receiving hundreds, following the recent meetings of Rev. W. A. Sunday in Wilkes-Barre. The "Lackawanna Plan," consolidating home missions, synodical missions and presbyterial missions into one budget system, and giving to each church its apportionment to raise, is a great success, aggregating over $11,000. This year the plan is being adopted by eight other presbyteries in Pennsylvania.

Wheeling Presbytery elected Rev. H. E. Giles moderator; received report of substantial increase during the year in both membership and in gifts; received under its care Floyd H. McCombs as candidate for the ministry; adopted a resolution expressive of confidence in the policy and administration of the Board of Home Missions; adopted overtures to Assembly, praying that all paid officers of boards be elected by Assembly; that Assembly organize Board of Church Extension, and that the districts and departments of home mission work be discontinued.

Olympia Presbytery at Olympia, Wash., made Rev. T. Davis Acheson of Whitworth College moderator. Rev. William E. Bates has left Montesano to take up work at Sprague Memorial church, Tacoma. Rev. James Ervine is serving acceptably Calvary church of Hoquiam. Rev. Thomas H. Simpson, the logging camp evangelist, has removed his headquarters from Aberdeen to Montesano.

Help Dedicate New Church

Rogersville Presbytery met at Bigstone Gap, Va., in a new little church which has just been finished and was dedicated on Sabbath during the meeting. The pastor, Rev. J. M. Ewing, and his people deserve much credit for the erection of the church. Less than two years ago their first church, on which they had just spent $500, was destroyed by fire. They have purchased a more convenient and desirable location and erected the most modern and beautiful church in the town. The church consists of only thirty-five members. Overtures, except 2 and 6 were answered in the affirmative.

Wichita Presbytery will employ an evangelist for a year to devote his full time to churches within bounds. Through this means, and by grouping smaller congregations, it is hoped to supply all the churches with regular services. Overtures 1 to 5 and 7 affirmed, 6 denied.

Peoria Presbytery at Galesburg, Ill., elected J. Gibson Lowrie, D. D., moderator. Merle C. Winn, son of Thomas C. Winn, D. D., of Manchuria, was received as a candidate for the gospel ministry. Overtures were all answered in the negative.

Binghamton Presbytery at Owego chose Rev. James A. Anderson of Nichols moderator. Most of the Binghamton city churches reported gains

SAFETY, AND 7%
IDAHO offers today a splendid field for safe and profitable investments. Carefully selected first mortgages on improved CITY AND FARM property are securities which will give you no worry, but will return regularly and promptly an excellent interest return, ranging from 6 per cent to 7 per cent, and occasionally even higher. The city of Boise has trebled its population in ten years, and the agricultural districts in which the IDAHO TITLE AND TRUST COMPANY and THE NATIONAL TRUST AND SAVINGS COMPANY operate are among the most productive in this prosperous state.
CHARLES B. COXE
President
BOISE :: IDAHO

NORTH DAKOTA
FARM MORTGAGES
THE IDEAL INVESTMENT
¶ 30 years Residence and Business activities in Banking and making Farm Mortgages. ¶ Write for my Booklet, Investment Facts, and List .075
WALTER L. WILLIAMSON, LISBON NORTH DAKOTA

SEASONED
North Dakota Farm Loans
and
FARM LAND BONDS
Netting 6%
Write for particulars regarding our investment service. Highest references.
R. C. KITTEL & CO., CASSELTON NORTH DAKOTA

FARM MORTGAGES bearing 6% interest, first liens on improved farms. Original papers held by the investor. Principal and interest GUARANTEED; interest payable at the Hanover National Bank, New York. Thousands of satisfied customers for references. We've been doing the same thing for TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS
The W. C. Belcher Land Mortgage Co.
Capital $320,000.00.
Fort Worth, - - Texas.

HARRY W. JONES
Minneapolis, Church Architect Minnesota.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
"Noiseless" Cushioned Trays with a new Short Glass. Trays interlock. All glasses well spaced. Outfits sent on trial.
DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
20 East Randolph St., Dept. J2, CHICAGO.

10 DAYS FREE TRIAL
We ship on approval without a cent deposit, freight prepaid. DON'T PAY A CENT if you are not satisfied after using the bicycle 10 days.
DO NOT BUY a bicycle or a pair of tires from anyone at any price until you receive our latest art catalogs illustrating every kind of bicycle, and have learned our unheard of prices and marvelous new offers.
ONE CENT is all it will cost you to write a postal and everything will be sent you free postpaid by return mail. You will get much valuable information. Do not wait, write it now
TIRES, Coaster-Brake rear wheels, lamps, sundries at half usual prices.
Mead Cycle Co. Dept. S304 Chicago

We Will Pay You $120.00
to distribute religious literature in your community. Sixty days work. Experience not required. Man or woman. Opportunity for promotion. Spare time may be used. International Bible Press, 410 Winston Bldg., Philadelphia.

in membership from the Biederwolf meetings. A committee was created to carry out the every-member plan for benevolences. Joseph T. Curtin was received as a licentiate and arrangements made for installation at Nineveh. Presbytery expressed the fullest confidence in the magnificent work of the Board of Home Missions. 1-5 was reversed. The Woman's Presbyterial Missionary Society elected Mrs. Samuel Dunham president in place of Mrs. Edward P. McKinney, resigned.

Large Gain in Membership

Tulsa Presbytery elected Rev. John T. Curtis of Sapulpa moderator. Of the five overtures relating to federated churches all were answered in the affirmative, except No. 2, negative. Nos. 7 and 8 affirmative, 6 negative. There has been a net increase in the membership of the churches in the presbytery of nearly 500 over last year and 222 were received from the Sabbath schools. Rev. A. E. Wardner gave a very helpful talk on "Work Among the Boys."

Duncan Brown, D. D., was elected moderator at the regular spring session of Ozark Presbytery at Greenfield, Mo. An evening was given to the consideration of Christian education, Charles B. Boving, D. D., president of Westminster College, delivering the address. The closing session was set apart for the installing of the pastor-elect, Rev. E. S. Brownlee, as pastor of Ebenezer church. Rev. J. S. Stapleton, Henry Little, D. D.; Rev. R. H. Taylor, and J. T. Bacon, D. D., took part.

Clarion Presbytery elected Rev. W. S. Fulton moderator. Presbytery reconsidered the first seven overtures and negatived them. W. R. Wheeler, son of N. P. Wheeler of Endeavor, and Maxwell Cornelius, son of S. A. Cornelius, D. D., moderator of synod, were licensed to preach. John Eber of Olive church was taken under care of presbytery as a candidate for the ministry.

Troy Presbytery chose Rev. Lindsay S. B. Hadley of Glens Falls moderator. Agostino Mangiacapra, engaged in mission work in New York City, was ordained. Sirag K. Emurian was taken under care of presbytery. Dr. William H. Foulkes, Rev. James T. Veneklasen, Rev. C. Waldo Cherry and Rev. Charles H. Walker addressed the meeting.

Indiana Presbytery affirmed overtures 1-7 and negatived No. 8. Rev. B. H. Rankin was moderator.

From Various Presbyteries

Madison Presbytery indorsed the work of the Home Board.—Kirksville Presbytery denied overtures 1-6 and affirmed 7 and 8; efforts will be made to carry out the every-member plan of benevolences.—Winona Presbytery will fine churches $1 for late reports; there was a loss of 139 communicants and 218 Sunday school members during the year; all overtures but No. 6, affirmed last fall, were reconsidered and denied; twenty-one churches were unrepresented by elders at the meeting; Norman Ramsay, Austin, was licensed as evangelist.—Otsego Presbytery denied overture reducing the size of General Assembly; Dr. Frank H. Seeley was honorably retired.

Nevada Presbytery disapproves of the attacks upon the Home Mission Board and has asked for a man to carry on work among Indians on a third reservation.—Overtures 1 to 6 were negatived and 7 and 8 affirmed by Central Washington Presbytery.—El Reno Presbytery honorably retired S. M. Hunt and asked that a larger amount of the funds of the Home Board be available on the field.—Redstone Presbytery will confer with committees of neighboring presbyteries, with a view to federating weak churches.—Overtures 1, 3, 7 and 8 were affirmed and 2, 4, 5 and 6 denied by Marion Presbytery, which has recently been combined with Bellefontaine.—Niagara Presbytery affirmed overtures 1 to 5.—Overtures 1 to 5 were denied by Jersey City Presbytery.

Calendar and Record

Moderators Elected

Central Washington—S. W. Richards.
Jersey City—James G. Bailey.
Marion—William A. Atkinson.
Niagara—B. M. Swan.
Monroe—J. A. Seibert.
Nevada—J. M. Swander.
Oakland—F. L. Goodspeed.
Otsego—A. J. Sadler.

Stated Clerks Elected

El Reno—E. B. Teis, Chickasha.

Ordinations

Rock River—Craig G. Whitsitt.
Winnebago—D. W. Barclay.

Resignations

California—Danville: C. F. Woodward.
Idaho—Malad: W. D. Williams.
Missouri—Hamilton: George M. Hall.
New York—Southold: W. H. Lloyd; Mechanicsville: David C. Davies.
Oklahoma—El Reno: E. R. Horton.
Pennsylvania—Claysville: R. T. Lynd.
Tennessee—Rogersville: W. H. Franklin.
Texas—San Antonio Madison Square: Frederick Bowen.

Calls

California—Concord: Graham Lee; Pleasanton: W. H. Darden; Oakland St. James: C. L. Campbell.
Illinois—Springfield First: Donald C. McLeod, Washington, D. C.
Indiana—Bristol and Granger: John B. Donaldson, Jr.; Terre Haute Washington Avenue: F. LeRoy Brown.
Iowa—Oakville: F. C. Smith, Bloomfield.
Kansas—Howard: James McCrary, Whitesboro, Texas.
Michigan—Reading: G. L. Guichard.
Minnesota—Claremont: E. T. Ferry; Canton: R. L. Jones; Leroy: R. A. Williams.
Missouri—Ethel group: W. P. Reed; Bowling Green: Charles E. Peterson, Western Seminary.
Nebraska—Holdredge: C. G. Whitsitt, McCormick Seminary.
New Jersey—Kingsland Westminster: Stillman R. Leiss.
New York—Rochester Westminster: Henry H. Barstow; Buffalo Calvary: D. M. Geddes, associate pastor.
Ohio—Milford: James M. Finley.
Pennsylvania—Pittsburg Central, North side: C. F. Ensign, Marion, Iowa.
Utah—Salt Lake City Westminster: Charles B. Murphy, McCormick Seminary.
Washington—Sunnyside First: H. Livingstone; Mabton First: A. Burkholder.

Installations

California—Pleasanton: W. H. Darden, May 4; Concord: Graham Lee, May 8.
Illinois—Joliet Willow Avenue: Carl Bruhn, May 1.
New York—Binghamton Immanuel: H. Lewis Smith, April 29.
Pennsylvania—Dunbar: John W. Wilson, May 2; Sutersville: W. A. Brown, May 6.

Supplies Arranged

Missouri—La Plata: F. L. Hurdson.
New York—Wright's Corners: Robert Duncan.
Ohio—Marion First: John Clark Hill.
South Dakota—Mellette: F. J. Brehme; Plankinton: Edward Van Ruschen.

Vacant Pulpits

Idaho—Aberdeen, Buhl, Gooding, Heyburn, Malad, Rigby, Salmon; J. H. Barton, Boise.
Iowa—Lansing, Mount Pleasant.
Kansas—Natoma; J. W. Smith, Stockton.
New York—Youngstown, Niagara Falls Third, Lyndonville, Carlton, Tuscarora.
Oklahoma—Ryan and Calvary, Salem, Waurika.
South Dakota—Alpena, Raymond, Bancroft, Wentworth, Colman.

Change of Address

Speer, James H.—Webb City to 3817 Baltimore avenue, Kansas City, Mo.

Accessions

Florida—Fort Lauderdale, 11, May 4, C. L. Work.
Illinois—Chicago Calvary, 20, May 4, Ralph D. Kearns; Chicago Ravenswood, 38, May 4, F. L. Selden; Aurora, 20, May 4, E. H. Montgomery.
Iowa—Monticello, 5, May 4, W. Z. Allen; Mount Pleasant, 10, April 20, A. D. McKay.

A RICH FLAVOR
that smacks of the delicacy of cream is eminently desirable for the perfect enjoyment of a cup of Tea, Coffee, Cocoa or Chocolate. Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk makes these beverages really delicious. The enjoyment of food aids digestion.

W. W. KIMBALL COMPANY Chicago
Builders of Pipe Organs for Churches, Auditoriums, Residences
The Kimball Tubular Pneumatic Action is the only one of its kind, and its exclusive use in Kimball Pipe Organs is protected by Letters Patent from U. S. Government.

SLIDE RENTING. STEREOPTICONS. NEW METHOD & SUBJECTS. CHURCHES REDUCED RATES.
MOORE-HUBBELL & CO. 713 MASONIC TEMPLE.

WANTS AND HELPS

Rates for classified advertising, Three Cents a Word, including the address. If desired a "box" address may be used, responses being sent to THE CONTINENT and forwarded to advertiser.

CASH MUST ACCOMPANY ORDER

MISCELLANEOUS

FOR CHURCH WORKERS—LADIES' AID AND MISSIONARY Societies are raising money without donations selling Valentine's Absorbent Dusters and Dust Mops. The only fifty-cent mop. Special offer by letter. Agents and societies should write. Valentine Duster Company, Urbana, Ohio.

PASTORS AND PARENTS WRITE TO US ABOUT young men who have come to Chicago to enter business or school life. We endeavor by personal invitation and influence to bring them into church relationship. Details gladly furnished. Rev. Francis M. Fox, Presbyterian Brotherhood, 509 South Wabash avenue, Chicago.

LANTERN SLIDE RENTAL. WE ARE FORGING TO the front. Our rapidly increasing list of satisfied customers say: "No service is better." Booklet. John Clark Hill edits lectures. Church Supply Co., East Madison avenue, Springfield, O.

COLLEGE STUDENT, SENIOR AT WASHINGTON and Jefferson, desires to teach or tutor for the summer. Experienced. Excellent references. Walker R. Scott, 15 Sherman avenue, Washington, Pa.

PUPIL NURSES WANTED FOR NEW HOSPITAL OF fifty beds, beautifully situated twenty-five miles from New York City. Applicants must have one year in high school or its equivalent and be not under twenty years of age. Apply to Superintendent of United Hospital, Port Chester, New York.

LINCOLN COLLEGE, LINCOLN, ILL., A PRESBYTERIAN Institution, needs a small automobile for the use of its field agent in canvassing for students. A second-hand machine would do. Anyone wishing to help Christian education in this way may address N, care The Continent.

DIRECTOR OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION, SUCCESSFUL minister trained and experienced in Sunday school and Young People's work, offers his service to city church. Highest endorsements. Address Director, care of Continent.

WANTED—BY CHRISTIAN WOMAN, POSITION AS mother's helper or companion during summer months. Address Box R, care The Continent.

A PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER WANTS A CHURCH in a town (not village). He is educated at European university and at McCormick Theological Seminary in Chicago, is a good preacher and believes that sermons shall not only be devotional but also teaching. Address "Minister," The Continent, Chicago, Ill.

WOOSTER SUMMER SCHOOL HAS GROWN IN ATTENDANCE every year over the preceding save one since its organization. This indicates either gullibility on the part of the patrons or merit on part of the school. It is the largest school in the state, one of the largest of its kind in the U. S., and is striving to be helpful. Catalog ready. J. H. Dickason, Prin., Wooster, O.

PRESBYTERIAN ASSEMBLY OF THE SOUTHWEST. Young People's conference, Hollister, Mo. Conference July 29, Aug. 5, 1913; assembly, Aug. 6-17, 1913. Write the secretary for information. E. E. Stringfield, secretary, 3614 E. 59th St., Kansas City, Mo.

I HAVE A NUMBER OF BOOKS, INCLUDING A Webster's unabridged dictionary, which I shall be glad to give to some pastor who has lost his library in the flood or who will find the volumes useful, the recipient to pay transportation. Rev. W. J. Seelye, Wooster, O.

HEALTH RESORTS

PENNOYER SANITARIUM (ESTABLISHED 1857), Chicago suburb, Northwestern Railway. Grounds (100 acres) fronting Lake Michigan. Modern, homelike. For rest, recreation, treatment. Booklet. Address Pennoyer Sanitarium, Kenosha, Wis.

ORGANS

FOR SALE—A SECOND-HAND PIPE ORGAN OF first class make, in fine condition. Has fifteen speaking stops. A bargain to quick buyer. Address Pipe Organ, care of The Continent, N. Y.

TOURS

WANTED—YOUNG PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER-Naturalist, and well acquainted with camp and outdoor life, will take a company of boys on a driving trip through Yellowstone Park and Jackson Hole Country this summer. Start from Chicago early in July. Limited number of boys from fifteen to eighteen wanted. Write The Pilot, care The Continent.

YOUNG PASTOR ON EUROPEAN TRIP WOULD CONDUCT economically small number well recommended boys. Address G. H. F., care Continent, N. Y. office.

EUROPE MEDITERRANEAN ROUTE $370
Sails July 1 from New York. Party limited.
University Man, Conductor.
The Shelton Tours, 222 Old South Bldg., Boston, Mass

Do You Contemplate Attending the

International Convention of Christian Endeavor

Los Angeles, July 9-14, 1913?

¶ You can reach the convention city quickly, comfortably and via a route rich in historic interest and renowned for its scenic attractiveness, by using the famous home comfort, electric lighted 'Los Angeles Limited,'' which leaves Chicago daily at 10:02 p. m.—less than three days en route via the Chicago and North Western Ry., Union Pacific R. R. and Salt Lake Route.

¶ For those with a little more time to spare who would like a glimpse of San Francisco en route—the ''San Francisco Limited,'' which leaves Chicago daily at 8:30 p. m. via Chicago and North Western Ry.. Union Pacific and Southern Pacific, makes direct connections with train leaving San Francisco 10:00 p. m., arriving Los Angeles 2:45 p. m., fourth day.

¶ This route is double tracked for over 1,300 miles and is protected all the way by automatic electric safety signals.

Dining Car Service Unequaled

¶ Your comfort begins when you enter the new Passenger Terminal of the Chicago and North Western Ry. in Chicago.

The Best of Everything

For rates, reservations and full particulars, call on or address

Chicago and North Western Ry.

A. C. JOHNSON, Pass'r Traffic Manager
C. A. CAIRNS, Gen'l Pass'r and Ticket Agt.
Chicago, Illinois

LA 2785

Registered Trade Mark

Established. Half a Century

May Sale Table Linens

At Greatly Reduced Prices

Substantial and bona fide reductions have been made in Table Cloths and Napkins to match, of all sizes and qualities, in a very wide range of designs.

Napkins (per dozen)

Breakfast size	$2.25	2.85	3.25	3.50	4.25	5.25	and up
Dinner size	$3.25	3.50	4.25	5.00	6.00	8.50	and up

Table Cloths

2x2 yards, at	$2.25	2.50	2.75	3.50	4.25	4.75	and up
2x2½ yards, at	$2.85	3.00	3.50	4.25	5.25	5.50	and up
2x3 yards, at	$3.50	3.75	5.00	5.75	6.50	7.00	and up
2¼x2¼ yards, at	$3.65	4.50	5.00	5.25	6.00	6.50	and up
2½x2½ yards, at	$5.00	5.50	6.00	6.50	7.00	and up

Larger sizes proportionately priced.

The Sale also includes Bed Linens and Bed Coverings, Towels, Corsets, Lingerie, Ladies' Suits, Neckwear, Hosiery, Infants' Wear, etc.

Mail Orders Receive Our Prompt Attention.

James McCutcheon & Co
5th Ave., 33d & 34th Sts., New York

(SEE FOOTNOTE)

An Open Letter to Presbyterians

SparksMarionE †jan14
1205 Springfield av

I[illegible]outhland's splendid city of Atlanta there assemble this week representatives of four of our great Presbyterian b[illegible]es. You and I may not be present, but we shall all feel the thrill of this beautiful association. Each of our churches has a most serious responsibility in this day when Christianity seems to face the most marvelous opportunities presented to it during all the centuries. The whole Christian world is astir with the prospect, and an all-wise Providence has made receptive of the Word millions who were formerly beyond reach. Many forces have been used to bring this about, and to one of these I wish specially to direct your attention. I refer to the American Tract Society.

THIS IS A WORK WHICH VITALLY CONCERNS US

This is not a work apart from any of the organized efforts of our churches. Often it precedes and makes our work possible; always it goes along with us to support, encourage and reenforce what we are doing; and by its continuity it helps to carry forward and maintain what we have established. Since 1825 this organization, made up of men from all the denominations, has issued more than 784,000,000 copies of Christian literature. This has been taken by colporters into the homes of the people, to their working places, and to any place where a soul may be reached. The spoken word or prayer may have taken only a moment; the printed page has remained. Millions of people have heard and have read the message who would probably never have known of Christ. Thousands of conversions have resulted, and in still greater measure the work of other agencies has been made more effective. No publishing houses would have provided this literature as a business undertaking, and no single denomination could have assumed the great expense involved. No one can study the 88 years' work of this organization without realizing the great debt we of the evangelical churches owe to it.

THE WORLD PROPAGANDA IS BOUND UP WITH IT

You and I are concerned with the present and the future. There our obligations lie. We cannot rightly escape consideration of the part this remarkable enterprise must play in the Christianization of the world. We must make use of it, and we must maintain it. In our own land, it may be used marvelously. The Society has issued publications in 175 languages and dialects. It can reach or help to reach every immigrant. It can provide songbooks and helps for the mission or church of the foreign-speaking new American. Not only that, but it reaches the lands from which the immigrant comes, and it meets him when he lands. Its literature goes into the slums, into resorts of the wicked, into the remote places of the land. The work of the Society abroad is a most significant part of the world propaganda. Its literature precedes, goes with and follows the missionary. In the New China, in the Orient, in all the lands now so ripe for the preaching of the Gospel, the American Tract Society has done, is doing, and with our help will continue to do a tremendous work.

This is an emergency moment for this undertaking, in which you and I have a share. Five hundred thousand dollars is needed, and needed now. This money will enable payments to be made which will not only make unnecessary a serious limitation of the work, but will assure an increase of income available for missionary purposes. No one who has knowledge of the importance of this work will hesitate to affirm that this amount of money could never be invested in a way to bring larger results for the kingdom. It is a small sum to be secured from twenty-four millions of Protestants. I write this to urge every one of my Presbyterian brethren who can help, or knows of those who should help, to write to the President, William Phillips Hall, or the General Secretary, Dr. Judson Swift, 150 Nassau street, New York City, making checks payable to Louis Tag, Treasurer. The question is, "Shall this work retreat or go forward?"

THERE CAN BE ONLY ONE ANSWER: "FORWARD!"

(NOTE—This letter is prepared by a friend of the Society, not officially connected with it.)

The CONTINENT

Meet me there . . . and we
Will be as we used to be,

May Twenty Second-Nineteen Thirteen

The Continent will pay you for a letter

WE want to get clear, straightforward, helpful answers to certain questions. Literary form or finish is not so important as point and practicality. If your personal experience makes it possible for you intelligently to discuss these questions, just sit down and write us what you would say if you were talking earnestly, face to face, with a friend. Your name need not appear if you object. We want your actual experience, and the conclusions you have formed as a result of that experience. The questions are indicated by the following subjects:

What College Did for Me

We want letters on this topic (1) from a business or professional woman; (2) from a married woman. In each case we will pay $10 for the letter accepted for publication. It should not exceed 800 words.

Why I Sent My Son to Boarding School

On this subject we want just a plain, factful letter from a parent whose boy is now or has been in a private school, military or nonmilitary. For the best letter, preferably not exceeding 600 words, we will pay $5.

Why I Sent My Daughter to Boarding School

We want also to know why parents decide that it is worth while to send the girl to boarding school. Six hundred words is the limit. The best letter will be purchased for $5.

Why I Chose My School

This is for the students. We will give $5 apiece for the best letters of not more than 600 words on this subject in each of these classifications:

1. By a young man in college.
2. By a young woman in college.
3. By a boy in a military school.
4. By a boy in a nonmilitary school.

CONDITIONS It is not necessary to be a reader of nor a subscriber to The Continent. Letters based on mere theory or hearsay will not be considered. They must be in the office of the paper by June 15. Write on only one side of the paper, give your full name and address, inclose stamps if you wish your manuscript returned, and address your letter to Managing Editor The Continent, 509 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago, or 156 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Readers will confer a favor on the publishers of The Continent by mentioning this paper when answering advertisements.

10,000 Business Men Will Gather Here

This is a picture of the spacious Fifth Regiment Armory in Baltimore. The sessions of the ninth of America will be held here June 8 to 13, 1913. Delegates from one hundred and thirty five American and Canadian Clubs, and thousands of other advertising and business men will be present. Great Britain, Germany and other European countries will also send strong delegations.

Annual Convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs

The meetings will be addressed by the most forceful and interesting speakers among the successful advertising buyers of the country—men who have successfully conducted epoch making campaigns. Open departmental and other special sessions will be devoted to the problems of the various branches and phases of the great business of advertising. Here every man will have an opportunity to say his say, and those who have solved the perplexing problems of modern publicity and merchandising will tell their audiences how they did it.

In addition to these business meetings, nearly every pulpit in Baltimore will be occupied on Sunday, June 8th, by prominent advertising men, who will tell how closely advertising is linked with the religious and social progress of our time.

The evenings will be devoted to a series of unique entertainments to which all delegates and guests will be invited, and throughout the whole convention, Baltimore will more than maintain her enviable reputation for warm, generous, open-handed hospitality.

You do not need to be an advertising club member in order to be welcomed at this convention—all business men are invited. If you cannot come yourself, send your advertising or sales manager. Make your plans now—write to the address below for the full program of the convention, hotel accommodations, etc.

Associated Advertising Clubs of America
Convention Bureau
1 North Calvert Street
Baltimore, Md.

EDUCATIONAL | EDUCATIONAL

Georgia

AGNES SCOTT COLLEGE
DECATUR (6 Miles From Atlanta) GEORGIA
Letters—Philosophy—Science—Home Economics
B. A. Graduates, from this college, are admitted, without examination, as candidates for the M. A. degree in the leading universities of the North and East
No Preparatory Department
Dormitory Capacity Limited to 300
For Catalog and Bulletin of Views, address the President
F. H. GAINES, D. D. LL. D.

Nebraska

NEBRASKA
BELLEVUE COLLEGE
BELLEVUE, NEBRASKA
The Historic Presbyterian College of the Missouri Valley
Beautiful and healthful location, connected with Omaha by trolley, the Burlington Railroad and a Scenic Boulevard.

THE COLLEGE OF ARTS AND SCIENCES
Granting the Bachelor's Degree

THE CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC
All branches of Music taught by Specialists

THE NORMAL SCHOOL
Courses leading to State Certificates

COEDUCATIONAL
Moderate Expenses

ACADEMY
A High Grade Preparatory School, fitting for any College or University

S. W. STOOKEY, LL.D., President

Subscription Terms—The subscription price of THE CONTINENT is $2.50 per year payable in advance.

Postage is prepaid on all subscriptions in the United States, Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, Guam, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, Cuba and Mexico.

Foreign Postage—For Canada, 50 cents should be added for postage, and for all other countries in the Postal Union $1.10 should be added for postage.

Remittances should be sent by draft on Chicago or New York, Express or P. O. money orders payable to THE CONTINENT. If personal check is sent, 10 cents must be added for collection.

THE CONTINENT

Continuing THE INTERIOR (Established 1870) and THE WESTMINSTER (Established 1904)
PUBLISHED WEEKLY

THE MCCORMICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, Proprietors
OLIVER R. WILLIAMSON, Publisher

CHICAGO
509 South Wabash Avenue

NEW YORK CITY
Presbyterian Building, 156 5th Avenue

PHILADELPHIA
Witherspoon Building

Entered as second-class matter October 6, 1910, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879. Copyright, 1913, by the McCormick Publishing Company.

Acknowledgments—Within two weeks the date following name on "yellow label" will show to the first of what month subcription has been paid. No other receipt is given unless stamp is sent.

Change of Address—Kindly send us both old and new address a week previous to the date of the desired change.

Discontinuances—No subscription is dropped without a definite request from the subscriber; otherwise it is assumed that he wishes to continue.

Manuscripts—The Continent does not accept responsibility for damage or loss of manuscripts sent to it for consideration.

Advertising rates on application.

IN THIS ISSUE:

THURSDAY, MAY 22, 1913

PRAYING WITH THE FAMILY.............. 705
EDITORIAL—
Theories Are Not the Great Thing..... 708
Dr. Fox Discovered in Heresy......... 708
THE WORLD........................... 706
RELIGIOUS WORLD..................... 707
PRESBYTERIAN QUADRILATERAL AT ATLANTA 710
HOW ABOUT YOUR PRAYER MEETING?—
Things Not Taught in Seminary, by a Live Veteran; A Center for the Praying Group, by an Illinois Pastor; Surprise for the Midweek Service, by James Elmer Russell 712
A PRESBYTERIAN AMAZON OF OLD ENGLAND (Illustrated)..........Henry C. Shelley 714
THE HOME COUNCIL—We Ain't Got No Wall..................Ruth G. Winant 716
YOUNG AMERICA—Jack and the Butterfly Preacher............Mary Earle Hardy 717
BRADFORD HORTON, MAN. Chapter XXIX. —Continued.........Richard S. Holmes 718
THE SUNDAY SCHOOL
............J. L. Scott, D. H. Jenkins 719
DEVOTIONAL SERVICE........E. A. Wicher 720
YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE......W. T. Ellis 720
MISSIONARY WORK (with Illustration)..... 721
NEW BOOKS............................ 722
THE OPEN HEARTH—
Street Preaching at Assembly......... 723
There Are Other Branches............ 723
Michigan and Suffrage............... 724
WAYS OF WORKING..................... 724
WHEN NORTH AND SOUTH MET IN 1888
.....................William P. White 725
WHY KEEP THE GRADED LESSONS?
..................E. Van Dyke Wight 726
NEWS FROM RELIGIOUS FIELD—Beginning 728
FINANCIAL SITUATION.................. 737
CALENDAR AND RECORD.................. 739

Around the Shop

The Around-the-Shop Man does a good deal of wandering about the country. His comings and goings are not heralded, and his experiences are not recorded. Where he may, he enters Presbyterian churches just as any chance visitor might; and he enjoys the feeling that he is able to observe both pastor and congregation in the normal relationships of their work. Perhaps it is because he is not looking for it; at any rate he has not yet discovered that the churches are losing their power; nor has he found a feeble ministry—quite the contrary.

He has been gratifyingly impressed by the frequency with which he discovers direct evidence of the part The Continent plays in church and home life. The other Sunday he found a reprint from The Continent, provided by the Sabbath School Board, being distributed, the pastor making a forceful reference to it from the pulpit—it was the editorial, "Children Missing." The same pastor drops his morning newspaper when The Continent arrives; one minister's wife reads The Continent to the family at dinner on Thursdays; a pastor reads Continent editorials at prayer meeting; a business man finds it best just to "glance over" most of his daily, but to read The Continent "clear through, ads and all"; a mission study class uses The Continent's missionary page for its "Current Mission Topics" class.

There's really no end to the string. So we'll tie a knot right here and stop. The letter is from Rev. George D. B. Stewart, Exeter, Cal.:

"This order [$5 inclosed] is one result of the article, 'How One Church Manages Its Finances,' which appeared in The Continent a few months ago. Having adopted the double budget system, we find two who have given over $25 to benevolences—both school teachers and young women—and so our session have voted them each a year's subscription to The Continent."

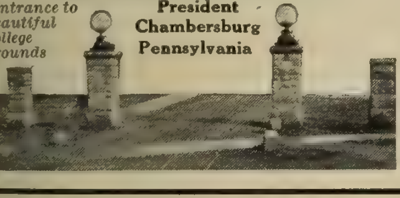
EDUCATIONAL

Pennsylvania

Main Hall

Wilson College
FOR WOMEN
Connected with the Presbyterian Church
Beautiful situation in the Cumberland Valley: extensive campus, water supply approved by the State Board of Health, careful provision for the health of students, a good social atmosphere, a strong faculty, high intellectual standards, solid and thorough work. Courses lead to the B.A. degree. A good department of music. Strong religious influence. Catalogue and views on request.
Anna Jane McKeag, Ph.D., LL.D.
President
Chambersburg
Pennsylvania

Entrance to beautiful college grounds



BEECHWOOD A Cultural and Practical School
FOR YOUNG WOMEN AT JENKINTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA
College Preparatory, College Departments—Conservatory of Music, Arts, Arts and Crafts, Domestic Arts and Sciences.
M. H. Reaser, Ph.D., :: :: :: President

Kansas

Oswego College
Oswego, Kansas
Vocational-Cultural for young women

Indiana

Before Deciding Where to Attend School
Send for catalog of Valparaiso University, Valparaiso, Indiana. This is one of the largest institutions of learning in the United States.
Thorough Instruction at Lowest Expense.
Catalog mailed free. Address
H. B. BROWN, President.
O. P. KINSEY, Vice-President.

EDUCATIONAL

Missouri

Missouri Valley College
MARSHALL, MISSOURI
College, Music Conservatory, Academy
Co-educational; four modern buildings; modern laboratories; library; museum; beautiful athletic grounds; forty acres in campus; all buildings heated from one heating plant; lighted by electricity; standards high; location ideal; Marshall and Saline County are "dry'; most beautiful and prosperous city. Opens September 8, 1913. Write for catalog.
WILLIAM HENRY BLACK, President, 405 College Street, Marshall, Missouri.

New York

MACKENZIE SCHOOL
DOBBS FERRY-ON-HUDSON, N. Y.
Preparation for all the leading colleges. Correspondence and conference invited.

Wisconsin

RIPON COLLEGE
RIPON :: :: WISCONSIN

Milwaukee-Downer College
Milwaukee-Downer Seminary
Milwaukee, Wisconsin
College Courses lead to Bachelors' Degrees.
Home Economics Training Course for Teachers.
Seminary admits to Eastern and Western Colleges.
Music Department directed by Emil Liebling.
Art, Elocution, Athletics. Location combines advantages of city and country. For information specify College or Seminary catalogue. Miss Ellen C. Sabin, President

EDUCATIONAL

Illinois

Illinois Woman's College
A Standard College—One of the Best
In the "Athens of the West." College of Liberal Arts, with classical and scientific courses; College of Music: School of Fine Arts; School of Expression; School of Home Economics Also Academy Courses for girls of high school age. Faculty, buildings and equipment unsurpassed. A happy student home. Expenses reasonable. Write for illustrated, descriptive catalogue to PRESIDENT HARKER, Box 31, Jacksonville, Ill.

NURSES are given a thorough and practical three years training at PASSAVANT Memorial Hospital Training School.
They also have the advantages of a monthly cash allowance, a separate Nurses' Home, and affiliation with the Illinois Training School for Nurses. For further information, address
MISS E. C. GLENN, R. N.,
149-151 West Superior Street. - - Chicago, Illinois.

TODD SEMINARY FOR BOYS
An ideal school for young boys near Chicago. No serious sickness in 50 years. We educate the whole boy. Send for prospectus. NOBLE HILL, Woodstock, Ill.

BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY
Instructors have wide experience in the "Boy Problem." ACADEMY ideally located, 35 miles from St. Louis. Healthful environment, Christian influence. Prepares young men for business or college. The ideal school for YOUR boy.
Write HEADMASTER, BUNKER HILL, ILL.

Tennessee

WARD-BELMONT Uniting and continuing Belmont College for Young Women (24th year) and Ward Seminary for Young Ladies (49th year). Opens Sept. 25th. Jennie Taylor Masson, Regtr., Box J, Nashville, Tenn.

CUMBERLAND UNIVERSITY
College of Arts and Sciences.
Write the President, LEBANON, TENN.

Indiana

WABASH COLLEGE
CRAWFORDSVILLE, INDIANA—80th YEAR
Opening Day September 16th. A college of liberal culture for young men. Modern equipment. Strong teaching force. Moderate expenses. For particulars address GEORGE L. MACKINTOSH, Pres.

An American Flag

FREE to

CONTINENT READERS

YOU WILL want a flag for Memorial Day and Fourth of July, and all other patriotic occasions. In no more favorable manner can your love of country be expressed than by unfurling our silent but impressive emblem of patriotism, "OLD GLORY," from your home, church, club or business house.

SHOW YOUR COLORS

In sympathy with the effort for quiet and profitable patriotism THE CONTINENT has arranged a plan with the American Flag Company whereby a 4 by 6 fast color American flag may be sent CONTINENT readers without cost. All that is necessary is for any present subscriber either to pay for the paper for a new subscriber for one year at the regular price of $2.50, or secure from some friend who is not a subscriber $2.50 for a full year's subscription. The flag will be sent postpaid at once to either the old subscriber or the new subscriber.

If for any reason you do not care to pay for a new subscription yourself, and are unable to secure one from among your Presbyterian associates, we will mail the flag to you postpaid upon receipt of $1. Send us your order at once.

Address THE CONTINENT

156 5th Ave., New York 509 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago

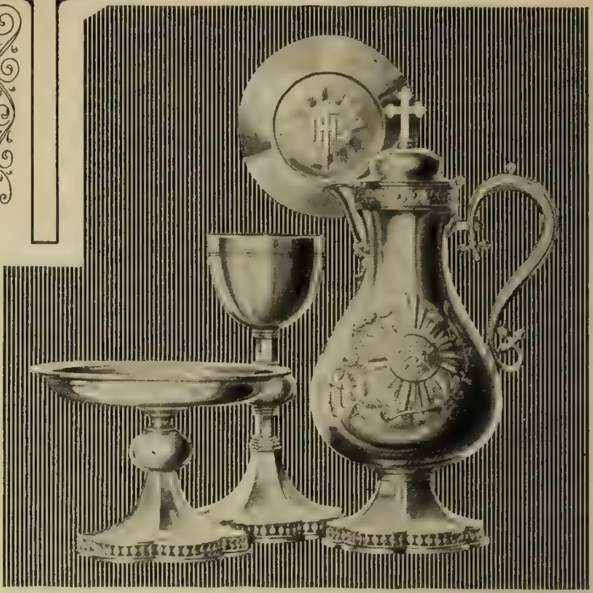
Communion Sets



Communion Sets of various styles and designs, together with Collection Plates, Alms Basons, Chalices, Crucifixes, Vases, Pew Racks, etc., are shown in wide variety in our Special Communion Ware Catalogue. This beautiful silver not only affords the greatest durability, but has been designed with exceeding care. It is artistic and dignified.

For sale by leading dealers. Send for "Special Catalogue E-80."

INTERNATIONAL SILVER CO., MERIDEN, CONN.
Successors to Meriden Britannia Co.

The World's Largest Makers of Sterling Silver and Plate.

EDUCATIONAL

Ohio

Alumnae Hall (one of the three main buildings) Western College

"The Best in Best Things"

OXFORD, OHIO. THE WESTERN COLLEGE FOR WOMEN FOUNDED 1853

Ranked with Leading Eastern Colleges.

The broad culture, the beauty, the stimulating atmosphere of The Western College are attractive to ambitious women. A capable fuculty; strong curriculum; fine religious influence. Three hundred fifty acres,—a beautiful campus and garden; a farm that supplies the freshest of dairy, fruit and vegetable products to the tables. Western graduates are immediately eligible to best positions. High standards in every department,—Academic, Art and Music. Domestic Science a special feature. Golf links, tennis; outdoor gymnastics, and gymnasium.

Illustrated literature sent on request

Mary A. Sawyer, A. M., Litt. D., Dean

BOX 45 OXFORD, OHIO

Iowa

PARSONS COLLEGE

OFFERS

To youth of both sexes superior advantages in securing an education.

IDEAL LOCATION.
STRONG FACULTY.
MODERN EQUIPMENT.

88 years of service to the church and country.

W. E. PARSONS, President. Fairfield, Iowa

EDUCATIONAL

Ohio

The University of Wooster

Synodical College of Ohio

CO-EDUCATIONAL

The Department of Biblical Instruction is known as the

FLORENCE H. SEVERANCE

Bible and Missionary Training School

YOUNG MEN are trained to become directors of Religious Education, Sabbath School Workers, Assistants to Pastors, Y. M. C. A. Secretaries. Prospective Medical Missionaries may receive their religious training at Wooster before entering a Medical School.

YOUNG WOMEN are trained to become Foreign Missionaries, Home Missionaries, City Missionaries, Pastors' Assistants, Church Visitors, Sabbath School Workers, Y. W. C. A. Secretaries.

Students may take this work in connection with the COLLEGE COURSE or may take the THREE YEARS TRAINING COURSE. For full information address

REV. CHALMERS MARTIN, D.D. Wooster, Ohio

Ask for Catalogue A.

Iowa

Practical Education

at a low cost for young men and women

These courses are taught by expert specialists, and equal those of any Eastern college. In addition to thoroughness, our low tuition fees and living expenses appeal to ambitious men and women with limited funds and time. A third feature is the many opportunities for practical work while learning; and a fourth—our aid to students, enabling them to earn part or all expenses.

Highland Park College

Well-grounded, thorough, practical courses. Liberal Arts, Normal, Engineering, Pharmacy, Oratory, Music, Commerce and Home Study.

Buildings large and well equipped. Thousands of successful graduates everywhere. Tuition in Preparatory, College, Normal and Business Courses, $18 per quarter. Board from $1,75 to $2.75 per week. Write today, naming course interesting you. Address

Dr. GEORGE P. MAGILL, President
Des Moines, Iowa

HARRY W. JONES

Church Architect :: MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA

EDUCATIONAL

California

GIRLS' COLLEGIATE SCHOOL. "CASA DE ROSAS"
Twenty-second year begins September 25th. Accredited at leading colleges. Music, art, gymnasium, domestic science. Beautiful buildings, fine equipment. Limited number of resident pupils.
Miss Parsons and Miss Dennen, Principals,
Adams and Hoover Streets, Los Angeles, California.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 28
THE C. S. BELL Co. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

MENEELY BELL CO.
TROY, N.Y. AND
177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY.
BELLS

BOWLDEN BELLS
FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL

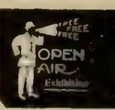
Sweet Tone
Far Sounding
Durable
Catalogue Free.
AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

Church Chime Peal BELLS

Memorial Bells a Specialty.
McShane Bell Foundry Co., Baltimore, Md., U.S.A.

CHURCH SEATING
HANEY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.



STEREOPTICONS
A Great Soul-Winning Campaign for the Summer Months. Indoors or outdoors.
The Christian Lantern Slide & Lecture Bureau
30 W. LAKE ST., CHICAGO, ILL

—MONEY—
Do you need it in your Church work? The International Banks will help you raise it. Write us.

The International Church Supply Co.
3 Clinton Bldg., Columbus, O.

THE CONTINENT

CONTINUING THE INTERIOR (ESTABLISHED 1870) AND THE WESTMINSTER (ESTABLISHED 1904)

VOLUME 44, NO. 21 MAY 22, 1913 WHOLE NO. 2243

Nolan R. Best, Editor—156 Fifth Avenue, New York. Oliver R. Williamson, Publisher—509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago. William T. Ellis, Editor Afield—Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia. The McCormick Publishing Company, Proprietors

Praying with the Family

NOW, REALLY, WHY DON'T YOU HAVE FAMILY WORSHIP IN YOUR HOME?

This is a straight-from-the-shoulder question aimed at a very particular sort of man—the man who grew up in a Christian home (where his father led family prayers every day), who has been a member of the church ever since boyhood, and who hopes that his children will follow him in the church as he follows his father.

And yet he never has family prayers in his house.

Now what is the reason—the real, genuine, matter-of-fact reason?

There are all sorts of reasons given. Perhaps the most usual one is that there isn't time of mornings. Different members of the family get up and breakfast at different hours, and there is no particular moment when they can all be brought together. Or perhaps the story is that everybody has to hurry breakfast so in order to get off to work in time that there is no chance for devotions.

Then of course there is another line of excuses having to do with father's diffidence. He can't pray in public, and it is still worse before the members of his own family. He mixes his words and gets so tangled up that his prayers sound ridiculous, and he is really afraid he will make the children laugh at religion.

A third sort of man says bluntly that he can't see any use of it. He is training up his children to be religious in their inner lives—not to make a parade of religion outside. Everybody in the home can remember God and be thankful for his blessings without having to put it into words.

Besides all these, there is a fourth sort. He simply doesn't—and hasn't any reason at all.

But one bedrock reason unexpressed runs beneath this whole array. These men are all alike in this:

They have not yet themselves learned enough about praying to appreciate how important it is.

* * *

If a man doesn't pray very much in his own soul privately, of course there's mighty small reason for his praying before his family.

But if a man gets really to praying in his own soul with any "vital breath," then he will necessarily have to start family prayers.

No doubt there are very perplexing difficulties about maintaining daily prayer in the family circle.

But if you once see it so essential that you have simply got to do it, you will get over the difficulties all right.

Suppose it is the trouble about time for it. In point of fact, hard as it may be to manage it, there's no impossibility anywhere about having the whole family rise at one hour, and that hour early enough for prayers before the first off leaves for work—provided only the object is thought imperative enough to call for that much sacrifice of sleep and that much exercise of parental discipline over the household.

Or is it the bashfulness of a stumbling and forgetful tongue? That kind of trouble is conquerable by anybody who perseveres. It is all a question of how much you want to get over it.

* * *

So actually the only fair way to meet the question is to get back to this fundamental:

Is family prayer a matter of first importance in a home where father and mother want their children to grow up Christians?

It all depends, as has been already hinted, on how one looks in the first place on the importance of prayer for himself personally.

Do you think that a Christian man going out into the day and its tasks ought to stop a little before he goes and ask God to help him through that day—keep him square to the standards of Christian living?

Perhaps you don't. Perhaps you imagine that every fellow is here in the world on his own responsibility and that all the help he gets to do right is the help he takes out of his own stiff, stout will.

In that case, of course, there is no occasion for you to pray—nor to train your sons and daughters in prayer.

But in that case, why are you calling yourself a Christian? Christianity is based on a book in which all the people who are set up for examples depended on prayer—and the Greatest of them was the one who prayed the most.

If you really don't count on prayer, you are in a peculiar place tying yourself up with Christ's church.

* * *

But the church man is not liable to go off on that tack. He is far more likely to respond that he does believe in prayer, and that in one way and another he tries to pray a little nearly every day.

But, he will argue, one doesn't have to put his prayers into words. And, of course, that has to be acknowledged, so far as the individual contact between any one soul and God goes. But propositions of mere individual religion haven't much justifiable footing anywhere in the neighborhood of a man of family—the head of a home.

He has not only the duty of praying individually himself, but if he considers prayer any help at all in life, he is in most solemn duty bound to teach his children to pray.

Grant that prayer is in any sense an equipment for life—any safeguard whatever from evil—and it instantly is evident that a father is a downright cheat to his sons and daughters if he doesn't undertake to put them in possession of that equipment and safeguard.

And don't let him deceive himself by supposing that the little prayer which mother teaches them at their bedside in babyhood is going to be sufficient. That is tied up with childhood for all children, and if they get no other notion of prayer than that, they will surely put it away when they put away other childish things.

To make an impression for manhood and womanhood on the boys and girls, they must get an example of manly and womanly prayer from their parents. And while they may believe that mother prays in secret, they won't believe their father has any secret habits of prayer—outspoken, positive man of the world that he is—unless they hear him pray somewhere openly.

If the father wants his children to pray, he must get down on his knees in the home before them and pray for them and for their mother and for himself and for all the household then and there.

* * *

So there is the whole question of the matter of family prayer.

You got your prayer incentives from your father. Do you want your children to take any prayer incentives from you?

If you are not willing to send them out prayerless into the world, it is up to you to furnish them the example that your father furnished you.

Brace up and try. It won't be so hard after the ice is broken.

The World

Raising the Banner of International Peace

Leading American cities and citizens have been exerting themselves to entertain and honor the international representatives who are visiting the United States for the purpose of arranging for the celebration of the centenary of peace between English-speaking peoples. Plans for marking the anniversary next year have not yet been completed, but contemplate the erection of monuments and memorial tablets in both countries, the institution of exchange professorships and scholarships, the construction of an international bridge at Detroit, and elaborate ceremonies in the city of Ghent, where the treaty was signed.

The annual conference on international arbitration has just been held at Lake Mohonk, New York, with some notable addresses urging practical steps toward the peaceful settlement of international disputes, the movement to be led by the United States. Two venerable and widely known men—Dr. Lyman Abbott and Dr. Charles W. Eliot, addressed the conference, and took radically different views of the problems under consideration. Dr. Abbott declared disarmament was as yet a Utopian dream and that until worldwide justice was secured armaments were necessary. He held that Christians have not stood and ought not to stand for peace at any price, remarking that sword and cannon would continue in use "until some other power greater than that of armed man was found to protect innocence from injustice." Dr. Eliot took the broad position that education and the judicial settlement of disputes could and would abolish war. Commentators on both speeches have added that trade unions, social and industrial reforms and the extension of trade and commerce are also powerful peace factors.

The French national peace congress in session at Paris ten days ago demanded that the government of France should support at the next Hague conference an advanced peace program. It also adopted a resolution felicitating President Wilson and Secretary of State Bryan on their project relating to an inquiry by commissions with a view to settling international differences without recourse to arms.

America to Reply to Japanese Protest

Governor Johnson of California having communicated to the President, in a statement justifying the California position, his decision to sign the antialien land ownership bill, Mr. Wilson and his cabinet advisers proceeded to consider a reply to Japan's official note of protest. The contents of the reply, which was drafted by Professor John Bassett Moore, councilor of the state department, were not disclosed, but at Washington all suggestions that the United States was about to assume a belligerent attitude were denied. The fact that army officers had been ordered to Hawaii and that some of the warships on the Pacific had been moved was explained as being purely routine orders.

Arizona is the latest state to pass an alien land bill. It is broader than the California statute and prohibits any alien, whether of Caucasian or Mongolian extraction, from owning land in the state if he has not declared his intention of becoming a citizen. This not only bars Asiatics but also wealthy Mexicans, who live and own land on the American side of the border although retaining their Mexican allegiance.

The Tokyo government has been discouraging the holding of public meetings and demonstrations and recently forbade a reunion arranged by the American-Japanese society. An article in the Kokumin newspaper declared that "the white men's clique" must be overthrown in the interest of Japan and in the interest of humanity. Just what is meant by the white men's clique was not fully explained. The California difficulty is cited as merely one proof that the time has arrived to fix the relations between the races of the world. For example, Australia has within the last ten years passed stringent laws restricting Asiatic immigration.

Talk of Impeaching Mexican President

Impeachment of President Huerta of Mexico on charges of conspiracy, usurpation and assassination was formally demanded last week by Herberta Barron, formerly commercial agent of the late Madero government in the United States. Barron filed his charges with the chamber of deputies from the safe distance of New York City. Governor Carranza, leader of the Constitutionalists, issued an anti-Huerta manifesto invoking the so-called law of Maximilian, which provides the death penalty for any person who attacks the chief magistrate. The law was used at the time of the execution of Emperor Maximilian.

A story has been circulated in Mexico City that Ambassador H. L. Wilson positively promised General Huerta that his government would be recognized by the United States. It is stated at Washington, however, that if the ambassador made any such promise he has not reported it, and if made it was without authority. The Associated Press reports that a loan of $25,000,000 to the Huerta government has "practically" been arranged on terms exorbitant for Mexico. If so, it may enable Huerta to tide himself over for a few months more, but the ultimate outlook for peace in Mexico is dark.

Federal Suffrage Amendment; Defeat in England

Woman's suffrage has advanced at least a step at Washington. A committee of the United States senate voted last week in favor of an amendment to the federal constitution forbidding a sex qualification for suffrage. Senator Thomas of Colorado is chairman of the committee and he announces he is ready to make an earnest effort to have the senate adopt the amendment at the regular session next winter. He counts on support from the senators of the nine states where women have the right to vote, also from Senators LaFollette of Wisconsin, Cummins of Iowa, Borah of Idaho and Townsend of Michigan—a large enough group to make a very respectable showing even if no further recruits are gained.

Meanwhile public sentiment in England is turning against the granting of votes to women because of the increased violence committed in the name of the cause. A few days ago a suffrage bill which proposed to give the ballot to all women householders over 25 years of age and to the wives of men having voting qualifications was defeated in the house of commons by a vote of 219 to 266. It is significant that the defeat came on the second reading of the bill, which is only a preliminary stage, whereas in the past suffrage measures have frequently passed on to final reading. "Militant madness" is ascribed as the principal cause for throwing out the bill on its first division. Irish members voted almost solidly in the negative because they do not wish to do anything to impair the progress of the home bill on its journey to the house of lords. Daily stories are told of bombs planted in prominent places in London, one of the most spectacular being under the bishop's throne in St. Paul's cathedral, where it was discovered before harm was done. Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, an American champion of equal suffrage, told her English sisters in London last Friday that their actions were hurting the cause in America.

An incident of the so-called sex war is the raising of the question of freedom of the press—an issue fought out in England two centuries ago. The Suffragette newspaper had been suppressed by the British government and its editors prosecuted as inciters of crime. A government prosecutor had announced that anyone printing the newspaper in future would be proceeded against, whereupon a portion of the Labor and Liberal press—supporters of the present cabinet—protested that this was going too far. Keir Hardie, a member of parliament, personally offered to publish the paper. The government thereupon issued a statement declaring that the prosecutor's pronouncement had been misconstrued and that The Suffragette might be issued so long as it did not contain incitement to crime. The paper has again appeared and been freely circulated, but its general tone is regarded as considerably milder than before the police raid on the militants' headquarters and printing office. The subscription list of the paper is said to have fallen off from 30,000 a week to less than a third of that number.

The Balkan Situation After the War

Now that the Turko-Balkan was is settled, so far as fighting is concerned, the various parties are beginning to count the cost. One of the intensely interested spectators, Austria-Hungary, spent, it is estimated, a matter of $8,000,000 in mobilizing its troops and in making warlike preparations. In addition to this there was a larger indirect loss through interference with business in Vienna and elsewhere in the empire. At this distance it seems as though the Austrian government should have been content to keep hands off, but a glance at the map will show how closely Austria is related to the territory over which the war waged. The relation is not only physical but racial and commercial. Could Austria before this war began have expanded her domain southward across the Balkan peninsula she would thereby have gained full access to the Mediterranean, instead of being limited to her Adriatic coast, where Italy has the vantage ground. As has been told before, the war ended these territorial aspirations for Austria, so she set about to minimize the effect of the Balkan victory by insisting that the great strip along the Adriatic south of the little kingdom of Montenegro and north of Greece be made an autonomous state, with the strategically located city of Scutari included.

Austria's bulldozing of Montenegro and her generally unfriendly attitude toward the Balkan combatants made her unpopular with her Slav neighbors, and shrewd statesmen are now urging a reversal of policy. They are arguing that the Austrian government should cultivate the friendship of these neighbors and thereby increase her important trade interests in this direction, at the same time abandoning her ambition for more territory. Austrian financial experts, says The Chicago News, estimate that the Balkan states will soon need to borrow a billion dollars to pay their debts and properly administer and develop the conquered districts.

Nobody is expressing any concern for the fate of poor old Turkey. Yet according to more than one apparently impartial observer unoffending Moslem residents of Macedonia and Albania have been slaughtered by tens of thousands by Bulgarians and Servians. Even though the result of the war may be satisfactory in that it assures the practical withdrawal of Turkey from Europe, it must be conceded that the Turkish noncombatants have been cruelly treated—perhaps as cruelly as the Turk in his turn had treated his non-Moslem subjects. It will be interesting to watch the progress of the remnant of the Ottoman empire in Asia Minor. There are latent possibilities there to which leaders of the Turks are directing attention.

Spain and France Moving Toward an Alliance

European alliances are becoming more numerous of late. The newest reported pact is between France and Spain. King Alfonso lately paid an official visit to Paris, where he was most cordially received, and though neither the object nor the result of his mission has been disclosed, it is stated by the newspapers with some positiveness that a close understanding has been arranged between the two nations, which may develop into an alliance. The Spanish premier, Count Romanones, is quoted as saying, "Today Spain and France have reached a friendly agreement. Tomorrow the two countries may take a further step."

Spain today is in a more prosperous condition than it has been for several decades. Its ruler appears to be popular with the majority of his subjects and its political affairs are comparatively tranquil. The loss of its overseas colonies impaired its prestige, but economically the deprivation appears to have been beneficial. French capital is looking to Spain as a field for investment and development, for the latent resources of the country are vast.

Senate Votes Against Public Hearings on Tariff

Democrats in the United States senate have been giving a surprising exhibition of unity and consistent determination in resisting the Republican demand for public hearings on the pending tariff bill which lately passed the house. On Friday the Penrose-LaFollette motion directing the finance committee to hear manufacturers and other interested witnesses was rejected by a vote of 41 to 36, the two Louisiana senators voting in the affirmative and all the Progressives except Senator Poindexter voting in the negative. The vote is taken to mean that the bill will pass the senate in the form in which it came from the house, and that, too, with reasonable promptness. If public hearings had been granted they could have been prolonged almost indefinitely and the delay might have seen President Wilson's grip on the situation gradually loosened. Just now the President is admittedly in full control and his tariff legislation program is proceeding smoothly.

Need Vital Figures for Health

A comparatively small number of states have awakened to the need for accurate registration of vital statistics. In most rural communities the question of public health is handled in such an inadequate manner that the returns are not only very incomplete but the deaths from preventable diseases are more numerous than if a stronger public sentiment against preventable diseases were developed. In many towns the board of health meets but seldom and the health officer draws only a few dollars a year for enforcing sanitary regulations which do not tend to make him popular. An immense amount of sickness from typhoid fever, tuberculosis and other diseases could be prevented if simple precautions were observed. Just how necessary is this preventive work will not be known until there is adequate registration of vital statistics. These figures will give warning of epidemics in certain parts of the country in time to check them. They will also give notice of the need of direct work to protect water supply or to inspect dairies.

Religious World

Linking Up the College Men with Churches

The enlistment of college and university men, after their graduation, in the work of the churches in cities and towns where they settle down for their permanent occupations is a problem of conspicuous importance for the aggressive kingdom of Christ. These trained and equipped young men are of superior value to the Christian cause, yet too often they fail to connect themselves even nominally with the organized Christianity of the communities where they locate after leaving school. Sometimes men who have been religious leaders in college fall away from active religious life altogether when they make the transition from study to money earning.

The unhappiness of such results oppresses particularly the Young Men's Christian Association, because it chiefly dominates the religious situation in American institutions of learning. On it, therefore, rests a large share of the responsibility for transferring graduated students back into the church relations of their precollege days. Appreciating this obligation, in both Chicago and New York the association has undertaken a vigorous attack on the problem. A secretary in each city makes it a specialty—Orrin G. Cocks in New York and Harry T. Williams in Chicago. In New York the work is tied up closely with the Federation of Churches, and is expressed through the Laity League for Social Service, which has headquarters in the Fifth Avenue building. In Chicago Mr. Williams from his office in the Association building pushes his efforts through the interchurch commission. Both organizations aim to interest young college men or other capable youths in definite tasks of Christian effort and request pastors to communicate to them specific opportunities for work that challenges a young Christian to be of use to his less fortunate fellows. These plans certainly deserve emulation in other cities.

Evangelical Leader in University of Zurich

The Record of Christian Work introduces to American readers as a strong new champion of Bible religion Friedrich Wilhelm Foerster, professor of pedagogy in the University of Zurich. Dr. Foerster has only lately stood forth as an avowed teacher of evangelical Christianity. His earlier position in his university teaching and influence was Unitarian and ethical. But he began to reproach himself that the bookish life he led as a university man immersed in his studies was resulting in no tangible human service, nor indeed in any vital apprehension of the realities of life. So he determined to correct his book-learned notions by practical observations of social conditions. With this in view he devoted himself for two years to studying the labor movement, juvenile delinquency and the relief of the poor. From being observer, the great needs he saw drove him to become a worker, and as a contribution to social betterment in his own city, he undertook educational work among the poor, with particular view to forming character among the children.

But Professor Foerster's purely ethical teachings failed to take hold, and he found himself driven to the conclusion that, as he says, "moral education can find its complete expression only in the Christian religion." Because he had to have something better than mere ethics to teach the children, he found it necessary to seek something better for himself, with the result that he has fully and frankly accepted the Pauline position—that man's unregenerate nature can be made capable of righteousness only by the unfolding of the grace of God. Professor Foerster writes voluminously, and his influence in Europe is said to be spreading rapidly.

Young Men's Christian Association Still Evangelical

The "evangelical test" of membership in the Young Men's Christian Association has been retained by a vote of 521 to 392 at the convention which has just adjourned at Cincinnati. The convention thus supported the contention of Professor William Hoge Marquess of New York, who was opposed in his belief to fourteen other members of the commission which for six years has been studying the desirability of modifying the test of membership. The associations thus hold fast to the basis which was adopted in Portland, Maine, in 1869. A further account of the recent convention appears in another column.

* * *

—Prayers an hour long are too short if they fail to reach God.

—Character is the soul's absorption of God.

Editorial

Theories Are Not the Great Thing

IN HIS NEW volume on "Great Ideas of Religion" Canon Simpson says much that is important for the church to heed today. One phrase is worthy of wide quotation: "Let us remember that as Christians we are committed to no theories." This is in his paper on sin, and is intended to apply to the origin and present power of sin, as well as to the atoning power of Christ.

Canon Simpson's word is eminently important. As Christians we are committed to a great body of facts. Many of them are not peculiar to us as Christians. The historical facts of Christ are the same for all honest historians as for Christian believers. The facts of the human life are common to psychologists and sociologists, without reference to their religious belief. But the facts of Christian experience are peculiar to Christians. The man who has not the experience is no proper judge of the faith. There is more argument for the Christian faith in the word of a redeemed man than there is in any amount of scholarship apart from experience of redemption. Professor Hocking has given us a truly great work in his book on "The Meaning of God in Human Experience," but he would be the first to say that no man's book can state the meaning of God which a believing washwoman knows so that it would be fully intelligible to a scholar who has no experience of God.

As Christians we are committed irrevocably to this whole series of facts, historical and personal. If any man attacks or denies them, we come to the rescue. And it is needful besides to recognize the existence of certain theories about these facts. There are Christian philosophies. Intelligent Christians should apprehend them. Doubtless one of them will ultimately prove to be correct. But it is no test of a man's Christianity that he holds this or that philosophy. It is not a test of Christianity that a man or a church hold a certain theory of the facts.

This difference between the facts to which one is committed and the theories one may hold about them is not peculiar to Christian people. It appears everywhere. Here are the facts of the heavenly bodies. These bodies have certain sizes and relations, and they move in certain orbits. There are hundreds of such facts which are common to all students. They do not change as the years go on, though new ones come to light and new aspects of the old ones appear. But there arises after a while a man who begins to talk about the nebular hypothesis. It is his theory of the facts and their origin. It does not at all affect the facts. If it has any validity it comes from the facts. It becomes a dominating theory. It passes into the books.

But later a more careful study of the facts, examination of new facts, better arranging of the facts, throw doubts on the nebular hypothesis. Gradually it passes out of common acceptance. The books say less about it. There has been no change whatever in the facts, nor in the loyalty of men to them; only the theory, the attempt at explanation of them, has changed. It would be possible for men to be equally loyal to the facts and for some to deny and some to affirm the nebular hypothesis.

Here are the facts of our Lord's life and work. They are historical facts, and they are facts of experience. A redeemed man is here and he owes his redemption to Christ. He knows him as God-Man. The records all indicate the same fact. There is no question about it as a fact of the Christian faith. But how was it possible for him, the eternal Son of God, to become man? Someone asserts what the theologians know as the kenotic theory. It is based on Paul's great saying in the Philippians, that Christ "emptied" himself. The one question is, Does it fit the facts? Does it explain the facts, or does it not? It must not for an instant be confounded with the facts themselves.

As rational men, we are forced to form a theory of the facts, but we fall into hopeless confusion if we suppose the theory is important as compared with the facts. The test of a man's Christian faith is not whether he holds to a certain theory but whether he holds to the facts unshaken. It is a favorite device of unthinking men to declare that you must hold a certain theory or you are compelled to give up the facts. It is simply not true. Theories may be adequate or inadequate according as one looks at them. But facts continue to be what they are.

Herein is true Christian liberty. There is a solid nucleus of facts of history and personal experience. There is room around them for a wide ranging of thought. The Presbyterian Church may well glory in its breadth. It has no theory or explanation which it demands that men accept. It asks only that they be true and loyal to the facts of history as recorded in the Scripture, and the facts of personal experience. This is its true liberty. For this liberty it must always stand.

Dr. Fox Discovered in Heresy

Replying to The Continent's observations on his protest against the last licensure of Union Seminary students in New York, Dr. John Fox inquires whether the editor of The Continent is "prepared to affirm for himself his own personal faith in the actual historical fact of the virgin birth of our Lord?" The question seems beside the mark of discussion, but the doctor shall have his answer clear, sharp and categorical: Yes.

As for the matter under consideration, it remains only to say, as before, that Dr. Fox's arguments are their own sufficient refutation. This communication from him, printed last week in The Continent, is itself enough evidence, if nothing other were at hand, that there was good reason for accepting these young men in the Presbyterian ministry. The quotation which the doctor takes from the formal statement of one of them rings true; it is the word of a sound believer in the Son of God. And Dr. Fox's opinion of where a man must go if he starts at a certain point is obviously unimportant in the case of men who haven't gone the way the doctor's own personal brand of logic would lead them. They don't have to take its lead.

The really interesting thing in Dr. Fox's letter is that it shows him as a heretic of a very definite sort branded intolerable in ancient times. He objects to the statement: "I believe that there was manifest in Jesus all of God that could be revealed in a complete human life." If Dr. Fox cannot receive this statement of doctrine his denial must signify that he does not believe that Jesus lived "a complete human life." Thus to deny the perfect humanity of Jesus has always been regarded in the historic church as a serious departure from orthodoxy. The exact historical name for this heresy, we believe, is Apollinarianism. As an Apollinarian, therefore, Dr. Fox should give thanks that he lives in an age when the church is more tolerant of individualities of doctrine than in former times. In an earlier generation his heresy might easily have come under annoying ecclesiastical notice. But today he lives in peace.

A Modest Booklet with a Stimulating Message

The Continent doesn't know who Rev. Timothy Kilbourn is. Presumably the name is a pseudonym. And we don't know whence comes the little pamphlet published under this pseudonym, with the title, "The Triumphant Ministry." But whoever the author is and wherever he is, there is an arrest about his modest pamphlet which a serious-minded man will not easily escape. Especially is there meat in it for ministers and young men thinking of the ministry. Simply written, the whole tone of the message is one of absolute confidence in the calling of the gospel preacher as to its paramount importance, resources and power, with no dismay at the hardships which must be endured in pursuing it. Here is just a little quotation that bespeaks well the serenity and strength of the whole.

"Our country is a very noisy one and not attentive to men who are in quiet places and doing their work in a quiet way. My disappointment was very keen when I discovered this. But awakening to it, these experiences conspired to give a clearer vision of my great calling and helped to get my eyes on the right things. And, in the triumphant ministry, that is one of the greatest considerations. Every disappointment makes its direct contribution to the triumph, if we accept the gospel we are set to preach. However, a man does not know this at the beginning. He may preach it. He may believe it. By and by, through disappointment and prayer, and the change of circumstances, and the incoming peace, which is better than understanding, and with 'experience,' he gets the right perspective and the vision that enables him to work and rest and wait. This is his first triumph—the triumph within."

The Westminster Confession Kept Up to Date

How in this forward-looking twentieth century do Presbyterians manage, anyhow, to get along with the Westminster Confession, a mediæval seventeenth century creed, as their standard of doctrine? Among the comparatively few people interested at all in theology these days, there are many who keep asking that question, often with the more or less polite intimation that Presbyterians cannot be very honest. It is a question, too, that often troubles young ministers within the church—ministers who feel that the substance of the Westminster Confession does not make up a message adequate to interpret the Master to the age in which they are set to preach him. To church men of larger experience the answer to these puzzles begins to grow clearer, but still it is not always easy to phrase it. There is, therefore, the delight of a refreshing discovery in finding an answer put in just the right terms—with unequivocal and convincing directness.

That discovery The Continent has made in the inaugural address that Professor McAfee delivered when he was seated in his new chair as professor of systematic theology at McCormick Seminary. It is to be hoped that the seminary will print the address in full, for it is a document whose illumination is bound to be helpful both inside the church and outside. Dr. McAfee does not blink the case at all. He frankly admits that the confession does not hold all the gospel, and that the large social applications of it which the church in these days is called upon to preach have no expression within the covers of this venerable document. There is not to be found in it, either, the emphasis on the fatherhood of God which the church has learned to rejoice in as a glorifying interpretation of universal life. But if the confession does not recognize these and other elements that must enter largely into the twentieth century message of the church, it in no place denies them. On the contrary, by implication it confirms them all, since it lays unmistakable foundations for these larger views in what it teaches concerning the dependence of the human soul for salvation and every other good upon the grace of a compassionate Creator.

The God whom the confession depicts under legal formulas is a God of fatherly mercies, even though the confession scarcely calls him Father. And the individually redeemed character upon which the confession insists is the character by which alone social welfare for the masses can be vitalized and made permanent. The confession thus becomes a sure foundation of immovable truth, without hindering in the slightest the building upon it of such ampler truth as the crowning structure of Christian understanding and faith demands. And Dr. McAfee is glad that Presbyterian faith in the providence of God was well founded in individualism before it took the social accent. As he himself writes:

> "This individual accent is after all the fundamental one. The social accent is absolutely dependent upon it. Social conditions will change with the times, but the fundamental fact of the individual and his relation to eternal realities must always remain. When the confession deals with the individual, it is right so far as it goes. It will never be possible to treat men as though they were not individuals, with individual defects, individual natures and individual relation to God. It will, of course, always be a mistake to act as though that were all. But it does not put the confession out of the path of social reform to indicate that it is essentially an individualistic document."

So there is an answer after all, and a good one, as to how Presbyterians get on with the Westminster Confession in the twentieth century.

Is This Their Best Spiritual Champion?

The executive officials of the Socialist party are using a paper-covered book by Morris Hillquit, "Socialism Summed Up," as primer literature to be distributed among nonsocialists in hope of making conversions to their cause. But most unadvisedly for the impression desired, the publishers have put on the back cover of the volume an advertisement for the writings of George Davis Herron on "The Spiritual Side of Socialism." This statement says of Herron: "When he became professor of applied Christianity in Grinnell College he tried to apply the teaching of Jesus to social affairs. The result was an explosion. He lost his academic chair and gained a far wider audience." All of which is just about the unluckiest introduction that socialism could give itself to a decent, home-honoring, woman-respecting public. The hypocrisy of it is enough to make honorable men gnash their teeth.

It is entirely too early to lie this way about Herron. Too many people remember him. So far from losing his position at Grinnell for applying the teachings of Jesus to social affairs, he stood in high repute with the churches and with his college as long as anybody could think that that was what he was trying to do. It was only when he shamelessly violated every teaching of Jesus and every dictate of manly decency in his own personal "social affairs" that the "explosion" drove him out of the company of men unwilling to make honor a byword. It was because Herron deserted his wife and children to take up with a woman who was able to support him in the idleness of wealth that he "lost his academic chair," and for no other cause on earth.

Socialists know very well that the reason which holds back from their fellowship many persons sympathetic with their economic ideas is the haunting fear that their propaganda somehow threatens the sanctity of family life. What mad folly is it then for them to put forward as the champion of the party's "spiritual side" a contemptible renegade whose record would confirm those fears at their worst? Or is this deliberate revelation?

Words of Sober Sense on Sex Safety

Amid the whirlwind of words now revolving round the question of maidenly purity—a whirlwind in which living wage, environment, recreation and sex education are the sounds that mostly fill the air—it is a comfort to find somebody strong enough to stand solid and quiet and say these sober things which The Continent takes from a report on "social morality" made to the late convention of Young Women's Christian Associations at Richmond:

"If we are to help bring in an era in which young people will be prepared to withstand the temptations that assail them from within and without, we must premise that that end can only be achieved by a far finer means than mere courses of instruction in the physical laws of sex. In other words, the formative power of spiritual forces must be fully enlisted. Effort must be directed toward establishing those positive moral qualities which render young people immune to the dangers clustering about sex and toward bringing them to desire and accept the more abundant life which alone will enable them to live above such temptations."

To this should be added as supplement another utterance just as profoundly true taken from a companion report offered to the same convention on "character standards."

"As we face our responsibility to the young women whose narrow, aimless, superficial lives must be transformed to breadth of purpose deep and true, we realize that only as Jesus Christ himself becomes the great redeeming standard can we hope to see character made strong instead of flabby and life become a throbbing dynamo of power."

—Hastings College at Hastings, Nebraska, builds up its endowment in $100,000 installments. It is now working on the second hundred thousand, and is within $30,000 of completing it. There is every prospect that President Crone and his helpers will "put it across" by commencement time. Surely they deserve to. There is not another college in the country so highly commended by local loyalty to the admiration and aid of people outside. Hastings is not one of the towns which expects outsiders to donate a fine college to it. On the contrary, Hastings has always paid in full for all the value of the college to the town itself. In the last thirty years the citizens of this country county seat have put $240,000 in cold cash into this institution. No, it was not cold, either. They warmed it with their enthusiasm before they put it in, and that is what has made the college live and grow to its present proportions.

—In the frontier towns of the West the thing that ought to be in regard to church unity is very rapidly becoming the thing that is. In Alamogordo, New Mexico, for a recent example, the two Methodist churches, North and South, and the Presbyterian church are negotiating a merger, and two Methodist presiding elders and a Presbyterian mission superintendent, Dr. Gass, are expected to officiate at the ceremony. This union church will probably be Presbyterian, but if it is, that will only signify a good reason for some Presbyterian church going over to the Methodists in some other similar location. Such unions will reduce the number of congregations on the rolls of the various denominations, but won't take anything from their membership strength. Losses in one locality will be compensated by gains in another.

—The absolute intrenchment of the prohibition policy in Kansas is made manifest by the fact that a complete transfer of the state government from Republican to Democratic hands has not awakened the slightest agitation for resubmitting the prohibition question to the people. Under similar circumstances in Maine the liquor people saw a great opportunity for themselves and made a lot of mischief through it. But in Kansas Governor Hodges, the new Democratic executive, is just as stoutly for prohibition as the best of his Republican predecessors, and the liquorites can't deceive themselves into thinking that they have even a knothole of opening to drag their business back into that state.

—New York newspapers calculate that on Manhattan island alone about $4,500,000 is going into church property this summer. This does not include the work which goes on continually at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. The New York Sun thinks this "answers the question whether the church is losing its hold."

—Gravity is no more religion than the owl is the bird of paradise.

Presbyterian Quadrilateral at Atlanta

ATLANTA seems to be the "gate city" to a new order of Presbyterianism. Here entered new ideas and new ways. The practicability of the actual fellowship and cooperation of the much-divided Presbyterian family was proved. Except for the colors of the ribbon on the lapels of commissioners' coats—blue for U. S. A. Presbyterians, red for U. S. Presbyterians, white for U. P.'s and gold for A. R. P.'s—the city has known no difference in the Presbyterians assembled for the most notable gathering of this denominational family held on the continent.

Hospitality of an overwhelming sort was the city of Atlanta's particular contribution to this extraordinary occasion—not the easy hospitality of flags and bunting and greeting by civic officials, but something more vital and more meaningful. Showing the South in its best and most lavish mood, the people of Atlanta actually opened their homes for the free entertainment of all the commissioners—approximately 1,500 in number.

Consider what this means. It was not a case of apportioning the strangers among the homes of their respective denominations. There is no United Presbyterian church in Atlanta, and only one —not large—U. S. A. church. This necessitated that the whole company of visitors should be cared for in the homes of the U. S. Church (which was a physical impossibility) or else in the homes of all churches. This has happened.

Methodists, Baptists, Episcopalians, Unitarians, Jews, Roman Catholics and nonchurch-goers have freely opened up their homes to the men from this whole broad land. There never has been such a general, intimate, extended and personal meeting of the people of all sections of the country in one city since the civil war. All the other gracious expressions of Atlanta hospitality seem trivial alongside of this uttermost proof of welcome and sincerity.

Of course these Presbyterians—in Atlanta's eyes the bewildering assortment of initial letters are dropped, and the multitude become Presbyterians—are getting together, according to the program, and still oftener without consulting the program's permission. The first of the official Assembly sessions was that of the United Presbyterians on Wednesday night; and most of the congregation which filled the church, and shared in the ringing music of the psalms, were strictly unofficial "fraternal delegates." Many U. S. Presbyterians heard Moderator Matthews's opening sermon, and Moderator Clyce had his share of U. S. A. hearers. The interflow of the several bodies is noticeable at the hotels, as well as at meetings and exhibition halls.

The pre-Assembly conferences gave occasion for commingled meetings. All three bodies shared in the successful public sessions of the evangelistic committee, while the college presidents' conference was also comprehensive. The Home and Foreign Boards of the U. S. A. Church united in the pre-Assembly conference, and so showed a significant brand of union within denominational lines.

The formal gettings-together of the Assemblies are the "popular meetings" at night in the huge Auditorium, which seats about 8,000 persons. These are impressive demonstrations, with no lines of any sort.

In the warmth of a great welcome, of a great vision and of a common heritage, the pan-Presbyterian meetings in Atlanta are realizing their real oneness, which lies deeper than any formal organization or nomenclature.

The Choice of Moderators

Two Assemblies Have Five Nominees Each, but the Other Makes a Unanimous Choice on One Nomination.

Nothing save a sermon happens in any Presbyterian General Assembly till a moderator is elected. The sermon is the contribution of the moderator of a year previous. As already said, the United Presbyterians began proceedings first on Wednesday night, May 14. In Central Presbyterian church Dr. H. H. Bell of San Francisco preached the retiring moderator's sermon, which illuminated the thought that the church must go forward in order to come up with the living Christ, its leader.

Then very quietly, quite as an integral part of their acts of worship, the Assembly commissioners chose unanimously as their next presiding officer President R. M. Russell of Westminster College, New Wilmington, Pennsylvania. It was Dr. Russell's triumphant success in raising for his school $400,000 of endowment money in the past year which brought him the compliment and recognition of this uncontested honor. It is, however, no new or strange thing for Dr. Russell to shine in the stimulation of benevolence. As pastor of the great Sixth United Presbyterian church in Pittsburg, before going to this college presidency, he raised in a single collection at a Sabbath service on one occasion $260,000. Dr. Russell was born in the birth year of his denomination—1858—and is an alumnus of the college over which he now presides.

The sermon before the U. S. Presbyterians in North Avenue church was preached by Dr. T. S. Clyce of Texas—a simple and inspiring gospel message on the meaning and satisfactions of immortal triumph for the Christian.

The greatest audience for any of these moderatorial sermons was naturally given to the stalwart and vigorous discourse of Seattle's famous pastor, Dr. Mark A. Matthews, preaching in the vast Baptist tabernacle—Len Broughton's former church—before the U. S. A. Assembly, whose commissioners and visitors well filled the place. Here there was frequent applause for the preacher's aggressive utterances. His theme was, "The Victories of Faith Versus the Failures of Unbelief," and his texts, set in contrast, were John 14:12-15 and Matthew 13:58. In the application of his exhortations Dr. Matthews put in heavy strokes for international peace, liquor prohibition, family prayer, orthodox faith and evangelistic preaching.

Tremendous Overthrow of "Best-Laid Plans"

It was a coincidence of interest that the U. S. A. and U. S. Assemblies had each five candidates nominated from whom to make the choice of a moderatorial head. In the latter body, representing the Southern churches, there was the curious situation of two brother members of one theological faculty being put in competition with each other—Dr. William M. McPheeters and Dr. R. C. Reed, both of whom teach in the Presbyterian seminary at Columbia, South Carolina. There was also put in nomination Dr. A. M. Frazer, who has the distinction of being the present occupant of the manse in Staunton, Virginia, where President Woodrow Wilson was born. Dr. W. M. Alexander, too, the pastor at Prytania Street in New Orleans, was proposed. But in four successive ballots these gentlemen one by one were voted out and the designation for the presiding officer's seat remained to the fifth nominee—Dr. John S. Lyons, who for nearly two decades has been pastor of First church of Louisville and is held in an altogether exceptional personal affection throughout the church fellowship. It is interesting to hear that Dr. Lyons is a graduate of tiny King College at Bristol, Tennessee, as is also Dr. Reed, who stood second. A year ago the Assembly moderator chosen and the two who came next him in the balloting were all King College men. It is commonly said that King College is "on the map" of Southern Presbyterianism these days.

But this choice in the U. S. Assembly, though interesting in these other particulars, did not have any such dramatic aspect as set the nerves of spectators tingling with tension and excitement in the U. S. A. Assembly. When the session for choosing a moderator was called to order it was anticipated that there would be four nominations only, and these were made in due order—Dr. Maitland Alexander of First church, Pittsburg, by President John Willis Baer; President William McKibbin of Lane Seminary, by Dr. David R. Moore; Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston of Stamford, Connecticut, by Dr. Arthur F. Bishop, and Dr. Samuel S. Palmer of Broad Street church, Columbus, by Dr. William C. Covert.

A Nominee in Ignorance of Nomination

But a bombshell had been prepared by Dr. William R. King of Monmouth, Illinois. Mounting the platform, Dr. King declared his intention to propose a nominee whose name had not been mentioned in any preliminary canvass and who had at the moment no idea of being named. Indeed, Dr. King declared that he had consulted with no members of the Assembly about the matter and no person besides himself knew of whom he was about to speak. When he should mention the name he besought commissioners sitting near the gentleman to hold him in his seat and prevent his declining. Thus carrying his audience with him in rare skill, Dr. King worked up to the mention of the name of Dr. John Timothy Stone of Fourth church, Chicago. The most vigorous applause of the hour greeted this climax of Dr. King's speech.

Despite efforts of his neighbors, Dr. Stone struggled to his feet and protesting against the nomination asked the Assembly's permission to withdraw his name from consideration. The question was put to the house and by an emphatic majority the Assembly refused him leave to withdraw. This quite upset all the calculations on which the previous candidates had been figuring. The seconding speeches went forward in a state of uncertainty—Dr. George W.

Robert M. Russell, D. D.
President Westminster College, Moderator United Presbyterian Assembly

John Timothy Stone, D. D.
Pastor Fourth Church, Chicago, Moderator Presbyterian Assembly "U. S. A."

*J. S. Lyons, D. D.
Pastor First Church, Louisville, Kentucky, Moderator Presbyterian Assembly "U. S."

THE PRESBYTERIAN MODERATORS ELECTED AT ATLANTA

Bull for Alexander, Dr. W. L. Darby for McKibbin, Dr. W. F. Tufts for Johnston, Dr. Paul R. Hickok for Palmer and William T. Ellis for Stone. The most memorable passage of these latter addresses was doubtless Dr. Bull's sarcastic parody ridiculing the whole custom of nominating speeches in Assembly:

> "How dear to my heart are the speeches of childhood,
> When General Assemblies permit us to hark
> To the bottomless speeches, the moss-covered speeches,
> The personal speeches made in the ark."

It was evident on the first ballot that Dr. Stone's immense personal popularity and the Assembly's revulsion against buttonhole and caucus campaigning for the moderatorship had combined to cause a revolution in favor of the man who did not aspire to the honor and had been named so unexpectedly. In this first polling Alexander was supported handsomely East and West. Central Ohio and Indiana stood by Palmer. Southwestern Ohio and Tennessee were with McKibbin and New England and Texas joined hands for Johnston. But Stone was shoved ahead of all in a way that presaged the fall of the hopes of all the rest. The ballot stood:

Alexander	277
Palmer	135
McKibbin	47
Johnston	65
Stone	314

The second voting resulted:

Stone	552
Alexander	245
Palmer	31

McKibbin and Johnston withdrawn.

Inducted into office, Dr. Stone was quite unable to conceal the confusion into which he had been thrown by his sudden elevation. He stammered in deep feeling: "Fathers and brethren, all I can say is that I don't know what to say." The Assembly, however, was self-evidently rejoiced over its work. Equal congratulation among commissioners over any piece of parliamentary action has certainly not been heard on the floor of the U. S. A. Assembly in years before.

The Initial Foursquare Meeting

The first evening meeting in which the "quadrilateral" of Atlanta unity was exhibited came Thursday night with an imposing and alert audience filling a large proportion of the available space in Atlanta's mighty Auditorium. Two men who had labored tremendously to bring Atlanta's unique hospitality to realization were on the platform—Dr. Richard O. Flinn presiding and Chairman J. K. Orr of the local committee of arrangements to make the address of welcome. To this responded Dr. Clyce, Dr. Bell and Dr. Matthews for the respective Assemblies whose gavels they had just relinquished, and Rev. J. H. Pressly, representing the commission of the Associate Reformed Church which was sent to fill in the fourth side of the pan-Presbyterian rectangle. All these addresses scintillated with fraternity and were weighty, too, with the common ideals of the participating churches.

The evening was climaxed by Canada's wonderful Presbyterian orator, Hon. J. A. Macdonald, who, speaking on "The Church's Responsibility for International Peace," surpassed himself in fervent and soul-stirring appeal. He insisted that the churches of Germany, the British empire and the United States can render war obsolete by preaching the sinfulness of armed conflict, and adjured the churches there represented not to neglect the duty.

The Feast on the Mountain Top

Four Denominations Commune Together in Perfect and Most Inspiring Christian Fellowship

Too elusive and spiritual for words was the character of the union communion service on Friday afternoon. In every respect it was notable. The setting was unusual. The great Tabernacle, in which the U. S. A. meetings are held, seats 3,000 persons on the main floor and in two galleries. The commissioners of the other three denominations and hundreds of Atlanta women and laymen crowded every part of the house. In the choir loft sat seventy-five United Presbyterian men to lead the singing of the psalms. On the platform were ranged the four moderators and Rev. D. H. Ogden, pastor of Central Presbyterian church, who had charge of all the arrangements for the service.

The practical workings of administration of the sacrament to that immense company moved as quietly, quickly and reverently as the service in a village church. Forty-six elders officiated—twenty on the main floor, twelve in one gallery and fourteen in another. A table had been prepared at the center of each gallery, with a moderator in charge. Moderators Stone and Russell officiated downstairs. Individual cups were used and the elements were passed simultaneously in all three places.

Five psalms were sung, and until they hear the choir about the throne those present will never be uplifted in song as when with one heart their 3,000 voices were raised in Rouse's version of the 23d Psalm. Again, at a later point in the service, the congregation repeated the King James rendering of the same psalm, and the sound was as the voice of many waters. Sung or spoken, the psalms seemed to have a new meaning in that unprecedented gathering of children of the old Scotch church.

While the elements were being passed the great organ played, softly, like an echo of heavenly music. Weary, self-condemning, overburdened spirits were breathed upon by this music as by a message of divine peace. The tunes played so tenderly, occasionally with the chimes sounding, were the precious, time-honored hymns of the Passion.

Moderator Russell of the United Presbyterian Assembly preached the sermon, a familiar, devotional treatment of what the Lord's supper means to the disciple. All the other moderators—Dr. Lyons of the U. S. Church, Dr. Pressly of the A. R. Church and Dr. Stone—bore a part in the service.

But it was not any one man's words or any single action or aspect of the service that mellowed men's hearts and caused many

(Continued on page 734)

---

*Photo by Standiford, Louisville, Ky.

How About Your Prayer Meeting?

Things Not Taught in Seminary

BY A LIVE VETERAN

AFTER MORE than a third of a century as a prayer meeting leader it ought to be possible for one to say something helpful to his younger brethren. The writer of this paper may not succeed in doing this, but he feels constrained to make the attempt. His words are addressed to pastors primarily, and grow out of his own pastoral experience. They were not taught him in the theological seminary, though he had excellent instruction there. There are some things that the seminary cannot teach, and it is not to blame for it. But he did have the privilege of most excellent example and training under two pastors; one of his youth, long since in the Father's other house, the other of his college days, still bringing forth fruit in old age. The first thing he has to say is that the pastor must thoroughly believe in the place and value of the prayer meeting in the life of the church. If the pastor has reached the conclusion that it is outgrown and outworn, or for any other reason is not of vital importance to his church, then let him, without further delay, obtain the consent of his officers to drop such service and put something in its place. But believing in its importance let us consider the preparation for it and the meeting itself. And first as to the preparation:

What is the proper preparation for the midweek service—physical, mental and spiritual?

How can the leader keep the meeting moving briskly?

Should the minister do all the talking?

What sort of room should be used, and how should it appear?

Is the set "topic" an advantage?

How can monotony be avoided?

1. The physical. It goes far to make the prayer meeting a success. As a rule the pastor must not come to the meeting tired out with a hard day's work. This is generally recognized as true of the Sunday preaching, but is not so generally thought of in connection with the midweek service. He must plan his work so as to make the preceding hours of the day less wearisome than usual. If necessary, take a nap just before and come to the service in a refreshed physical condition. All his other preparation for and efforts in the meeting have their starting point here.

Make the Proper Mental Preparation

2. The mental. Here again he must so arrange his work that mentally he is fresh, vigorous, alert. There must be no note of discouragement in the message he brings or the attitude he takes in the service. He must have a definite purpose in view with reference to this particular meeting. He is to speak to men and women who are tired, discouraged, preoccupied with other things, and his message must, in spirit and matter, aim to give them positive help. The truth must bear in a practical way upon the everyday life of the people, and they must be sent away determined, by God's help, to live a little nearer the Master than hitherto.

Let him find his message in some definite portion of Scripture. The selection must be made with care and thoroughly studied till his mind is saturated with his message. This ought to be short—most prayer meeting talks ought to be cut in two as to time—pointed, suggestive, but not exhaustive, not too finished. Let him polish his sermon, but let his prayer meeting talk be more conversational and rugged. Do not say all there is to say on the subject, and often what is said can be given with greater effectiveness at different times in the meeting.

He must select his hymns with as much care as his Scripture. Not every good hymn is suitable for the prayer meeting, and a pastor must know his hymn book thoroughly so as to use it wisely. To leave the selection of the hymns to the pianist or chorister, or to the chance turning over of the book after it is time to begin the service, is seriously to mar the service. Above all, do not begin with an unfamiliar hymn, or with one that tells of life's trials, or of the longing of the soul to start for the heavenly country—a thing it rarely desires to do. Praise, thanksgiving, adoration, worship, are the notes with which to begin, and many a prayer meeting is spoiled by the neglect of these simple suggestions. The other hymns ought to be in keeping with the subject of the talk.

Arrange the program so that the service shall be cumulative in its impression, so far as the leader may be able to control it. With great variety in form, it should grow in power and interest to the end.

3. The spiritual. Many leaders seem to think that this is all that is needed. How this word "spiritual" is debased and degraded! Too often, in many prayer meetings, "spiritual, devotional," has come to mean to pastor and people alike platitudinous, hortatory remarks, more or less, usually less, related to Scripture, or some supposed experience. The whole work of preparation as just outlined must be spiritual, devotional, shot through and through with the conscious sense of the presence of the Spirit and of a growing acquaintance with God. One reason why many people stay away from the prayer meeting is that there is nothing in the so-called "spiritual" character of the service worth while or helpful to them. Who blames them for staying away? The neglect of thorough preparation cannot be made good by a few moments of secret prayer just before hurrying to the meeting, nor by a pious tone, nor by declamatory exhortations to work and pray. If the prayer meeting in your church is to be of much account it will cost thorough preparation.

Frequently call attention to the prayer meeting from the pulpit. Printed announcements are not sufficient. Make the people realize that they are missing the best and most helpful service when they stay away from it. Convince them that it is worth while and they will come to it.

Begin and close on time. If the meeting drags, or has evidently reached its culmination, close at once, whether the hour is up or not. There is nothing specially sacred or spiritual in holding a prayer meeting just one hour. Never scold those present because others are absent. In fact, never scold anyway—it is as harmful as being discouraged.

Cultivate variety in the order of the meeting. Arrest attention by varying the order of the service. Do not always sing just two stanzas of the hymn, nor always the whole six or more. Sometimes divide the hymn into two parts. Sing a single stanza when it is appropriate to what has been said. Be so familiar with the book that you can announce another hymn than the one previously selected, if it is more fitting. Consult with the pianist and cut out all preludes and interludes.

Sometimes talk at the beginning, sometimes in the middle and sometimes at the end, and occasionally in all three places, but in any event let your terminal facilities be excellent. Say less rather than more than you planned.

Help others to take part by making it easy for them to do so. This can be done in various ways. Speak to some privately about it. Give them some topic upon which to speak, some text to explain, some question to answer. Use tact, common sense, judgment, beforehand as well as during the meeting, in securing responses.

Have Bibles in the room and get the people to use them, sometimes by a "Bible reading," sometimes by asking one or more to read the passage to be expounded, rarely by "responsive reading." Ask them to select verses themselves to read. Encourage them to speak what is in their own heart and mind whether it is on your theme or not.

Praying to the Point and Briefly

Be an example yourself in praying to the point and briefly. Be definite yourself and give the people something definite to pray about.

Tell your officers, or any who are always present and usually take part, to do so at the first opportunity, and so get out of the way of the more timid who will always wait till the "standbys" have spoken.

Be alert to make an encouraging comment, to quote an appropriate text of Scripture, or sing a hymn, after someone has taken part, specially if it is a new or timid voice, even if he has not said much that is worth while. His words may mean much more than your most polished sentences.

From beginning to end seek to realize for yourself and for the people the presence of God, the fulfillment of the Master's words, the guidance of the Spirit.

Seek to send the people home hungry for more and determined to live better, to serve more loyally and to be more obedient children of their Father.

You will never have the whole church at a prayer meeting. It is not probable, perhaps not even possible. Be thankful for those who do come. Strengthen them for life's work and seek in all legitimate ways to increase their number.

"All this is mechanical?" You can make it so, but don't do it. "But it means more time and labor than I can give to it?" It is a costly work—it would not amount to much if it was not—but you have all the time there is, and possibly it is as important as anything you can do with the same amount of time and labor. At any rate, make an honest, determined effort to try it.

A Center for the Praying Group

BY AN ILLINOIS PASTOR

TEN LINES in a city daily convey a meager but suggestive report of a discussion of the midweek meeting in one of the ministers' associations. In the report the meeting is characterized as "a burden," as "always dull" and as "occasioning the majority of pastoral resignations." If these things are true, the situation is indeed alarming, and the added suggestion that it should be given up is only a reasonable conclusion. Personally, I do not believe it is true. Yet the lack of enthusiasm about the meeting and the frequent expression of pastoral anxiety suggest a serious situation. Calling a group of my fellow pastors on the telephone, I find they agree with me that the judgment reported from the bigger city is highly absurd. These same pastors express much comfort in their meetings at the midweek hour, yet all of them confess that the attendance is far too low, and all wish they knew how to extend the influence of the service. Not one of them would dream of surrendering the meeting, and all believe it continues to be the real rallying place for the praying group in the church.

I am inclined to be even more optimistic than my neighbors, and to say that observation justifies the judgment that the value of the prayer meeting is not impaired, even if we must confess to a limited attendance. A few facts may cheer us in our consideration of the problem. In the first place, it will very likely be found in the course of a year that the number of persons attending one or more of the prayer meetings is quite large, running as high as 50 per cent of the membership. In the second place, our churches are so well organized that we have really constituted a number of groups, of which the prayer meeting group is but one. I have a "missionary group," a "social group" and a "Bible school group," and when I consider the groups together I find a large number of workers, constituting a well organized and efficient church. The absence of many of these workers from the prayer meeting does not argue a lack of interest in the affairs of the kingdom. A third consideration must be suggested, though it does not apply in all cases. That is, the highly organized nature of our community life, with its vastly increased claims for social service upon members of the church.

Some Causes for Failure Disclosed

I am impressed, however, both in my own case and in the case of my fellow pastors, with the need there is of positive care of the midweek meeting, in order that it may be to those who attend a service of comfort, radiating faith and joy, and that it may be both constructive and edifying. The discussion reported in the daily paper referred to discloses some of the possible causes for prayer meeting failure. It says: "The prayer meeting is always dull, with the minister doing all the talking." Of course, if the minister is to do all the talking and all the praying the meeting is destined to be a failure in the majority of cases. It cannot be true, however, that the prayer meeting is "always dull." I know at least one that is never dull. And in that one the pastor does not do all the talking. I am sure it is the minister's duty to see that the meeting is not allowed to become dull. It is his duty to see that it is strong and bright, and that it ministers comfort and uplift to all who attend.

Prayer meeting failure may be attributed to a variety of causes. In no case is poor attendance a cause of its failure. Poor attendance may be a result of failure, but not its cause. I think the main cause is pastoral neglect. This neglect applies to both the physical atmosphere of the meeting and to the plan under which the meeting is conducted. I know places where the meeting is condemned to death because of slovenly and untidy surroundings. It is impossible to have holy thoughts and an aspiring temper in a badly ventilated, badly lighted room. When we add to the untidiness of the room the use of a poor hymn book, with ragtime hymns, and probably no Bibles from which to read, we have completed the conditions under which a prayer meeting probably ought to die. But a beautiful room, clean and well lighted, with order evident everywhere, and with a clean hymn book and a good Bible in hand —such an equipment will make possible the exaltation of feeling that is essential to a successful meeting.

Side by side with the brilliant and clean atmosphere must come the evidence of plan on the part of the pastor. With a good plan the pastor can be perfectly indifferent as to whether he has ten or a hundred present. The plan must be constructed according to the needs of the parish. Perhaps it will be most helpful if I refer to two kinds of meetings of which I have some knowledge as illustrating the possibilities of the midweek hour. In one of these churches, situated in a small town, the pastor gave as much care to his prayer meeting as to any other part of his work. He read months ahead to be ready for it. He presented a line of religious and social topics, upon which he had prepared himself with diligent care. He was almost an expert in the lines considered. But he also secured the help of others. He interested men in the discussions. He did much unique printing. As a consequence he drew to his church on Wednesday nights almost as many people as he did on Sabbath morning. It was a brave and successful piece of work. The difficulty with that kind of meeting is that which attaches to all "topical" meetings. They are, after all, accidental, and do not become constructive in their influence. A topical prayer meeting can be successful where there are many people to assist in the discussion. But in the ordinary church, the topical idea is a weakness, leaving it almost necessary for the pastor to do all the talking, and occasioning those long and painful pauses we so dread. On the whole, I think the "topic" has been the bullet that killed the prayer meeting in hundreds of cases.

But if we banish topics, what can take their place? In answer to that let me describe the ideal prayer meeting for hundreds of churches, the prayer meeting that is successful regardless of numbers, and that is always constructive and edifying. This prayer meeting has a one hour session. Twenty minutes of the hour is given to worship and prayer. By arrangement beforehand in many cases choice bits of news are presented, or bits of devotional reading, or experiences are related. After this use of the third of the hour, the group opens the Bible to the lesson of the evening. Everyone in the room has a copy of the book. Some have the revised version for reference; some have the twentieth century edition; possibly some their Greek Testament. The pastor leads the discussion, both asking and answering questions. The people read the text. The problem before the group is to find the subject treated in the chapter and to relate it to our modern life. As the group digs into the text timely and profitable topics spring up on every hand. At the close of the hour the pastor sums up the chapter and with a few minutes of silent or uttered prayers the group breaks up for social intercourse. Night after night the pastor leads his group on this direct exploration of the book. He goes through books, chapter by chapter. As a result the book itself is opened, and the group becomes grounded in the faith. If this seems only a Bible class, let me say that it is that—and more. In an experience of years I have not known a dull prayer meeting. Neither have I cared whether there were five or fifty present. The hour is always too short. In such a continued study of Bible books I have led my people through large parts of the New Testament. We have discussed the home and the world, spiritualism and Christian Science, theosophy and all occult ideas, the ordinances and doctrines of the church, the resurrection of the body and the life everlasting.

Building Up a Leavening Nucleus

On the whole, I am inclined to think that the prayer meeting does for a small group what Jesus did for a dozen men. It gives the chance to train and enlarge the group that leavens the lump. I suppose every pastor in the church can attach to himself a group that will stay with him through a series of midweek services. Now, if each pastor could devote himself to the upbuilding of this group, however small, it is more than likely that this group would determine the quality of the church's life. At least there is no other service that offers anything like the chance that the midweek service offers.

I have spoken somewhat personally, desiring to challenge the other pastors to the discovery of the trouble, and to call forth criticism and inquiry, to the end that the midweek meeting may be the rallying center for our people that we all wish it might be.

Surprises for the Midweek Service

BY JAMES ELMER RUSSELL

MOST CRITICISMS of the midweek service have been directed at its monotony. It has been said that in some churches one who returned to the midweek service after an absence of years would find just the same kind of meeting he had formerly known, the same sort of address by the pastor, the same prayers by the same few men, and above all the same pauses.

It would seem, then, that the first thing to do for the midweek service is to see that it does not resemble those back country roads where the wheels run along ever in the deep worn ruts. The pastor must plan, in other words, that there shall be an element of surprise

(Continued on page 727)

A Presbyterian Amazon of Old England

BY HENRY C. SHELLEY

Two and a half centuries ago, in the days of Charles I., the blood harvest of Puritanism stained red the rural fields and villages of England. In this conflict Presbyterianism played a noble part, larger than is generally remembered. Mr. Shelley, who is a writer of distinction, here traces most vividly the shadow of civil war as it fell across the castle home of Sir Robert Harley, a sturdy member of the Puritan parliament. In the crisis his wife proved herself a heroine in standing firm for her faith and defending her family, until death took her, against overwhelming odds.

AWAY IN a backwater of rural England, nestling quietly among undulating meadows, which here begin to swell into the foothills of the Welsh border, unheard of by tourists and unknown to natives save those western born, lies the peaceful village of Brampton Brian. Its meandering lanes fringed by luscious hedgerows and sentineled by clumps of bosky trees, its unhurrying water courses, margined of reed and willow, making a cool home for idly moving trout, its farmhouses dozing lazily in the sunshine and its cottages embowered in creepers and old world flowers, its village church, orderly within and without as becomes a temple of faith, all combine to make such a picture of rural England as may be sought in vain in most other counties.

Yet Brampton Brian was not always isolated from the larger world. More than two and a half centuries ago this remote village became acquainted with "the purple testament of bleeding war." It was war, too, of the worst kind—civil war, when the neighbor became an enemy, brother took sword against brother, and all ties of blood and family affection were rent asunder And the passions which transformed this tranquil hamlet into an arena of strife were gendered of religion!

* * * * *

FOR no historian of what the royalist Clarendon called the "Great Rebellion" is able to shut his eyes to the fact that Charles I. and his parliament appealed to the sword to decide more than political problems. Fundamentally, indeed, as the origins of New England bear witness, the civil war of the seventeenth century was waged for faith quite as much as for polity. It was the blood harvest of Puritanism. And Presbyterianism played a larger part in the early stages of the conflict than is generally remembered. In fact, England as a whole was never before and has never since been so near establishing the Presbyterian faith as the state religion. Had it not been for Oliver Cromwell there is every human probability that kirk session, presbytery, synod and General Assembly would today have been as familiar to the speech of the Englishman as to the Scot across the border.

* * * * *

SUCH a result, the substitution of presbyter for bishop, of the General Assembly for convocation, of the Confession of Faith for the thirty-nine articles, would have been nowhere more welcome than in the village of Brampton Brian. Welcome, that is, to the chief family there. And it was a family of much importance in that remote countryside—a family of ancient lineage, wide possessions and close relationship with most other historic families in the West. Exactly when the Harleys first settled in Brampton Brian is unknown; what is certain, however, is that Brampton Brian castle and estate were added to their possessions some seven years before the thirteenth century came to an end. Four centuries later the influence of the reformation had penetrated to this secluded hamlet, claiming in the person of Sir Robert Harley an adherent of firm faith and stubborn purpose. But it is not for his sake so much as for that of his third wife, Brilliana—so named because born at the Brill in the Netherlands—that Brampton Brian castle deserves immortality in the annals of Presbyterianism.

Truth to tell, it is difficult to think of Sir Robert Harley as an ideal husband. Perhaps he had read John Knox's "First Blast" and applied its morals without knowledge. The sequel will reveal something of his shortcomings; for the moment let it be recorded to his credit that he was able to strengthen in his wife, if not to initiate, a faith as firm and a purpose as stubborn as his own. But swiftly must it be added that in Brilliana Lady Harley's case tenacity of faith and purpose seem to have mellowed rather than hardened a spirit by nature affectionate and winning.

For all her high position in that countryside as the wife of a man who owned many acres and was prominent in the nation's parliament, Brilliana's life was centered in domestic affairs. She rarely left Brampton Brian. In the twenty years of her married life she appears to have been but once in London, where her husband spent so much of his time. At first, of course, the rapidly growing family—she bore her lord three sons and four daughters in ten years—naturally held her captive; but even in later years it was the same; year in and out she never moved far from home.

Nor would she have had it otherwise. No complaint escaped her lips. If, toward the end, she did urge her son to ask his father whether she might not have a coach to "take the ayre sometimes," it was the air of Brampton Brian she had in mind. For the last ten years of her life her health was indifferent.

* * * * *

NEVERTHELESS Brilliana Lady Harley's life was not unhappy. Her numerous letters, untidy and ill-spelled and ill-written, are proof of that. She was a lover of home, never so contented as when ordering her household aright and watching over her young brood. She was proud of her pies and mead and baked chickens, her cheeses and quince cakes. She had, too, the seventeenth century housewife's weakness for doctoring others with sovereign remedies; now it is licorice boiled in beer which she eulogizes for the kidneys, anon bezoars or aurum potabile for other ailments. In the early days her one trouble was her husband's frequent absences from home: "I pray you remember that I reckon the days you are away"; and again, "I much long to hear from you, but more a thousand times to see you." And then later, when the first of the birds left the Brampton Brian nest, when her favorite son Edward, her "well beloved child," went to Oxford, the bitterness of separation was renewed "I think it long since I heard from you," she cries again and again; letter followed letter in swift succession to Oxford; the answering epistles were "sweet refreshments" to her lonely spirit.

Brilliana Lady Harley

Had her domestic affections been more tried than they were, Lady Harley would still have been able to accept her lot in a cheerful spirit. She had attained a faith which left her calm amid the changes and sorrows of earth. "Though I firmly believe there will be great troubles," she wrote, "yet I look with joy beyond these days of trouble, considering the glory that the Lord will bring his church to." Her childhood in Holland had weaned her from the letter of episcopacy to the spirit of the reformed faith. Anything that savored of popery, whether altar or surplice or book of common prayer, was abhorred as far as her gentle spirit could abhor anything. She was living in the fresh dawn of those days when "election, conversion, day of grace, coming to Christ" had not been "pawed and fingered by unctuous hands" into mere "passwords of technical theology." As one reads again in page after page of her time-stained letters, there is no resisting the feeling that such outbursts as the following came from a heart aglow with the love of Christ:

"O it is a sweet thing to open our hearts to God, as to a friend! If it had not been for this, that I had recourse to my God, sure I should have fainted before this."

"If we be loved of the Lord, what need we care what the men of the world think of us?"

"There is no sweetness in anything in this life to be compared to the sweetness in the service of our God, and this I thank God I can say not only to agree with those that say so but experimentally."

"The service of the Lord is more sweet, more peaceable, more delightful, than enjoying the fading pleasures of the world."

* * * * *

WHEN Brilliana Lady Harley wrote thus to her son, partly to relieve her own overflowing heart and partly to confirm his faith amid the temptations of Oxford, she had no prevision of the great test awaiting her. But gradually the shadow of civil war moved across England in the direction of Brampton Brian. Her husband was a marked man in parliament, a Presbyterian of firm conviction, active in the proceedings against Strafford and an advocate of all sufferers under the star chamber; so pronounced a Puritan that to him was committed the preparation of the order forbidding the wearing of the surplice in cathedral or village church; a member of the committee of the Assembly of Divines and a subscriber to the Solemn League and Covenant—such was Harley. And in all things his wife was in perfect agreement.

Photo by the author Brampton Brian Church

That very agreement boded ill for Brampton Brian, especially as the castle of the Harleys was the one stronghold of the parliament in that countryside. 'None will look toward Brampton but such as truly fear God." They were few in number; all the other great families cast in their lot with the King; Lady Harley was likely to find herself quite alone. Realizing how perilous her position might become, and resigning herself to her husband's absence in London on his parliamentary duties, she suggested again and again that he would allow her to shut up the castle and remove with her children and a small retinue to a house in some convenient town. Her neighbors had grown "extremely insolent"; she would be glad to be "out of that country"; earnestly she asked "whether it is safe for me and my children to be at Brampton"; she did not see how she could stay "with safety"; and to her son, to whom she always wrote more freely than to her husband, her verdict was: "I acknowledge I do not think myself safe where I am. I lose the comfort of your father's company, and am in but little safety, but that my trust is in God." To that trust she turned for strength when all her suggestions as to removing elsewhere were rejected. "Since you think Brampton a safe place for me," she wrote with that wifely submission characteristic of her age, "I will think so, too; I would not for anything do that which might make the world believe our hope did begin to fail in our God."

* * * * *

BUT, like the famous leader of the Independents, Lady Harley added to her trust in God a determination to keep her powder dry. That is to say, seeing her husband expected her to remain at Brampton, she busied herself to prepare the castle for attack. Even in that matter she had to rely upon her own devices. Could not her husband, she asked, send down "some understanding man, who is religious," with whom she could take counsel for the defense of her house; or, failing such, would not Sir Robert himself instruct her in a plan of defense? Apparently he was not able or willing to do either. Left, then, to her own resources, Lady Harley, her husband and two eldest sons absent, thought out her own plan. She had the lead of the castle remelted and relaid, the moat cleaned out, laid in such arms and store of gunpowder as she could obtain, appointed days when a few of her servants were to be rehearsed in "shooting off a piece," and arranged with the loyal tenants to hurry to the castle at the sound of drum beat.

Photo by the author View of the Ruins of Brian Castle

And then she waited. It was a nerve-racking time for at least one inhabitant of the castle. This was none other than the rector of the parish, Stanley Gower, a sturdy Puritan, who later, by Sir Robert Harley's influence, became a member of the Assembly of Divines. Two months after Lady Harley had completed her martial preparations he had retired to rest from an enjoyable fast day, when musket shots outside recalled him to mundane things and sent him scampering to his assigned post. It was a false alarm, the doing of some wag; but it "showed us our errors for another time."

That other time, however, was long in coming. Autumn merged into winter, spring came again, and summer, but the royalist enemy appeared not. Yet he was not far distant. Lady Harley's servants were captured if they ventured far from the castle; her neighbors grew colder and more aloof; her tenants refused to pay their rents; and the gossip of the countryside told of royalist councils of war at which it had been decided to blow her castle into the air. Once, indeed, in the early spring of 1643 a captain and ten trumpeters made their appearance and charged Brilliana to deliver her "fort and castle" to the king's use. But they went as suddenly as they came and suspense set in again with more uncertainty than ever.

* * * * *

WITHIN the castle life pursued its usual course. The daily round, the common task, had to be followed whether enemies came or not. And Lady Harley plied her pen as industriously as ever on frequent letters to her son and husband in distant London. With a difference, however Now she writes not on paper but on a strip of cloth that the messenger may the more easily conceal the missive; anon she invents an ingenious cipher method of her own which makes her epistles incoherent save to those in the secret. And so May came and went, and June, too, and the July of that summer of more than two and a half centuries ago was nearly spent. "We are all well at Brampton," was the message Lady Harley dispatched to her absent husband on the 23d of that month—"all well at Brampton."

Two days later she gathered her children and household around her in "prayer and humiliation for the mercy of God" to avert the danger which was so real though unseen. And night fell once more around the walls of Brampton Brian castle, a summer night of balmy airs and peace. And then a new day, a day of July sunshine, which passed as the other days of weary waiting until about 2 of the clock. At that hour hill and meadow around the castle became suddenly alive with soldiers; on the south troops of horses appeared and deployed into position, while on the east some 300 infantry blocked all avenue of escape.

Long heralded, long expected, the enemy had come at last! But Brilliana Harley was prepared—prepared in arms and argument. For it is difficult to decide which was the more admirable—her warlike defense or her adroit answers to the summoning letters of her besiegers. The interchange of shot, small and great, was considerable. A careful statistician of the siege assures us that 1,513 great bullets were shot against Brampton Brian, "and most of them came in." To this he adds "6,000 worth of powder," whatever that quantity was. And it did not improve matters for the besieged that "the malignants of the country stood upon hills about us, and when the ordnance played, gave great shouts," and that the attackers, not satisfied with bullets, hailed the defenders as "rogues and thieves" and "Harley's bastards." In fact, as the diarist affirms, "their rotten language infected the air"; "they were so completely inhuman that out of their mouths, and the mouths of their guns, came nothing else but poisoned words and poisoned bullets." Still, if we are to credit that outspoken chronicler, the damage wrought by the royalist assault was trifling In nine days "not a hair fell from our heads"; twenty-six shots struck down only one chimney and a battlement; five other shots at

(Continued on page 725)

THE HOME COUNCIL

We Ain't Got No Wall

By Ruth G. Winant

IT WAS SUMMER. New York City, at least in its poorer parts, was thronged with half-naked children and hatless men and women. In almost every corner of the lower West side Italians sold slices of pineapple and watermelon for a cent each. Fruit powdered with the dust of the city streets was bought eagerly by the small purchasers, who presented their precious pennies wet and warm from their small, dirty hands.

On Spring street a vacation Bible school flourished, and here day after day there gathered a motley throng of ragged, ill-fed, half-clothed children, suffering, many of them, from sore eyes, defective eyesight, chronic colds and many other ills.

They learned Bible verses and hymns, and sang patriotic songs (American, of course) with more vigor than melody, while hands that had been shooting "craps" were busy caning chairs and making hammocks and watch fobs.

One of the teachers offered a prize for learning Bible verses. It was a wall motto ornamented with roses that suggested a June morning. Angelina won it—won it and held it in her small hands, wondering at its bright beauty, and trembling all over with excitement.

"What I do with it?" she asked.

The worker took it in his hands and showed her the loop at the top, explaining: "You take a pin and put it through this loop, and then stick the pin into the wall. It will hold the motto in place. Do you understand?"

Angelina shook her head. "We ain't got no wall," she said.

"Oh, yes, you have!" the teacher replied, thinking the word a strange one to her. "The four sides of your room are called walls in English."

Angelina pointed to the letters on the card, letters done in silver. "What it say?" she inquired, running her fingers tenderly over the pink posies, the only ones that she had ever seen except in a florist's window.

The worker pointed to each word as he read: "'In my Father's house are many mansions.'" Then he started to explain the words, only to be interrupted by the small voice and a shake of the tousled head: "We ain't got no wall!"

It was futile to argue, and so some days later a visitor was sent to see Angelina and her family, and to find out why they hadn't "got no wall."

Up, up a dark, creaky stairway, whose groans seemed but the echo of the woe heard daily, went the visitor—up past ill-smelling rooms and through dark halls, until at last she reached Angelina's home. It consisted of one room, and in that one room lived five families. Four of them occupied a corner each. To Angelina was left the center of the floor. Angelina had been quite right when she insisted, "We ain't got no wall."

On the floor, wrapped in a soiled red-bordered handkerchief, lay the motto. The handkerchief covered the roses only, and beneath it the worker saw once more the verse, "In my Father's house are many mansions." And as she looked at the bit of floor that Angelina called "home," she offered up a little prayer of thanks to God that congestion had no place in the "Father's house."

BITS BY THE WAY

"I'LL SEE YOU OVER"

The 5 o'clock rush was swelling the crowd of belated shoppers on the main business thoroughfare of a big city one afternoon in early May, and no one was paying heed to anyone else save for the frown which impatience returns for impeded progress. Perhaps it was because the chill of an approaching storm struck in toward the hearts of the pedestrians; perhaps it was because of that inward blindness which comes with self-centered thoughts; perhaps it was only because of eagerness to get home, that among all those quick-treading feet none was arrested at the sight of a poorly clad young man standing hesitant at the curb where the intersection of two streets beside a department store made double the congestion of traffic. The figure was pathetic in its complete isolation from the crowd that hurried past unheeding. For the blind live in a world apart, and this young fellow stared with sightless eyes across the street whose turmoil he dared not invade unaided.

As he stood there, tapping the curb gropingly with his cane, uncertain what to do, a tall, rugged-looking man came swinging across the street. As he neared the curb he spied the blind man, faltering and timid in his helplessness, and without an instant's hesitation stepped up to the young fellow and laid a reassuring hand on his shoulder.

"It's all right, brother," he said. "I'll see you over." And taking the man gently by the arm, he piloted him through the throng.

As he turned and retraced his steps across the street this latter-day good Samaritan held his head a trifle higher, and his face, as he stepped up on the curb and disappeared in the crowd, wore a smile that reflected some pleasant thought. He had ministered to a human need, and in that simple act of fellowship he had exemplified the spirit of that One who "went about doing good"; that spirit that is born anew in every heart that thrills to the call of service, or that ministers to human need.

There is always someone who must be "helped over"; and not while one single human need remains untouched may we lay aside our task, nay, our privilege, of helpfulness.

NO SUFFRAGE FOR HER

Not all Chicago women are in favor of woman suffrage. One young person, recently promoted to the fifth grade, seized the occasion presented by Woodrow Wilson as the theme of an essay thus to voice her protest:

"Yesterday in class we were talking about inauguration day. We also was talking about different Presidents. I think Woodrow Wilson will make a good President because he has a good reputation and people seem to like him.

"The suffragets walked from New York to Washington, D. C., to see and hear Mr. Wilson take his oath. And etc. What crazy women.

"The suffragists want their rights. And they call their rights trying to do man's work. Like voting, and etc. I do not believe in such things. I think if the world was run by women it would go wrecked. Worse than what it is.

"I believe women should keep their place. And that is at home. Cleaning their dirty houses. And leave the inauguration day for the men to tended too. And not suffragets."

"THEY'RE NOT SO BAD"

And speaking of "W. Wilson," the Wilson family counts among its assets a sense of humor. One of the diversions of the day among the women of the White House, says a newspaper correspondent, is to read the printed material about themselves; and the comments and criticisms, instead of making them unhappy, seem only to react on their sense of the funny.

Crowds still line up on the streets to see them pass and all sorts of personal remarks reach their ears. One of the young women recently overheard a woman say, "Why, they're not so bad." All of them have been laughing about it ever since, and now when they read anything of a critical nature about themselves they remark, "Oh, well, we're not so bad!"

And then there's that very winning bit about Mrs. Wilson, which tells of the sympathy and charity of the "first lady of the land." One day Dr. Cary Grayson, naval surgeon and aid to the President, who is said to spend spare moments caring for the sick among the poor, told Mrs. Wilson of a little fellow in the last stages of consumption. Mrs. Wilson, the story runs, was touched. Collecting a bunch of spring flowers from the White House garden, she accompanied Dr. Grayson in a White House automobile to the home of the boy, and cheered him with her posies and her presence.

S. C. R.

Verses Old and New

GRAPES OR THORNS

We must not hope to be mowers,
And to gather the ripe gold ears,
Until we have first been sowers,
And watered the furrows with tears.

It is not just as we take it,
This mystical world of ours,
Life's field will yield as we make it,
A harvest of thorns or flowers.

—Alice Cary.

Sidelights on a Tiny Kingdom

Little Montenegro, which has been so rapidly making history in the past few months, is enjoying a revival of interest which is not without its "folksy" side, to which a writer in The National Geographic Magazine makes generous contribution.

There is, for instance, reference to the old-time explanation of the little state's barren and rugged formation. Stones, rocks and crags, nothing else, says the author, as he first comes face to face with it; not a tree, not a blade of grass; scarcely even a tuft of brushwood to relieve the scene of desolation. The reason is not far to seek. At the creation, so runs the Montenegrin legend, an angel was sent forth to pick up the superfluous stones on the earth's surface. He placed them in a bag, which burst as he was flying over Cernagora.

The Montenegrins are nearly all of giant stature, and they stride, according to the author, as though each wore seven-league boots. Indeed, when a Montenegrin wants to go anywhere in a hurry he walks, not using the splendid roads with which his mountains are threaded but taking the old short cuts among the hills. Last spring, when Danilo, the crown prince, was hurriedly dispatched to Paris on business a valuable document was found to have been left behind, and no automobile was at hand to send with it to Cattaro, to the prince.

It was suggested to the king that one Michel, a runner of repute, was about the palace, and that perhaps he could overtake the prince before his steamer had sailed. So the paper was given to Michel, and the king went to the dining room. Passing through the corridor to his study after the meal the king saw Michel sitting there and upbraided him for not having gone to Cattaro. "I have just come back, Gospodar," answered Michel. "Ah, then," exclaimed the king, "you are Michel the Telegram!" And Michel the Telegram he now is in Montenegrin speech.

But perhaps the best story that Montenegro's new prominence has brought forth is a certain bon mot of King Nicholas's. This rocky kingdom is far from being productive, while its only manufacturing establishment of prominence is a cartridge factory. But poor though the country may be, Montenegro boasts one rich possession—four stately and beautiful royal daughters, two of whom are grand duchesses of Russia, one is the loved queen of Italy and the fourth the princess of Battenberg. It was at the marriage of the latter that someone had the poor taste to taunt King Nicholas with the fact that Montenegro had no exports. "Sir," replied the king, "you forget my daughters!"

YOUNG AMERICA

Jack and the Butterfly Preacher

BY MARY EARLE HARDY

JACK WAS KING in the Land of Running Brooks. There were scores of people who thought they owned the beautiful country, for they plowed its fields, and broke its rocks, and cut down its trees. But no one owns anything that he does not take time to look at and love, and take into his heart.

These busy workers only planned how they might make the brooks turn more mill wheels; they never stopped to hear the water sing and to see it sparkle. They thought the trees would make good lumber, but they never listened to their whisperings. So they did not own the country at all.

But Jack grew richer and wiser every day, for he loved the hills and fields, and because he kept his head up, and his eyes open, he saw and heard many things that others never knew anything about.

One day when Jack was down by the brook he heard a little voice as soft as the south wind when it sighs; and the voice said, "Every wrong deed rubs a feather off one's wings."

Jack stopped to listen. "That sounds like preaching," he said. He bent his ear closer and again he heard the same words—"Every wrong deed rubs a feather off one's wings." This time Jack was sure the voice came from the midst of a clump of catnip growing close by, and peering into it he spied a big yellow butterfly atilt on a stem.

The Land of Running Brooks, Where Jack Was King

"Every wrong deed rubs a feather off one's wings," sighed the butterfly as the catnip clump parted.

"Are you a preacher?" asked King Jack respectfully.

"Why shouldn't I be?" said the yellow butterfly from the midst of the catnip. "Why shouldn't I preach?"

"Because only Jack-in-the-Pulpit ever preaches around here," answered Jack-the-King, reaching down for the fishing-rod scepter he had dropped in his surprise.

"That shows you don't know everything," exclaimed the yellow butterfly, fluttering about with excitement. "All this Land of Running Brooks is full of preachers."

"Why, is that so?" asked little King Jack in surprise. "I thought this was just the nicest kind of a country to have a jolly good time in. Hope they don't preach long sermons! Where are the preachers and the churches, anyway?"

"Why, every leaf has a sermon written on it," said the butterfly preacher. "Here are tall grass steeples, and mullein-stalk church spires, and pine-tree cathedrals—all full of preachers and bells and choirs."

"You don't say so!" said King Jack doubtfully. "But I thought everybody had to keep still at church, and got tired; and that preachers were always solemn and wore black clothes." King Jack looked puzzled.

"As I told you, I am a preacher," came the answer out of the midst of the clump of catnip, where the butterfly stood flirting his yellow coattails nervously. "Listen, this is my sermon: 'Every wrong deed rubs a feather off one's wings.'"

"Well, I think you are a pretty gay preacher," said King Jack, "and you have a queer pulpit; but I like you, and I like your sermon. It's short. Long sermons that I can't understand anything about always make me tired."

For reply the butterfly only flirted again his long coattails of yellow and black and fanned himself with his wings. Until then he had not so much as looked beyond his pulpit and his flowery cups of catnip, but now he raised his eyes, and as soon as he looked he knew at once that the one to whom he had spoken—not over politely—was none other than the king of the Land of Running Brooks.

"Sire!" he gasped, and bowed so low he nearly tumbled out of the clump of catnip. "Pardon, sire. I did not know it was the king who spoke."

"Oh, that's all right!" laughed King Jack, waving his fishing-rod scepter. "But I wish you would explain that sermon of yours. What do butterflies know about feathers?"

"We are covered with feathers, sire, and 'every wrong deed rubs a feather off one's wings,'" answered the little preacher.

"You must be pretty perfect, then, for your wings look as if they had never dropped a feather. But I always supposed that was only yellow dust on your wings."

"That shows——" The butterfly began to say again, "That shows you don't know everything," but remembering it was the king to whom he was speaking, he twisted his words into, "That shows that I have not been a faithful knight"—the butterfly bowed again very low—"else I had given you a feather or two for your miscroscope. Then you would have seen that what looks like dust is really feathery scales, so delicate that the lightest touch rubs them off." Then the butterfly placed a tiny golden feather on a catnip leaf and presented it to the young king, who thanked him and managed to wrap it up and carefully slipped it into his pocket.

"But, Mr. Butterfly, you don't seem to have any mouth that I can discover," said King Jack, "and you have a queer way of talking, though I understand you plainly enough. Do you mind explaining to me what that black thread is where your mouth ought to be?"

The butterfly again fanned himself hard with his wings, and flirted his coattails in his excitement and displeasure. But remembering who questioned him, he replied politely, "That, sire, is my proboscis. It is an exceedingly useful and beautifully constructed organ, and for the life of me I cannot see how anyone exists without one. Through it I am able to suck the honey of flowers and to quaff sweet draughts of dew. Though so slender and delicate, it is made with three separate tubes. It is through the central tube that I take my dainty fare. I will show you, sire, how I drink from these flower cups. So much talking quite exhausts me." And the butterfly uncurled his proboscis and sipped long delightful draughts of the tea which the catnip had brewed in its purple cups.

"Oh, I see!" exclaimed King Jack. "So these little lavender blossoms are your teacups? Well, well! I am learning a number of things. Would you mind telling me how you ever got to be a butterfly?" he added, when the butterfly was refreshed by his tea. "Oh, that I cannot tell!" said the butterfly. "Life is far too wonderful for me to understand. But first there was a tiny egg on a fennel stalk—it seems to me ages ago, for I have been living whole days and nights as a butterfly among the flowers. That is a life worth living. From the egg on the fennel stalk a caterpillar was hatched. A hungry fellow he was, I have been told, and mostly stomach. He fed greedily upon the fennel leaves for twenty or thirty days, changing his skin many times during his caterpillar life; and each time he received a suit larger and handsomer than any he had had before. At last he became tired of eating and spun himself a silken cover, and no longer a caterpillar, but a chrysalis, he fastened himself by a thread of silk to the fennel stalk. Your majesty must know that I come from a family of silk makers." And the butterfly nodded his head importantly.

"The winds swung the chrysalis lightly and the little silkmaker dreamed dreams of flowers and wings and honeydew. Finally the silken cover sheet burst open and the dream came true. I, your majesty, I am the dream!"

Again the butterfly sipped from the pale purple catnip cups. "This is my supper," he said wearily. "Night is coming on. I beg your majesty to excuse me, for our family never keep awake after dark if we can help it, and I must finish my cup of tea."

"Well, Mr. Butterfly, I think you are a pretty interesting preacher," said King Jack.

The butterfly preacher did not answer, for he was already nodding over his cup of catnip tea.

"Well, well," said King Jack, "it comes to me now that I have heard there are those in the Land of Running Brooks who 'keep seven Sabbaths in every week.' If this is a sample of their services I am ready to join them," and he took off his cap as he passed through the nave of the pine-tree cathedral and close to the preacher now fast asleep, his gay coattails folded away out of sight.

A Song of Bedtime

BY KATHRYN C. WHEELER

There are coral roses blooming
  Where the sun has gone to rest;
Mother birds are safely tucking
  Baby birdies in their nest.

Gay Sir Bumblebee is droning—
  Oh, so lazily he goes—
Just a drowsy song of bedtime
  To the weary, nodding rose.

Mother Nighttime's shadow children
  Softly round the corners creep,
Bringing fairy dreams to scatter
  Over Robin in his sleep.

All the little stars are calling
  Lady Moon to come and play,
With the golden dipper dipping
  Milk from out the milky way.

Through the branches, swaying lightly,
  Come the breezes, singing sweet
Little sleepy songs to Robin—
  Hear them whisper as they meet!

On the stairs I hear the footstep
  Of the sandman, still and slow;
Waiting near to lay his sandbags
  On the eyelids, drooping low.

Twinkling stars and little children,
  Downy birdies in your nest,
Close your eyes in happy slumber;
  God is guarding while you rest.

For above the shining moonlight
  Careful, tender watch he'll keep—
Gently, softly, rocking, rocking,
  All the tired world to sleep.

Division According to Mother

"Boys," said the teacher, "suppose a mother has only four potatoes, and wants to give each of her five children an equal share. What is she to do?"

There was silence for a moment, then Johnnie jumped to his feet.

"Please, sir," he cried, "she'd mash 'em!"

BRADFORD HORTON, MAN

BY RICHARD S. HOLMES

CHAPTER XXIX.—Continued

ON MONDAY, when the two hunters left the camp, Abram Hall tramped with them as far as Fairthorne. "So ye fellers knowed the Hooter?" he remarked, almost as soon as they started.

"Yes," answered Charlie, "we've known him almost ten years. He used to be my teacher, and he lived at my mother's house two years."

"I swan!" said Abram briefly. "What sent him in here a-hootin'?"

Joe answered this question. "Oh, he's different from most fellows, Abe. He don't act like any fellow you know. If there's anything you want him to do he won't do it. And if there's anything you don't want him to do that's the thing he'll do, first chance he gets. But he can sing, Abram Hall. The court says he can sing."

"Ye bet, Mr. Jickers," was Abram's laconic reply.

"He'll spoil his voice singing as he does out here in the open air," continued Joe.

"P'haps that's so, boss. But he won't spile no jacks doin' it. It don't spile jacks to get gin out on 'em, an' that's what he's doin.' An' he's goin' ter build a mish'nary house in here, too. A reg'lar gospel bunk, ye know. But, Lordy, he don't need no mish'nary house. The big bunkhouse an' outdoors is all he needs fer singin' an' yarnin'. But he's got an idee that he wants a mish'nary house, an' he's goin' down ter St. Paul ter git the quaderlater'ls."

"The what?"

"The quaderlater'ls. Them's the things ye write onto, an' shove 'em inter a bank winder, an' ye kin git money on 'em if ye've got any feller what knows ye, an' he's got any spondulics ter make 'em good if ye bust yer helve."

Joe and Charlie laughed. They laughed so long that old Abram grew incensed.

"What yer laughin' at? I don't see nothin' ter laugh at."

"Laughing at? To see how fine you've got the whole money business down. You can give point to fellows that want to borrow money. It isn't the fellow that wants the money that counts. It's the backer with the spondulics, Abram."

"Ain't quaderlater'ls no good?"

"Yes, of course they're good. And so are squares and triangles, when you have a backer with spondulics. You'd make a good cashier for a bank, Abram."

Abram was in a measure mollified. "Ye kin laugh an' poke fun at me all ye want ter, but it's so. He's goin' down ter St. Paul. He'll git them quaderlater'ls. He allus gits what he goes fer. Goin' down next week, the jacks sez."

That put a new phase on affairs. "I wonder," said Joe, after Abram had left them, "why Horton said nothing about coming down."

"'Tis funny," agreed Charlie. "Didn't you tell him the girls were there?"

"I did." He paused a moment. "I offered that as an inducement for him to come out with us." Suddenly he slapped his knee. "And there, your honor, the court blundered—blundered badly. Court should have reserved sentence till the prisoner appeared at the bar. Of course, Charles, my boy, if he's going to stick like a high-minded lunatic there at that noble work in the woods he won't want to see Eleanor Elmore and get all harrowed up thinking of what he's losing. He didn't say he was coming to St. Paul for fear we'd keep her over. You see, I said we were going home next week."

"Maybe we can stay over, anyway, and she'll be there when he comes."

"Charles, my boy, you've got a long head," said Joe solemnly. "Like enough your Aunt Eleanor can get him to stay out of the wilderness, if she once gets a chance at him. But, Charles, don't you tell anyone that we've seen Brad. Let me manage that. You tell all about the hunt. I'll tell about the find. See?"

The hunters were down in time for dinner on Wednesday night. At table Joe was quiet, until Charlie had told the story of the time in the forest, when suddenly he broke in.

"And say, your honor, he's not going to run away again. He's going to stay right there and do his day's work. The only thing that will get him out will be quaderlater'ls."

"Joe, talk sense," said his wife. "There are no such things as quadrilaterals, except in the geometry books. And who are you talking about?"

"I'm talking about the Hooter—the 'mish'nary,' as old Abram calls him. Old Abram was our guide. He says there are such things as quaderlater'ls, and they're things you write on, and shove into bank windows and get money on, if you've got a backer."

They all laughed at that. Then Eleanor asked, "Who is the Hooter, Joe?"

"I cannot tell a lie, your honor. The Hooter is Professor Bradford Horton, formerly of Prestonbury and now of the big woods up above Fairthorne."

Every eye at the table was fastened on Joe. No one spoke for a moment. Eleanor turned pale; then the red blood swept up from her heart, suffusing her whole face. "Joe, don't joke with me," she said. "Have you seen Bradford Horton?"

"Yes, Lennie. Charles and I have seen him, have spent two nights and the intervening day in a lumber camp where he is working as a self-constituted home missionary, and he's coming down to St. Paul to get Austin to help him raise money."

"Did you know that, Austin?"

"No, Eleanor; not until Joe brought me a letter from him."

"For what does he want money?"

"To build a mission house in the camp where I saw him. Gin flows up there, rivers of it, and Bradford wants a good bright, cheery place by which to hold his crowd together and keep them away from the gin mill Saturday nights and Sundays, whenever he happens to be in camp. There's two camps—one on the far north side of the woods. We didn't see that. Bradford runs both of them, and I tell you he does it in great shape."

Then Joe told the story of the meeting of Saturday night, and how easily and tactfully Bradford handled the lawless men of his self-appointed parish. "Austin," he ended, "I guess you'll have to help him raise that money."

"Lennie," said Joe later that evening, when she had regained part of the poise that his story had so shaken, "you'll stay till next week, now, won't you? I couldn't persuade him to leave this enterprise he's started and come back to Prestonbury, but maybe you can. I wish you'd try, anyway. No one can get him to stop preaching now he's started, but civilization needs his brains."

"Perhaps the lumberjacks need him, too, from all you say," she said, to Joe's total surprise. "Wait," as he started to interrupt. "I know that sounds as if I didn't care. Nothing would make me so happy as to have him back in Prestonbury, and father will never be fully at peace till he sees him and makes amends. But I can't feel it's right just for my own sake to ask him to give up a work that needs him. Anyway, he wouldn't—I know him too well," she added proudly. "Nothing can make him stop the thing he's begun until he finishes it. But as to staying, I am willing, if you and Alice wish. I should be glad to see him again," with a deeper note in her voice.

On the day that the two hunters had left Horton's camp he himself had started northward to spend the last of the week in the northern camp, and while the people in St. Paul were discussing him and his work, he was discussing it with others in a very practical way.

The two Englishmen who had been with the Prestonbury party to Duluth had turned their steps southward and found their way by midweek into this northern camp. The experience of Joe and Charlie was repeated for Stuart and Sir Henry, and no two men were ever more astonished. The singer charmed Sir Henry, and the recognition of Stuart and Horton was, of course, instant and mutual. At the first opportunity they sought each other.

"Our meetings," said Bradford as he greeted the stranger, "seem fated to be in strange places and at unexpected times—the Rigi, Berlin and now the heart of the wilderness."

"I hardly know," declared the Scotchman, "which feeling is uppermost this time—astonishment or admiration."

"You are speaking of the work here, I suppose. I am astonished myself at its development. It is about all that counts with me now."

"My astonishment, I must confess, was that you left the comfort of the professorship you said you held for such hardships as this mission must entail. What led you to it?"

As soon as he said it, Stuart realized that his question must seem almost an impertinence.

"Circumstances," was Bradford's brief reply, in a tone that forbade further inquiry.

"Poor fellow!" thought the other. "He's met the fate I would have had I been able to ask that girl to marry me."

"I met some friends of yours recently," he went on after a pause. "I came west on the same boat with them—a Mr. and Mrs. Jickers, and Miss Elmore and her nephew."

"I knew they had come west."

"Singular, how unexpectedly people meet in this world. I found Mr. Jickers a very amusing character."

"He is all that and much more. He is a genuine man."

"Sir Henry thought Mr. Jickers quite perplexing, quite inexplicable, in fact."

Bradford smiled. "I can readily understand that," he said. "Did you hunt with them?"

"No, we separated at Duluth. The ladies went to St. Paul and the men to the south. We are on our way to St. Paul now to spend two days. Sir Henry wishes to see some of your American cities. How long have you been in here, Mr. Horton?"

"A year and a half."

"Are you never going out?"

"Oh, never is a long time. I shall stay until I get two mission houses built—one here and one in the southern camp. Then I may go out for a visit, but my work is here. I shall return to it."

Up to this point Sir Henry had been a listener only. Now he spoke suddenly. "I have been greatly interested by the service to which we came. I would gladly know more about your work. Can you take time to tell me of it?"

"Certainly. Come to my cabin, and I will tell you the whole story."

In the hour that followed Sir Henry found he had met a man of his own stamp—a man who having seen something that needed to be done believed that he could do it, and having begun was not going to be driven from it until he had succeeded. For such a man he had great admiration. "To see a young man like you," he said heartily, "with courage to attempt so hard a thing as this gives me a new belief in the goodness of humanity."

The outcome of the conversation was Sir Henry's offer of the money for the building of one of the houses. Bradford was overjoyed. He had hoped, by hard work and eloquent pleading, to secure the $10,000 he needed from the churches in St. Paul; now the amount to be so raised was cut in half, and he had to offer as incentive to the generosity of others the fact that the first giver was a stranger of foreign birth who saw the work and believed in it.

The night when the two Englishmen reached St. Paul was Saturday of the week when Joe and Charlie had returned there. In the vestibule of Rev. Mr. Sleighton's church, on Sunday morning after the service, the Prestonbury men encountered their acquaintances of the lakes, who had come to hear the popular young preacher. In the chance meeting Joe acquired information enough to make him radiant with enthusiasm when he met the rest of the family at dinner.

"Your honor," he began, though addressing no one in particular, "there are complications

(Continued on page 738)

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

June 1, 1913—Joseph Tests His Brethren

Everyday View of the Lesson

By J. L. Scott

Lesson Text, Genesis 44. Golden Text, James 5:16: Confess therefore your sins one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed.

The darkest hour is the one that precedes the dawn, or so it was in the succession of tests that Joseph imposed upon his brethren. At times they felt that the night had lifted, only to find themselves enveloped in a darkness deeper than before. Our last lesson closed upon a scene calculated to inspire cheer in every heart. A family reunion was being held at the house of Joseph. Simeon had been liberated and wine added to the merriment of the hour. But the morrow held for them the severest test of all. The second mission to Egypt was over and as soon as the morning was light the little caravan turned its face toward the north, with an abundant supply against the famine. The company must have been a happy one. The members were all present. From Reuben to Benjamin there was no break in the family circle, none save that made by the absence of Jospeh, of whom they had not heard in many years.

Joseph's Brethren in Constant Apprehension of Judgment of God

Was Joseph living or dead? There is no agony like that of suspense. The Jews had a peculiar delicacy in speaking of death. The imperial majesty of that hour was too great to find expression in a single word. Jacob was "gathered to his people," as were Abraham and Isaac before him. And Joseph "was not." His blood-stained garment bore a silent testimony to that awful mystery which we call death. So at least it did to Jacob. But to his sons it meant more than that. They lived in its constant presence. Wherever they went it followed, dragging in bloody trail the judgment of God.

The morning of their departure from Egypt, however, would seem to have been an exception. Benjamin was among them, and the sight of his countenance would soon redeem the promise they had made to their father. But the caravan had scarcely passed through the city gates when a messenger from Joseph demanded their return. The governor's favorite cup was gone. It in all probability had been in use at the banquet the night before and some one of the brothers had stolen it from the table. They did not know that Joseph had ordered all this in advance. The steward had returned to each his money, as on the occasion of their first visit, and the silver cup was placed, in addition, in the sack of Benjamin.

This was the climax. Up to this time Joseph had been dealing with actual criminals, but Benjamin had done no wrong. And yet the innocent must suffer with the guilty. Benjamin was a factor in the divine plan, and as such must bear his part. Paul says that if one of the bodily members suffer, all the other members must suffer with it. And there could be no truer illustration of common life—the human race is one. We are all parts of each other. Heart beats against heart and nerve twines about nerve. The moral distance between Simeon and Benjamin is very great, but Benjamin must suffer, apparently, for his brothers' misdeeds. The grinding process goes on and wheat and chaff must go through the same mill. Joseph must appear to be unjust to those who do not understand his purpose, and in like manner so must God.

Benjamin Incriminated by Finding of Joseph's Cup in His Sack

The accusation on the part of the messenger was of the gravest kind. In addition to his master's gold and silver they had stolen the very cup from which he drank and, indeed, by which he divined. In this they had returned evil for good. Divination by cups was familiar to the Egyptians. How far Joseph may have practiced it is conjecture. Before Pharaoh he had confessed that the power to read dreams lay not in him but in God. Joseph may have adopted the custom of divination, but to what extent or purpose it would be difficult to say. The brethren protested their innocence. Their lives and freedom were staked upon it, but when their sacks were opened the money was found, while the cup lay within Benjamin's sack. Seeing is believing, so the eleven rent their garments and returned to the palace.

This incident is one of the most suggestive in the entire record. It demonstrates how one may seem to be guilty and yet be innocent, and further, the fact of one sin does not necessarily prove another. Because Judah sold Joseph to the Ishmaelites it does not follow that he stole his cup from the banquet table. In this entire transaction one must remember the motive that induced Joseph to act as he did. He had great things in store for his brethren, but first they must convince him that they were ready to receive them. Their attitude toward Benjamin no doubt perplexed him. For the crime of being his mother's son they had sold Joseph into Egypt. Would they deal more kindly by Benjamin if the opportunity should offer? For this reason he proposed to detain his younger brother and send them back to their father without him.

Judah, Pleading for Benjamin, Preaches Salvation Through Substitution

The final interview between Joseph and the eleven ranks among the classics. Judah suddenly becomes an orator and touches the very deeps of eloquence. Eloquence often lies rather in the occasion than in the man. Once before Judah had pleaded within hearing of Joseph, but at that time another's life was involved rather than his own. Joseph accuses the eleven of folly in presuming to escape his power of divination. In this he himself must have been acting a part. He knew that the brethren were innocent, but Judah wisely avoided all discussion of fact. Everything was against him, and his only hope lay in reaching the governor's heart. And this he did with a skill almost superhuman. He pictures the old patriarch sitting by his fireside in Canaan. One son was dead and the loss of Benjamin, the child of his old age, would only hasten him to the grave. He himself had become surety for his brother's return and asked only to abide as a bondsman while the lad went back to his father's house.

The Lion of the tribe of Judah lives in every word. Judah preached salvation through substitution. Joseph relented. His heart melted under the force of Judah's plea, and the ruler of Egypt hastened to proclaim himself as one of the twelve.

The Lesson Verse by Verse

By Hermon D. Jenkins

Analysis—In spite of his nerve-wrecking test, Joseph is kind to his brethren. The past saves the present in a critical hour. A new Judah brings near the revelation of a brother's safety and of his undying love.

The conduct of Joseph as related in this passage appears to spring from mixed motives. He is at once generous and cruel, for while he gives lavishly he torments needlessly. Joseph means well, but it will take long years of prosperity to efface the painful impressions of the hour in which he played upon the fears of his brothers.

But besides the wish to see their surprise at the end of the test, it is quite possible Joseph was undecided in his own mind what was the best course to pursue. Powerful as he was, he was still a stranger in Egypt, an interloper in a time of great distress, and it would be a serious step to invite all his relatives and their households and servants to come to a land whose inhabitants might soon go on half rations. Would it not be better to send supplies to his kinsmen surreptitiously? If he must have his father near, prudence might suggest that the brothers and their retinue go back to Palestine.

Joseph Plans Expedient for Keeping Brethren Near Him

Whichever course he should adopt, it was not without its perils, and by one expedient and another he seeks to delay the final decision. Meanwhile he sees to it that his brethren shall really suffer no harm, but meet with new surprises at every turn. Their astonishment would at least divert his mind, so he instructs his servants and agents to oversupply the needs of his brothers, return secretly their money, and afford him some excuse for detaining them longer.

Verse 4—The kindness as well as the impatience of Joseph we see in the fact that he did not permit them to go to an inconvenient distance before recalling them.

Verse 5—From time immemorial superstitious people have studied all the phenomena which they could not explain in the hope that they might find in these trifles indications of the divine will. The ancients used to pore over the appearance of the wine lees left in their cups, just as many old dames today scrutinize the "grounds" in their teacups after the tea has been drunk. In the course of time a cup long used, especially one whose dregs had been once interpreted in a way that suggested supernatural interposition, would come to be regarded as a sacred talisman. Just so the Italian wears an ivory horn on his watch chain and the negro carries a rabbit's foot in his pocket "for luck." Joseph as a subterfuge evidently made the charge that these Israelites had stolen his "lucky piece" and that without it he was lost.

Happy the Man Who Under Accusation Can Point to His Past with Confidence

Verses 7-8—Every man in the course of his life, if brought into intimate relations with his fellows, will find himself in some position where circumstantial evidence is against him. If his past has been clouded, he is lost; if clear, he is saved. Thousands of men who cannot disprove a charge can prove a character to which the charge is alien. That the brethren of Joseph had returned the money of their own free will was pretty good evidence that they were not thieves.

Verses 9-11—When a man fears publicity the public rightly fears the man (John 3:20-21). When a corporation begins to burn its books and a business man to destroy his checks and a lad in school to "lose" his report card, an uneasy conscience is suspected. The alacrity with which the sons of Jacob unloaded their beasts of burden, untied their packages and opened their bags showed they were conscious of no wrongdoing.

Verses 12-13—But the mournful fact that the missing cup was found just where it was least expected and where it would do the most harm warns us not to trust too easily in appearances. A case came up in court recently where one man of unexceptionable character swore that he had met in a distant city a certain person and talked with him about their mutual interests and acquaintances. But another equally reputable and trustworthy man swore that he had lived in the same house with the person in question and sat beside him at the table, and that to his certain knowledge he had not been away from home a day in five years. How was it settled? It never was settled; never will be. Some things we must leave to omniscience and eternity. But the high character of these witnesses alone saved them from suspicion of perjury.

Judah's Plea Reveals the New Judah for Whom Joseph Had Been Looking

Verses 16-17—The innocence of the brothers stood Judah now in good stead. He was neither flustrated nor confused. He could not explain the facts nor deny the evidence of his senses. But he knew he was innocent of sin, and he believed his brothers equally so. But whereas once he had consented to a wrong (ch. 27:26-28), he now asked only the privilege of bearing whatever penalty might be decreed for the wrong done by an unknown party.

The last half of this chapter, not printed in the lesson itself, is the cream of the whole. It presents Judah in a new light. He portrays his aged father in his lifelong grief for his lost son Joseph (v. 28) and pictures the heartbreak which must surely follow their failure to return Benjamin unharmed (vs. 29-31). He asks nothing for himself but that he may be accepted as a substitute for the younger brother, against whom all circumstances seem to conspire. He will neither acknowledge guilt for his brother nor assert innocence. He will accept the judgment of the court and die willingly if he may return Benjamin to be the comfort of his father's last days!

The beauty, the pathos, the power of this plea have excited the admiration of commentators in every age; and it shows us how, under the touch of love and developed by the grace of God, a character spotted and unlovely in early life may come out ready for any sacrifice in its later years.

DEVOTIONAL SERVICE

BY EDWARD ARTHUR WICHER

Week Beginning May 25, 1913

TOPIC—The householder. Mark 13:34-37.

This is a parable of the future coming of the Son of Man. It is another parable to enforce the duty of watchfulness.

The time of the return of the Son of Man was uncertain. No one knew it, not even the angels of God in heaven. Not even the Son himself, for this knowledge was no part of his essential endowment as the Redeemer of mankind. He could not therefore inform his disciples concerning it. Only his Father knew that hour and day.

Therefore the duty of the disciples was to watch. If they had been informed of the exact time of his return there would have been an interval in which watchfulness would have been unnecessary; for they would know of a certainty that he would not return then. But inasmuch as they knew not in what hour he would return, they were left no time at all in which to relax their vigilance. They must watch all the time.

This is the constant theme of the last days of Jesus' earthly ministry. He knew that he was about to leave his disciples and that they would be in grave danger after he was gone. And the gravest danger that threatened them was that they did not realize their danger. They were confident of their own ability to meet every emergency, to overcome every difficulty and to achieve results in character and efficiency that would gratify their Lord.

The disciples could not help feeling confident so long as they were in the presence of Jesus. There was something about him that inspired them, and uplifted them, and made them think more strongly and freely than they were wont to do. While they were with him they had a sense of inward power. Something of his glory and his strength was reflected in their faces, though they did not at first perceive the source whence their new strength came.

And of the future, too, they could not but feel confident. For the departure of Jesus out of their midst was something they could scarcely bring themselves to believe in unto the very end. Nor could they understand what he meant when he told them that he would come again. Jesus foresaw the danger that when his earthly relations with them should be terminated by his death they would be still prone to try to walk by sight and not by faith. Therefore his exhortation.

Nor was the warning less needed by the disciples of the whole church at the time (about 70 A. D.) when Mark gave the final form to his gospel. That was a transition period for the early church. The believers in Christ had been looking for his reappearance upon earth in the lifetime of the first generation after his death. The years were passing and Christ had not come, and the faith of many was beginning to grow cold. They were asking: "Where is the promise of his coming? For from the day that the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." Thus when Mark weaves the words of Jesus into his gospel, his accent reveals the intention on his part of correcting a false expectation. It is as though he should say: "You have been expecting your Lord to return in the first watch of the night, and because he has not so come you are disappointed and are now growing tired of watching. It may be that he will come early, or he may come late. It behooves you only to watch."

Verse 34 is vivid: "As when a man, sojourning in another country, having left his house, and given authority to his servants, to each one his work, commanded also the porter to watch. Watch therefore." The Master does not simply give his whole work to the whole household to be divided up among them, as they may themselves arrange. Christ deals with the individual servant, so that every one of them must look to his Master's hand for his task, must receive from his Master his authority over his separate office and give his account directly to him again. There can be no individual evasion of responsibility in the mass; there can be no overlooking of the individual merit in the joint service.

But to the porter there is given a special charge. For he it is who must receive the worthy into the house and exclude the unworthy (see II. Kings 7:11; Ezek. 44:11; John 10:3). He it is who must open the door at the coming of his Lord.

And the Master may come home again at any hour, "at evening, or at midnight, or at cockcrowing, or in the morning." These words denote the four watches of the night, from 6 to 6 o'clock. The older Hebrew division of the night was into three watches, but in the New Testament times the ordinary Roman reckoning was followed. Julicher and some other scholars have found here an indication of inconsequence and of a lack of authenticity. How should the master of the house return in the night? All of which shows that the criticism of a great scholar may make curious slips, if he spends his life in his study and does not know the land of the Bible. It was just in the night that this Oriental traveler was most likely to arrive at home, because he would rest at midday and continue his journey after sundown in order to avoid the heat.

There is a rich meaning for us in that the scene of the whole parable is laid in the night. Clouds and darkness are round about us. There are no daylight hours for those servants who are waiting and watching for the return of their Lord. Even at the time when Mark was writing there was only a little lull after the savage outburst of Nero's wrath against the Christians; and the rising storm was howling all about.

In our loneliness and woe, in our sighings and watchings, in our close perils from false brethren and our more remote perils from the hatred of a lustful world, in our hushed gatherings beneath the shadow of sickness and death, we wait for the coming of the Son of Man.

What Christ says to the porter he says to all the servants: "Watch." The word literally means, "Be sleepless." We are only half awake. We think that because we have not stolen from our Master, have not beaten our fellow servants, or been gluttonous or drunken, like the unfaithful steward (Luke 12:42-48), we have therefore not betrayed our trust. But we have betrayed our trust when we have neglected it. We have strangely misconstrued our duty. We have come to believe that our only debt is to our fellow servants and that we have no debt to an invisible God. But our supreme duty is to our Lord, who here lays the chief emphasis upon our obligation to wakefulness.

We are watching when we are enduring as seeing him that is invisible; when in his absence we are working as in his sight; when we are laboring for his approval and looking forward with exultant gladness to the hour when he will come again.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE

COMMENTS IN BRIEF BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

June 1, 1913

THE MAN WITH A BOOK

TOPIC—The ideal Christian. VI. His Bible study. Deuteronomy 6:1-9.

Over the great fireplace in the hall of the library of Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, is the inscription, "There is but one book." The quotation, as is well known, is the utterance of Sir Walter Scott when he was dying and had asked for "the Book." Mohammed distinguished Jews and Christians as people having "the religion of the book." The Bible is not only inwrought with Christian history and inseparable from it, but it is also a vital factor in the life of the individual Christian and in the extension of the church. The faith that is not founded on "the impregnable rock of Holy Scripture," as Gladstone called it, is not a sure and living and growing faith.

Given a Christian who loves the Bible and studies it and takes its precepts home, we have one who is ever growing toward that ideal life of which Jesus Christ is the exemplar. For we grow in grace by growing in the knowledge of the Lord.

They go God's way who are guided by God's word.

A dusty Bible is not the possession of a spotless Christian.

The "ideal Christian" must have the Christian ideals; and these are to be got nowhere except in the inspired Scriptures. A vague friendliness toward Christianity and a general morality one may have apart from the Bible, but robust Christian character and that "mystic sweet communion" with God are the possession only of those who meditate upon the word wherein God reveals himself to his children.

An old and familiar series of prescriptions for troubled folk is worth reprinting:

If you have the "blues," read Psalm 27.

If your pocketbook is empty, read Psalm 37.

If people seem unkind, read John 15.

If you are discouraged about your work, read Psalm 126.

If you are "all out of sorts," read Hebrews 12.

If you are losing confidence in men, read I. Corinthians 13.

If you can't have your own way in everything, read James 3.

Life needs horizons, and so does Bible study. It is scarcely too much to say that the person who has regarded the Bible merely as a collection of texts and maxims has failed to understand its message. Plainly, and obviously, the books of the Bible should be read in their entirety, just like any other books. Does anyone for a moment suppose that Paul's letters to the ancient churches were read piecemeal, one fragment a week, a year or two being consumed in reading the whole? The idea is absurd. Well, then, let us take those same letters, each in its completeness, at one sitting. Only thus can we get the inspired writer's message, with its horizons. Instead of a few verses a day, or in addition thereto, the Christian should make it a practice to read at least one complete book of the Bible every week, and at a single sitting.

A few "helps" to Bible study are almost indispensable to the student who is not familiar with the original tongues of the Scriptures, or with Bible times and lands. A Bible dictionary, a concordance and a commentary are a simple, inexpensive library.

The place which the Bible holds in the business of literature is set forth by this quotation from The Literary Digest: "It is conservatively stated that more copies of the Bible were sold last year than of any other hundred books of the world combined. The Oxford Press turns out 20,000 Bibles a week. The British and Foreign Society prints the Bible in 400 languages. The head of one of the great publishing houses of London stated recently that it had been impossible for several years for the house with which he was connected to reprint Bibles rapidly enough to supply the demand. It was stated that the Boxer war in China would drive Bible religion from that empire, yet the issue of Bibles for China in 1910 was 428,000 copies. The total annual issues are over 19,000,000 volumes.

"Twenty-seven Bible societies are printing the Bible; one in the United States, three in Great Britain and twenty-three on the European continent."

General Robert E. Lee once gave this personal testimony to the place of the Scriptures in the life of a man of affairs: "The Bible is a book in comparison with which all others, in my eyes, are of minor importance, and which in all my perplexities and distresses has never failed to give me light and strength."

MISSIONARY WORK

Planning Home Mission Week for 1913

The Home Mission Council and the Council of Women for Home Missions, representing together all the evangelical home mission boards in the country, are asking the churches to repeat the coming November the general and hearty observance of Home Mission Week which characterized last November. The week chosen runs between Nov. 16 and 23. As before, there is no effort to enforce a uniform method of observance, but each pastor and church committee are asked to arrange that their own particular people shall have their attention concentrated for that one week upon the problems of the home mission field. Last year the effort was to survey within that space of time all the outstanding features of American evangelization; but for 1913 the proposition is to specialize upon the single theme, "New Americans for a New America." Under this head the great task of fusing into one national whole the almost uncounted racial elements now living within the area of the United States will be pressed upon the consciences of twentieth century Christians. It is hoped that Thanksgiving Day services will largely take their character from the consideration of this topic in the churches the previous week.

Peking Students Serve the People

The organization of the Peking Students' Social Service Club is a recent development of significance among the young men at the capital of China. The organization is an indirect result from the conference of students in government institutions held last summer under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. The Peking students present at this conference, which was held in the grove surrounding the famous Temple of the Reclining Buddha, returned to school in the fall deeply impressed with the Christian obligation to be of definite service to the uncultured masses around them. They sought an understanding with the students of the Christian colleges in the vicinity and the result was that thirty students from three missionary and three government institutions united in the organization of a club which, in a very short while, doubled its membership.

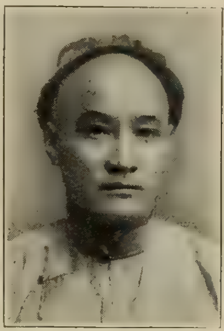
From the club, and from the same impulses working through individuals, a number of admirable activities have grown. In the American Indemnity College the students maintain a night school for the servants employed about the institutions. They teach the servants such subjects as reading and writing, geography and arithmetic. The same enterprise is being imitated in the Customs College. Another line of endeavor is the maintenance of free public lectures delivered in a style adapted to the understanding of the common people. Some of these lecture centers have been opened in the city, and others in the near-by villages and military camps. The government, too, has a lecture system, but it so far deals mostly with Chinese philosophy and history. The students get down to topics more practical and discourse to the people on patriotism, citizenship, personal hygiene and the nature of a republic. To make sure that the matter of these lectures is kept within the proper range, the lecturers themselves are coached in what they shall say before they set out for the work. Meanwhile, letters on the same topics are sent to the newspapers and handbills defining the meaning of the word "republic" are posted on the streets. The club is interesting itself especially in the jinrikisha coolies of the city. When the new Peking Y. M. C. A. is built this club will have a special room.

Reading from Ten Books at Once

Miss Edith M. Buck of Chieng Mai, where, as elsewhere throughout the kingdom of Siam and its Laos provinces, business is largely in the hands of Chinese, in a letter just received says: "We were lately invited to the funeral of a wealthy Chinaman who died months ago and whose remains were kept according to native custom. When we arrived a man was chanting a long article that corresponds somewhat to our obituary, though it had much more in it than we ever put in such a sketch, and such as we would not consider at all apropos. Occasionally while he read the mourners would lift their hands in the attitude of worship. Meanwhile the priests and people were smoking, chewing betel and talking to each other in a way we would consider most disrespectful. A high and highly decorated catafalque on the veranda supported the coffin and all around this were little tables with pillows, mats, etc., as offerings to the priests. After this man was through the eight or ten priests present took seats at these tables and proceeded to read aloud simultaneously, each from a different 'tum,' or Buddhist sacred book. A son of the family said to Miss Collins that no one could understand them when they read thus, but that it took too long to get through if they waited for each one to read in turn. Imagine a funeral ceremony in America where one person was reading the Bible lesson, another praying and the choir singing all at the same time in order to rush it through!"

Work of a Christian Chinese Editor

For twenty-five years Cheng Chun Seng has worked faithfully on the Chinese Presbyterian newspaper, The Christian Intelligencer, at Shanghai, of which Rev. S. I. Woodbridge is editor. The paper was established by the joint action of the foreign mission boards of the Northern and Southern Churches, and is said to have more native Chinese readers at the present moment than any other periodical published in the republic and is a strong influence for good. Mr. Cheng was recently invited to go to Canton and take charge of a new political newspaper there, as told in The Continent a few weeks since, but he promptly declined, although the compensation which he would have been given was greatly in excess of the small stipend he now receives.



Cheng Chun Seng

Girl Slaves in Canton Liberated

Among the students in the School for the Blind conducted by Dr. Mary Niles and Miss Lucy Durham at Canton, China, peculiar interest attaches to a group of seventy-one girls who were brought to the school by the chief of police of Canton city. In a determined effort to wipe out slavery from Canton and its environs the police chief, who is a progressive exponent of the modern revolutionary movement in China, set free 500 young girls kept as slaves in the homes of Canton. Their plight was not involved with the question of morality, for most of them were kept simply for domestic service; but the chief was determined to liberate them, and he took more than 400 from various homes to the government industrial school in the city, where they are being trained for occupations in which they can earn wages.

But seventy-one of the number brought into headquarters by the chief's officers were found to be blind, and these were frankly admitted to be too great a problem for the authorities to handle. There was nothing to do but to appeal to the missionaries for assistance, and Dr. Niles was besought to receive the blind children into her school. She was nothing loath as far as the school was concerned, but answered the chief that there was absolutely no place in her buildings to accommodate this great accession to the body of her pupils. To meet this difficulty the chief succeeded in getting the municipal government, out of its very slender resources, to erect on the grounds of the school temporary buildings which, though frail, have proved thus far sufficient to house the slave children; and when these were completed Dr. Niles and Miss Durham took charge of the group and began their education.

When the blind children were first brought to the barracks they screamed in fright, for mischief makers had told them that the missionaries meant to cut up their bodies into little pieces for medicine. But a day or two fully convinced them that they were in compassionate hands, and made the unfortunate little strangers become docile pupils. They are now being taught to read and write the Braille and will be trained for various self-supporting occupations, such as knitting, lace work and massage. Some of those at least who turn to Christ will be given work as Bible women under missionary control. The authorities of the industrial school where the 400 other liberated slaves were sent at first refused to allow the missionaries to visit them. But that prohibition has now been removed.

Good Friday in the Philippines

Rev. Charles R. Hamilton, missionary at Pagsanhan, in the Philippines, says that a worker among the Filipinos cannot help feeling glad when Good Friday is past each year. The misconception of Christian faith which is cultivated under the Roman priests, or even under the independent Aglipayano priests, is so grievous that it must create the deepest sympathy for the misled Filipino people. The false influence of the day is made all the worse because there is no counteracting emphasis on Easter afterwards. The people are deeply impressed with the spectacle of the dead Christ, for the images which represent his sufferings and death as carried in the Good Friday processions are numerous, crude and ghastly, while nothing at all is done to give the people, then or later, a thought of Christ risen and alive. In Pagsanhan on the evening of Good Friday this year Dr. Hamilton noted even a figure of Christ borne in the procession lying out at full length in a hearse.

The singular fact is, however, in spite of all this grewsome emphasis on the death of Christ, the people are not at all sobered by it. They regard it a great offense for anybody to work on Good Friday, but no sort of holiday making is debarred. The services in the churches on both Holy Thursday and Good Friday are followed with eating, drinking and hilarity lasting until the small hours of the morning. Absurdly dressed masqueraders throng the streets day and night. So the season turns out to be rather a carnival than in any sense a religious observance. There is no sign whatever that the ceremonies of the church have touched the hearts of the people.

Missionary Brevities

—The hymn, "The Son of God Goes Forth to War," has just been translated into Chinese and is said to be proving exceedingly popular in Chinese congregations. The martial spirit is high among Chinese in these days, and this song expresses it perfectly.

—Rev. A. A. Fulton of Canton, with the cooperation of his Chinese people, has built four churches in the last year and is now building two more. All of these are paid for by native congregations.

Board Notes and Announcements

—As president of the Board of the Northwest and also lieutenant of missionaries attending "The World in Chicago," Mrs. Shaw has invited the latter to attend the Friday morning meeting at 509 South Wabash avenue, Chicago. Among those who have been heard there were Dr. Shellman of Siam, Miss Cameron, traveling secretary of the Woman's Board of Home Missions; Mrs. Esselstyn of Persia, Rev. David R. Gordon of India and Miss Jackson of Haines Memorial School, Augusta. The name of the principal of that school, Miss Lucy Laney, is loved and honored all over the land. Mr. Gordon of the U. P. mission in the Punjab told what conversion and education are doing for the Churas, the down-trodden, indescribably debased "untouchables." Mrs. Esselstyn, whose husband, after twenty-four years in Teheran, went nearly two years ago to occupy Meshed, told of the sale of 3,500 Bibles (more than 300 of which went into Afghanistan) during the first eleven months he was in that city, which is the seat of one of Islam's famous shrines. Also of the invitation he there accepted to address 2,000 Moslem worshipers in the mosque. He was also invited by Mohammedans from Tibet to visit them. Other guests heard the same hour were Mrs. C. C. Brown, president of Illinois Synodical Society, and Mrs. B. H. Brainerd, president of Springfield Presbyterial Society.

NEW BOOKS

I have tried "to say yea to life, even in its most difficult problems, and to display a will to life rejoicing at its own vitality in the sacrifice of its highest types."—Phillpotts

Workman's Struggle for Existence

Psychology and Industrial Efficiency, by Hugo Munsterberg. Psychotechnics, as Professor Munsterberg names the new branch of applied psychology which he introduces in this volume, is the capstone to the edifice of scientific management. Briefly, that scheme was to correlate the movements and results of the operations of industry in such a way that lost motion and lost time were minimized as much as possible. Psychotechnics goes a step farther and sifts out by experimental psychology the workmen who do these tasks of industry, so that the man—for example—with a slow "reaction time" between his perception of a thing and his motor response to it, will be taken off a job which necessitates quickness of perception and response, and put on to a job where that is not a desideratum.

The application of these methods to industry will undoubtedly lead to greater efficiency and monetary saving. The author gives many demonstrations where even partial applications of these principles have done so. By the selection of the psychically fitted, too, for each job, the hours of work may be cut down. But in the process of the readjustment—supposing his theories and practices to be largely adopted—there will be an immense amount of shifting and no little wholesale "firing." It is perhaps in defense against the expected pressing of this that Mr. Munsterberg writes a chapter on "Means and Ends," in which he disavows all responsibility for the uses which are made of his means.

The adoption of these principles means in reality a sharpening of the struggle for existence; a sharpening of it, too, not in the competitive sense, but in the sense of natural selection; for it is not the man's will to work which avails him under Munsterberg's tests but only his innate psychological endowment. And this being so, the necessity is thrown into sharper relief for a greater measure of industrial democracy or of "noblesse oblige" on the part of the fortunate, if the purely materialistic side of such progress as this is not going to swamp our ethical and humanitarian values. [Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston. $1.50.

Problems of the Modern Church

Smith and the Church, by Harry H. Beattys. In 1912 Meredith Nicholson published in The Atlantic Monthly an article entitled, "Should Smith Go to Church?" It stated the question of churchgoing from the point of view of the average business man. Mr. Nicholson himself furnishes the introduction to Mr. Beattys's book, and says that he "pays me the compliment of meeting all my criticisms fairly in the open." In eight sermons the author deals with Smith on broad, human grounds. He does not make the habitual acknowledgment of entire fault on the part of the church, but in a very suggestive way argues for church loyalty on the part of all for whom Smith stands. The chapter on "Smith Junior" ought to make many men thoughtful. [Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York. 60 cents.

Religious Unrest and Its Remedy, by James A. Anderson. The author has observed fifty years of intellectual ferment. All traditions, all dogmas, all creeds have been challenged. Dr. Anderson finds rest in a clear Christocentric argument: "The Jesus of the gospels is the Gibraltar of our faith, the impregnable rock that cannot be moved." The phrase reminds one of Gladstone, who found in the Scripture itself this impregnable rock. Dr. Anderson frankly declares that he is not concerned about the accuracy of all parts of the Scripture, or with the truth of the popular view regarding it. He holds firmly, however, to the reality and authority of Christ. [Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. 75 cents.

The Increase of Faith: Some Present-Day Aids to Belief, by Francis J. McConnell. These six lectures, constituting the Merrick course for 1911-12, approach their subject in a fresh way, in that they consider not the grounds of faith but rather the atmosphere in which present-day faith must be maintained and developed. Bishop McConnell discusses the various influences which today are affecting Christian faith—the scientific spirit, the philosophic outlook, the ethical advance, social movements, even æsthetics—and finds them in the main favorable to its growth. The subject is effectively handled and the book is attractive in its literary style. [Eaton and Mains, New York. $1 net.

Christianity and Commerce, by Frank Ilsley Paradise. A book to meet "a dramatic moment in the history of Christian missions—a moment with infinite possibilities." Dr. Paradise has been for fifteen years the rector of Grace Episcopal church, Medford, Mass., and has been watching our commercial expansion. He finds a great chasm between the faith we profess and the practices we employ. The early missionaries boasted that "Christianity is the spirit of the entire body of western civilization." Now, men who are coming to us from the non-Christian East discover that our civilization does not support the claim. Moreover, our commerce which is going into those nations is not operated on a Christian basis. The true answer to inquiries about the Christian faith is not being made by the missionary, but by the merchant, the teacher and the ruler. Dr. Paradise makes an earnest plea for a united church, which shall serve the present purpose of God. He frankly recognizes his own church as an offender against union in refusing to admit others to equal fellowship with themselves. "The church of today has sympathy and kindness, but no program." It is necessary that it now recognize the movement of the times, which is the commercial one, and set itself to Christianize its own surroundings and the life of trade. The book states the case strongly and wisely. [Dodd, Mead and Company, New York. $1 net.

Political and Historical

The Old Law and the New Order, by George W. Alger. The lawyer-author in this series of papers and addresses has made a successful attempt to trace that elusive thing, change, as it manifests itself in the adjustment of old statutory and other forms of law to the fluidic conditions of modern political life. Nowhere does he find this change more apparent than in the great increase in power and influence of executive authority, and the corresponding decline of that of the lawmaker. Instead of trusting the lawmaker, he says, the tendency now is to elect a "good" governor or president and turn over to him the whole business of managing this machinery of lawmaking, in our behalf. A chapter on treadmill justice furnishes a comprehensive and striking arraignment of the "interminableness" of our civil legal procedure. It cites the case of one Williams, a railway brakeman who met with personal injury, whose suit was in the courts for twenty-two years—an illustration of the lack of adequate terminal facilities in litigation to which laymen have frequently objected. The closing chapter on moral standards in business is equally analytical but more optimistic. [Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston. $1.25 net.

The Governments of Europe, by Frederic Austin Ogg. Prompted by the quickening of interest in governmental problems on the part of the people at large, Mr. Ogg aims in this book to promote the intelligent study of government by describing the governmental systems of western and central European countries as they are in operation today—not as they were one, two or more decades ago, as is the case with many of our textbooks and works of reference. Minor as well as major nations are included, and political parties are also treated. In the case of Great Britain there is a survey of a thousand years of history. Professor Ogg thinks the contemporary period following the Liberal revival of 1906 in many respects the most important in the political history of modern Britain, and he gives the Liberals full credit for honestly attempting and partly succeeding in carrying out an ambitious program of economic and social legislation. A large amount of space is given to discussion of the elastic British constitution. There is a clear statement of three institutions frequently confused by American newspapers—the privy council, the ministry and the cabinet. Germany, France, Italy, Austria, Switzerland—the latter a unique federal republic—Holland, Belgium, Spain and Portugal receive attention in descending scale. In his subject the author is regarded as an authority. The book is primarily designed for college or special students, but will be found interesting by any reader who wishes to inform himself concerning European fundamentals in their modern aspect. [Macmillan Company, New York. $3.

Armaments and Arbitration, by Rear Admiral A. T. Mahan. Much of Mr. Mahan's book is polemic against Norman Angell and his work, "The Great Illusion." War, said Mr. Angell there, is becoming more and more impossible as nations begin to see that it disturbs international credit and so hits the victor in any given struggle just as hard as the vanquished. On the contrary, says Admiral Mahan, nations will never take this view of self-interest. They will always place above it ideals of national honor which they will defend at all costs. And that this should be so, he thinks, is good, for force and the ability to use it on demand is one of the expressions of an energy which is the sole dependence of civilization in its effort to survive. We do not think, however, that Admiral Mahan's argument is conclusive. If the moral force of even a mistaken notion of honor may drive a nation to war in spite of Mr. Angell's demonstration of its economic absurdity, then a moral force turned in the direction of peace and arbitration will not be impotent there. And certainly the civilization of which Admiral Mahan speaks is nothing but a product of the progressive application of moral ideas to all the exigencies of life. The day for writing books on the apologetics of war is almost past. The tide is set too strongly in the direction of peace. [Harper and Brothers, New York. $1.40 net.

Sociology in Its Psychological Aspects, by Charles A. Ellwood. Professor Ellwood, in his psychological study of society, takes the recent functional psychology of James, Dewey, Thorndike and Angell and uses its conceptions as the basis of a social analysis of human life. Although psychological, Professor Ellwood's theory of society is not individualistic, and he controverts in many passages the individualistic and "social contract" views of society, especially those recently set forth by Warner Fite in his "Individualism." Professor Ellwood puts the perfected society above the perfected or self-perfecting individual as the ideal, and so his ethics and religion are social and humanitarian. For practical advance his program involves a synthesis of all the social movements which are now scattered and unrelated. [D. Appleton and Company, New York. $3 net.

Books Received

Dan Russell the Fox, by E. Somerville and Martin Ross. George H. Doran Company, New York. $1.25 net.

A Jewel of the Seas, by Jessie Kaufman. J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia. $1.25.

A Man in the Making, by Harry Wagenseller Jones. Crane and Company, Topeka. $1.35.

Grit Lawless, by F. E. Mills Young. John Lane Company, New York. $1.25 net.

The Two Samurai, by Bryon E. Veatch. F. G. Brown and Company, Chicago.

The Open Hearth

Street Preaching at the Assembly

A recent editorial in the The Continent laments that our General Assembly has had no street preaching in the cities where it has met.

At Denver four years ago I was asked to preach, representing the General Assembly, at the regular street meeting of the Salvation Army. For six years at Dubuque I was accustomed to preach every Saturday night during the warm weather, and always somewhere on a public street. I suppose that was why I was invited at Denver. The gathering was on 17th street, if I remember correctly, in front of a large department store, and the street was crowded with men.

A large box was the pulpit and the army sang hymns. I remember I asked the crowd for a text and a number of voices shouted "John 3:16." "Let all who know it say it," I replied, and with a roar like many waters those rough men of the street lifted up the old gospel slogan. Everybody seemed to know it.

Then I asked, "How many of you believe that it is true?" Every hand went up—a forest of hands as far as my eye could reach. It was a most thrilling testimony to a universal acceptance of the gospel. Then I put them to the test by asking, "How many of us are saved by its truth?" Alas! but few hands were raised—the army people and a scattering few in the crowd.

This division brought a deep hush upon them and I said, "Now we understand each other and let us get right down to business."

I forget the results of that meeting, only to remember that the invitation to lift the hand for prayer was answered by a few; but the meeting was reported to the committee on pulpit supply and, no doubt, recorded.

On the next evening I went down to the Sunshine mission and behold! a brother commissioner from Pittsburg had me beaten, for he was on the platform and was preaching a mighty gospel, while the crier at the door was calling to passers-by to come in and hear "Bergen of Dubuque"! So I got the credit for that sermon also.

If the Assembly could turn loose about fifty men every evening and secure places for them to preach on the streets of the city where the Assembly is meeting there would be no question about the blessing both to the city and to the Assembly. And the best of all is that in these days there are plenty of men in every Assembly willing and able to fill the bill.

JOHN TALLMADGE BERGEN.

There Are Other Branches

Our friend and neighbor, Dr. W. S. Plumer Bryan, never takes his pen in hand without making a lot of us sit up and take notice, and whenever he speaks we have to stop and think. Personally, I am in most hearty accord with the point he makes in his communication published in The Continent of May 8.

There can be no question that all Presbyterians will unite "in giving expression to their common faith" in such great truths as he suggests, and that our faith in these great verities will be acknowledged by all as the "real bond of unity."

I am glad, too, that Dr. Bryan has called attention to the fact that social service has been made to appear overprominent thus far in reports of the work of the federal council. Yet as a member of the executive committee of the council and also a member of the council's committee on home missions and a representative of one of the most conservative branches of the Presbyterian family of churches, I strongly object to the statement, "The recent session of this council in Chicago was marked chiefly by its emphasis on the social problem."

I think Dr. Bryan has confused the work of the council with that of the social service commission. Social service is now in the air. It is easy to get people to declaim upon the need of social service. There is a spontaneous unity realized when we find ourselves elbowing representatives of other communions in an effort to relieve distress and minister to creature comfort. It has been easier to realize our unity along all social service lines than to prove our unity in the great underlying facts of our religion; but there are many of us too busy to be engaged in social service, but not too busy to give time to the work of other departments of the Federal Council. While our social service commission has brought its work to the front, and this has attracted the attention of the secular press, let it not be supposed that the other commissions are sleeping, or that their service is the less important because it has not attracted publicity experts.

JESSE W. BROOKS.

Michigan and Suffrage

In a recent news item you note the adverse vote of Michigan on woman suffrage, and say the liqour interests are blamed for this result. Your information is incorrect. The result in Michigan, 96,000 majority against suffrage, was the result of the conviction of the people that the women did not desire the ballot. When the question was submitted last fall the adverse majority was but a few thousands. It was generally agreed that if a recount had been made a majority would have been found for suffrage. But when the matter was up this spring thousands of men who voted for suffrage in the fall now voted against it, and the result showed a remarkable change in public opinion on the subject. It is folly to say that the liquor interests could thus reverse the will of the people. Michigan is largely a dry state. In the recent election several counties that voted against suffrage also went dry. The suffragists expressly refused to identify themselves with the temperance cause and openly asked for the votes of the liquor men as well as others.

As an officer of the Michigan organization opposed to woman suffrage, I am in a position to know that not a dollar was received from the liquor men by either the state or national organizations. None of our expenses were paid by them, and if any of them favored our cause it was in the exercise of their own preference, as was the case with the thousands who voted on that side. It is certainly a significant fact that none of the prohibition states of the union are woman suffrage states, and none of the woman suffrage states are prohibition states. So of the counties in Michigan, those going dry are not in favor of woman suffrage and those giving majorities for suffrage are, as a rule, wet.

It is conceivable that good men and women might oppose woman suffrage and yet be equally conscientious and patriotic as its advocates. The antics of the English militant suffragettes were very damaging to the cause in Michigan, but the real reason for the overwhelming vote was the conviction that the majority of women did not desire the suffrage and that neither their best interests nor the welfare of the state would be served by giving it to them.

ALICE WARNER JEROME.

How to "Draw a Crowd"

I have seen some discussion in The Open Hearth regarding the drawing of the people to the Sunday evening services and I have seen some reports on the use of the stereopticon. I would like to suggest that getting "a crowd" does not always indicate success in a church service. I know a Methodist pastor who, a year ago, was using a stereopticon at his Sunday evening services. He got the crowd, but the crowd spoke of his Sunday evening service always as "the picture show," and they got about the same benefit from the service as they got from a picture show.

I attended the Moody church for two years. Their choir gives a song service once a month. At that service the pastor takes only about ten minutes of the time. The church's big auditorium would not hold the crowd. I have seen conversions at the close of some of those song services. I would like to suggest that the very best drawing card that I have ever seen at any church service, regular or special, is to have conversions at those services. In my experience in evangelistic work I have never seen any difficulty in getting crowd enough when there were several conversions at the service. When a church gets to having conversions at every Sunday evening service it will find the attendance increasing, I believe.

HARLAN A. RIGGS.

The Gathering of the Clans

The Presbyterian clans have gathered from the north and south, from the east and west, from far and near, and are camping on a fortnight's pilgrimage in the midst of the hospitable southland.

They are even now conferring and acting upon matters that are most vital to the Church and the Kingdom. The great missionary and educational problems and opportunities are being fully and sympathetically considered. Evangelism and Brotherhood are entering into larger rooms of service.

Among the many things of interest not one is more outstanding than that of providing properly for our aged ministers and for the widows and orphans of deceased ministers through the Board of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation.

The General Assembly will not adjourn without approving heartily the work of this Board and supporting most loyally its large undertaking. The splendid resolutions passed by the General Assembly will not be worth the paper to print them unless you help to make them real. When the Assembly adjourns it will have done its part.

The church never adjourns and the needs of the disabled servants of the Church take no recess. The Board of Relief and Sustentation keeps at it all the year round.

As the Presbyterian clans turn homeward will you plan to give them a loyal welcome and to approve the approval of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation, by making a five years' or a one year's subscription toward the endowment campaign? Subscription blanks will be furnished upon application, and drafts, checks and Post Office money orders will be gratefully received.

Correspondence is solicited.

Ministerial Relief and Sustentation
WILLIAM HIRAM FOULKES, General Secretary
507 Witherspoon Building - - - Philadelphia, Pa.

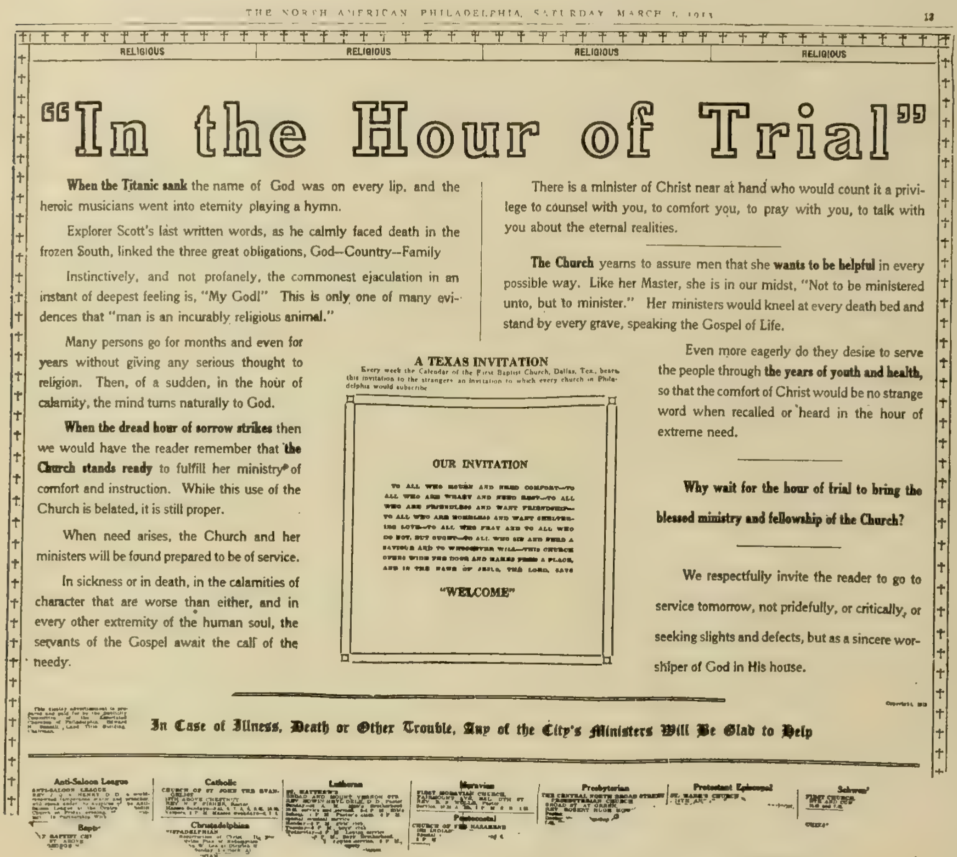
Ways of Working

Successful Use of an Old Plan

If you want to learn how to make money legitimately on a small investment, come to Camden, Ark., and take a few lessons in the art from its boys, girls, men and women of the church, Sunday school and Christian Endeavor society. There is no "tuition" charged nor textbooks required; only a little work, a few friends and strictly applying the "penny saved is 2 cents gained" rule.

Some months ago Rev. Thomas L. Green, pastor of Camden church (South), whose membership numbers about 130, borrowed $103 from the ladies' aid society of his church and divided this money into twenty-eight quarters, forty-four halves and seventy-four dollars and named it "talent money."

To the children of the Sunday school were given the quarters, the Christian Endeavorers the halves and the adults the dollars. Out of the $103 thus divided and given to 146 persons there was made $300 in three months to help wipe out the debt of the foreign missionary board.



THE NORTH AMERICAN PHILADELPHIA, SATURDAY MARCH 1, 1913 13

RELIGIOUS RELIGIOUS RELIGIOUS RELIGIOUS

"In the Hour of Trial"

When the Titanic sank the name of God was on every lip, and the heroic musicians went into eternity playing a hymn.

Explorer Scott's last written words, as he calmly faced death in the frozen South, linked the three great obligations, God—Country—Family

Instinctively, and not profanely, the commonest ejaculation in an instant of deepest feeling is, "My God!" This is only one of many evidences that "man is an incurably religious animal."

Many persons go for months and even for years without giving any serious thought to religion. Then, of a sudden, in the hour of calamity, the mind turns naturally to God.

When the dread hour of sorrow strikes then we would have the reader remember that the Church stands ready to fulfill her ministry of comfort and instruction. While this use of the Church is belated, it is still proper.

When need arises, the Church and her ministers will be found prepared to be of service.

In sickness or in death, in the calamities of character that are worse than either, and in every other extremity of the human soul, the servants of the Gospel await the call of the needy.

A TEXAS INVITATION

Every week the Calendar of the First Baptist Church, Dallas, Tex., bears this invitation to the strangers an invitation to which every church in Philadelphia would subscribe

OUR INVITATION

TO ALL WHO MOURN AND NEED COMFORT—TO ALL WHO ARE WEARY AND NEED REST—TO ALL WHO ARE FRIENDLESS AND WANT FRIENDSHIP—TO ALL WHO ARE HOMELESS AND WANT SHELTERING LOVE—TO ALL WHO PRAY AND TO ALL WHO DO NOT, BUT OUGHT—TO ALL WHO SIN AND NEED A SAVIOUR AND TO WHOSOEVER WILL—THIS CHURCH OPENS WIDE THE DOOR AND MAKES FOR A PLACE, AND IN THE NAME OF JESUS, THE LORD, SAYS

"WELCOME"

There is a minister of Christ near at hand who would count it a privilege to counsel with you, to comfort you, to pray with you, to talk with you about the eternal realities.

The Church yearns to assure men that she wants to be helpful in every possible way. Like her Master, she is in our midst, "Not to be ministered unto, but to minister." Her ministers would kneel at every death bed and stand by every grave, speaking the Gospel of Life.

Even more eagerly do they desire to serve the people through the years of youth and health, so that the comfort of Christ would be no strange word when recalled or heard in the hour of extreme need.

Why wait for the hour of trial to bring the blessed ministry and fellowship of the Church?

We respectfully invite the reader to go to service tomorrow, not pridefully, or critically, or seeking slights and defects, but as a sincere worshiper of God in His house.

In Case of Illness, Death or Other Trouble, Any of the City's Ministers Will Be Glad to Help

Anti-Saloon League | Catholic | Lutheran | Moravian | Presbyterian | Protestant Episcopal

Baptist | Christadelphian | Pentecostal

An Example of Philadelphia Church Advertising

The members and friends of the church took kindly to the scheme and went to work vigorously with their "talents." There were no "unprofitable servants" and no talents "hid in the earth."

Many of the 146 persons or "servants" could be seen vending their "goods, wares and merchandise," such as bread, pies, cake, cookies, candy and other cooked foods, preserved fruits, vegetables, needlework and rugs. Some bought and sold eggs, chickens, milk and butter. Some saved their pin money, sacrificed their weekly allowance, cut off luxuries on their grocery and market bills.

Here are the records of a few most worthy servants: Mrs. Sarah McGill, age 83 years, a charter member, who has been confined to the house for many years, was given one dollar talent, for which she purchased some rags and thread and turned the rags into rugs, which she sold for $6, thereby adding 500 per cent to the treasury. Her daughter, Miss Annie McGill, received a fifty cent talent, which she turned into flour and the flour into bread and the bread into $7, making 1300 per cent, or turning her money over fourteen times in three months. Miss Fannie McGill made 700 per cent on her 50 cent talent.

In the dollar class six persons made 500 per cent, eleven 400 per cent, eleven 300 per cent, others 200 per cent each.

Of the 50 cent class, besides Miss McGill, there were two who made 500 per cent, four 400 per cent, three 300 per cent, eleven 200 per cent each. Of the children, or 25 cent class, Miss Priscilla Powell made 700 per cent on her 25 cent piece. Miss Susie Newton made 550 per cent and Kathrine McCall 400 per cent.

The pastor turned in $11, being $10 earned, while Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Powell contributed $19 each to the talent fund as earners in the dollar class.

Advertising Brings Men to Church

As a direct result of the advertising being done in daily papers of Philadelphia by the publicity committee of the churches of that city a number of people have been brought into the churches. One man who went to church because he read the "ad" confessed that he had had his church letter in his trunk for six years. He joined a U. P. church. A man and his wife who had not been near church for more than a dozen years told a Methodist pastor that the advertising had led them to church. A large number of volunteer gifts have been received to help the committee and the pastors have been led to recognize that routine announcement of church services does not constitute real news.

Congregational Socials

Last year First church, Fort Scott, Kan., gave four birthday season socials which were very largely attended. The plan was for all who had a birthday in any given quarter to unite and give the social to the rest of the congregation. Committees were appointed two weeks in advance and every preparation was made to make them successful. This year the brotherhood and each of the three ladies' societies are taking turns in entertaining the entire congregation. The first social was given by the brotherhood. Their plans were kept secret even from the wives of the leaders until the crowd of nearly 200 assembled. They gave a unique program, then served a three-course supper in the dining room, which was tastefully decorated for the occasion.

Has Any Church a Better Report?

The per capita gifts to missions of $9.02 by U. P. church, Beaumont, Cal., has been surpassed by Bellefonte church, Pa. With a membership of 412 this church gave $10.60 per capita to missions last year, or 54 cents more than during the preceding year. Rev. G. E. Haws says, "We do not believe that this is the best record ever or the best in the world, but we do think that it is fairly good."

Home Made

Have your cake, muffins, and tea biscuit home-made. They will be fresher, cleaner, more tasty and wholesome.

Royal Baking Powder helps the house-wife to produce at home, quickly and economically, fine and tasty cake, the raised hot-biscuit, puddings, the frosted layer-cake, crisp cookies, crullers, crusts and muffins, with which the ready-made food found at the bake-shop or grocery does not compare.

Royal is the greatest of bake-day helps

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

Purity Congress in November

Announcement has been made by the officers of the World's Purity Federation that a number of governors and other prominent men have appointed delegates to the seventh international purity congress, which meets in Minneapolis, Minn., Nov. 7-12.

President Honorary Head of Boy Scouts

President Wilson has accepted the honorary presidency of the Boy Scouts of America and has expressed his desire to do everything in his power to further the success of the movement.

The Leaders of the World

The Greatest Bible in 300 years

THE 1911 BIBLE

OXFORD EDITION

"Just the Bible the world has been waiting for."

Oxford Teachers' Bibles

WITH NEW AND UP-TO-DATE HELPS ARRANGED UNDER ONE ALPHABET

Over 3,000,000 Copies Sold

"They are known from Greenland's Icy Mountains to India's Coral Strand."—The Bookshelf.

From $1.50 upward

The Scofield Reference Bible

A wonderful Book for the English-speaking world. With an entirely new system of helps and references.

From $1.50 upward

Full explanatory booklet on application.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

American Branch, 35 West 32nd Street, New York

When North and South Met in 1888

Twenty-Five Years Ago the General Assemblies of the U. S. and U. S. A. Churches Joined in a Centennial Celebration at Philadelphia

BY WILLIAM P. WHITE

IT WAS HELD in Philadelphia just twenty-five years ago. It had as its moderator the present secretary of the Board of Home Missions, Dr. Charles L. Thompson, who, with Doctors Herrick Johnson, Francis L. Patton and Samuel J. Niccolls, forms a quartet of moderators serving twenty-five and more years ago.

The Assembly was especially notable in three respects: It celebrated the hundredth anniversary of the organization of the General Assembly. It was the first and, preceding the present year, the last time that the two General Assemblies, those of the North and the South, met together. And to the members of these Assemblies the President of the United States was presented and made a notable address.

This hundredth General Assembly U. S. A. met in Horticultural hall, South Broad street, and under General Louis Wagoner as marshal marched to First church on Washington square, where the opening sermon was preached by Dr. J. T. Smith of Baltimore. Afterwards all the business sessions were held in Horticultural hall and the evening meetings in the Academy of Music.

The centennial celebration took place on Thursday. Simultaneous meetings were held forenoon, afternoon and evening in the Academy of Music and Horticultural hall. In the former Dr. J. J. Bullock of Baltimore, moderator of the Southern Assembly, presided in the forenoon, Justice William Strong of the United States supreme court in the afternoon and Hon. A. M. Scales, governor of North Carolina, in the evening. In Horticultural hall Dr. Thompson, moderator of the Northern Assembly, presided in the forenoon, Hon. John L. Marye of Virginia in the afternoon and Governor James A. Beaver of Pennsylvania in the evening. A number of strong addresses, afterwards published in book form, were given by eminent men representing both branches of the church. Intense enthusiasm prevailed. The first, and the historical, address on Presbyterianism was by the distinguished Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler. Among his eloquent utterances which closed his address and greatly stirred his audience were these: "Let us write on our banners at the dawn of this new century union in Christ for a world without Christ." And when the long and loud applause had ceased he added, in allusion to an occurrence in the Assembly the previous day, "And let us waste no time in idle flirtation with a so-called historic episcopate."

Reception to Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland

The members of the Assemblies had been invited to a reception and to meet President and Mrs. Cleveland at the residence of Wistar Morris, a member of the Society of Friends, at Overbrook on Wednesday afternoon. The Northern Assembly marched in a body to Broad Street station, where it took train. Shortly after its arrival at the residence of Mr. Morris it was announced that the train conveying the Southern Assembly from Baltimore had arrived and the members of the Northern Assembly ranged themselves in single file along the walk and the Southern brethren passed between them.

When all had assembled Mr. and Mrs. Morris and President and Mrs. Cleveland appeared on the piazza. The Assemblies were welcomed by Mr. Morris and Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland were presented. Mr. Cleveland spoke as follows:

"I am very much gratified at the opportunity which is afforded me of here meeting the representatives of the Presbyterian Church. Surely no man can lose interest in the welfare of the church in which he was reared. I can find no fault in any of you if you deem it a sad confession when I acknowledge that I must recall the days long past to find my closest relationship with the grand and noble denomination which you represent. I speak of those days when we learn those things which make us Presbyterians all the days of our lives, the days in which we become grounded in those religious impressions that never pass from us. Attendance on church services three times each Sunday, and Sabbath school in the intermission, may be irksome enough to the boy of 10 or 12 years of age to fix it firmly in his memory. But I have never known a man who regretted these things in the days of his maturity. The shorter catechism, thoroughly studied and learned, was not perfectly understood in those days, and yet in the toils and labors of after life those are not the worst citizens who early learned 'What is the chief end of man.'

"In speaking of these things, surrounded by those who are assembled here, tender thoughts crowd upon my mind, all connected with Presbyterianism and its teachings. I have with me memories of a kind, affectionate father, consecrated to the cause, but called to his reward in the midday of his usefulness; the sacred recollections, and prayers, and pious life of a sainted mother, and a family circle hallowed and sanctified by the spirit of Presbyterianism. I cannot but express the hope and the wish that the Presbyterian Church may always be found at the front in every movement which promises the temporal as well as the spiritual advancement of mankind. In the turmoil and bustle of everyday life few men are so foolish as to ignore the practical value of the church organizations established among us, and the advantage of Christian teaching and example. The field is vast and the work sufficient to engage the efforts of every church and every denomination, but I am inclined to believe that the church which is the most tolerant and conservative, without losing its spiritual strength, is the one which will soonest find its way to the hearts and affections of the people.

Why a Northern and a Southern Church?

"I am here today to greet two Assemblies of the Presbyterian Church—one called North and the other South. The subject is too deep and intricate for me, but I cannot help wondering why this thing should be. These words, so far as they denote separation and estrangement, should be obsolete. In the national councils and in the business of the country they no longer meet reproach and antagonism, and even soldiers who fought for the North and for the South are restored to fraternity and unity. This fraternity and unity is taught and enjoined by our church. When shall she herself be united and have that added strength and usefulness which unity and harmony insure?"

The evening following the presidential reception a reception was tendered the members of the two Assemblies by the citizens of Philadelphia in the Academy of Fine Arts on North Broad street.

Pears'

Don't simply "get a cake of soap." Get good soap. Ask for Pears' and you have pure soap. Then bathing will mean more than mere cleanliness; it will be luxury at trifling cost.

Sales increasing since 1789.

A Presbyterian Amazon of Old England

(Continued from page 715)

eighty yards accounted merely for another chimney; one shot did shatter a clock, and three bullets fired from the church steeple broke some Venice glass out of which some of the "capon-faced cowards" had drunk in more hospitable days; but in the sum total there never was such a fruitless expenditure of powder and shot. One man hurt and one slain represented the human casualties within the castle.

Far different is the story the historian tells of the havoc wrought upon the besiegers. Ten men sallied out and put 400 of the enemy to flight; on one day "we sent some of his majesty's good subjects to old Nick"; when all was over "the enemy confessed they had lost 400 of their men."

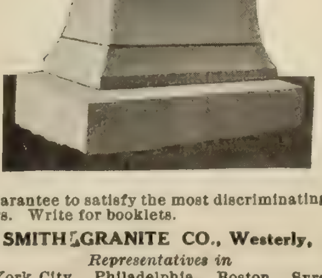
Meanwhile, however, Brilliana Lady Harley was rendering her little garrison of less than a hundred souls far greater service than they knew. Not merely by her undaunted spirit and "masculine bravery" but through the diplomatic letters by which she won time from the besiegers. Her pen defended Brampton Brian quite as effectually as her cannon, for she so fenced with the officers in command as to insure two appeals to the king, and by the time the second was answered the fortunes of Charles were at so low an ebb elsewhere that the troops around the castle had to be hastily withdrawn. Still, while she was ready, as she said, to adjust matters "in the way of peace," a high resolve breathes through all her letters, a determination to protect her children, defend her husband's house and keep her own for her own at all costs.

* * * * *

AND in the end she paid for her heroism with her life. The months of weary expectancy, the tension of awaiting a blow which she was aware must fall, but knew not when, the strain of sole responsibility in her husband's continued absence proved too severe for a body weakened by protracted ill health. Her spirit shone brightly to the last; she "looked death in the face without dread, and the Lord Jesus with joy and comfort"; but her flesh failed. A month after the last of the cavaliers had withdrawn from her castle she wrote once more to her well beloved son. Her trust was still "only in my God, who never yet failed me," she affirmed, but added, "I have taken a very great cold, which has made me very ill these two or three days." Then, a week later, there is one other letter from her pen, this time for her absent husband. It had pleased God, she said, to exercise her with many troubles, but "my God has not left me yet, and I hope he will not." The passing week, however, had brought no improvement in her health; she was still much tried by that "exceeding great cold."

Those were anxious days in Brampton Brian castle. Its noble mistress grew gradually worse. To the "great cold" succeeded a severe fit, then apoplexy, lethargy and convulsions. When the hastily summoned doctor arrived she was unconscious. That was the Sabbath day, and her condition was so critical that a messenger was on the eve of departure for London when she

Smith Granite Productions
In WESTERLY GRANITE
Perfection in the granite cutter's art



We guarantee to satisfy the most discriminating purchasers. Write for booklets.
THE SMITH GRANITE CO., Westerly, R.
Representatives in
New York City. Philadelphia. Boston. Syracuse.

regained consciousness and seemed likely to recover. But it was the last flicker of life's flame. "At 6 o'clock this Sabbath day," so wrote the faithful steward of the house, "the sweet lady's soul went to keep the eternal Sabbath in heaven, where she can never be besieged."

No such felicity was in store for the castle in which she died. Six months later a royalist cordon was again drawn round the building, not to be relaxed until its garrison surrendered at mercy. Lady Harley's body was still within the walls, wrapped in lead and placed in a high tower awaiting honorable burial, but the flight of her spirit had robbed the defenders of their chief incentive to heroism. And the castle she had so bravely held, which had been to her and the Harley kin so stately and happy a home for many generations, was unroofed and laid waste, and so remains to this day in witness of man's inhumanity to man. Nor were the village homes of Brampton Brian, nor even the house of God, spared; all were given to the flames and leveled to the earth. Thirteen years later, when the shadow of war had lifted, the church was rebuilt, just in time for Sir Robert Harley's obsequies; but the ashes of his heroic life partner rest in unknown ground. Her leaden shroud was torn open by sacrilegious hands in search of jewels, and then covered again with a pile of debris, "from whence," wrote the angry diarist of the siege, "it will one day rise against these monsters and usurpers of the name Christian." In this lower world, however, few heroines of faith have a more eloquent monument than Brilliana Lady Harley possesses in the scarred and crumbling walls of Brampton Brian castle.

Why Keep the Graded Lessons?

IT IS NOT to be denied that the transition from the uniform lessons to the graded lessons is little short of revolutionary. To many ministers and teachers the graded lessons are so new that they startle them.

Some of us can recall three different methods of Sunday school lessons. Each change had its friends and its enemies; and each has been full of importance to the religious world. When I was a boy we studied our lesson at home and went to Sunday school to recite. Two verses of a hymn, a question or two in the catechism, with the doctrine proofs and corrections, and a chapter in "Emerson's Question Book" constituted the usual task. A failure there brought as keen a sense of shame as I ever felt when answering in college "not prepared."

For thirty years now the uniform lessons have been almost universally used; a change cannot help but meet with opposition. This system for a generation has occupied a most important part in the religious life of every community. We often hear it said that the present generation is grossly ignorant of the Bible, but most of us appreciate what the uniform lessons have accomplished. They made possible a system of lesson helps which never could have been secured except for the fact that the whole civilized world was interested in the same Scripture at one time.

At the Denver convention the graded lessons were first seriously considered. A most efficient worker of my school attended and was bitterly opposed to any change. She was a most able teacher of a large Bible class, and also had organized a young men's class. She saw the difficulties which the graded system would bring forth and was afraid to meet them. We had many a friendly discussion, for about that time the duty of teaching my boy of 6 years the minor prophets devolved upon me. Loyal to the Sunday school, I undertook the task, but was thoroughly convinced that God never wrote the minor prophets for a boy of 6; and I resolved that if ever I got a chance to hit the uniform lessons I would hit them hard.

No Uncertainty About the System

We do not claim that the graded lessons have reached their final stage of development. Little fault has been found with the beginners', primary, junior and intermediate series. We have had but a year of the senior lessons, and there seems to be room for just criticism; but of the superiority of the system we should not speak in any uncertain terms.

There are difficulties in the way of their introduction—serious difficulties—but if it is the best system, as we believe it is, that has been devised the difficulties can be overcome. The first difficulty is that of housing the Sunday school. New buildings cannot be erected to meet the changed conditions. The Akron plan of building, so popular a few years ago, is suited to the new conditions only in a limited way. Our wealthy and influential schools find themselves hampered, as the buildings are not adapted to the graded system. In the smaller churches there is just the one room, and so there it is hard to grade the school. However, both of these difficulties can be overcome. Curtains will enable the smaller schools to divide into sections, and in the other buildings two or three rooms can be thrown into one. Certainly the child should not be sacrificed for the building. If the graded lessons are the thing, let us use them and bring the buildings around to the lessons as rapidly as possible.

The second difficulty is with the teachers. The average teachers are not prepared to teach the graded lessons—they are not familiar enough with either the child or the Bible. The old style teachers' training class is no longer of service; the pastor cannot take up the Sunday school lesson for prayer meeting or have a teachers' meeting and go over the lesson with all the teachers. Again, it is next to impossible to arrange for supply teachers. You cannot go through your school and pick out any well meaning woman and place her over a class of lively boys. Superficiality which answered fairly well with the uniform lessons is a failure here. On the other hand, the school can get along with fewer teachers under the graded lessons. Better have one good teacher in a grade than half a dozen teachers who only read the questions from the quarterly.

The third difficulty is that it breaks up the unity of the school. The school is no longer studying the one lesson—the superintendent cannot read the lesson from the desk; he no longer has his order of exercises planned for him. The Sunday school finds that the enthusiasm that comes from the unity of the whole school is gone, and the work of the superintendent is greatly increased. Opening exercises have been spoiled. But what are the opening exercises? Too often they have been largely to take up time—they have been neither instructive nor devotional. Scripture, hymn and responsive service should be to teach the child to worship. There is no reason why the superintendent should read the lesson. If it has been studied at home and the teacher is to go over it, why should the superintendent read it? The only excuse for his reading it is the supposition—too often true—that the majority of the school then see it for the first time.

Complicated—Yes, but Life Is Complicated

The fourth difficulty, the most serious, is that it is too complicated. It is complicated, but life is complicated. The average Sunday school cannot afford a trained worker. The grades, the teachers and the lessons all demand time. There seems to be but one of two ways to meet this need—either the pastor must devote a much longer time to the educational work of his church or else he must have a trained worker for this special department. Pastors must become teachers, not merely preachers; they must spend more time in teaching the young even if they have to spend less time in preaching to the old.

The question is not "What are the difficulties?" but "Is the graded system best?" If so the difficulties must be overcome: to those who have faith and energy they will be overcome.

The great thing about the graded lessons of the first four series is the view they give the child of God. God is made a very part of their life—the God of revelation is the one God of the whole life.

1. We are told these lessons have what is called "extra-biblical material." Why should they not have? The same God that wrote the Bible made the fields, the flowers and the hills. God reveals himself not only in his words but in his works. Moses received the tables of stone from the mount, but he also learned of God's care in the desert. If he had been afraid of extra-biblical material he would never have written the 90th and 91st Psalms. Too long have we taught not that the Bible is the revelation of God but that it is the only revelation of God. Children grow up to see God on Sunday in the Bible, but they do not see him during the six days in the fields and in the home. The extra-biblical material gives a unity to life; it gives us a wider view of God; it shows him in all life. It teaches the child that the God of the Bible and the God of nature are one and the same, and that he is the same yesterday, today and forever.

2. The graded lessons take missionary biography as well as the heroes of Scripture. They ought to take church history also. It is true that God led the children of Israel; it is also true that he is leading his church today. The important thing to teach is not that God was with the people 2,000 or 5,000 years ago, or that Christ lived 2,000 years ago—the important thing is for the child to learn that God is with him today and that Christ is in the world today. God was the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, but he was also the God of Carey, Judson and Livingstone, and he is our God. It is true that the story of Joseph is an inspiration to any boy. His life is an illustration of what it means to trust God and do right. Livingstone's life is also an inspiration to any boy, and shows what consecration means. It is much easier for a child to apply the truths of Scripture if he finds illustrations of God working in the lives of modern men.

Religious Education and Everyday Life

We have divorced our religious education from individual experience. The child learns of Palestine not as a country on this globe on which we live, he studies Paul as if he were a man separated from human experience and he considers the church at Corinth entirely apart from the church of today. As a matter of fact, Palestine must be studied side by side with Egypt, Greece and Rome. Paul was a man, a godly, consecrated man to be sure, but a real man, and the saints in the church at Corinth do not compare very favorably with the saints in the average church of today. Such a study of the Bible does not at all destroy its inspiration, it is only a matter of methods of teaching an inspired book and making it more practical. We believe the Bible is inspired, but that only makes its truths more universal, more important, and it should be studied in a way most adapted to the ability of the pupil to comprehend.

3. The God who established the laws of

HER "BEST FRIEND"

A Woman Thus Speaks of Postum

We usually consider our best friends those who treat us best.

Some persons think coffee a real friend, but watch it carefully awhile and observe that it is one of the meanest of all enemies, for it stabs one while professing friendship.

Coffee contains a poisonous drug—caffeine—which injures the delicate nervous system and frequently sets up disease in one or more organs of the body, if its use is persisted in.

"I had heart palpitation and nervousness for four years and the doctor told me the trouble was caused by coffee. He advised me to leave it off, but I thought I could not," writes a Wisconsin lady.

"On the advice of a friend I tried Postum and it so satisfied me I did not care for coffee after a few days' trial of Postum.

"As weeks went by and I continued to use Postum my weight increased from ninety-eight to 118 pounds and the heart trouble left me. I have used it a year now and am stronger than I ever was. I can hustle upstairs without any heart palpitation and I am free from nervousness.

"My children are very fond of Postum and it agrees with them. My sister liked it when she drank it at my house; now she has Postum at home and has become very fond of it. You may use my name if you wish, as I am not ashamed of praising my best friend—Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum now comes in new, concentrated form called Instant Postum. It is regular Postum so processed at the factory that only the soluble portions are retained.

A spoonful of Instant Postum with hot water, and sugar and cream to taste, produce instantly a delicious beverage.

Write for the little book, "The Road to Wellville."

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

righteousness and the laws of nature is one and the same. We need to obey not only the commandments but also the laws of our physical and mental life. Obedience to the laws of child development is obedience to the laws of God. He that said, "Thou shalt not steal," meant that we should not steal from the child and the child's right to grow, as truly as he meant that we should not steal from our fellow men.

To discover and obey God's law is the great task of life, and what more important laws than the laws of mental development in the boy or girl? God never intended the child should be fed on the same food as the adult, either material or spiritual. The child needs spiritual truth as well as the adult; and there is an abundance of spiritual truth adapted to the child if we adults will take the trouble to find it. We think the child's religious experience must be the same as ours. Is the child life the same as ours? His mental faculties are different and the relations between his faculties are different, and it is folly to ask him to pass through the same experiences.

My religious experience has changed greatly in the last year. We are not only to expect but to hope that the religious experience of a child will change as rapidly as the change in his physical nature.

Every age of life has its characteristics—you cannot deal with the child as a man or with the man as if he were a child. Our graded system has recognized this fact—it is the supreme fact of education. The purpose of the Sunday school teacher is not to teach the Bible—it is to teach the child. Our purpose is to develop character, and the Bible is God's greatest instrument for that means; but we must remember that it is an instrument and not an end. We are not to think that because we are dealing with the great truths of religion it does not make any difference whether we obey the laws of normal growth or not. God's Spirit may overrule your mistakes, but he can accomplish a great deal more if you do not make mistakes. The musician has but to know and obey the laws of harmony to make a great musician; the Christian has but to know and obey the laws of God. The teacher must know and obey the laws of child nature to make an efficient teacher. Our graded lessons are the first honest attempt to discover and obey the laws of God in the mental and spiritual nature of the child. For that reason alone they are worthy of our support. Whatever changes may be necessary, let us not destroy the principle upon which they have been established.

E. VAN DYKE WIGHT.

How About Your Prayer Meeting?

(Continued from page 713)

in the Wednesday or Thursday night meeting, so that it shall be impossible to predict from week to week just what the service will be like.

A Point from Moving-Picture Showmen

Right here is the objection to publishing an annual list of prayer meeting topics. Familiarity with the list makes them seem unattractive. An alert lawyer called my attention one day to the fact that the moving-picture shows never advertise their attractions for several months ahead; they always put the stress on the very next program. The pastor may well learn wisdom from the children of this world, and not announce the topics for the midweek service for more than a week in advance, and when he does advertise let him see that he whets the appetite.

Of course it may be truly said that the members of the church ought to be in their places at the midweek meeting for prayer and conference as a matter of duty. But there is no harm in seeking to furnish duty with wings rather than with weights, and that is just what the element of surprise does. This does not mean, of course, that the pastor is blundering along, chasing will-o'-the-wisps. He ought to know what he is after, and to have a well defined program in his own mind. But it means that so far as announcements go he appeals to the faculty of interest which something new always awakens.

Once in a long while the pastor may give an address. Sometimes at the close of a meeting he may ask for volunteers who will take one of the subtopics he mentions for the next week. Sometimes he may quietly go to a number and ask them if they will not be prepared to help. Sometimes the meeting may be made a conversation, and again it may become a round table discussion, with a list of questions prepared on a copying machine and placed in the hands of those present.

Conferences on Life's Homely Duties

Some meetings may be made devotional, where a prayer atmosphere is created, where public prayer is expected, and for which those hesitant about public prayer are seen in advance, and asked to participate. Frequently the meeting may be a conference on the homely duties of everyday life, and on the difficulties and trials of faith which all have to meet. Once a month there should be a missionary meeting, though not always announced as such, and always with a touch of novelty, and very frequently the meeting should be a Bible study, but conducted in an unexpected manner.

In the way of opening the meeting, in the arrangement of the hymns, by the use of special hymns as solos and duets, through the method used in Scripture reading, now responsively, now in unison and now by one voice, there can be a newness added. And if the leader is sufficiently bold he may sometimes change the seating of the room, especially if the night is stormy, and get people into an informal group. Those regular rows of chairs are always more or less of a hindrance to the good fellowship and ease in which the midweek service should abound.

One of the best midweek missionary meetings I have known was devoted to the question how those opposed to missions must say the Lord's prayer. The prayer was written on the blackboard and those present were asked to suggest what words and clauses must be stricken out if Christ has not a gospel for the world, until all that was left was, "Father who art in heaven, give me this day my daily bread, and lead me not into temptation, but deliver me from evil." A home missionary meeting had for its novel feature the delightful rendering of some of Steiner's immigrant stories by a good reader.

There is fine material for an unusual devotional meeting in the prayer life of Abraham Lincoln and of Robert E. Lee. I have seen a helpful meeting of the same sort come from the reading of portions of Phelps's "Quiet Hour," and another from the reading of "The Practice of the Presence of God," by Brother Lawrence. Cheap copies of these booklets were purchased and distributed to every family represented at the meeting. Most Christians are very unfamiliar with the great devotional books of the church.

Any meeting which has to do with the welfare of the local church or community is pretty sure to be a live meeting. I saw a largely attended meeting which was advertised as a meeting to consider the history of our own church, the pioneer days, the different edifices, the officers, etc. Another topic which seemed to make an especial appeal was, "Why our town is a good town to live in," which turned thought from "knocking" to "boosting."

In regard to Bible study, the mistake is usually made of selecting too small portions. There is, of course, in a single verse like John 3:16 material for many meetings, but if all of the Bible is to become familiar larger portions must usually be studied. Over and over again I have seen a most helpful meeting spring out of the consideration of a whole book, like Job or Ephesians. The lay of the land and a few fine points of view can be pointed out in half an hour in such a way as to stimulate further study on the part of those present.

When Henry Ward Beecher was once asked what he did if he saw signs of sleepiness in his audience, he replied that he had left strict orders with the sexton that if he saw anyone going to sleep he should come at once to the pulpit and wake up the preacher. And surely what every pastor must do if he finds his midweek service prosy, monotonous and perfunctory is to cudgel himself until he is wide awake. In the gospel of Christ there is great riches from which the alert leader of the midweek service may bring forth treasures both new and old.

"The Standard Bible of the English-Speaking World"

THE AMERICAN STANDARD BIBLE

Edited by the American Revision Committee

This is the latest and best translation of the Scriptures. It is the same old Bible that we have always used, but it gives the exact meaning of the inspired writers in the language of today, instead of the language used three hundred years ago.

The American Standard Bible is the result of thirty years' work by the American Revision Committee, the greatest Biblical scholars of modern times. They had the advantage of all the oldest and most authentic manuscripts of the Bible, many of which were only recently discovered, and had for comparison the recent revisions made by England, Germany, France, Holland, Norway, Sweden and Denmark.

REV. WILBERT W. WHITE, D. D., President of Bible Teachers' Training School, New York, says:

"We use exclusively the American Standard Bible in our school. We do this because we believe that it is the best English version of the Bible published."

The demand is so great that the publishers have made this version in eight sizes of type and over 200 styles of binding, so as to meet every want. Prices from 35 cents up.

FOR SALE BY ALL BOOKSELLERS. SEND FOR BOOKLET TO

THOMAS NELSON & SONS, PUBLISHERS
383V Fourth Avenue, ... NEW YORK

MINISTER AGENTS WANTED

Sell Typewriters For Us

SAMPLES AT WHOLESALE

Big commissions—monthly payments—trial shipments—new stock—visible models—special prices to all Ministers.

Write toaay for Agency offer. Mention The Continent.

Use the Coupon ☞

FOX TYPEWRITER COMPANY
GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

FROM THE CONTINENT
Name..
Address.......................................

Bible Class of Street Car Men

Dr. Roemer Starts New Work with His Brotherhood - Jew Is Ordained in St. Louis and Will Study in Russia.

ST. LOUIS—Dr. John L. Roemer and his splendid brotherhood workers have lately organized a Bible class among the street railway men, who gather in large numbers at the clubhouse provided for employees by the United Railways Company.

Mothers' Day was observed by special services in First, North-Covenant, Immanuel and Markham Memorial churches.

First German church observed its golden jubilee Sunday, May 18. Rev. A. B. Von der Lippe, a son of the founder and first pastor of the church, preached in the morning.

H. L. Helyer, formerly of the Jewish faith, was ordained in Washington and Compton Avenue church May 11. Dr. S. J. Niccolls conducted the examination in theology and offered the ordination prayer. Mr. Helyer has obtained an immigration scholarship under the Board of Home Missions and will study in Russia, his native country. It is thought he will have no difficulty in pursuing his investigations, as he is a naturalized American citizen. Licensure was granted Fred Maier, who completed his theological course this year at Princeton. Mr. Maier is a member of Curby Memorial church and began his studies in Westminster College.

Unusual action was taken by presbytery Monday, May 12, when a memorial was adopted on the death of Dr. Gradinaroff, a layman. The deceased had been persecuted for his faith in both Turkey and Bulgaria, and for the past three years had labored among foreigners in this city and the East side towns. Two funeral services were held, one at Victor Street mission and the other at the Bulgarian church in Venice, Ill.

Many of the Presbyterian pulpits were occupied by Baptist clergymen May 18, delegates to the Southern Baptist Conference.

Children are now enrolling for the summer schools. Mr. Harries, a student in Auburn Seminary, is to be in charge this summer. He will conduct the work at Markham church in the absence of the pastor at Aberdeen, Scotland.

E. W. McClusky.

Count Noses at Prayer Meeting

Nearly 15 Per Cent of San Francisco Presbyterians Are Out Wednesday Night - Churches Are Active

SAN FRANCISCO—At a recent ministers' meeting it was found that the combined average attendance at the midweek meetings of the churches of presbytery was 390 out of nineteen churches and 2,489 members, or nearly 15 per cent. Most of the meetings are conducted along old-fashioned prayer and Scripture study lines. The only hot chocolate experiments were found failures. Lebanon church has divided its membership into four geographical groups for the purpose of increasing the attendance at these meetings. Bethany and other home mission churches are training their young people into the Wednesday night "habit."

Presbytery will install Rev. R. N. Powers as pastor of Parkside church May 29. Reverends W. K. Guthrie, W. K. Howe, William Nat. Friend and R. L. Webb will take part.

An elder's commissionership to General Assembly went begging this year. Dr. Rawlins Cadwallader of Calvary church was the only elder able to accept the honor.

Parkside church has just organized an intermediate Christian Endeavor society with twenty-four members.—Richmond church has a well organized boys' club for social and athletic purposes.—At St. Paul's church, where the first successful recall of a judge was inaugurated recently by the women voters of the city, the Sunday school now requires of the pastor a closing ten minute sermon.—Special services at Glenside church by the pastor, Rev. Frank Dickson, brought in new members at the last communion.—Olivet church is meeting the spring season for the boys with a brand new baseball club.—University Mound church has held forty-nine days of special services.—Calvary's average attendance is now 400 in the morning and 600 in the evening.—The Chinese church has a thriving King's Daughters association of forty members.—The men's clubs of St. John's and Howard churches have been engaged in successful civic services during the recent months.

Rev. W. E. Parker, Jr., as counselor of Golden Gate Christian Endeavor Union, at the quarterly convention held at Olivet church on May Day introduced successfully the matter of Endeavorers for pastors' assistants.

A committee of leading ministers in the bay region has been formed to promote church unity. Professor E. A. Wicher, D. D., is the Presbyterian representative. The first mass meeting under its charge was held May 12 at First Congregational church. C. F. Aked, D. D., and Bishops E. H. Hughes, D. D., and W. F. Nichols, D. D., were the principal speakers.

Competition in essays on scriptural subjects is interesting the Sunday school pupils of Lebanon church, Rev. A. B. Dickerson pastor. Prizes will be awarded for the best papers. The Lemajo Bible class recently inaugurated the custom of having a formal reception of members to this organization. The Christian Endeavor has taken a large part in the missionary work of the local union. All the other organizations of the church are actively at work.

Can't Afford to Go to College?

That's because you haven't heard of

BLACKBURN COLLEGE, CARLINVILLE, ILLINOIS (60 miles north of St. Louis)

Helps Students to Help Themselves

UNIQUE FEATURES OF THE SELF HELP PLAN

I—Offers a high grade college education for one hundred dollars per annum.
This includes room, heated with steam and furnished (except bedding), board and tuition.

II—A college community in which students work three hours a day at some profitable and educative labor.

III—A fund of twenty-three thousand dollars to educate young men in college for the Presbyterian ministry.
The charge per year to such is only fifty dollars.

For further information write to

President Hudson, Carlinville, Ill.

Expect Many at Los Angeles Convention

Preparations are being made for the entertainment of many thousands of visitors to Los Angeles July 9-14 during the sessions of the international Christian Endeavor convention. Arrangements have been made by large delegations from various states to travel by special train to the convention and in returning view some of the Alplike scenery of the northern part of the United States. Among the speakers well known to Presbyterian Endeavorers are Dr. Robert F. Coyle, Dr. Ira Landrith, Dr. John Balcom Shaw, Dr. J. A. Macdonald, Rev. Stanley A. Hunter, Dr. John Willis Baer and Dr. W. L. Darby. It is also expected that Billy Sunday will give one of the main addresses. Dr. Francis E. Clark, president of the United Society, has recently returned from an extensive trip abroad and will preside at many of the meetings.

Impress Sunday School on Japan

A delegation of American Sunday school workers which is touring the eastern portion of the world preceding the world's convention at Zurich held meetings in the interests of Christian education in thirty-five large cities of Japan. The delegation is headed by H. J. Heinz of Pittsburg and includes a large number of business men. They have been able to bring Christianity to the attention of the upper and middle classes of Japan as it has never been brought before. The native press has also devoted considerable attention to the meetings which the commission has conducted. At banquets and other social occasions the mission of the delegation has been tactfully brought forward. Sunday school congregations in Japan are easy to obtain, but up to this time the impression has prevailed among natives that the school is for young children only.

Temperance Topics

The Baltimore and Ohio railroad has not only ordered its employees not to frequent saloons but has forbidden them to sign petitions for saloons on pain of dismissal.

Consumers of liquor in Danville, Ky., since the passage of federal legislation on shipment of alcoholic beverages must go twenty-five miles to the nearest wet town to quench their thirst.

Collier's Weekly is carrying on a persistent campaign to induce newspapers to publish the name of the seller and distiller of the liquor which is the underlying cause for recurring murders.

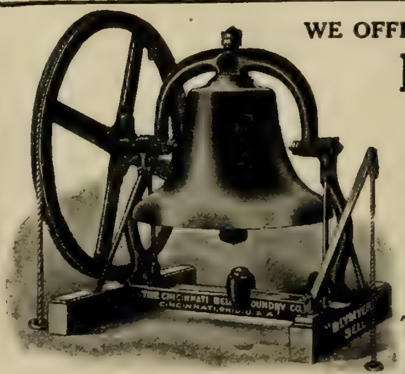
Thirty-four per cent of the population of Illinois lives in dry territory, according to figures compiled by E. J. Davis, Chicago superintendent of the Illinois branch of the Anti-Saloon League.

In connection with the losing fight for anti-liquor legislation in Pennsylvania figures were quoted in debate showing that in Fayette county the liquor interests had cost the county last year $148,000 and had paid as license $1,680.

It is estimated that railways centering in Chicago will lose $1,000,000 revenue a year from the prohibition on shipment of liquor into dry territory. There has been no complaint, however, as the railways generally favor prohibition.

Judge Butler at Cairo, Ill., recently said at the close of a murder case that it was the seventy-sixth in nineteen years with which he had had to deal either as attorney or judge. Of these murders seventy-five were caused by liquor.

"Not to be cashed in a saloon" is the warning displayed on the 800 pay checks issued every two weeks by a company at Escanaba, Mich. Upon the back of the check above the place for indorsement is printed a form which announces that the check becomes void if it is indorsed by a saloonkeeper or passes through his hands in any way.



THE CINCINNATI BELL FOUNDRY CO.
CINCINNATI, OHIO U.S.A.
BLYMYER BELL

WE OFFER YOU IN

BLYMYER BELLS

All that you can hope to secure in any other bell and we can save you considerable money.

Secure at a reasonable price a bell which will be a credit to your church and a source of lasting enjoyment. Write for our proposition now. It will please you. It will protect you.

The Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co.
CINCINNATI, OHIO

Raise Half Million for Y. W. C. A.

Large Gifts Near End of Campaign Encourage Women — Dr. Reeve Resigns After 48 Years at Lombard-Central Church.

PHILADELPHIA—Near the close of their two weeks' campaign to raise $750,000 the drooping spirits of the Y. W. C. A. were encouraged by the offer of $50,000 from Mrs. E. T. Statesbury, conditional upon $500,000 being raised. The latter sum was then made the goal and the time for raising it extended one week. Through most energetic and persistent effort of the young women gifts of $25,000 from Colonel Elverson of The Inquirer and an anonymous friend, the underwriting in the closing hour of $25,000 by Messrs. Wanamaker and Nicholson in behalf of friends, and a final gift of $10,000 by Mr. Wanamaker's son, the half million dollars was assured amidst the great rejoicing of the young women. The campaign has wonderfully united the womanhood of the city in behalf of the needy and struggling of their sex.

EACH CHURCH HAS GROWTH

The New Covenant church of Germantown, Rev. H. W. Hathaway pastor, had the recent pleasure of entertaining Philadelphia North Presbytery for the first time. Rev. H. M. Robinson was received and arrangements made for his installation as pastor of Market Square church, Germantown, May 27, when the sermon will be preached by Dr. F. L. Patton of Princeton. Warren J. Conrad of Reading was licensed to preach and dismissed to New York Presbytery to become assistant to Dr. Wylie of Scotch church. The additions to the sixty-five churches of presbytery on confession during the year were reported as 918, which is in excess of the previous year. The net gain to the presbytery was 839. There were additions to all the churches. A marked increase in benevolence took place in most churches.

Calvin church of West Philadelphia rejoices in having a pastor, Rev. Francis S. Fort, formerly of South Bethlehem. Although but ten years old, having received its start in summer tent work, Calvin has a membership of 600 and a like number in its Sunday school.

Dr. John B. Reeve, pastor of the Lombard-Central church since 1861—fifty-two years, with the exception of four years, from 1871 to 1875, when acting as a professor in Howard University, Washington, D. C.—has resigned on account of advancing age. He has for some time been the oldest Presbyterian pastor in continuous and in active service in the city.

Rev. E. Ray Simons has resigned the pastorate of old Pine Street church to take effect the first of next September. The congregation voted him leave of absence until that time with full salary.

Woodland church, West Philadelphia, reports over $16,000 given the past year for church support and $6,000 for benevolence. The cost of a new Odell organ was included in the first and the erection of the "Louisa Junkin Comegys Memorial Bible Institute" in Ichowfu, China, in the latter. The pastor is Rev. J. R. Swain.

SENDS TWO TO CHINA

At the communion service May 11 in Second church Rev. Reuben A. Torrey, Jr., a son of the evangelist and a graduate of Princeton this year, was introduced to the congregation and spoke briefly. Mr. Torrey and his future wife, Miss Mallary of Macon, Ga., are two of the missionaries who are to be supported by Second church, Rev. Alexander MacColl minister, as a result of the China campaign. They leave for China in September.

The Presbyteries of Chester and Westminster overtured General Assembly to grant to the home mission presbyteries "the privilege and prerogative of exclusive jurisdiction and control over the work in their respective bounds and that the Home Board's field secretaries and other special official representatives be withdrawn in the interest of economy, harmony and efficiency."

Arch Street church, from which Dr. M. J. Eckels recently resigned, denies a rumor that it would seek a union with another church and remove to a new location.

Green Hill church has called as pastor Rev. Royal A. Stout of Plainfield, N. J., a minister of the Dutch Reformed body.

At a dinner and conference held here last week, attended by nearly fifty prominent ministers and laymen, representing all the Protestant communions, a committee was appointed to arrange for a series of conferences throughout eastern Pennsylvania later in the year in preparation for a great united missionary campaign. J. Campbell White and W. B. Millar of New York delivered addresses. W. P. WHITE.

Princeton Class of '63

Dr. Henry M. MacCracken, chancellor emeritus of New York University, spoke at the Princeton Seminary alumni dinner as representative of the class which graduated from Princeton half a century ago—the class of '63. Dr. MacCracken spent his senior year only at Princeton, his junior and middle years being taken in the U. P. Seminary at Xenia, Ohio. It was at his suggestion in speaking for the class of '63 that the Princeton alumni telegraphed congratulations to Xenia Seminary, which at that moment was celebrating the fortieth anniversary of the presidency of Dr. William C. Moorehead, who was Dr. MacCracken's fellow student there. Dr. MacCracken noted that about twelve of his fifty classmates in Princeton survived. One of them is Dr. Hunter Corbett of China.

Our displays of Summer Furniture are of large extent and complete variety. The main exhibit is upon our first floor, giving the greatest possible convenience for selection.

The numerous low special prices and the many exclusive styles and patterns make it very advisable to become acquainted with these displays before purchasing. Mail orders carefully filled.

The Tobey Furniture Company

Wabash Avenue and Washington Street, CHICAGO
New York Store: 669 Fifth Avenue, New York City

PIPE AND REED ORGANS AND PIANOS
Pure, sweet tone. Superior quality. Attractive styles. We sell direct at factory prices. Write, stating which catalog is desired.
HINNERS ORGAN CO., PEKIN, ILL.

Attractive Sunday Evenings
With McIntosh illustrated sermons. Write for catalog.
McIntosh Stereopticon Co.
37 Randolph Street :: Chicago, Illinois

We Will Pay You $120.00
to distribute religious literature in your community. Sixty days work. Experience not required. Man or woman. Opportunity for promotion. Spare time may be used. International Bible Press, 410 Winston Bldg., Philadelphia.

Church Organs
BUILT BY
Hutchings Organ Co., 18 Tremont Street BOSTON, MASS

1500 MÖLLER PIPE ORGANS
Now in use. For Catalogues, Address
M. P. MÖLLER, HAGERSTOWN, MD.

Suggests Gray for Mourning

Dr. John H. Jowett Proposes a Substitute for Black—Late News of Church Activities of the Metropolis.

NEW YORK—Dr. John Henry Jowett of Fifth Avenue church says he is of the opinion that when there is a death in the family the loved left behind should wear gray instead of black, as gray is the color of the dawn and death is the dawn of the life everlasting.

Dr. David J. Burrell, president of the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance, and Mrs. Burrell will sail for Europe June 7. Dr. Burrell goes to preside at the council in Aberdeen, Scotland. June 8 the special steamship will sail for Aberdeen. Among those who will go will be Dr. and Mrs. William H. Roberts of Philadelphia, Dr. and Mrs. Wallace Radcliffe of Washington and Dr. David G. Wylie of New York.

John Purroy Mitchel, new collector of the port of New York, addressed Bethany church, Brooklyn, May 14.

Dr. Harvey Graeme Furbay, for the last two years agent of the Anti-Saloon League of Montana, has returned to New York and accepted a position as field secretary of the National Temperance Society, of which Dr. D. Stuart Dodge is secretary. Before going West Dr. Furbay was pastor of First Union church.

"Present Religious Literature" will be the subject of an address by Dr. George P. Mains of the Methodist Publication Society before the Presbyterian ministers' association May 26.

Presbyterian ministers who attended the recent conference on church unity in New York City at the call of Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity church, were Dr. J. Ross Stevenson of Baltimore, Professor Charles R. Erdman of Princeton and Dr. Robert Hunter of Philadelphia.

CHURCHES OBSERVE PEACE DAY

At the request of the recently organized American Church Peace League May 18 was observed as Peace Sunday in the churches, this being the anniversary of the first Hague peace conference. A number of our ministers preached on "International Peace." The observance of the anniversary was also recommended by the Federal Council of Churches.

The church extension committee is considering the purchasing of new property for Tremont church in the Bronx, of which Rev. J. Henry Hartman is pastor.

Northminster church, of which Rev. Arthur H. Limouze is pastor, celebrated its ninth anniversary Sunday, May 11. In the evening Mr. Limouze gave a history of the church from the time it was founded in a dancing academy.

Dr. and Mrs. Charles Kirkland Rays, who were sent as missionaries to China by Classon Avenue church, Brooklyn, are in this country for a visit. They were given a reception by the church recently and will spend the summer in St. Paul, Minn., where Mrs. Rays's parents live.

Rev. Charles W. Welch, minister in charge of First Union church, inaugurated an open air service in front of the church May 11. This church had the second largest number of accessions in the presbytery during the last church year, and yet there has been constant suggestion for years that the church sell and relocate. Madison Avenue church, Dr. Henry S. Coffin pastor, had the largest number of accessions.

Dr. Wilton Merle-Smith of Central church and his wife will return from Atlanta, where Dr. Merle-Smith is a commissioner, by way of Kentucky, where they will visit the home mission station supported by Central church.

ORDAIN DR. VAN DYKE'S SON

Tertius van Dyke, son of Dr. Henry van Dyke, was ordained May 18 in Christ church, which building was erected as a tribute to his father, who was long pastor of Brick church. Mr. van Dyke has been a lay assistant there under Rev. Theodore F. Savage.

Rev. Charles Stelzle of the bureau of social service is reporting the Atlanta Assembly for nine leading daily newspapers in as many cities.

The Italian Presbyterian pastors of New York have organized a society of their own for mutual help.

Dr. Nehemiah Boynton of Clinton Avenue Congregational church, Brooklyn, had the great privilege May 14 of ordaining two of his sons to the gospel ministry at the same time in his church. They were Edward C. Boynton, 27 years old, and Morrison Russell Boynton, 25 years old.

Central church, of which Dr. Wilton Merle-Smith is pastor, has secured for supply during July Dr. John McNeill of Cooke Presbyterian church, Toronto, Canada. There will be an evening service. Dr. McNeill preaches in Toronto to 1,800 people in the morning and 2,300 people in the evening.

The Presbyterian Young People's Union held a rally in Central church May 12. An illustrated lecture on "The Pocono Conference" was delivered by Rev. William Ralph Hall of the department of young people's work, Philadelphia.

The congregation of Wells Memorial church, Brooklyn, is worshiping in the Bible school hall of the new building. The auditorium is not finished yet.

Team Work Helps Get Building

Westminster Church, Portland, Assured New Plant—Nearly 1,000 in Sunday School—Congregations Crowd Structures.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Westminster church, Rev. Henry Marcotte pastor, has just closed a special week of team work in an effort to add $25,000 to the building fund. The effort was successful and now the final contracts will be let for the completion of the entire plant. This will give Westminster one of the best equipments in the Northwest.

First church is making great efforts in its Sunday school work and they are meeting with success. On a recent Sabbath the attendance reached 938. If another Sabbath shows as many the school will have an old-fashioned Sunday school picnic. At the urgent request of members of the church Dr. Boyd is publishing his regular sermons. The first set of four has been issued recently and is proving a very acceptable contribution to the church literature. He is also giving a series of addresses at the Y. M. C. A. Saturday noons.

Hawthorne Park church, from which Rev. E. Nelson Allen recently resigned, will have Rev. Loren Grimes of Superior, Wis., as pastor by July 1.

Rose City Park church was the first to enter the Rose City portion of Portland, and it hopes to be the community church. It opened its doors to all professing Christians. The response of the community has been such as to compel enlargement immediately. An effort to raise $15,000 for the purpose has been successful, and soon the church will open its hospitable doors wider than ever. Pastor Seeley, his wife and a loyal corps of workers have the situation well in hand. There are M. E., Protestant Episcopal and Roman Catholic churches in Rose City Park.

Piedmont church is a wonder among our churches. It began, through the interest of Elder Quackenbush of First church, and other friends, in the tank house of the Piedmont Water Company. Then it built a chapel; then the church was organized; then the chapel had to be refitted, and now the plans are on foot for a building to cost about $35,000. Pastor Snyder is at Assembly this year and when he returns the work will be pushed forward as rapidly as possible.

Rev. Harry H. Pratt offered his resignation as pastor of Forbes church. But his people were able to convince presbytery that Mr. Pratt must not leave. He gracefully accepted the situation and will remain.

Rev. Robert N. McLean of Annabel church startled his people by announcing his determination to resign at the next meeting of Presbytery in June. Dr. Marshall has offered his resignation at Gregory Heights.

Charles W. Hays, D. D., pastor-evangelist and Sunday school missionary for Portland Presbytery, is giving special aid to Albany College this month in helping to fund the pledges for the $250,000 endowment lately secured.

Sunday School Conference for Negroes

A four-day conference with the twelve negro Sabbath school missionaries working in the southern states was recently held in Knoxville, Tenn., by Dr. Alexander Henry and Dr. E. Morris Ferguson of the Sabbath School Board. Missionaries had been assigned subjects and their papers were discussed by members of the conference. Popular evening meetings attracted a large attendance.

PROFITABLE CHURCH ENTERTAINMENT
A sure way to furnish real money-making entertainments.
Bausch and Lomb Balopticon
THE PERFECT STEREOPTICON
A mechanically and optically accurate stereopticon—projecting brilliant pictures from ordinary lantern slides. Can be arranged, also, for opaque objects such as photos, post cards, etc. Simple to operate—very durable in construction.
Model C Balopticon, $25
Opaque attachment, $30 up
Combined Balopticon for instant interchange, $80 up.
Write today for our circular, describing and illustrating different models of our line.
Bausch & Lomb Optical Co.
525 St. Paul St., ROCHESTER, N. Y.

KIMBALL PIPE ORGANS
Have been built in hundreds of the prominent churches throughout the United States
Every phase of organ building is given the most careful consideration. Correspondence invited.
W. W. KIMBALL COMPANY
Established 1857 :: CHICAGO

Professors, Teachers and Others
Join Archaeological and Geological Exploration Expedition on Horseback under the distinguished Geologist, Professor James Perrin Smith of Stanford University, from the Cliff-Dwellings in S. W. Colorado by Great Natural Bridges in S. E. Utah, thence down Colorado River and through Grand Canyon, Arizona—the expedition covering the region of the World's Greatest Natural Wonders, July 9 to August 23. For particulars and Reservations address R. R. Smith, Cortez, Colorado.

The Great Natural Bridges
in UTAH—the greatest in the world—OPEN TO VISITORS, men and women, in JULY and AUGUST. Travel by team. Complete arrangements for comfort and pleasure. Address W. R. LEWIS, Lewis, Colorado.

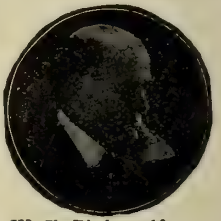
PULPITS, Platform Chairs, Sunday School Seats, Collection Plates, Church Pews, School Desks, Opera Chairs, Lodge and Bank Furniture, Office Desks.
Ask for Catalog by number only
C105 Church F'rnit're | School Desks S105
L105 Lodge Furniture | Opera Chairs O105
B105 Bank Furniture | Office Desks D105
E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO., CHICAGO

"The King of Song Books"



W. E. Biederwolf

Prof. E. O. Excell
The Great New Song Book
"Make Christ King"
Edited by PROF. E. O. EXCELL, DR. W. E BIEDERWOLF, and about fifty leading Evangelists.
REGARDLESS OF EXPENSE THEY TRIE TO MAKE THIS THE GREATEST HYMN BOOK PUBLISHE
For Church Services, Sunday Schools, Young People's Societies and Evangelistic Work
It contains most of the familiar old hymns most of the latest and choicest copyright hymn and a splendid selection of new hymns neve before published.
Nearly all the great hymn writers are repre sented by their best hymns, selected by men wh have tried them.
THIS BOOK has departments for Congregatio Choir, Children, Invitation Hymns, Social Ser vice Hymns, Missionary Hymns, etc. SEN 15 CENTS FOR SAMPLE COPY.
THE PRICES ARE THE LOWEST
The Glad Tidings Publishing Company
Lakeside Building - CHICAGO, ILL

Work for National Prohibition

Anti-Saloon League Announces Policy for the Next Congress—Dedicate Wilmette Church—City Mission Work Growing.

CHICAGO—National prohibition as the future policy of the Anti-Saloon League was announced by President F. P. Baker of the national organization at a dinner of local members of the league at Hotel La Salle Friday night. The success of the dry forces in passing the Webb bill over the veto of President Taft and the driving out of saloons in the District of Columbia gives encouragement to the national officers to hope for more extensive legislation. The temperance attitude of the President, vice-president, secretary of state, speaker of the house and other officials at Washington gives a combination which has never before obtained and preparations are being made to take full advantage of the situation. Congress at the next session will probably be asked to pass a national prohibition bill, although the form of the proposed legislation has not yet been suggested.

Rev. Filippo Grilli, formerly pastor of Ohio Street church, has been put in charge of the new work among the Italians on Taylor street. Rev. P. Fant takes his place at Ohio street. The kindergarten at Taylor street has an attendance of sixty and the attitude of the parents is much more friendly than a few months ago when the work started.

The new work among the Hollanders at Armitage mission is progressing rapidly. Nineteen have asked to be received into the church and the Sunday school is growing. Rev. Peter van Woerden is in charge under the Church Extension Board.

The new Persian mission built by Fourth church on the North side is practically completed and will be dedicated June 8.

ADOPT TRIBUTE TO DR. SHAW

A tribute to Dr. John Balcom Shaw was proposed by Dr. W. S. Plumer Bryan at the dinner which closed Presbyterian Day May 12 and was unanimously adopted. Dr. Shaw has filled a large place in the religious life of the city. There were 650 at the dinner, the rush for tickets toward evening threatening to swamp the caterer who had been told at 9 o'clock that there would be but 400 at dinner. The addresses at the gathering were of a high order.

A union meeting of ministers of the city at First M. E. church last Monday protested against the adoption by the legislature of the pending bill to legalize boxing.

Commissioners to General Assembly will report to presbytery at its regular meeting June 2.

Robert E. Ross of Fourth church was reelected president of the Chicago brotherhood at the annual meeting in Second church May 12. The address by Dr. S. S. Palmer of Columbus inspired the men to do more work the coming year.

The advertisement in The Continent of the Chicago Christian Industrial League has brought replies from many parts of the country asking how people at a distance may aid in the work and inquiring how it is carried on. It is possible that through the interest aroused in the local institution, Presbyterians in other large cities may imitate the work which has reached such a large measure of success here in a short time under the management of Rev. George A. Kilbey.

The Kaffir boys, who are drawing large audiences at "The World in Chicago," will sing at the meeting of the ministers next Monday morning.

Rev. F. A. Hosmer is the new president of the ministers' association, succeeding Dr. A. S. C. Clarke. Rev. M. F. Allbright is vice-president and Rev. R. D. Kearns secretary-treasurer.

WILL CONSECRATE NEW CHURCH

The new Wilmette church will be dedicated next Sunday at 3 o'clock. It is expected that Moderator Stone, pastor of Fourth church, will take part in the ceremonies, with Rev. David Hugh Jones of Evanston First church, Dr. E. P. Hill of the Church Extension Board and Rev. F. L. Selden, moderator of presbytery. The Sunday school rooms will be formally opened at 10:30 o'clock and in the evening there will be a special musical program.

Hyde Park church last Sunday rallied all members of the Sunday school for a welcome home to a missionary of the church in India—Elizabeth Cole Fleming, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Cole of Hyde Park church. There were 700 present. Next Tuesday the church will give a reception for Dr. and Mrs. A. F. Reischauer, representatives of the church at Tokyo.

Monday morning the ministers' association indorsed the local option law pending at Springfield.

Efforts will be made by the Chicago Christian Endeavorers to have this city named as the place for the next meeting of the international convention at the Los Angeles gathering to convene soon.

The men's club of South Park church will hold a mock trial June 2.

Need a New Church Bimonthly

Population of Los Angeles Increasing Rapidly—Church Extension Board Will Handle Problem—Church Forces Work at Polls.

LOS ANGELES—The new Church Extension Board of presbytery is attacking the problem of local home missions with optimistic vigor. Plans are laid and partly executed for securing $3,000 with which to pay the salary of the superintendent, who is yet to be chosen, and to meet the expenses of office and headquarters of the board which will be maintained in the business section of the city.

The problem of home missions, already great beyond the present ability of the presbytery to cope with it, is increasing by leaps and bounds. The population of the city is increasing at an estimated rate of 5,000 a month. According to the proportion of one Presbyterian church to every 10,000 of the population, there should be a new church organized every two months in the city alone. But the Presbytery of Los Angeles embraces four great counties, the city of San Diego and numerous other thriving cities and towns.

A vigorous protest against anti-Christian influences in the public schools crystallized in the form of an indorsement of the candidacy of five persons for positions on the board of education by the interdenominational ministerial association of the city. Four of the five were nominated to positions on the ticket at the recent primaries, and the church forces are confident of their election at the municipal election in June.

Recent changes of pastorates within the bounds of the presbytery leave vacant the important pulpits of Alhambra, Hollywood, Boyle Heights and San Pedro churches. The congregation of Alhambra church has called Edward Campbell, D. D., pastor of Los Angeles First church, but the latter congregation has signified its earnest desire to retain Dr. Campbell. A decision has not been reached.

The new church in the thriving town of Van Nuys, in the San Fernando valley, is rapidly nearing completion. It is classic in design and is built of white glazed pressed brick. The cost of the building will exceed $10,000.

Another Woman Trustee

The recent announcement in the news columns of the election of a woman as trustee of a New Jersey church brings to light another woman filling a similar office. The church at Corinth, N. Y., has had on its board of trustees Mrs. Jennie A. Jacobie for a number of years. After the death of her husband twenty-five years ago she was obliged to enter business life, and by industry and Christian integrity acquired a competence and is enjoying her means not only for herself but in the service of others. Mrs. Jacobie is also postmistress for her section of an extended village corporation, takes an interest in business affairs and is an ardent suffragist. By her good judgment and wisdom she has qualified herself for leadership in her church and with rare tact and energy has presided over the ladies' aid society for a number of years. No man or woman takes more interest in the affairs of church and state than she does. The pastor is Rev. Frederick Arthur Gates.

Still Another; Any More?

Dr. Anabel M. Stuart has been a member of the board of trustees of First church of Santa Rosa, Cal., for the past twenty years and chairman of that body during the past five or six years. The pastor is Rev. Willis G. White, and during the past year this church has contributed and used nearly $7,000.

Dr. Stuart, in common with the other women

THE
Christian Workers Magazine published by the MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE of Chicago is making a special summer subscription offer to new subscribers of

6 Months for 25c

(Good Only Until July 31)

Strong articles will be published on religious foes and fallacies, such as Romanism, Mormonism, Spiritism, New Thought, Millennial Dawnism and Socialism. Side by side with these articles will also be published some masterpieces of the faith written by men whose testimony has shaken the foundations of infidelity, and quickened the hope and solaced the hearts of the people of God hitherto.

Reports of lectures to be given at the Moody Bible Institute by Sir William Ramsay, the world renowned scientist and archaeologist, G. Campbell Morgan, D.D., the Bible expositor, and Dan Crawford, F. R. G. S., the greatest living Africa explorer and missionary, will also be published, besides the principal addresses to be given at the great Winona Bible Conference in August.

Subscriptions must be received early in the month to begin with the current number. Send money at once to

The Christian Workers Magazine
163 Institute Place, Chicago, Ill.

A MAN WHOSE NAME IS KNOWN to every Continent reader, recently wrote relative to LAKE FOREST ACADEMY:

"I want to tell you how much the Academy has done for our boy. The influence upon his character has been the very best. Under that influence he has developed high ideals, the best of principles, and a mature and settled attitude toward things, which is greatly to our satisfaction. You have developed in him a fondness for study, have taught him how to apply his mind, and steadily improved his physical condition. We feel ourselves deeply under obligation to you and the School."

A Boy's Summer

could nowhere be spent more profitably than at Camp Flambeau. This unique Camp in the northern woods of Wisconsin is under the direction of Lake Forest Academy masters.

For information relative to Lake Forest Academy and Camp Flambeau address Hugh Hotchkin, Headmaster, Lake Forest, Illinois.

Mysterious Tibet No Longer a Mystery

¶ Delightfully interesting and instructive lecture and set of stereopticon slides offered for the first time to the public.

¶ This elaborate set of slides prepared after much research, labor and expense. Illustrates vividly types of Tibetans; their homes and religious structures, and their curious customs and modes of dress.

FOR CHURCH ENTERTAINMENTS

¶ A splendid lecture for church or other public entertainment. Shows the great missionary need and opportunity in that very strange country.

The Miopticon

¶ If you have not secured a perfectly satisfactory stereopticon, write for information about THE MIOPTICON. Newest, neatest, handiest of lanterns. Can be used in any sized room or small hall up to 50 feet or more from screen. Can attach to ordinary incandescent socket.

Write today for full information about Tibetan lecture and our free booklet on the MIOPTICON.

McIntosh Stereopticon Company
421 Atlas Block :: Chicago, Ill.

of California, has been a qualified elector since 1911 and has never missed an opportunity to cast her ballot. She has been a subscriber to The Interior and The Continent since 1871.

Good Things in This Issue

Recent figures before Chicago Presbytery showed that about 10 per cent of the church membership attends the weekly devotional service. On page 728 of this issue is a report from San Francisco which shows that 15 per cent attend prayer meeting there. Figures of churches of all denominations on page 733 show that only 6 per cent attend prayer meeting at Cedar Rapids, Iowa. It will be interesting to compare these figures with the attendance at your own meeting. In this issue The Continent presents three articles on various vital phases of the prayer meeting problem, beginning page 712. Probably no better symposium of methods of improving this part of the church worship has appeared in equal compass. The articles will bear careful study.

Mention is made of some of the results of church advertising in Philadelphia on page 724. The stimulus to spread the work of the church by publicity is extending to all parts of the country.

In connection with the reports of the Atlanta meetings by editors of The Continent by mail and telegraph, read a report of a meeting of two Assemblies a quarter century ago, page 725.

School and College

William T. Ellis will deliver the annual address on alumni day at Davidson College May 27. On the following day will occur the inauguration of President-Elect William Joseph Martin.

Lenox College, Hopkinton, Iowa, has been making excellent progress and the agricultural department is finishing a good year. Plans have been made for a $30,000 gymnasium and new central heating plant, and work will begin as soon as funds are secured.

Carroll College observed May 1 as an exhibition day, giving the public on opportunity to inspect the institution. Elaborate May day festivities were features of the afternoon. In the evening the buildings were illuminated and the work of the various departments was exhibited. A program was given.

Work began May 7 on the new science hall, to be completed Sept. 1, at Frances Shimer School, Mount Carroll, Ill. It is 80 by 45 feet in size, two stories and basement, brick and stone. The first floor is given to home economics; the second floor to chemistry, physics, geology and biology. It will cost, furnished, over $19,000. Rev. Charles W. Gilkey, pastor of Hyde Park Baptist church, Chicago, will give the commencement address June 10. The graduates number twenty, from several states.

The idea that there are no longer opportunities for poor boys and girls to get through college is vigorously contradicted by the authorities of Oberlin College. In their own school they find among the students that only 7 per cent are wholly supported by their parents and friends, and even among the women, 35 per cent earn all or part of their college expenses. In common with other institutions of like character, Oberlin maintains self-help and employment bureaus for students with insufficient funds.

Seminary of Kentucky Closes Year

The session of 1912-13 of Kentucky Seminary, which closed last week, is regarded as one of the best the institution has enjoyed. This seminary is the result of the consolidation in 1901 of Danville and Louisville Seminaries. This year marks the sixtieth anniversary of the founding of Danville Seminary and the twentieth of Louisville Seminary. It also marks thirty years of teaching on the part of the president, Charles R. Hemphill, D. D., and forty years since his ordination. The exercises of the commencement season, May 4-6, were of unusual interest. The prospects for the next session of the seminary are most encouraging.

From Various Fields

Pennsylvania

Erie Churches Have Been Busy

Improvements costing $2,500 have recently been made by Central church, Dr. George Bailey pastor. A mortgage on the chapel has also been canceled.—The duplex envelope system at First church, Rev. Robert Clements pastor, largely increased the benevolences.—Income for current expenses of Park church was $700 ahead of outgo. Rev. S. H. Forrer has also stimulated the spiritual life of the church.—The pastor's aid society of Chestnut Street church has paid off the mortgage.—The congregation at Sanford church, Rev. T. W. Pearson pastor, bids fair to force soon the building of a larger structure.—Eastminster church is also talking of a new building.—The manse at Westminster church has been enlarged and the pastor's salary increased.

The pastor of Calvary church, Wyncote, William Barnes Lower, D. D., has had his salary raised. This church is supporting Calvary mission of East Germantown.

Hermon church, Frankford, Philadelphia, Rev. Harry H. Crawford pastor, recently received a large number of families. Special attention is being given to work among young people. A well equipped gymnasium affords training for four grades of young people every week. During the past year more than $19,000 has been expended on the renovation of the interior of the church plant, making it one of the most beautiful and well appointed churches in the city.

A conference on ministerial education was held in Market Square church, Harrisburg, April 30, under the auspices of the committee on education of Carlisle Presbytery. Dr. John E. Tuttle, York, and Dr. J. Ritchie Smith, E. E. Curtis and J. Leonard Hynson were the speakers. Some of the themes discussed: "Actual Conditions as to the Supply of Ministers," "The Church and the Home as Recruiting Stations and the Minister and Officers as Recruiting Agents for the Ministry" and "The Vital Relations of the Ministry to the Church." Sessions were held morning, afternoon and evening. All the Harrisburg churches closed their prayer meetings to attend the conference in the evening. The discussions were stimulating and informing, and the general impression was that it was a wise step in the solution of the problem of recruiting an adequate supply of students for the Christian ministry.

Illinois

About $1,000 has recently been spent on improvements to the church building at Mason City, Dr. Edwin L. Lord pastor.

All churches of Aledo combined May 7 in the services of ordination of Craig G. Whitsitt, who grew up in the local Presbyterian church. Mr. Whitsitt is a graduate of McCormick Seminary and will soon be installed pastor at Holdredge, Neb.

May 4 Argenta church celebrated its seventieth anniversary with an interesting program. Letters were read from Reverends N. M. Baker, J. S. Keener, W. H. Wilson and James Rayburn, who served the church in former days. This church has had three houses of worship and is now about to build a fourth. Rev. J. W. Elder is pastor.

Massachusetts

Fourth church, Boston, has raised money for a manse for its pastor, James Todd, D. D.

Rev. Robert Atkinson was installed pastor of First church, Haverhill, May 1, Reverends A. M. Paterson, James Craif, Mr. Lange and Dr. Van der Pyle taking part. The church has raised $3,700 for current expenses and toward extinguishing the mortgage on its house of worship.

New Jersey

A memorial window was unveiled to Mrs. Henry W. Alexander in the Presbyterian church at Seabright May 10. Mrs. Alexander, who spent her summers there, built the church. For twenty-five years she taught a Bible class in Fifth Avenue church, New York City. She was the mother of Dr. Maitland Alexander of

The World in Chicago

Thousands of people daily are looking with eagerness at the exhibits from scores of countries at the big missionary exposition in Chicago. Many natives, and missionaries from far off countries, explain the national characteristics. New interest in missions is being encouraged and the idea of volunteering for mission work is being born in many spectators.

The World in Dubuque

Representatives of twenty-one countries are studying at Dubuque German College and Seminary to be Christian Workers. Most of them will be missionaries in this country to their fellow countrymen. Quietly and earnestly this institution goes forward, growing constantly in number of students and in the interest of Presbyterians. A map which The Continent published several weeks ago showed the wide divergence of birth place of the students at Dubuque. Young men from Asia, from many nations of Europe, from Cuba, from Mexico, from Australia as well as from the United States compose the student body at Dubuque. Some of them have been persecuted for their faith and others have left their native land for the larger religious freedom of America. The story of what these men intend to do to help Christianize the United States ought to be known by every friend of education. If you already know of our work perhaps you can send us the name of someone who would like to be informed about it. Address Dubuque German College and Seminary, Dr. C. M. Steffens, President, Dubuque, Iowa.

EDUCATIONAL

Iowa

Oskaloosa College

Correspondence courses to usual degrees in liberal arts, divinity, normal, and graduate. Courses and methods standard. Tuition reasonable. Especially interesting to clergymen unable to attend in residence. Send for catalogue. Oskaloosa College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

Pittsburg and of Charles B. Alexander, a trustee of Fifth Avenue church.

Dr. Charles Townsend of First church, Orange, celebrated on May 4 the eighteenth anniversary of his Orange pastorate and the thirtieth anniversary of his entrance into the ministry.

Bloomfield Theological Seminary in the fall will receive Polish students, opening a Polish department. It does this on the request of Rev. Paul Fox, in charge of the Presbyterian missionary work among Poles.

Dr. Robert Scott Inglis of Third church, Newark, N. J., has been appointed chairman of a committee of the directors of Princeton Theological Seminary to get a successor to Dr. Francis L. Patton. The other members are Dr. William L. McEwan of Pittsburg, Dr. John Fox of New York, Mr. Matthews of Philadelphia and Elisha Perkins of Baltimore. Among those being discussed for the place are Dr. Wallace Radcliffe of Washington, D. C.; Dr. Ethelbert Warfield, president of Lafayette College; Dr. J. Ross Stevenson of Baltimore, Dr. John R. Davies of Philadelphia, Professor Charles R. Erdman of Princeton and Dr. Maitland Alexander of Pittsburg.

Ohio

Dr. Halsey Called to Cincinnati

Seventh church, on East Walnut Hills, Cincinnati, whose pulpit has been vacant over a year, has extended a call to Dr. Jeffrey Halsey of Long island. Dr. Halsey was for three years an associate of Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, the missionary to Labrador. Seventh church was the scene of the early clerical labors of Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston. Rev. Thomas Knox was the last pastor.

Four commanderies of Knights Templar marched from their asylums to old First church on the night of Ascension Day, where they observed the feast day by divine service. Sir Knight William L. Spiegel is pastor of the church, but the sermon was delivered by Sir Knight and Rev. Walter W. Kent of Pleasant Ridge. The sanctuary was packed.

Norwood chapter of the Presbyterian Brotherhood at its annual dinner elected a new official board, with Harry McBride as president. The installation occurred at the monthly Sabbath night May service, at which Dr. Charles William Dabney of the University of Cincinnati talked on "The Trend of Brotherhood."

Norwood's famed Sunshine girls made their annual visit to the Philatheans at Evanston recently. The room was packed and the visitors were decked with little silk bows of their class colors—yellow and white.

Early in June the union of the Presbyterian brotherhood in Cincinnati will hold its annual reunion and dinner.

Rev. Frank Foster, who was a missionary in Africa for five years, has been telling "The Story of David Livingstone" at various Presbyterian churches hereabouts.

REN MULFORD, JR.

A committee of Cincinnati pastors is conducting negotiations with Rev. W. A. Sunday for a series of meetings in Cincinnati.

Two thousand delegates are expected at Lima June 24-27 at the annual convention of the Christian Endeavor Union. There are 160,000 young people affiliated with the various societies in twenty-six denominations in the state. Percy Foster of Washington will have charge of the music and the speakers will include William Shaw, Dr. Ira Landrith and Dr. Howard B. Grose. The missionary exhibit will be modeled after "The World in Chicago."

New York

During the year that Dewey Avenue church, Rochester, has been in operation the membership has nearly doubled, being now 212. Rev. George H. Fickes is pastor.

A reception was recently held in First church, Saratoga Springs, Rev. T. A. Macdonald pastor, in honor of the 103 members added to the church during the year. This record has not been approached since 1840.

Madison Avenue church, Albany, celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary Sunday, May 11. President Charles Alexander Richmond of Union University preached in the morning and Rev. William H. Decker of Nanticoke, Pa., the first pastor of the church, occupied the pulpit in the evening. Dr. Richmond was pastor of the church for a number of years previous to his appointment to the presidency of Union College.

J. Woodman Babbitt was ordained minister and installed pastor of Calvary church, Newburg, the evening of May 14. Dr. David R. Frazer of Short Hills, N. J., for many years his pastor, preached the sermon.

Rev. George Martin Gordon of Auburn Theological Seminary was installed pastor of Emmanuel church, Amsterdam, May 9. He succeeds Dr. Putnam Cady, now of Upper Montclair, N. J. President Stewart of Auburn preached the installation sermon.

First church, Binghamton, Rev. John J. Lawrence pastor, which has just celebrated its fiftieth anniversary, has opened a mission in the heart of the Italian settlement and has found a large field for work. The younger people of the congregation are cooperating heartily.

Michigan

New Church in Detroit

Bethany church, with one of the finest locations of any church of any denomination in Detroit, has decided that the time is about ripe to strike for a larger church building to accommodate the steadily growing congregations. Dr. James T. Black is the pastor, and on Sunday, May 11, he placed the matter before the congregation and had the pleasure of seeing $28,000 pledged in a short time. J. W. Powell of Buffalo, N. Y., is assisting the pastor in the building fund campaign.

Dr. Joseph A. Vance so thoroughly stirred the people of Detroit in his pleas for a clean city that his reputation in that direction has gone out into the state. He had pledged himself to deliver addresses in some of the smaller cities in the interests of civic reform, and declined to be a commissioner to General Assembly because of conflicting dates.

Dr. James M. Barkley's ever loyal congregation after his recent bereavement insisted upon his going away for a vacation to his native state, North Carolina, and incidentally visiting the Assemblies at Atlanta.

Detroit Presbytery's annual report shows the largest additions to membership and the largest gifts to home and foreign missions in the history of presbytery. If all of the plans for new buildings are realized the coming year will surpass all previous records.

Mothers' Day was observed by Deckerville church, H. A. Simpson pastor. Automobiles conveyed all the aged and infirm to and from the church and a committee at the church door presented each comer with a white carnation.

Rev. E. A. Junkin was installed pastor of Alpena church April 29 following a dinner at the church. Among those assisting in the services were Reverends T. A. Anderson and C. E. Marvin of Bay City and C. M. Boyce of Harrisville.

Wisconsin

The men's club of Eau Claire church enrolls 100 and holds interesting meetings in the basement room.

The Dodge County Sunday School Association held an interesting meeting at First church, Beaver Dam, April 25 and 26.

The Sunday school at Gresham, Shawano county, with an enrollment of fifty-two, and ladies' aid society have asked to have a church organized.

On Friday evening, April 25, Rev. Leo Reid Burrows was installed pastor of Memorial church, Appleton. Reverends John Logan Marquis, Gerrit Verkuyl, Ph. D.; D. J. Williams of Oshkosh and L. P. Peeks took part.

Rev. L. K. Grimes of Hammond Avenue church, Superior, who has accepted a call to Hawthorne Park church, Portland, Ore., has been in his present pastorate about seven years. The present magnificent church building has been erected during his term of service and the membership has been greatly increased.

The church in Stonebank is small and there was serious talk of letting go and giving up, but the good minister and his elder held on and kept up the Sunday school. Now there are regular services, several members added and last week the eldest son of Rev. Harvey Holt graduated from McCormick Seminary and

GREAT REVIVAL HYMNS

"BILLY" SUNDAY says:

"Song has always played an important part in every effort to set the world Godward. I consider the best Gospel song book that has been published for years."

Great Revival Hymns

Over 400,000 Sold

This book is used exclusively in the "Billy" Sunday evangelistic campaigns. GREAT REVIVAL HYMNS will arouse enthusiasm in your various church services. We will send you a copy, postpaid, on approval, together with quantity prices. "TRY IT." Our complete catalog, including Songs for Men, Temperance Songs, Chorus Collection, Octavo Solos, Duets, etc., sent on request. Also learn how to obtain our new publications at half price. Great Revival Hymns No. 2 will soon be ready.

THE RODEHEAVER COMPANY
12-14 W. Washington St., :: Chicago

PRESBYTERIAN TRAINING SCHOOL
of Chicago
for Christian Workers
Organized in 1908 by the Board of Church Extension of the Presbytery of Chicago

Pagan religions have their goddesses as well as gods.

The Roman Church has the Holy Mother in the foreground of her system.

Our Protestant Church has the Father and the Son in the foreground and is daily realizing more fully that she herself, as the Bride of Christ, is to "mother" the peoples of the world.

Her heart still burns with holy zeal to "go into all the world and preach," but now, as never before, she is moved by a passion to "mother all peoples." Every physical, mental and spiritual need of humanity has in it a challenge to her mother-heart, and in His name, and under His guidance, she is seeking to discharge her duty.

This extension of her field demands enlargement of her directing force. The training of such a force is one of the tasks for which The Presbyterian Training School was established. Women, especially college graduates, inclined to such service are urged to correspond with the School.

Address H. B. McAFEE, Director
210 East 50th Street
Chicago, Ill.

18,000 CHURCHES USE THE THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

Noiseless, dust-proof, self-collecting, saves ¼ cost other services. Uses shallow glass—no tipping of head. Our SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER makes purchase easy. Outfits on trial—state number of communicants.
Thomas Communion Service Co., Box I, Lima, Ohio.

will enter a most important missionary work among the Hungarians in this county.

Preaching service and Sunday school were held for the first time May 11 in a remodeled building which the people at Haugen obtained when the school board refused the use of the schoolhouse for Sunday school work. The school was organized some time ago by Rev. E. Iverson, missionary. Mr. Iverson has three other mission schools, where the gift of an organ would add greatly to the enjoyment of the services.

Iowa

Many Stay at Home in Cedar Rapids

Figures recently compiled concerning church attendance of various denominations and reported at the Cedar Rapids ministers' meeting show that about 42 per cent of the membership attend morning service, although on Easter fourteen churches had an average of 50 per cent of the membership present. The evening attendance varies from 24 to 45 per cent. Two tests on different dates, first with nine churches and then with fifteen, showed that only 6 per cent of the membership attend the Wednesday evening prayer meeting.

Although only three persons gave more than 5 cents per week to missions during the last year, the congregation of Olivet church, Rev. E. Winslow Brown pastor, raised over $300 by systematic saving, considerably more than ever before for the same purpose.

Attendance at Battle Creek church, Dr. W. H. McEwen pastor, is nearly as large as the membership.

The corner stone of the new church at Storm Lake was laid recently. Dr. E. E. Hastings of Fort Dodge delivered the principal address.

Although 100 of the 140 voters in Blairstown are said not to go to church, the congregation there under Rev. Russell H. McCullough is progressing.

The benevolences of Wilton Junction church have had a steady growth and an addition has recently been made to the salary of Rev. M. E. Lumbar, pastor.

Mothers' Day was observed in Marion church by the pastor, Dr. C. F. Ensign, who read the names of the eight mothers who have died since May 1, 1912. He then asked all to assist in the erection of a white monument in their memory by lifting a hand with a white handkerchief over it while he led in a brief prayer.

Iowa churches were greatly interested in the construction of a recently dedicated monument in Sioux City in honor of the work of pioneer home missionaries headed by Dr. Sheldon Jackson. The memorial bears a bronze medallion of Dr. Jackson and a tablet with the facts of his share in founding a large number of churches and home mission stations in Iowa and farther west along the line of the Union Pacific railroad.

South Dakota

Thomas Bandy, elder of Volga church since its organization in his house thirty-four years ago, died April 28, age 87. He had been really the founder of the church of Jordan, Minn., previously. He is survived by his wife, after fifty-nine years of married life, and by ten children, twenty-six grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

Rev. Kersey Jones Cardy, who went to Flandreau from Nebraska last November, was installed pastor May 7. Rev. Hubert Ketelle of Huron, Dr. C. H. French of Huron College and Rev. Charles R. Miller of Woonsocket took part. Improvements on the manse have been made by the ladies of the church this spring.

Asks $175,000 for Flooded Churches

The task of raising $175,000 to put Presbyterian churches in Dayton Presbytery in proper condition for use following the flood has been intrusted to a special committee, of which Dr. John Clark Hill of Springfield, Ohio, is chairman. The treasurer is John S. Crowell, Springfield, Ohio, to whom checks should be made payable. Appeals issued by this committee show the great loss not only to the churches themselves but to the homes and the business institutions of the members of the congregation. The people of these stricken towns would greatly appreciate assistance at this time.

Presbyterian Quadrilateral at Atlanta

(Continued from page 711)

who might have been expected to look upon the occasion with an appraising professional eye to break down in tears. The fellowship, the realization of the simple, elemental, heart-basis upon which these far-gathered disciples met, the felt presence of the Master of the feast—these were reasons why that communion service was a deep spiritual experience in hundreds of lives.

NO VOTES AGAINST UNION

But Both Assemblies Understand That the Action Is Not in Any Wise Ultimately Binding.

The joint committee which for a year had been working to elaborate a basis of organic union between the United Presbyterian and Southern Presbyterian denominations arranged an astute and somewhat dramatic program for the introduction of their report into the two legislative bodies to which they were responsible. It was agreed that both Assemblies should take up the matter simultaneously at 10 o'clock on Saturday morning. And the response in both places was so fervent that the effect hoped for by the committees was heightened in each church into a scene memorably intense.

There is undeniable opposition to the union in both denominations—slight in comparison to the sentiment favorable, but sufficient to be taken account of. And among such opponents there was a dread lest the proximity of the two bodies should be seized upon to create psychological conditions under which the union would be railroaded through. But the chairmen offering the report—Dr. J. K. McClurkin of Pittsburg in the United Assembly; Dr. R. C. Reed of Columbia, S. C., in the Southern—disarmed opposition in the outset by stating first of all that the joint committee recommended no action whatever on their report for the lapse of a year. Through that year the terms of union are to "lie on the table," while discussion in general and in detail will be encouraged in every possible way throughout both communions. Then in 1914 the basis proposed for the merger will be taken up again, and if the majority approves in both Assemblies of that year, it will be "overtured down" to the presbyteries. The fairness of all this dispelled instantly the fear of "railroading."

The "suggested basis of union" recognizes the Westminster Standards held in identical form by both churches and pledges that "no one shall be authorized to teach or preach in the united church who cannot give an unqualified assent to the doctrinal system taught in those standards." Additional paragraphs are built up on this to give special stress to doctrines of the integrity of Scripture, the full doctrine of the Trinity, the dominion of the risen Christ, the virgin birth, the atonement and the Holy Spirit. The "spirituality of the church" is defined with a disclaimer denying that this implies that the church owes no duty to civil society.

The name chosen for the conjoined denomination is "United Presbyterian Church." The Southern book of church order is to be retained.

How the Psalm-Singing Problem Is Handled

The one spot of real difficulty in this harmonization is the question of psalm singing. This report faces the difference squarely. It defines the United Presbyterian position as "holding the book of psalms to be the perfect and divinely accredited manual of praise, and as such to be used in worship to the exclusion of all devotional compositions of uninspired persons." The Southern Church, on the other hand, believes that "the psalms of Scripture were designed for permanent use in the church and should have a large place in Christian worship, yet holds that other compositions in harmony with the teaching of Scripture may with propriety and profit be used in congregational singing."

For the solution of this difference the report offered the following proposal and joint declaration:

"We believe that the psalter of the Bible, the psalms of David, is an inspired manual of praise and that the Spirit of God indicted these songs to be used in the worship of the people of God to the end of time. The united church will, therefore, take immediate steps to introduce to all its congregations, by indorsing and recommending, the psalms of the Bible in the best metrical version as a divinely accredited book of praise. But while strongly commending the use of the psalms, it is agreed that each church in our respective synods shall be allowed in the matter of congregational singing the same liberty which it now enjoys."

Of course there is nothing here to balk Southern Presbyterians, but for "dyed-in-the-wool" United Presbyterians there was a degree of unprecedented liberty here conceded. But when Dr. McClurkin had explained the spirit in which the committee had done its work, there was not a voice raised in objection. At the moment the chairman finished his address word came in that the Southern Presbyterians had accepted the report unanimously and without debate, and the United Assembly almost leaped to the privilege of doing identically the same. And when the unanimity and significance of the action was realized, the devout psalm singing spontaneously broke forth in the last stanza of Psalm 72—which is the United Presbyterian equivalent of "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow." No one thought union yet assured, but in both Assemblies it was with a grateful uplift felt that the first stage of the march toward union had been accomplished more prosperously than could have been anticipated.

STREET PREACHING INAUGURATED

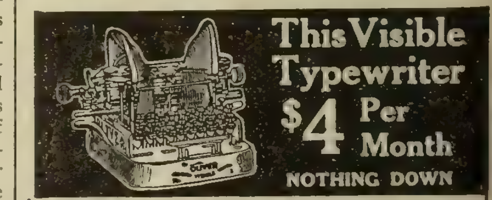
Innovation in Evangelistic Concerns Coincident with the Committee's New Status

The evangelistic committee of the Assembly U. S. A. came in this 1913 session to an epoch of recognition and approval more substantial than many more fervid and florid indorsements of years past. The Assembly voted to make the committee permanent, and instead of appointing its members for just a year ahead, as at each of the last dozen Assemblies, the commissioners unanimously agreed to name members hereafter for three years in three rotary classes.

Under earlier conditions this establishment of the committee on a foundation practically equivalent to a board would have awakened great uneasiness. But after the last few years of quiet, hard-working administration under Chairman Huston and Secretary Mahy the denomination's confidence in the committee's methods obviates protest against the change. The Assembly made not the slightest objections to this radical new departure, and readily agreed also to recommend the evangelistic committee to the benevolence of the churches.

The Atlanta occasion marked also a new departure for the committee in actually attempting evangelistic work in the Assembly city during Assembly week. In this the committee joined hands with the other three denominations interested in the Atlanta "pan-Presbyterian" conclave, just as it had gathered them all into the evangelistic conference held so effectively the day before Assembly met. The scheme in fact was put directly under the charge of the Atlanta arrangements committee in order that there should attach to it no semblance of denominationalism.

This feature of friendly Christian service to the city of Atlanta began with a great men's mass meeting on Sunday afternoon, when Presi-



FREE TRIAL—Agents' Prices

We put the best typewriter in the world right in your home or office. Shipped on approval. Use it without charge. If you want to keep it, send us $4 a month. You get the same value as though you paid $100 for this No. 3 Visible Oliver machine. Buying from us saves the agency profits others have paid. Our booklet is worth sending for because it tells you how to save a lot of money. It's FREE. Tell us where to send your copy. (172)

Typewriters Distributing Syndicate
166, G78 N. Michigan Blvd. Chicago, Ill.

DON'T THROW AWAY YOUR DISCARDED Furniture, Clothing, Magazines, Papers, etc. YOU can do great good by sending them to the Chicago Christian Industrial League, helping the church to find work for the idle, to shelter the homeless, to feed the hungry and to preach the gospel to the men of the down town streets. Over 1,000 men helped annually. Every little counts. Send a card to GEORGE A. KILBEY, 12 East 12th Street, Chicago, Ill.

dent John Willis Baer made the evangelistic appeal and Secretary Mahy conducted the after-meeting. Then on Monday began a series of noon meetings in the Grand theater, with Dr. W. E. Biederwolf, the widely known Presbyterian evangelist, preaching with characteristic power, and his own quartet supporting him in song. Twenty noon shop meetings were meanwhile set going in outlying parts of the city. And in the early evening hours at four points along the city streets, for which the mayor's permission was given, Presbyterian preachers appeared to proclaim the gospel in the open air. Mel Trotter and Jonathan C. Day were among the preachers thus standing at the curb of main thoroughfares, and the Tusculum College double quartet joined forces with the Biederwolf quartet to tell the gospel message in song.

This was something absolutely new in the history of Presbyterian Assemblies; no mayor ever before issued new permits for street preaching while Presbyterian Assembly commissioners were in his town.

BRIEF STATEMENT FOR SOUTHERN CHURCH

Chairman of Committee Refuses to Have Anything to Do with Committee Assigned Task

The commotion caused in the U. S. General Assembly last year when a Texan delegate denounced the Westminster Confession of Faith as a hindrance to bringing the people of his region into the Presbyterian fellowship was described in The Continent at the time. Of course the Assembly repudiated all thought of disturbing the confession, but the Texan's speech did result in the appointment of a committee to draft "a brief popular statement of the belief of the Presbyterian Church"—a statement which could be expected to be more comprehensible to untheological minds than the seventeenth century terminology of the confession itself.

The presentation of the report of the committee was one of the earliest items of business in the Assembly in North Avenue church, but at this writing the material of the report has not been dealt with. Oddly enough the committee's work came in without the signature of its chairman—Professor R. A. Webb of Louisville. He in fact would have nothing at all to do even with the preliminary efforts of his committee, saying that no adequate statement of Presbyterian doctrine could be "brief," and as for calling it "popular," he was unwilling by contrast to imply that the Westminster Confession is unpopular. Only one other member of the committee, however, stood with the chairman, and the other ten members, with ex-Governor M. F. Ansel of South Carolina in the lead, went ahead to draft a doctrinal summary which last week they submitted for Assembly's approbation.

The document, consisting of fifteen articles, is about the length of the "brief statement" adopted in the U. S. A. Church ten years ago. There seems, however, to be indicated in it a studied attempt to avoid the language of this prototype. On those points where, historically considered, Calvinism has endured the greatest calumny this new statement is framed to avoid criticism. In regard to election the thought of reprobation is carefully excluded by the interestingly worded observation: "God's electing grace has peopled heaven with a multitude no man can number and has never sent one soul to hell." In another paragraph the phrase, "Not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance," is given emphatic place side by side with the quotation "God is love."

On the long debated question of "nonelect infants" the new report is unequivocal: "All who die in infancy are regenerated and saved by Christ." The most remarkable feature about the whole document is the omission, doubtless by oversight, of all allusion to the virgin birth of Christ. This subject is as completely relegated to silence here as in the epistles of Paul. As before observed, no disposition of the report had been undertaken when these lines were penned.

WAR ANIMOSITIES FORGOTTEN

Atlanta Confederate Veterans Extend Particular Hospitality to Men Who Burned Their City

The people of Atlanta no longer have any aching heartstrings exposed to the memories of fifty years ago. Ire no longer rises at the remembrance of the flames which Sherman kindled and which laid their city even with the dust. In busy and buoyant modern Atlanta—so unlike Atlanta of 1864—there seem no points of identity on which memory's chain of connection between that day and this may hang. Recollection swings, a mere chord of dream, over a chasm that no sense of reality appears to cross. Even the men who experienced it all—who in person or property were sufferers from battle and conflagration—appear today to recall the cataclysm only impersonally as though it were an item from the history of an earlier age or a vague reminiscence from some former incarnation.

They can even make jest of it—perhaps speak oftener of the event in jest than in earnest. Thus at the first great Auditorium meeting J. K. Orr, the tireless chairman of Atlanta's committee of arrangements for the Assemblies, remarked with a wit to which his auditors responded vociferously: "Fifty years ago this city of ours sat in sackcloth and ashes; we had to scrape around as best we could ourselves for the sackcloth, but the ashes were generously furnished to us by General Sherman."

But there was no mirth—only a stir of profound sentiment, moving strong men to tears—when before each of the Assemblies there appeared a messenger from the local camp of Confederate Veterans, inviting, first all their Confederate comrades from among the commissioners to attend camp on Monday night—and there were found a considerable number of such comrades in even the U. S. A. Assembly—and secondly, begging to be their guests on that occasion all the survivors of the armies against which they fought fifty years ago. And to make the proportions of this generosity more remarkable than all else, it was explicitly said in these invitations that most welcome of all to the hospitality of the camp would be any commissioners who as federal soldiers had battled their way into Atlanta with Sherman in 1864.

The invitation in the U. S. A. Assembly was recognized by the singing of "America" and a few melting moments of patriotic love feast.

SOCIAL SERVICE MASS MEETING

Tremendous Affair Saturday Night—Services of Sunday—Intermediate Catechism Adopted

The social service mass meeting in the Auditorium on Saturday night was a tremendous affair, with speeches by Rev. Charles Stelzle of the Home Board of the U. S. A. Church; Marion Jackson, the attorney who has helped to free the city of Atlanta from vice, and Dr. J. A. Macdonald, the Toronto editor. The latter surpassed himself with an eloquent appeal for the church aggressive in evangelism and civic righteousness.

Sunday was filled with many services. Moderator Stone preached in Harris Street Presbyterian church and Dr. Maitland Alexander in the Baptist Tabernacle. The mass meetings on the brotherhood, education, Sabbath observance and country life were very successful.

At the Monday morning session of the U. S. A. Assembly the new intermediate catechism was adopted, with only half a dozen dissenting votes.

Pre-Assembly Conference of the Theological Seminaries

The usual pre-Assembly conference of the theological seminaries reporting to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church U. S. A. was held on May 14 in Central Congregational church. Nine of the twelve seminaries were represented—Princeton by W. L. McEwen, D. D., of the board of directors; Western by Professor James H. Snowden, D. D.; Lane by President William McKibbin, D. D.; the Theological Seminary of Kentucky by Professors Henry E. Dosker, D. D., and Edward L. Warren, D. D.; McCormick by Professor Augustus S. Carrier, D. D.; San Francisco by President Warren H. Landon, D. D., and Professor Thomas V. Moore, D. D.; Dubuque German College and Seminary by Elmer A. Best of the board of directors; Lincoln University theological department by Professor George Johnson, Ph. D., and Biddle University theological department by President H. L. McCrorey, D. D. The three seminaries unrepresented were Auburn, Omaha and the German Theological School of Newark, N. J. President E. L. Hood, D. D., of Atlanta Seminary; President C. H. Haines, D. D., and Professor G. H. Trevor, D. D., of Gammon Seminary were invited to sit as corresponding members.

Farm Mortgage Loans secured by highly improved agricultural lands are the best form of investment for Lawyers, Administrators of Estates, Holders of Trust Funds, Retired Capitalists, Business Men, Ministers, Widows or Orphans—the large or the small investors.

EVERY SAFEGUARD ADOPTED Safety of principal and interest are our first consideration. We take no chances. Everything must be right. Every loan we make is protected by security valued at over double amount of mortgage. We make our own valuation and examine and pass on all title papers.

MANY YEARS' EXPERIENCE For over 25 years we have been loaning money successfully on improved real estate. This long period of experience places us in a particularly advantageous position for the selection of the best offerings at the most favorable rates of interest.

LOAN OUR OWN MONEY We unhesitatingly recommend to you any security we offer. We first loan our own money to the borrower and only after the most careful investigation of himself personally and of his property. We then sell the mortgage to the investor and reinvest our money in additional high class loans.

NO TROUBLE NO WORRY After your funds are turned over to us you have no further concern about the investment. We handle all details such as payment of taxes and insurance premiums, collection and remittance of interest and principal, etc.

OUR REAL ESTATE NOTES As a convenient form of security for the man or woman of small means, we offer Real Estates Notes in denominations of $200 and up, yielding 6%. These are secured by our First Farm Mortgages and are just as safe. To each note is attached a series of coupons payable, as they fall due, at our offices.

A FEW OF OUR REFERENCES Write to any of the following: Gov. Herbert S. Hadley, Jefferson City, Mo.; Ex-Governor J. W. Folk, St. Louis, Mo.; Dr. A. Ross Hill, President Missouri University, Columbia, Mo.; Fred O. Elson, Cashier National Bank of Unionville, Unionville, Mo.; S. A. McBurney, Manager of Agencies, Travelers Insurance Co., Hartford, Conn.; George S. Hooker, Watertown, N. Y.

Write for description in detail of our Real Estates Notes.

BEVERLY H. BONFOEY
Unionville, :: Missouri

The topics for discussion were "The More Perfect Coordination of the Seminary Curriculum and Preparatory Studies" and "The Requirements for Securing the Degree of B. D." In regard to the first topic, it was felt that, owing to the wide range of choice offered by the elective system in the colleges, it would be useful to draw up a list of subjects which candidates for the ministry ought to pursue during their preseminary course. It was therefore resolved to recommend to the various seminaries to impress—in their annual catalogues—upon the candidates for the ministry the importance of their electing in their respective colleges full courses in Latin, Greek, philosophy (including introduction to philosophy, psychology, logic and ethics), history, rhetoric, English literature and at least one physical science.

The discussion concerning the requirements for the degree of B. D. revealed the need of standardization. As at present given it may mean anything from a high degree of excellence in the usual three years' course to an extra year of theological study.

Professor Carrier was elected president and Professor Johnson secretary. A committee consisting of President McKibbin, President Landon and Professor Dosker was appointed to prepare a statement relative to preparatory studies for transmission to the seminaries and also to prepare a program and arrange for the next meeting.

This annual conference is significant in that it means closer relationship of the seminaries in the common work. It is increasingly evident that the problems presented are similar and that their solution means mutual consideration. The result can only be greater efficiency in the practical preparation of the ministers of the church.

Those who are interested in the whole broad question should procure "Present Standards of Higher Education in the United States," United States bureau of education bulletin No. 4, 1913, which may be obtained from the department at Washington. Chapters 1 and 2 on the "Present Standards of Liberal Arts Colleges" and "Present Standards of Theological Schools" should be carefully read by every chairman of a presbyterial committee on education and by everyone who has the task of practically advising candidates for the ministry. G. J.

Assembly Brevities

—The first interchange of official courtesies among the Assemblies attended the visit of Dr. T. V. Moore of San Francisco to the Southern Assembly as fraternal delegate from the big brother body sitting in the Baptist Tabernacle. He was received with enthusiasm, and arrangements were voted for an early return of the call.

—It came out as a highly interesting sidelight that Dr. John Timothy Stone was never a member of any General Assembly until the one of which he was chosen moderator. When previously elected he had always given place to his alternate, and only accepted his election this time because he wanted to secure the Assembly of 1914 for his new church in Chicago, and he had to come to Atlanta for that.

—The commissioners of all three Assemblies meeting in Atlanta were entertained on Saturday afternoon at an open air reception under the campus trees of Agnes Scott College in Decatur, a suburb six miles out from the center of Atlanta. Commissioners were greatly impressed with the proportions and dignity of this remarkable institution, which, strangers were surprised to learn, ranks scholastically in the very first grade of women's colleges in the United States. It is a Presbyterian college, conducted, however, on the broadest lines of nonsectarian Christianity. Dr. F. H. Taines is president.

—Dr. J. A. Macdonald of Toronto not only spoke at two of the greatest evening meetings in the Auditorium but visited in the daytime each of the three Assemblies. At each he was asked for an address and made response in his usual ringing style, urging the churches to accept the responsibility involved in the consciousness that they more than any other social agency must determine the fate of the republic, because they most deeply affect the quality of the republic's citizenship. Dr. Macdonald also praised church union by citing Canada's example, but diplomatically stopped short of recommending union to the churches involved in the Atlanta "quadrilateral."

—Judge McKenzie Cleland, the Chicago reformer in penology, is a United Presbyterian elder and a member of Assembly in Atlanta. After an impassioned speech on his specialty Judge Cleland secured the appointment of an ad interim committee to study whether current methods of punishing men for crime accord with the spirit and teachings of Jesus Christ.

—Dr. Thornwell Jacobs, the brilliant young editor of The Westminster Magazine of Atlanta, made a unique addition to the usual roster of attendant events incidental to Assembly by entertaining at luncheon in the Capital City Club the visiting church editors and other correspondents reporting for the Assembly. Dr. Jacobs was supported by his aged father, Dr. William Jacobs of Clinton, S. C., head of the Thornwell orphanage.

—The United Presbyterian Assembly following the lead of its U. S. A. compeer provided for a very material increase in the funds which shall be available henceforth for ministerial relief in that denomination. While this proposal was under discussion some commissioner suggested that ministers would need less financial aid in their old age if they were paid bigger salaries in active service. This led to the appointment of a special committee instructed to consider whether there is not some means of stimulating general increase of pastoral salaries among United Presbyterian congregations.

Landrith Honored by Y. M. C. A.

Is Elected to Preside at International Convention — Ten Year Growth Surprising — Mott and Speer Speak.

In the face of cheerless conditions—a street car strike and paralyzed trolley traffic—Cincinnati gave a smiling welcome to the delegates who gathered by thousands last week to attend the thirty-eighth international convention of the Y. M. C. A.'s.

Cincinnati was crowded with distinguished visitors prominent in business life. When Dr. Ira Landrith of Tennessee was chosen president of the convention there were delegates who recalled another national call that came to the educator in the same hall when he was chosen secretary of the Presbyterian Brotherhood in America. J. W. Parker of Illinois was elected secretary of the convention. Incidental to the gathering an exposition of appliances and modern equipment for service quite filled the south wing of the edifice.

President D. B. Meacham of the Cincinnati association voiced the official welcome; Rev. Samuel Tyler spoke for the churches and Vice-Mayor Simeon M. Johnson for the city. The response was delivered by Alfred E. Marling of New York and then George Sherwood Eddy of New York gave the first stirring message of the convention.

The statistical figures that stared the delegates in the face as they were strung across the front of the stage were cheerful. During the past ten years Bible study classes have increased from 1,793 to 7,285 and the enrollment went up from 31,385 to 103,600. Bible class teachers ran from 1,429 to 3,914. Thus has the Christian service idea been emphasized and this was the keynote which rang clear in every session and every message.

Robert E. Speer on opening night spoke on the subject "The Gospel and Only the Gospel." F. W. Ayer of Philadelphia, Professor Jeremiah W. Jenks of New York, Dr. Walter Rauschenbusch of Rochester, Dr. J. R. Hawkins of Washington were all on early programs.

"The Outlook in the Foreign Field" brought splendid stories and happy forecasts from John R. Mott, Fletcher S. Brockman, secretary for China; Chenting Wang of Shanghai, E. C. Carter of India and C. J. Ewald, traveling secretary for South America.

There were numerous dinners and luncheons, including a great gathering at the Business Men's Club to discuss boys' work. The great climax of convention enthusiasm came in the Sunday afternoon men's meeting at Music hall, addressed by Mr. Eddy, and the boys' mass meeting at the Emery Auditorium, which was addressed by James A. Whitmore of New York and others. REN MULFORD, JR.

At a recent meeting of student government at Wilson College Florence Heald, Tulsa, Okla., was elected president for next year.

6% A NON-FLUCTUATING BOND INVESTMENT

¶ Not affected by "money market manipulations; because behind them is the most stable security in the world—select, improved, income-producing New York City real estate.

¶ Principal and interest secured by a Trust Mortgage very comprehensive in its terms and held by a Trust Company of the highest standing.

¶ Write today for new illustrated Booklet.

NEW YORK REAL ESTATE SECURITY CO.
Assets over $17,000,000
42 BROADWAY NEW YORK

6%
GILT EDGE SMALL MORTGAGES

Amount	Security
$2 000	$7.500
1,400	5,175
1,100	5,975
1,000	6,200
700	4,425

We have been supplying mortgage investments like these to Continent readers for many years, and would like to tell you more about them. Address a postal inquiry to
ASSOCIATED MORTGAGE INVESTORS
KINGMAN N. ROBINS, Treasurer, Granite Bldg., Rochester, N.Y.

The safest investments from the viewpoints of
INCOME and SECURITY
are today generally recognized to be carefully selected
REAL ESTATE MORTGAGES
When made and guaranteed by experienced and financially responsible persons and corporations there is nothing better. For years we have made such loans in one of the best agricultural districts in America. Full information on request.
THE JEFFERSON TRUST COMPANY
McAlester, Oklahoma

5½% and 6% Interest
The most careful investor always selects a choice farm mortgage when placing funds. Ask for detailed information, references and list of offerings.
G. W. HART, Pres. The Merchants Bank
BRYANT SOUTH DAKOTA

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

ILLUSTRATE YOUR SERMONS
Pastors! Write for Our Special Stereopticon Offer.
Detroit Stereopticon Supply Co., Detroit, Mich.

PEWS-PULPITS-S-S-SEATING
Write Today for Our "Catalog B"
Authoritative Guide on Church Seating; valuable suggestions on designs, finishes, seating plans, etc. Send Floor Plan and state fully your requirements
Blackboards, School Supplies, Catalog B1
School Desks, Catalog B2
American Seating Company 218 S. WABASH AV. CHICAGO NEW YORK, BOSTON, PHILADELPHIA

HALLOWED HYMNS NEW and OLD
$25 per 100, not prepaid. 35 cents per copy by mail.
Returnable samples mailed to prospective purchasers.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York or Chicago

CHURCH PEWS
AND PULPIT FURNITURE
Globe Furniture Co., Ltd., 10 Park Place, Northville, Mich.

Readers will confer a favor on the publishers of The Continent by mentioning this paper when answering advertisements.

The Quality Investment

The firm of J. L. Pettyjohn & Co. stands for the Quality Investment only—the investment that is bound to return both the investor's capital and interest.

The Quality Investment guarantees a peaceful mind—less profit, but a certainty that your money will be affected neither by panic, nor catastrophe, nor mismanagement.

This company deals in First Mortgages placed on highly improved farm lands in Eastern Kansas—a territory whose productiveness and consistency of crop yield have been tested throughout a period of many years.

We have operated in this one field for 35 years and have loaned over $25,000,000. We have confined our loans to this territory, because here we knew the investor was assured safety for his money.

We shall be pleased to tell you about our "Quality Investments." Best financial and clientele references.

WE GUARANTEE OUR MORTGAGES.

Address

J. L. PETTYJOHN & COMPANY
OLATHE, :: KANSAS

6% SECURITY, RATE AND SERVICE 6%

Is what we offer YOU in our FIRST LIEN REAL ESTATE MORTGAGES. They are placed only on income bearing property on a basis of 40 per cent actual value.

INTEREST and PRINCIPAL remitted on due date by NEW YORK check.

EIGHT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES attest the soundness of these mortgages by purchasing in increasing volume.

Write for list, information and references to

REYNOLDS MORTGAGE CO.
R. B. BISHOP, Vice-Pres.
FORT WORTH TEXAS

6 and 7 % Sure

When you purchase from us a mortgage on Improved Georgia City or Farm Property you take as little chance as is humanly possible. You receive from 6 to 7 per cent and you can be sure of receiving it regularly. Our property appraisals are the work of successful experts. We are extremely careful in our estimates of the moral hazards. We protect your principal with ample security. Let us send you our list of loans and interesting literature. Address "Dept. F."

Sessions Loan & Trust Co., Marietta, Ga.

FIRST MORTGAGE FARM LOANS

6% We offer only select first mortgages on improved Northeastern Oklahoma farms at 40% value of farm. Interest collected semi-annually and remitted investor without charge. 6%

SEND FOR BOOKLET.

PARKER-WISE INVESTMENT CO.
VINITA, OKLAHOMA

Financial Situation

Crops Don't Halt for Tariff Discussion—Prices Still Declining — Big Incomes Well Divided Among People.

Although Wall street and the eastern industrial market are keeping a close eye on the tariff proceedings in Congress, trade reports show that the country in general is paying little attention to whatever changes Congress may determine shall be necessary in the schedule of payments on goods entering the United States. Especially in the Northwest and Southwest, where the large crop prospects are pleasing farmers and business men, trade is moving along as though Congress were not in session. Merchants are buying not only for seasonal demands in the Middle West but are also filling their shelves for the fall trade. As J. J. Hill remarked in the East the other day, Wall street seems not to have a friend west of Buffalo. This has been apparent more than once in the course of financial discussion, and the present attitude of business is another example of it.

In spite of the fact that $20,000,000 in gold was shipped to France during a recent period, Old Sol has kept busy improving still further the prospects of an enormous crop this fall. In the final analysis it is the size of the crop which determines the prosperity of the country.

Prices Are Slightly Lower

For the fifth time in five months commodity prices as estimated by Bradstreet's show a decline for May. The total is but 1.3 per cent lower than last May, but is 4.2 per cent lower than the last high point in December, 1912. Lower prices have come mainly from seasonable changes in dairy products, price readjustments in meats and dull trade in textiles. Although the cost of living is still higher than consumers would like to see it, this indication that the prices are on the decline will be relished by those who pay the bills.

In connection with the discussion over the income tax, interesting figures have been compiled by treasury experts in estimating the average income of people of the United States. The table shows that there are 411,000 people in the United States earning incomes from $4,500 to $175,000 a year. There are over 37,000,000 people whose average income is set at $601 a year. The next grade shown, that of $4,500, has in it 126,000 people and there are 178,000 who get $7,500 a year. The division of the large incomes of the United States to such a great number of people will not only be a surprise to many but also shows the wide diffusion of wealth in this country.

Few Have Bank Accounts

It would be interesting to know whether or not the majority of the bank accounts of the country are controlled by the 37,000,000 who get but $601 a year or by the half million people who get a much larger wage. It is said that only one person in twenty in the United States has a bank account. The comparative lack of thrift among the American people has often been commented upon by observers. The statement was recently made by an officer of a corporation which has factories both here and in England that their English workmen almost to a man took advantage of an offer of assistance in starting bank accounts, while the American workmen not only were very slow about saving money but spent practically all of the bonus offered by the company as an incentive to saving.

Bonds of a type which investors a few years ago were very well satisfied to buy at a yield of 4½ per cent can now be bought to yield about 5¼ per cent. The security of neither interest nor principal has changed. Competition among borrowers for the world's capital has been so keen as to depress the market price of debentures. Persons who are looking for bonds for investment will do well to consult their bankers at this time.

Brief Bits of Business News

—Henry Clews and Company recently summarized the main points to be considered in buying bonds. First is safety of principal, then comes income, diversification and marketability. The net earnings for a series of years should be double or one and a half times the fixed charges of a company whose bonds are being

Stability, Courtesy and Efficiency

Have Been the Factors in the Growth of the

Illinois Trust & Savings Bank

Without the Assistance of Mergers or Consolidation of Other Banks

Capital and Surplus
$15,000,000.00

LA SALLE ST. & JACKSON BLVD.

ILLINOIS TRUST SAFETY DEPOSIT COMPANY

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

Selected FARM LOANS

I offer only First Mortgage Farm Loans made by thoroughly reliable firms who have stood the Test of Time. I diversify as to climate, rate and crop yield. Interest and principal collected free.

Ask for Circular No. 101

G·F·CARSON
717 JEFFERSON BUILDING, PEORIA, ILLINOIS.

SAFETY AND 7%

IDAHO offers today a splendid field for safe and profitable investments. Carefully selected first mortgages on improved CITY AND FARM property are securities which will give you no worry, but will return regularly and promptly an excellent interest return, ranging from 6 per cent to 7 per cent, and occasionally even higher. The city of Boise has trebled its population in ten years, and the agricultural districts in which the IDAHO TITLE AND TRUST COMPANY and THE NATIONAL TRUST AND SAVINGS COMPANY operate are among the most productive in this prosperous state.

CHARLES B. COXE
President
BOISE :: IDAHO

COLONIAL TRVST
AND SAVINGS BANK

La Salle Street, N. E. Corner Adams
CHICAGO

Resources over $8,000,000.00

Those in search of reliable investment at 5% and 6% should communicate with our Bond Department.

3% interest on Savings.
2% interest on Checking Accounts.

NORTH DAKOTA
FARM MORTGAGES
THE IDEAL INVESTMENT

¶ 30 years Residence and Business activities in Banking and making Farm Mortgages. ¶ Write for my Booklet, Investment Facts, and List .075

WALTER L. WILLIAMSON, LISBON NORTH DAKOTA

SEASONED
North Dakota Farm Loans
and
FARM LAND BONDS
Netting 6%

Write for particulars regarding our investment service. Highest references.

R. C. KITTEL & CO., CASSELTON NORTH DAKOTA

FARM MORTGAGES bearing 6% interest, first liens on improved farms. Original papers held by the investor. Principal and interest GUARANTEED; interest payable at the Hanover National Bank, New York. Thousands of satisfied customers for references. We've been doing the same thing for TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS

The W. C. Belcher Land Mortgage Co.
Capital $320,000.00.
Fort Worth. - - Texas.

6½% Net First Mortgages

on improved OKLAHOMA FARMS from $200 up are safe investments. I have sold them for years to ultra conservative investors with entire satisfaction. Write today for list and interesting BOOKLET "E." Refer to Dun or Bradstreet.

GEO. R. FISH, Investment Banker, Ardmore, Okla.

6% NET GUARANTEED AS WELL AS BACKED BY 20 YEARS OF SUCCESS

Farm Mortgages sold by us net six per cent, and we guarantee their payment. Interest remitted the day due Write today for booklet and references and ask your local banker to investigate us.

BROAD & BOMAR, Bankers, Ft. Worth, Tex.

7% FARM MORTGAGES 8%

Title guaranteed. On choice farms in Panhandle and fertile valleys of Eastern New Mexico. No loan made for more than thirty per cent of value, nor closed until examined and approved by our experienced examiner who is an officer of Company. We collect and remit interest free. Larger loans drawn to net investors 7 per cent; small ones, 8 per cent. Write for sample application, references, etc.

The Union Mortgage Company, Clovis, New Mexico

Farm Mortgages 6%

Your money safe and your income sure. Send for descriptive pamphlet "C" and list of offerings. 30 yrs. experience. Highest references

E. J Lander & Co. Grand Forks N. D.

FARM MORTGAGES
6½% and 7% NET

Security double amount of the loan. Title examined and certified by responsible Attorney. Will collect and remit free of charge both interest and principal. I feel sure I can satisfy you. If you have money to loan one to five years, write me and I will explain fully and give you list of references; over thirty years experience and no client ever lost one dollar

B. F. CULP,
P. O. Box 493. Walla Walla, Washington

High Grade Farm Loans
Oklahoma Farm Mortgage Co., Oklahoma City U. S. A.

considered. Liberal income must not be at risk of principal, and when any large amount is to be invested it is best not to put all the eggs into one basket. The bonds should command a market in which they may be sold in emergency without sacrifice.

—When a man invests in farm mortgages he may be sure, if he buys from a reputable house, that each piece of land involved has been specially investigated. Many of the larger mortgage houses keep several men in the field all the time examining land and the character of men who want to borrow.

—It seems to be acknowledged by students of American customs that people will not save systematically until debt forces them to a more frugal existence. If this be true the obvious thing for people to do who want to have the things which money is buying for others is to conserve their resources by laying aside something regularly; carefully investing the sum at intervals. Many people find it convenient to buy a mortgage or other investment on partial payments so that the recurring payments will force them to save. This plan is also often used in connection with life insurance.

Bradford Horton, Man

(Continued from page 718)

about this Bradford Horton business. While you all went to Sunday school counsel and I, being unregenerate, have been making discoveries. We saw the big Englishman and the Scotchman, your honor—the ones that were going hunting. Well, they hunted in Brad Horton's camp, not the one where we were but the northern one, and Brad told them all about his plans and the Scotch Englishman, or the English Scotchman, told counsel that the big Englishman was going to pay for one of those mission houses and that Brad said when he got them both built he was going to take a vacation and get out among people for a rest. Now what do you think of that?"

"I think if Brad comes to St. Paul with that story he'll get the rest of the money," answered Sleighton.

"He could get it without coming to St. Paul," said Eleanor quietly. As they turned to look at her, asking how, they saw a peace and gladness in her face that had not been there since Joe's return early in the week. Since then her struggle had been unremitting, between the longing to use her influence to persuade Bradford to give up his work and come home, and the knowledge that such a course was both selfish and untrue to his highest good. Now it seemed that all was to work out so that the sacrifice she was striving so painfully to make would not be asked of her.

"How?" she answered the queries of the others. "Why, daddy will give the money the minute I tell him. I'll telegraph for it!" There was a glad ring in her voice. "If he gets the houses built this winter, he can come out in the spring for his vacation, and daddy can see him, and be happy again."

"I don't believe you ever think of yourself, do you?" asked Lucy as they left the dining room.

"Myself? Oh, Lucy, that's too deep! You know, don't you?" Her face was all aglow with happiness in anticipation of the meeting soon to come that was to be unmarred by thoughts of renunciation.

Next morning early there came a telegram from Ansley Jickers to Eleanor, saying, "Your father is very ill. Hasten home."

CHAPTER XXX.

THE APPEAL OF THE CAMP

"HELLO, BRAD!" "How are you, A. S.?" "Fine! Weather good, plenty to eat, conscience quiet. Glad to see you; mighty glad." Not a change was apparent in the manner of the two men who had not seen each other for five years. Sleighton looked prosperous; Horton was not so well dressed as formerly, but the look of victorious accomplishment on his bronzed face was fine to see.

"God has led me to a wonderful work, A. S.," he said, after the first greetings were over and the visitor had settled down in one of the minister's leather study chairs.

"I knew he would," said Sleighton. "But, Brad, I never supposed it was in you to do what you're doing, I must admit that. If I had, I'd have put two and two together long ago."

"Two and two? What two and two?"

"Lumberjacks and Brad Horton."

"I don't understand."

"You weren't so dumb in the old days. I've been hearing for six months of a missionary up in the forest above Fairthorne who was a great gospel singer and a splendid worker among the lumbermen. No one ever gave me his name, and I couldn't place any such man. And all the while it was you. What sent you up there?"

"You."

"Never! I've never done so good a thing."

"Yes, you did. Remember how I asked you once all about Fairthorne, where it was and how to get there and how far off the woods were?"

Sleighton recalled it.

"I didn't mean anything then, in asking, but when circumstances made it necessary for me to leave Prestonbury and go where no one could find me, what you had said came back to me. I went in by way of Duluth. I had no board back of me, and the reason you couldn't find out the name of the man you heard of was because I never gave any. For a year and a half now I've had no name but the 'mish'nary' and 'the Hooter.' So you see, A. S., you did send me into the woods, you and God. I was ready," he added, "to take you into my confidence when J. J. found me. I wanted to come down here after money, as I wrote you, and I knew you'd keep my secret. Now, of course, there's no need of secrecy."

It was Saturday evening. Bradford had arrived that afternoon, several days after the departure of the Prestonbury party. Little by little, as they sat together far past midnight, Horton told his friend the story of the past five years.

"I don't blame Mr. Elmore," he ended. "He was only God's instrument to reveal me to myself. Instead of getting out into real work for men, I had buried my real power in a Greek dictionary and was playing fast and loose with myself. The only thing really before me was the vision of a girl, though I tried to make myself believe it wasn't. I dreamed, hoped—oh, well, Austin, there's no use going into it all, but that night he refused my request so brutally I was almost heartbroken. I loved Antigone, A. S.; I always shall. But in my soul, that night, underneath all the rage and bitterness, I heard God's voice as plainly as ever prophet heard it, saying, 'Now, will you go do the work to which I have called you?'

"I had an awful night. It was days before I could surrender and say I'd go. I resolved then that as soon as I'd paid off the mortgage I'd hide myself away in some place where I could be unknown and at the same time serve God and men. Then when the storm came, and the rescue, I had the knowledge to strengthen me that Eleanor loved me. She always will, Austin. But to answer the call of God means separation for her and me, even now when all other obstacles are removed. She will go her way and I mine, and my way is plainly here at work. I will not be a traitor to God's call again, not even for her sake. And it is much to know she loves me—we are wedded already in soul."

There was dead silence for a time, then Sleighton said, emotion in his voice, "You are a strong man, Bradford Horton. For strong men God has great use and great reward."

Then, with a quick turn of subject to relieve the overwrought feelings of both by a return to practical matters, he fell to laying plans for the services of the morrow.

The Sunday when Bradford Horton told of his work in the camp of the Great Northern Lumber Company was as fair a November day as ever shone crisp and cold upon the world. From the pulpit the missionary surveyed his audience, thinking, "What will such a people care for my stories of the jacks, of Poker Bill, of Jimmie the Snipe? Nothing, probably; but I'll tell them all the same. The duty is mine, the cause is God's."

He had not counted on his own power, however; in fact, he was hardly aware of it. In simple words he narrated the history of the year and a half he had spent as a part of the life of these men. He told of their separation from the outside world, of their hardships, of their rough, wild, reckless ways; told of their gambling and drunkenness, of their profanity and utter disregard of the Sabbath, of their absolute lack of fear of God, man or devil; told how little by little they were being won to sobriety and an outward semblance of respect for holy things.

"That southern camp," he said in closing, "will in ten years be a city. The railway from Duluth to Fairthorne will pass through both the northern and southern camps within the next year and a half. In that whole vast region I am the only minister. Settlers are already coming in and will need religious influences. We must have two buildings for mission work, one for each camp, and must have them at once. One is promised as soon as I can obtain the money for the other. An Englishman who passed through the camp two weeks ago saw the work and was so impressed by the reality of our needs that he pledged himself to give $5,000 for this purpose. Will you give the other? Here is the field in your own state. A foreigner will give half the money for the work. Will you meet him? In the language of Poker Bill, 'that Englishman calls you.' Will you show him that you also hold a full hand?"

As he took his seat, Sleighton rose. "I will answer that last question," he said. "I will answer, No, for that purpose this church will not give one dollar." Bradford started, but was reassured as his friend went on, "I have the promise of the money for the second house in my hand." He opened a telegram, and read, "'Tell Bradford Horton that Prestonbury will build the second mission house.'"

Bradford was on his feet, but the minister stopped him with a word in an undertone.

"The houses will be built this winter," Sleighton went on, still addressing the people. "But more than mere houses is needed. They should each have a preacher. My friend should no longer bear the whole burden. He must be our missionary superintendent. Such an arrangement will require $2,400 yearly; $600 for each minister, $1,200 for Mr. Horton. That is the responsibility which I ask you this morning to assume. Will you?"

A man in the congregation was already on his feet. "Yes," he cried. "I will be responsible for that sum. Anyone who wants to help may report to the First National bank." And before he could take his seat, involuntarily the congregation had risen in one body and were singing for the second time during that service, "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow!" And clear and strong above the voices of the people rose that of Bradford Horton.

"A. S.," said the missionary, when at last the stream of people who wished to meet him had flowed out at the church door and the two were walking home together, "had you received that message when we were talking last night?"

"Sure!"

"Why didn't you tell me?"

"I wanted to do better than we could if you'd known. I wanted it all to work out as it did this morning. I knew my crowd. Now, then, can you get those houses done by June, think you?"

"I'll have to let Sir Henry know the first thing."

"Well, write him tonight. Then hustle back to the woods and get to work, and be ready to come out for a rest in June. I'm going on to Prestonbury in May, to commencement, and I'll find two good fellows to put on the job and take your place."

"I don't specially want a vacation after such an inspiration as I've had today."

"You'll want it, all right. The winter's long and hard out here, and it's no joke building houses in the snow. Besides, they want you in Prestonbury. The kindest thing you can do for Eleanor Elmore is to let her father see you and make his peace."

"I know," said Bradford, with reserve. "Yes, I must go East for that."

"See here, Brad!" said Sleighton earnestly. They had reached home and Lucy was in the hall to greet them. "Give up that nonsense about never marrying. That girl will go with you to China, if you'll ask her."

"Would that be the way to prove I love her?" said Bradford stubbornly; "to ask her to share such hardships as you've just been talking about—long, cold winters, and isolation, and loneliness? It's not my way. I love her too well for that. I want to see her again, yes; but it must be the last time."

Lucy had been quiet, listening without comment. Now she spoke. "You don't know Eleanor, Bradford," she said simply.

(To be concluded)

Calendar and Record

Presbytery Meetings

Dayton—Dayton Memorial, June 9, 10 a. m.

Moderators Elected

Iron Mountain—S. W. Stophlet.
Southern Oregon—H. T. Chisholm.

Resignations

Illinois—Sangamon Bottom: J. H. Norris; Cisco: G. D. Humphrey; Pawnee: O. H. Deever.
Missouri—St. Louis Lee Avenue: W. A. Galt.
New York—Southold: William H. Lloyd; Seneca Falls First: W. P. Schell.
Wyoming—Laramie Union: Walter A. Henricks.

Calls

Illinois—Morris First: J. H. McArthur, Sullivan, Ind.; Mattoon Broadway: Roger F. Cressey, El Paso; Joliet First: R. T. Lynd, declines.
Minnesota—Winona: J. F. Cowling, Osage City, Kan.
Missouri—Holden First: A. F. Gordon Mackay, Roswell, N. M.
New Jersey—Plainsboro and Monmouth Junction: G. A. Burslem, Baltimore.
New York—Pleasantville: Thomas Morgan.
Oregon—Portland Hawthorne Park: L. K. Grimes, Superior Wis.
Pennsylvania—Pittsburg Central North Side: C. F. Ensign, Marion, Iowa, declines.
Wisconsin—Bayfield: William R. Shelt, Lake Nebagamon; Lake Nebagamon: Carl E. Franz, Auburn Seminary; Rice Lake: G. P. Conger, Oswego, N. Y.; Chetek: George E. Griffiths, McCormick Seminary.

Installations

Illinois—Pana: Harry B. Foster, May 14.
West Virginia—Wheeling Second: Thomas G. Koontz, May 8.

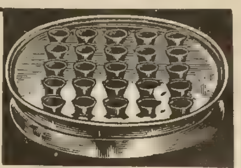
Accessions

Illinois—Mason City First, 14, May 4, E. L. Lord; Argentia, 26, J. W. Elder.
Indiana—South Bend First, 67, C. A. Lippincott.
Iowa—Wilton Junction, 4, M. E. Lumbar.
Michigan—Bridgehampton, 9, April 27, H. A. Simpson.
Minnesota—Marshall, 10, April 27, Albert Husted.
New Mexico—Las Cruces, 10, May 4, Thomas A. Mitchell.
New York—Troy Second, 45, April, C. Waldo Cherry; Binghamton First, 75, May 4, J. J. Lawrence; Oswegatchie Second, 12, April 27; New York City Jan Hus, 50, May 11, Vincent Pisek.
North Dakota—Oakes, 5, April 27, B. G. Jackson.
Oklahoma—Blackwell, 9, April, F. J. Stowe.
Pennsylvania—Pittsburg churches, April 27: Friendship Avenue, 10, D. S. Curry; Swissvale, 25, A. B. Nicholls; Homewood Avenue, 21, P. W. Snyder. Philadelphia Hope, 18, May 4, J. Gray Bolton; Phœnixville, 18, May 4, George A. Hertzog; Wilkes Barre churches, May 11: First, 155, James M. Farr; Memorial, 320, A. J. Kerr; Grant Street, 135, J. B. Craven; Westminster, 525, R. Webster. Kingston First, 200, S. L. Haynes; Philadelphia Hermon, 19, Harry H. Crawford; Wyncot Calvary, 7, W. B. Lower; Erie Park, 33, April 6, S. H. Farrer; Erie Central, 17, George Bailey.
Texas—Brownwood Austin Avenue, 8, April 27, George W. Fender.
Washington Davenport, 4, May 4, F. Tonge; Seattle Baker Park, 10, April 27, E. Hubert Broyles.

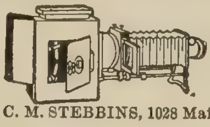
Obituary

Death notices will be inserted at the rate of one cent a word. PAYMENT MUST BE SENT WITH THE NOTICE. Those who ask their pastor to write such notices should be careful to hand him the money to forward with the copy.

COMPTON—Alice D. F. Compton was born September 18, 1845. She was the eldest daughter of Rev. J. C. Hanna, the wife of J. W. Compton, elder in Second Presbyterian church of Bloomington, Ill., in the days when Dr. Dinsmore was its pastor. After her husband's death her membership and Christian activities were transferred to the church of Normal, and so continued through life. She was with us in California but three months, for she went to "Immanuel's Land" the morning of April 4, 1913. Of her it may be said that she was "in labors abundant" and that she "pleased not herself." She died in the home of her sister, Mrs. Campbell, in Ocean Park, Cal., and was taken to be laid to rest with her family gone before at Bloomington, accompanied by her sister, Mrs. Brode. *



INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
"Noiseless" Cushioned Trays with a new Short Glass. Trays interlock. All glasses well spaced. Outfits sent on trial.
DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO:
20 East Randolph St., Dept. J2, CHICAGO.



Illustrated Sermons. They draw—the impression lasts. Good Lantern with Electric Rheostat or Acetylene Generator, $29.00 Large stock of Slides, Stereopticons and Educational Apparatus Get our latest catalog and terms
C. M. STEBBINS, 1028 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.

WEDDING INVITATIONS
ANNOUNCEMENTS
CALLING CARDS
FINE STATIONERY
Send for Samples
S. D. CHILDS & CO., 200 CLARK ST., CHICAGO

SLIDE RENTING. STEREOPTICONS.
NEW METHOD & SUBJECTS.
CHURCHES REDUCED RATES.
MOORE-HUBBELL & CO. 713 MASONIC TEMPLE.

WANTS AND HELPS

Rates for classified advertising, Three Cents a Word, including the address. If desired a "box" address may be used, responses being sent to THE CONTINENT and forwarded to advertiser.

CASH MUST ACCOMPANY ORDER

MISCELLANEOUS

FOR CHURCH WORKERS—LADIES' AID AND MISSIONARY Societies are raising money without donations selling Valentine's Absorbent Dusters and Dust Mops. The only fifty-cent mop. Special offer by letter. Agents and societies should write. Valentine Duster Company, Urbana, Ohio.

TEN MINUTES AND LESS THAN FOUR CENTS WILL bring good returns if you invest them in a letter giving the names and addresses of men and boys who have come to Chicago to live. The Presbyterian Brotherhood will be the connecting link between them and the nearest church. Write to Dr. Francis M. Fox, 509 S. Wabash ave., Chicago.

PUPIL NURSES WANTED FOR NEW HOSPITAL OF fifty beds, beautifully situated twenty-five miles from New York City. Applicants must have one year in high school or its equivalent and be not under twenty years of age. Apply to Superintendent of United Hospital, Port Chester, New York.

WANTED—BY CHRISTIAN WOMAN, POSITION AS mother's helper or companion during summer months. Address Box R, care The Continent.

A PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER WANTS A CHURCH in a town (not village). He is educated at European university and at McCormick Theological Seminary in Chicago, is a good preacher and believes that sermons shall not only be devotional but also teaching. Address "Minister," The Continent, Chicago, Ill.

PRESBYTERIAN ASSEMBLY OF THE SOUTHWEST. Young People's conference, Hollister, Mo. Conference July 29, Aug. 5, 1913; assembly, Aug. 6-17, 1913. Write the secretary for information. E. E. Stringfield, secretary, 3614 E. 59th St., Kansas City, Mo.

WANTED—POSITION AS SOCIAL HELPER OR church work for summer in Chicago by competent, energetic woman. Recommendations given. Address "Q," care of Continent.

WANTED—BY A PASTOR OF TWENTY-TWO YEARS' constant experience, and by one who is at present in satisfactory work, a pastorate in small town or country place, preferably the middle west or west; references. Must be accessible to high school, as I have small family needing school. Address S, care The Continent.

SATISFIED INVESTORS: "IT IS WITH MANY thanks I acknowledge the draft sent me for my loan. I am very well satisfied with all dealings I have had with you." This letter was recently sent us by one of our Detroit clients. Here is another written by a Union Grove, Wis., man: "Herewith please find draft in settlement of Romness loan. In all my business relations with a number of companies during the past thirty years, the Lander Company carry off the banner for promptness." We have many more letters like these. When your funds are invested in our First Farm Mortgages they will be fully protected and will net you excellent interest return. Let us tell you about our splendid investment field. Drop us a line today. Mention The Continent. E. J. Lander & Co., Grand Forks, N. Dakota.

ORGANS

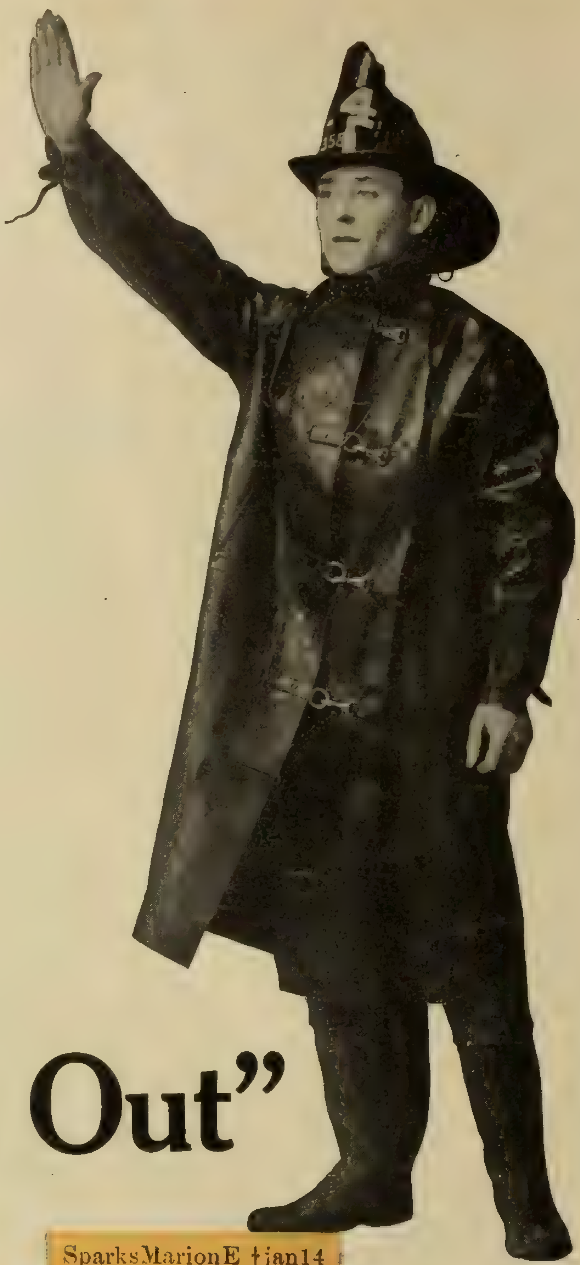
FOR SALE—A SECOND-HAND PIPE ORGAN OF first class make, in fine condition. Has fifteen speaking stops. A bargain to quick buyer. Address Pipe Organ, care of The Continent, N. Y.

TOURS

WANTED—YOUNG PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER-Naturalist, and well acquainted with camp and outdoor life, will take a company of boys on a driving trip through Yellowstone Park and Jackson Hole Country this summer. Start from Chicago early in July. Limited number of boys from fifteen to eighteen wanted. Write The Pilot, care The Continent.

YOUNG PASTOR ON EUROPEAN TRIP WOULD CONDUCT economically small number well recommended boys. Address G. H. F., care Continent, N. Y. office.

EUROPE MEDITERRANEAN ROUTE $370
Sails July 1 from New York. Party limited.
University Man, Conductor.
The Shelton Tours, 222 Old South Bldg., Boston, Mass



"Fire's Out"

SparksMarionE †jan14
1205 Springfield av

THEN comes the matter of insurance. You get out your policy and note the company in which you are insured. Certain questions should not arise to worry you at such a time.

You should not be worried by the question of whether you will be fairly treated by the company in which you are insured.

You should not be worried over the question of whether the company can pay the loss.

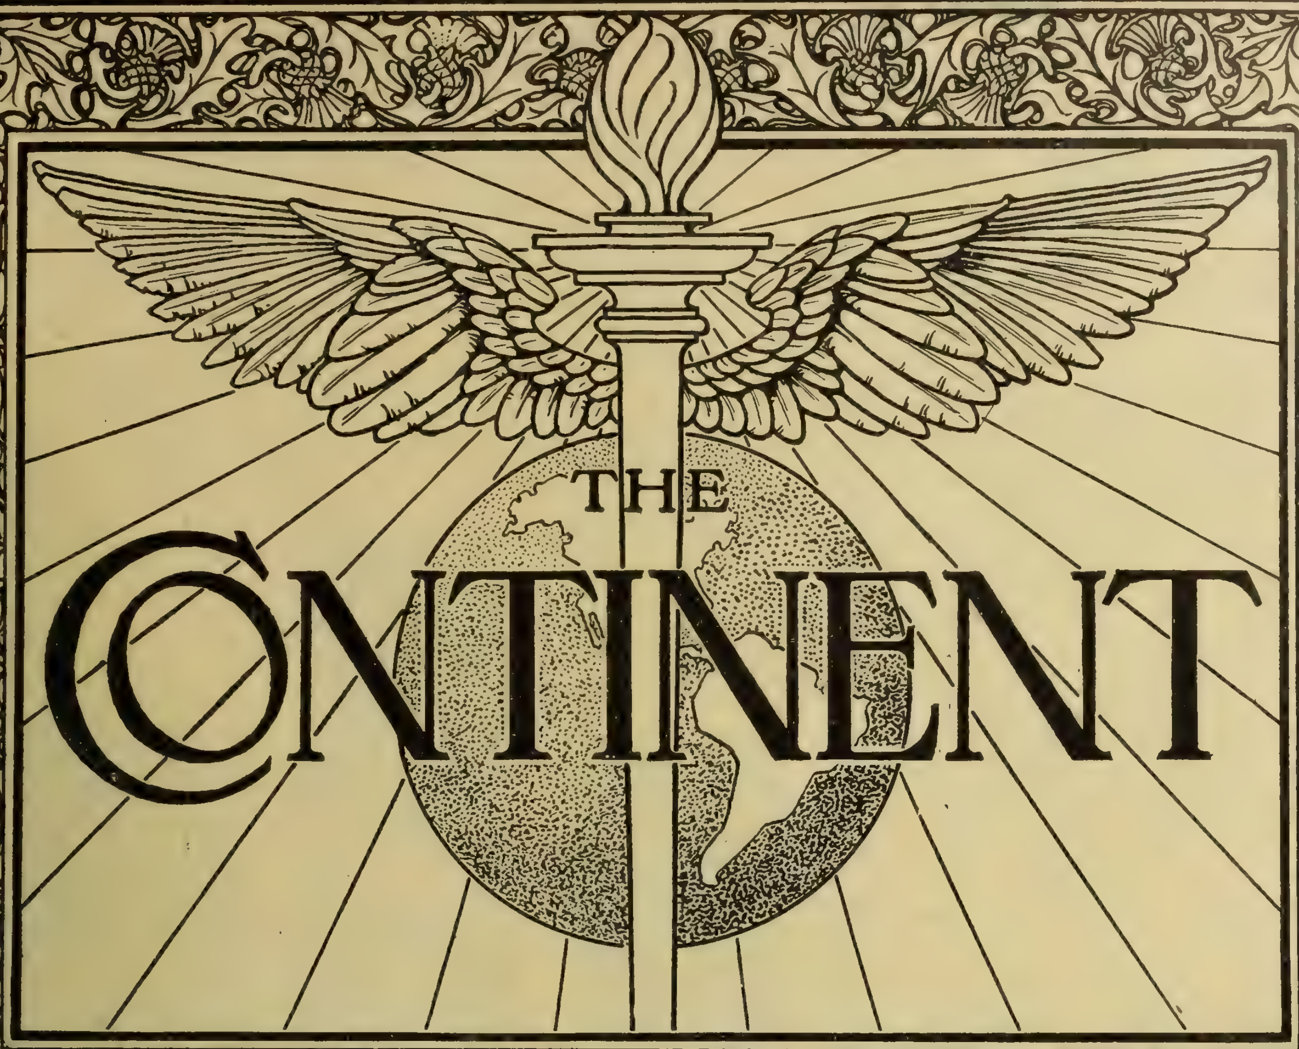
You should not be worried by the question of whether you have had enough protection to cover your claim.

To be insured in the Hartford Fire Insurance Company eliminates the first two of these worries. By consultation with a Hartford Agent before taking out your policy, he will tell you the proper proportion of insurance to carry and that eliminates the third.

The evident thing to do before the fire in order to eliminate worry is to insure in the right kind of company.

INSIST on the HARTFORD

Agents Everywhere



THE CONTINENT

MAY 29, 1913

What Atlanta Assemblies Did

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Proper Use of the Quartet

IRA SEYMOUR DODD

Back in the Brave Days of '63

HERMON D. JENKINS

Rural Poverty and the Church—Herman N. Morse
The Line Between "Good" and "Bad" People—Editorial

NEW YORK CHICAGO PHILADELPHIA

EDUCATIONAL

Illinois

MONTICELLO SEMINARY

76th year opens Sept. 18th. A home school for young women and girls. Preparatory and Junior College Courses. Domestic Science, Music, Art. Certificate privileges. Well-equipped laboratories. Gymnasium. Tennis courts, archery range, basketball and hockey fields. Rates moderate. Music and Art extra. Send for catalog. Miss Martina C. Erickson, Principal, Godfrey, Ill.

The JAMES MILLIKIN UNIVERSITY

A Christian College offering full classical and technical courses

The Decatur College and Industrial School offers courses in the Liberal Arts, Engineering, Domestic Economy, Manual Training, Pedagogy, Library Management, Commerce and Finance, Music, etc.; full preparatory courses in the Academy admitting to the above and apprenticeship courses in the mechanical trades. Seven large and beautiful buildings. Fine equipment and superior faculty. Over a thousand students each year.

For Pictorial Bulletin or Catalog, address

A. R. TAYLOR, President

DECATUR - - - - ILLINOIS

LAKE FOREST COLLEGE

offers a liberal training under experienced professors and excellent provision for the physical and social welfare of its students, in a beautiful environment. For information address

JOHN S. NOLLEN, President, Lake Forest, Illinois

Illinois Woman's College

Music, Art, Expression, Domestic Science

Music Hall best in the West, Pianoforte, Pipe Organ, Voice, Violin, Public School Music, Ear Training, Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition, Theory, Analysis, History of Music, Normal Classes. Expenses reasonable. Catalogue. Address

PRESIDENT HARKER, Box 31, Jacksonville, Illinois

NURSES

are given a thorough and practical three years training at

PASSAVANT

Memorial Hospital Training School.

They also have the advantages of a monthly cash allowance, a separate Nurses' Home, and affiliation with the Illinois Training School for Nurses. For further information, address

MISS E. C. GLENN, R. N.,
149-151 West Superior Street. - - Chicago, Illinois.

TODD SEMINARY FOR BOYS

An ideal school for young boys near Chicago. No serious sickness in 50 years. We educate the whole boy. Send for prospectus. NOBLE HILL, Woodstock, Ill.

BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY

Instructors have wide experience in the "Boy Problem." ACADEMY ideally located, 35 miles from St. Louis. Healthful environment, Christian influence. Prepares young men for business or college. The ideal school for YOUR boy.
Write HEADMASTER, BUNKER HILL, ILL.

Tennessee

WARD-BELMONT

Uniting and continuing Belmont College for Young Women (24th year) and Ward Seminary for Young Ladies (49th year). Opens Sept. 25th. Jennie Taylor Masson, Regtr., Box J, Nashville, Tenn.

CUMBERLAND UNIVERSITY

College entrance, 15 units.
Write the President, LEBANON, TENN.

Indiana

Before Deciding Where to Attend School

Send for catalog of Valparaiso University, Valparaiso, Indiana. This is one of the largest institutions of learning in the United States.

Thorough Instruction at Lowest Expense.

Catalog mailed free. Address

H. B. BROWN, President.
O. P. KINSEY. Vice-President.

Wisconsin

RIPON COLLEGE

RIPON :: :: WISCONSIN

THE PRESBYTERIAN BOARD OF PUBLICATION

PRESBYTERIAN LAW AND USAGE

By BENJAMIN F. BITTINGER, D.D.

This new edition of the law and usage of the Presbyterian Church has been revised and enlarged, and an analytical index, concisely arranged by Rev. William H. Roberts, D.D., LL.D., Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, added. As an alphabetical index to the government and discipline of the Church and the decisions of the General Assembly, including the amendments recently made to the Confession of Faith, the Form of Government, and the Book of Discipline, together with the deliverances of the General Assembly to the year 1912, the volume is invaluable.

$1.00, postpaid

Planting the Outposts

By ROBERT FREDERICK SULZER

A story of "Thirty-five Years Among the Children of the Plains," representing the time the author served his Master as District Superintendent of Presbyterian Sunday school Missions for Minnesota and North Dakota.

Every line breathes forth the personality and wonderful spirit of this more than remarkable man. It is no dry tale of hardship and privation, but a typically breezy western story, telling the truth of all these years' work, and telling it in such a manner that even the proofreaders could not resist the humor in it.

50c. net; 58c. postpaid

PLANTING THE OUTPOSTS

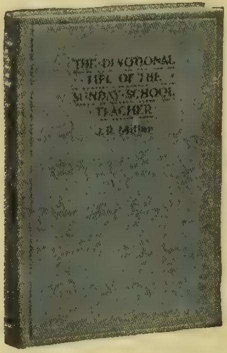
The Broader Vision

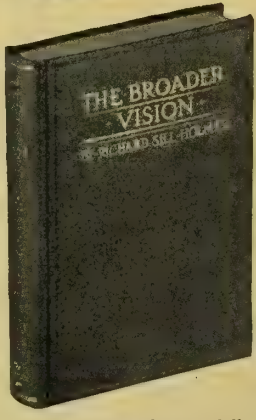
By MABEL DODGE HOLMES

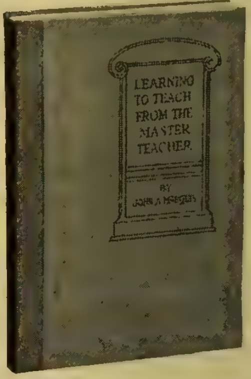
Compiled from the writings of Rev. Richard S. Holmes, D.D.

A collection of prose and poetry from the pen of the late Corresponding Editor of "The Continent." The volume contains what is representative of the best thought and literary expression of a writer whose readers came to look forward eagerly to the message each week would bring to them from him. In the selection of the prose work an attempt has been made to include articles suggestive of every phase of Dr. Holmes' many-sided nature. Prefaced by biographical sketch.

$1.00 net; $1.08 postpaid







The Devotional Life of the Sunday School Teacher

By J. R. MILLER, D.D.

The manuscript of this booklet was prepared by Dr. Miller several years ago, laid away, probably with the thought of some further development, and brought to light again after God had called him home. It is a stimulating exhortation to the Sunday school teacher to realize the responsibility and the privilege of "the highest work given to mortals—that of winning souls."

50c. net; 55c. postpaid

Learning to Teach from the Master Teacher

By Rev. John A. Marquis, D.D.

A message to Sunday school teachers by a man who knows the teacher's problems, telling the elements of Jesus' success as a teacher, and showing how the teacher of the present day can follow in his footsteps. It is simple, reverent and most helpful. It can hardly fail to rouse the indifferent teacher, strengthen the earnest teacher, and inspire every one who reads it.

35c. net, postpaid

On the Firing Line with the Sunday School Missionary

By JOHN M. SOMERNDIKE

"Long and varied experiences in dealing with the problems of Sunday school missions, and intimate, sympathetic contact with Sunday school missionaries, have given Mr. Somerndike exceptional preparation for writing with authority on a theme of vital importance to the advancement of the kingdom of God. 'On the Firing Line' presents the subject of Sunday school missions in a masterly manner. The illustrations add much to the value of the book. A fascinating volume, suitable for a course in mission study.—Auburn Seminary Record.

Cloth, 50c. net; 58c. postpaid. Paper, 35c. net; 41c. postpaid

THE PRESBYTERIAN BOARD OF PUBLICATION
Headquarters: PHILADELPHIA, Witherspoon Building
New York, 156 Fifth Ave. Chicago, 509 S. Wabash Ave. St. Louis, 313 N. Tenth St.
San Francisco, 400 Sutter St. Nashville, 415 Church St. Pittsburgh, 204 Fulton Bldg. Cincinnati, 420 Elm St.

EDUCATIONAL

Ohio

The University of Wooster

Synodical College of Ohio
CO-EDUCATIONAL
The Department of Biblical Instruction is known as the

FLORENCE H. SEVERANCE
Bible and Missionary Training School

YOUNG MEN are trained to become directors of Religious Education, Sabbath School Workers, Assistants to Pastors, Y. M. C. A. Secretaries. Prospective Medical Missionaries may receive their religious training at Wooster before entering a Medical School.

YOUNG WOMEN are trained to become Foreign Missionaries, Home Missionaries, City Missionaries, Pastors' Assistants, Church Visitors, Sabbath School Workers, Y. W. C. A. Secretaries.

Students may take this work in connection with the COLLEGE COURSE or may take the THREE YEARS TRAINING COURSE. For full information address

REV. CHALMERS MARTIN, D.D. Wooster, Ohio
Ask for Catalogue A.

EDUCATIONAL

Ohio

GLENDALE COLLEGE

GLENDALE, OHIO

Founded 1853 Suburban to Cincinnati

Few residence schools for young women are as ideally situated for health, beauty and advantages. Courses of study prepare for all colleges, and give two years' collegiate work splendidly adapted for high school graduates. Strong Music Department, Art, Expression, etc.

MISS R. J. DEVORE, President.

The WESTERN COLLEGE for WOMEN

OXFORD, OHIO
FOUNDED 1853

Ranked with Leading Eastern Colleges

A center of stimulating life for thoughtful students. Comprehensive curriculum; definite religious influence. 350 beautiful acres; campus, farm, garden. Music and Art Departments of special brilliance. Domestic Science. Outdoor Athletics; Gymnasium. Illustrated literature on request.

Mary A. Sawyer, A. M., Lit. D., Dean.

BLACKBURN—THE ONLY SELF HELP COLLEGE IN ILLINOIS—

helps young men and young women to earn a large part of their college expenses. It's not cheap, it's different. Write President Hudson, Carlinville, Illinois

Subscription Terms—The subscription price of The Continent is $2.50 per year payable in advance.

Postage is prepaid on all subscriptions in the United States, Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, Guam, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, Cuba and Mexico.

Foreign Postage—For Canada, 50 cents should be added for postage, and for all other countries in the Postal Union $1.10 should be added for postage.

Remittances should be sent by draft on Chicago or New York, Express or P. O. money orders payable to The Continent. If personal check is sent, 10 cents must be added for collection.

THE CONTINENT

Continuing The Interior (Established 1870) and The Westminster (Established 1904)
PUBLISHED WEEKLY

THE McCORMICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, Proprietors
Oliver R. Williamson, Publisher

CHICAGO
509 South Wabash Avenue

NEW YORK CITY
Presbyterian Building, 156 5th Avenue

PHILADELPHIA
Witherspoon Building

Entered as second-class matter October 6, 1910, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879. Copyright, 1913, by the McCormick Publishing Company.

Acknowledgments—Within two weeks the date following name on "yellow label" will show to the first of what month subscription has been paid. No other receipt is given unless stamp is sent.

Change of Address—Kindly send us both old and new address a week previous to the date of the desired change.

Discontinuances—No subscription is dropped without a definite request from the subscriber; otherwise it is assumed that he wishes to continue.

Manuscripts—The Continent does not accept responsibility for damage or loss of manuscripts sent to it for consideration.

Advertising rates on application.

IN THIS ISSUE:

THURSDAY, MAY 29, 1913

Knowing Good from Evil.............. 745
Editorial—
Reflections on a Moderatorial Election 748
The World.............................. 746
Religious World........................ 747
What the General Assemblies Did at Atlanta 749
Spiritual Dress at Lord's Table ....John Henry Jowett 751
How Rural Poverty Hurts the Church ....Herman N. Morse 752
When We Boys Braved the "Confeds" (with Portraits)....Hermon D. Jenkins 753
The River (Poem)........Elisha Safford 754
Quartet Choir in Church Music ....Ira Seymour Dodd 754
Sermons in New Stones..The Wayfarer 755
The Home Council—As Grandmother Would Have Wished It..Elizabeth Price 756
Young America—A Poem Wilhelm Reads ....Herma N. Clark 757
A Girl Who Swam Lake Geneva ....Marion Ware 757
The Picture That Made a Child Sing... 757
Bradford Horton, Man. Chapter XXXI. —Concluded........Richard S. Holmes 758
New Books 759
The Sunday School ....J. L. Scott, H. D. Jenkins 760
Devotional Service........E. A. Wicher 761
Young People's Service......W. T. Ellis 761
Missionary Work (with Illustration).... 762
The Open Hearth—
The Base of Friendship............... 763
Notes of "The World in Chicago"..... 764
Ways of Working...................... 764
News from Religious Field—Beginning 764
Financial Situation.................. 773
Calendar and Record.................. 775

Around the Shop

The Around-the-Shop Man has always held great respect for the opinions of a lawyer — the lawyer's opinions, he means. He is enough of a Yankee to have some respect for anything respectable that costs money, and he knows lawyers' opinions come in that class.

Here is one, however, that didn't cost the beneficiary a cent, and which is nevertheless worthy of respect. It comes from an attorney of high repute in a middle western city:

"Your paper seems to me to put about as much matter in the space as could well be, and the selection of the matter and the division of it under the various heads makes it easy of access. I am sure the most discriminating reader could not well find fault with the quality. The paper suits me well. The first page article is always instructive and interesting to a mature person who really has an interest in church matters. In fact, no part of it is uninteresting or uninstructive to me.

"One thing is needed, not relating to the makeup of the paper. That is more readers. I was raised a Methodist, and when I came to this church fourteen years ago I stated one evening in some remarks that I thought my first duty was to acquire some knowledge of the men and history of the church. Yet the best way I know to get that is through our church journals.

"To show you that I appreciate your paper, I have been taking it with me to Sunday school and quietly placing it in the hands of some member who does not see it, as a sample copy, hoping he might be interested."

—

If every Presbyterian saw the value of a really helpful religious paper as this man does the work of every department of the church, national and local, would be made vastly more effective. If The Continent helps you, you can't afford not to have it helping others.

EDUCATIONAL

Georgia

AGNES SCOTT COLLEGE

ANNO DOMINI MDCCCXC

DECATUR (6 Miles From Atlanta) GEORGIA
Letters—Philosophy—Science—Home Economics
B. A. Graduates, from this college, are admitted, without examination, as candidates for the M. A. degree in the leading universities of the North and East
No Preparatory Department Dormitory Capacity Limited to 300
For Catalog and Bulletin of Views, address the President
F. H. GAINES, D. D. LL. D.

Indiana

WABASH COLLEGE
CRAWFORDSVILLE, INDIANA—80th YEAR
Opening Day September 16th. A college of liberal culture for young men. Modern equipment. Strong teaching force. Moderate expenses. For particulars address GEORGE L. MACKINTOSH, Pres.

Pennsylvania

The Montrose Bible Conference Association
Rev. R. A. TORREY, D.D., Director
AUGUST 1st TO 10th, 1913
A Summer School for Ministers, Students and Christian Workers
Rev. R. A. Torrey, Los Angeles; Rev. A. C. Dixon, London, Eng.; Rev. Prof. W. N. Griffith Thomas, Toronto, Can.: Rev. John McInnis, Halifax, N. S.; Rev. R. V. Miller, Henderson, N. C.; Rev. Geo. G. Mahy, Philadelphia, Pa.; John R Clements, Binghamton, N. Y.; and others. Write for announcement.
WM. C. GAMBLE, Executive Secretary,
28 Maple Street, Montrose, Pa

BEECHWOOD A Cultural and Practical School
FOR YOUNG WOMEN, AT JENKINTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA.
College Preparatory, College Departments—Conservatory of Music, Arts, Arts and Crafts, Domestic Arts and Sciences.
M. H. Reaser, Ph.D., :: :: :: President

Readers will confer a favor on the publishers of The Continent by mentioning this paper when answering advertisements.

EDUCATIONAL

Minnesota

Macalester College
ST. PAUL, :: MINN.
Leading coeducational college in the Northwest.
Write for catalog.

Pennsylvania

Kiskiminetas Springs School
FOR BOYS
Each boy studied and his work adapted to his needs. Character developed alng positive lines. Known and indorsed by every American University. Broad business course for boys not going to college. Beautiful new dormitory and 136 acres of land have just been added to equipment. Opens 26th year, undei same management, Sept. 23, 1913. Write for catalogue.
Kiskiminetas Springs School, Dept. 12, Saltsburg, Pa.

The Trade Mark "1847 Rogers Bros."
on Spoons, Etc,, Is the Stamp of Quality

EDUCATIONAL

Iowa

Highland Park College
DES MOINES, IOWA

Liberal Arts Normal Engineering Pharmacy Oratory Music Commerce Home Study	For the man or woman with limited time and money. Thorough courses with opportunities for practical work while learning. Ambitious students can earn part or all expenses. Expert specialists teach; students advance rapidly. Successful graduates everywhere. Large, well equipped plant. School all year. Board, $1.75 to $2.75 per week. Tuition in Preparatory, College, Normal and Business Courses, $18 per quarter. Write today for catalogue, stating which course interests you. Address

DR. GEORGE P. MAGILL, President.

PARSONS COLLEGE
OFFERS
To youth of both sexes superior advantages in securing an education.
IDEAL LOCATION.
STRONG FACULTY.
MODERN EQUIPMENT.
38 years of service to the church and country.
W. E. PARSONS, President. Fairfield, Iowa

Theological Seminaries

THE DIVINITY SCHOOL
OF
The UNIVERSITY of CHICAGO
Summer Quarter, 1913
First Term begins June 16 Second Term begins July 24
COURSES will be offered in the Old Testament by Professors Willett, Smith, Luckenbill, and J. F. McCurdy of the University of Toronto; New Testament by Professors Burton, Votaw, Goodspeed, and Case; Systematic Theology by Professors Mathews and Smith; Church History by Professor Moncrief; Practical Theology by Professors Soares, Hoben, and Green; Practical Sociology by Professor Henderson; Public Speaking by Professor Blanchard; Music by Mr. Stevens. Courses in other departments of the University are open to students in the Divinity School.
Address the Dean for further information

Kansas

Oswego College
Oswego, Kansas

Vocational-Cultural for young women

THE BEST NEW BOOKS
FOR SUMMER READING

WINSTON CHURCHILL'S New Novel

THE INSIDE OF THE CUP

By WINSTON CHURCHILL, Author of "Coniston," "Richard Carvel," "The Crisis," "Mr. Crewe's Career," "A Modern Chronicle," etc.

"The Inside of the Cup" is undoubtedly the most significant novel Mr. Churchill has written.

The romance of "Richard Carvel," the realism of "Coniston" and the deep social import of "A Modern Chronicle" are repeated in this powerful story of the present day.

In conception, consistent character drawing and style, "The Inside of the Cup" reveals Mr. Churchill again as America's foremost novelist.

Illustrated. Cloth covers, $1.50 net

S. R. CROCKETT'S New Novel

PATSY

By S. R. CROCKETT, Author of "The Stickit Minister," etc.

"Mr. Crockett has never created a more charming heroine."—N. Y. Times
"Patsy is the most winning creature in modern fiction."—St. Louis Republic.
Decorated cover, $1.25 net

S. C. NETHERSOLE'S New Novel

WILSAM

By S. C. NETHERSOLE

A story of exceptional charm, interest and literary quality. Akin to "flotsam" and "jetsam," the old Anglo-Saxon title fits the tale of an unusually attractive girl of Southern England brought up near the sea.
Cloth covers, $1.35 net

C. G. D. ROBERTS' New Novel

THE FEET OF THE FURTIVE

By CHARLES G. D. ROBERTS, Author of "Kings in Exile," "Neighbors Unknown," etc. Illustrated by Paul Bransom

"Inimitable stories of wild animal life."
"A great book for all ages."—Boston Times.
Decorated cover, $1.35 net

Published at 64-66 5th Ave., N.Y. The Macmillan Company On sale at all bookstores

Registered Trade Mark Established Half a Century

White & Colored Wash Fabrics

In the Department devoted to the above will be found a most attractive assortment of seasonable materials in the latest weaves and colors, including

Cotton and Linen

French Crepes in white and colors.
French Ratine in white and all the prevailing colors.
French Crepe and Voiles printed in Juoy effects or embroidered in Bulgarian designs.
Imported Voiles in solid colors with silk stripes or embroidered figures.
Ottoman Cords, Piques, Repps, Poplins, Japanese Crepes, D. & J. Anderson's Ginghams, Dress Linens of every desirable kind in white and colors.

Shirtings

English and Scotch Madras and Oxfords in white and colors. Russian cords, Satin Broche, Cotton Crepe, Silk Madras, Washable Silks, French Percales, Viyella and Silk and Wool Flannels.

Samples of the above (except bordered materials) may be had upon request.

James McCutcheon & Co
5th Ave., 33d & 34th Sts., New York

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

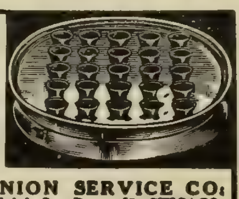
CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 28
THE C. S. BELL Co. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

MENEELY BELL CO.
TROY, N.Y. AND
177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY.
BELLS

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

CHURCH SEATING
HANEY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.

STEREOPTICONS
A Great Soul-Winning Campaign for the Summer Months. Indoors or outdoors.
The Christian Lantern Slide & Lecture Bureau
30 W. LAKE ST., CHICAGO, ILL



INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

"Noiseless" Cushioned Trays with a new Short Glass. Trays interlock. All glasses well spaced. Outfits sent on trial.

DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
20 East Randolph St., Dept. J2, CHICAGO.

Illustrated Sermons. They draw—the impression lasts. Good Lantern with Electric Rheostat or Acetylene Generator, $29.00 Large stock of Slides, Stereopticons and Educational Apparatus Get our latest catalog and terms
C. M. STEBBINS, 1028 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.

WEDDING INVITATIONS
ANNOUNCEMENTS
CALLING CARDS
FINE STATIONERY
Send for Samples
S. D. CHILDS & CO., 200 CLARK ST., CHICAGO

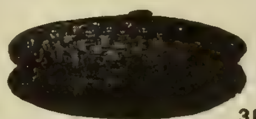
CHURCH FURNISHINGS

ILLUSTRATE YOUR SERMONS
Pastors! Write for Our Special Stereopticon Offer.
Detroit Stereopticon Supply Co., Detroit, Mich.

PEWS-PULPITS-S-S-SEATING
Write Today for Our "Catalog B"
Authoritative Guide on Church Seating: valuable suggestions on designs, finishes, seating plans, etc. Send Floor Plan and state fully your requirements
Blackboards, School Supplies, Catalog B1
School Desks, Catalog B2
American Seating Company
218 S. WABASH AV. CHICAGO
NEW YORK, BOSTON, PHILADELPHIA

HALLOWED HYMNS NEW and OLD
$25 per 100, not prepaid. 35 cents per copy by mail.
Returnable samples mailed to prospective purchasers.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York or Chicago

CHURCH PEWS
AND PULPIT FURNITURE
Globe Furniture Co., Ltd., 10 Park Place, Northville, Mich.

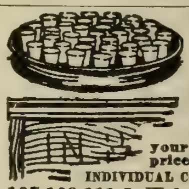


The International
The most practical Communion Service made.
Write us.
The International Church Supply Co.
3 Clinton Bldg, Columbus, O.

Supremis Floor Finish

was the first Floor Varnish offered to the public (1883). Its surpassing beauty, rapid drying and great durability have put it in the forefront of floor preservatives. The manufacturers also produce an unequaled line of Varnishes, Stains, Enamels and kindred goods for Automobiles, Carriages, Yachts, Railways, Fine Furniture and similar lines.

CHICAGO VARNISH CO.
CHICAGO Established 1865 NEW YORK



The Best Way

The use of the INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE has increased the attendance at the Lord's Supper in thousands of churches. It will do so for your church. Send for illustrated price list.
INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
107-109-111 S. Wabash Ave. Chicago

Pulpit Gowns
and Choir Vestments
Custom Tailoring
for Clergymen. Suits from $20.00
Pulpit Hangings
COX SONS & VINING
72-74 Madison Ave. New York

MINISTER AGENTS WANTED
Sell Typewriters For Us
SAMPLES AT WHOLESALE

Big commissions—monthly payments—trial shipments—new stock—visible models—special prices to all Ministers.

Write today for Agency offer. Mention The Continent.

Use the Coupon ☞
FOX TYPEWRITER COMPANY
GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

FROM THE CONTINENT
Name...
Address...

THE CONTINENT

CONTINUING THE INTERIOR (ESTABLISHED 1870) AND THE WESTMINSTER (ESTABLISHED 1904)

VOLUME 44, NO. 22 MAY 29, 1913 WHOLE NO. 2244

Nolan R. Best, Editor—156 Fifth Avenue, New York. Oliver R. Williamson, Publisher—509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago. William T. Ellis, Editor Afield—Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia. The McCormick Publishing Company, Proprietors

Knowing Good from Evil

"He knew no such thing as murderers or even criminals or 'good' people or 'bad' people; they were all to him men and indeed brothers."

These words stand out challengingly in an article which Brand Whitlock, the novelist, prints in The American Magazine concerning Samuel M. Jones—"Golden Rule Jones"—whom Whitlock ardently supported, and after his death succeeded, in the office of mayor for the city of Toledo, Ohio.

Written as affectionate praise, the statement nevertheless reveals, quite without the writer's consciousness of it, the one sorry defect in the personality of the "golden rule mayor" which destroyed what would have otherwise been a stalwart influence in America for the moralizing and humanizing of social, industrial and legal relations.

The biographer is keenly, even bitterly, aware of the failure, and seeks to account for it with cynical reflections on the insincerity of Christian citizenship. The church, he avers, has no use for the golden rule and is sure to persecute all who adopt the Master's ethics.

But although there is a large topic to be talked about in the defaults of the church from its Master's standards, that is not the consideration which explains why church people did not rally to the leadership of Sam Jones of Toledo. The church's reluctance was with just reason.

Wonderfully big-hearted though he was, and honestly devoted to the practice of the golden rule, Sam Jones of Toledo failed to understand the Jesus he wished to follow.

✠

Neither Jones nor any other social enthusiast could ever go a whit astray in taking men of every sort as men—accepting them in every condition as brothers. The most advanced and radical of modern democrats must learn a deal more of that particular lesson before they come abreast of Jesus. There is no danger of going too far in that direction.

But error and bewilderment ensue upon the supposition that in order to meet every man as a friend and brother one must count all men of a single unclassified sort.

That was the trouble with Jones—he was anxious to be brotherly with men in jail and penitentiary, men dissipated and dishonest and brutal, men idle and thriftless and derelict, and the only way that he knew to do it was to tell them they were just as good as other men, except for being unlucky and downtrodden and unhappy.

And in the same way sentimental sociologists are seeking yet to create universal fraternity among men by erasing lines between the upright and the wicked, and blanketing sin with the comprehensive indulgence of a theory that everybody does as well as his circumstances permit him to.

✠

This is the social creed which commonly claims to be original and simon-pure Christianity. Jesus pitied everybody, the sentimentalists say, and so do they; therefore, they are the only true Christians.

But they overlook one vast difference. Christ pitied everybody, but he classified people, and the biggest class he called sinners.

People said that Jesus kept company with sinners. He said so, too. And he did not evade by claiming that they were not very bad after all. Moreover, he told the sinners about their sins. If he had not, they would have stayed sinners.

The Master was unsurpassingly tender in his pities. Yet he was uncompromisingly rigid in his demands for righteousness—far too rigid to indulge weak-kneed excuses about unfavorable environment and unfortunate habits. He believed in a character able to defy environments; he knew how to produce it, too, in the worst of his brothers and sisters if they wanted it.

Fellowship with mankind—a democracy and brotherhood embracing the circle of humanity unrestricted—is noble indeed, but has small reason to call itself by the name of Jesus unless it is shot through with his zeal for a humanity redeemed from wickedness.

That mere semi-imitation of him which copies his gentle manners but feels none of his intensity of revolt from what is wrong and unrepented of, is a fabric of beautiful silken warp indeed, but the woof of it is shoddy, and it rends at the first using. It is called a mantle of charity, but it covers sins vainly.

✠

There are no limitations to the golden rule; Mayor Jones was correct about that, and he was justified in scorning Christians who fear they may follow the golden rule too far.

But the golden rule is a rule of righteousness and not a rule of unrighteousness. The man who keeps it must therefore keep it in the plane of right living and right purposes.

A judge sitting to deal with a criminal might reason:

"If I were this criminal standing here, I should doubtless wish the judge to overlook my evil-doing; therefore by the golden rule I shall acquit him."

But that would drag the golden rule through the filth of wickedness. Its righteous application will make the judge say:

"If this criminal sat in my place and I stood in his, his duty would be to deal deservingly with my wrong-doing; therefore by the golden rule, I must visit the penalties of justice on him."

That is to say, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you" calls for a standard of judgment; it is "whatsoever ye would" when you are looking out to the farthest limit of sight on the righteous ordering of God's universe; not "what ye would" when you think selfishly of creature comforts and pleasures nor lazily of how hard a man must try in order to be strong and faithful.

Such selfishness and laziness and timidity in men themselves, or their too indulgent excuse for such things in others, would make of the golden rule a rule of pewter—no rule at all but a cheap, twisty plaything.

✠

By all means, let us be pitiful for the erring—tender, compassionate, forever on guard against any vindictive harshness against them, ready always to get close down by the side of those sunken and mired and lend a hand to lift, never despairing of even the most degraded nor despising the foulest.

But God save us from ever thinking that there is "no difference" between such victims of sin and temptation and those who walk uprightly and live cleanly and speak truly and master themselves.

If there really were "no difference," our sympathy for wrongdoers would be utter vanity, for we should have nothing better to lift them up to.

And that is precisely the point where sentimental sociology meets its failure; its gentleness points to nothing.

The World

The "Civil War" in West Virginia

Several newspapers and magazines are referring to the strikes raging in West Virginia as a civil war. Both the miners and the mine operators have been fully armed with rifles and the latter with gatling guns and other weapons. Thousands of these weapons have been seized by the state militia, who are in control of the strike district, martial law having been proclaimed by Governor Hatfield. In the Paint Creek section of the Kanawha coal field "Mother Jones," an octogenarian labor leader, and about fifty other persons were arraigned before a military commission, charged with conspiracy and with being concerned in the killing of a mine bookkeeper at Mucklow. Trial by jury was refused to the defendants. Judge Littlepage of the state supreme court first issued and then recalled a writ of prohibition directed to the military tribunal. W. H. Thompson of Huntington, editor of a Socialist labor newspaper, and four of his employees were arrested by the state troops acting under orders of the governor and taken to Charleston. The fact that a large zone of the state has been under martial law for a year, together with charges that individual rights under the state and federal constitutions have been disregarded, has been brought to the attention of the United States senate, which last week ordered an investigation by a committee of three. The order for inquiry was presented by Senator Kern of Indiana, the leader of the Democratic majority in the upper house of Congress.

Senator Kern recently declared that the great news gathering agencies of the country have not furnished the public with information concerning the "astonishing proceedings" which have been taking place. A virtual reign of terror is said to have prevailed for months. Mrs. Cora Older of San Francisco recently wrote in a well known magazine that the judge advocate presiding over the court-martial at Paint Creek is the Associated Press correspondent and that he and a detective for certain mine owners have decided who should or should not be admitted as spectators of the trial. Witnesses were excluded immediately after being heard.

In the recent debate in the senate Senator Borah, supporting the resolution of inquiry, cited the case of one Milligan who was arrested, tried and sentenced to be hanged before a military tribunal in southern Indiana during the reconstruction days at a time when the civil courts were not open. The court then set aside the military verdict as contravening the constitutional guaranties of life and liberty. Governor Hatfield's reply to this and similar statements has been that martial law and the presence of the state troops were necessary to preserve the state from anarchy.

Facts Harder to Get than in the Balkans

Commenting on the so-called civil war, The Richmond Virginian recently explained that "it is more difficult to get facts from this mining country than from the Balkan war, and really more dangerous. The country is a succession of steep mountains and deep gorges. All the stations are coal towns. The people are divided into two classes—friends and foes of the mine operators. Both sides have been taught by experience to be suspicious of all strangers, hostile to newspaper correspondents, and reticent. Feeling is so strong that a neutral is outside the general comprehension and likely to be regarded as an enemy or a spy by union men, working miners, operators, citizens and soldiers alike. This is no cause for wonder considering the reckless lies that have been told and written, and bitter partisanship manifested. Senator Kern and Governor Hatfield in their exactly clashing views of the situation represent what may be heard every day in the region itself."

The Black Diamond, an organ of the coal trade, recently printed a report giving what purported to be actual figures of the earnings of the miners, who are supposed to be paid insufficient wages and otherwise mistreated. The Black Diamond editor says: "We picked up the first pay roll that came under our notice. At the top of the page was listed an ordinary miner who had worked twenty-two days in March. The gross amount due him was $175. The check-off for rent, commissary and doctor was $40. There was paid him in net cash $135. The last man on the page had a gross income of $178 and received net cash $132. These were not extraordinary records." On the other hand, it is asserted that the miners in many cases are not paid in cash at all, but are given scrip or merchandise orders.

The mine owners have steadily resisted the unions and declared that the organization of them is financed by rival owners in other states. The miners' union agents assert that they are fighting against intolerable conditions. The notorious Industrial Workers of the World have taken advantage of the trouble to attack the unions in the rear and to spread their doctrine of general revolution and destruction. The fight between their emissaries and the union organizers is intense. The situation appears to have grown worse rather than better of late, and it is certain that a federal investigation and disinterested and accurate publicity will go far toward clearing the atmosphere.

Mikado's Illness Postpones Land Question

The serious illness of the Japanese emperor served to postpone developments in the alien land ownership controversy, which reached its climax with the signing of the California bill by Governor Johnson and the transmission of President Wilson's message to Japan stating the position of this country with regard to the question. The President promptly sent a message of sympathy to the mikado, and the delay will doubtless give some opportunity for the overexploited war spirit in Japan to abate. The Japanese are exceptionally loyal to their sovereign, and the condition of his health is to them a matter of supreme importance.

Representative Bartholdt of Missouri last Friday introduced in Congress a constitutional amendment which would vest in the federal government all authority to treat with nonresidents and aliens, thereby making it impossible for any one state to complicate or embarrass national or international relations.

Czar and King Meet Kaiser at Berlin

King, czar and kaiser have been meeting and fraternizing in Berlin, the excuse for the unusual gathering being the wedding last Saturday of the kaiser's only daughter, Princess Victoria Luise, to Prince Ernst, son of the duke of Cumberland. The three rulers have 600,000,000 subjects and their domains cover two-thirds of the area of the globe. While the reception accorded by Germany to the visiting monarchs was as nearly alike as possible, yet extraordinary precautions were taken in the case of the czar to guard against assassins, but his "brother of England" drove to the palace in an open motor car without any special escort. Except for a brief interval the czar remained in seclusion, but King George and Queen Mary freely visited various points of interest.

King George, in replying to an address presented to him by British residents of Berlin, spoke earnestly of the necessity of maintaining world peace. The marriage still further related the two royal houses, as the bridegroom is a great-grandson of Queen Victoria.

The royal wedding is regarded as marking a political rapprochement between Germany and England. Emperor William pardoned three British spies who were imprisoned on a charge of "espionage," and in Berlin it is believed that King George's visit is more than a purely family affair. Viscount Morley, the Nestor of the British cabinet, lately visited Berlin, presumably to discuss a settlement of the Bagdad railway and Persian gulf questions, and an Anglo-German understanding is being talked of in Berlin and London.

Death of Flagler, the Man Who Remade a State

Henry M. Flagler, one of the noted figures of recent American industrial and railroad history, died last week at his beautiful home in Florida, aged 83 years. Mr. Flagler was one of the founders of the Standard Oil Company and is reputed to have been one of the richest men in the country, although born the son of a poor Presbyterian minister in Canandaigua, New York. He left home at the age of 14 and thereafter made his own way. His first job was at a country store in Ohio at $5 a month and board, which in ten months was increased 50 cents a month. Here, he said, he was contented but not satisfied. "I have always been contented but never satisfied." Later he became acquainted with John D. Rockefeller, who was a grain and produce commission merchant, and borrowed money to go into partnership with him in oil refining. This business in 1870 developed into the Standard Oil Company. Concerning this period of his life, Mr. Flagler remarked: "We worked night and day making good oil as cheaply as possible and selling it for all we could get."

Apart from his early connection with the oil business, Mr. Flagler's chief claim to fame is based on his great railroad construction work. Of him it is literally true that he changed the map of a state. In the late '80s he began erecting great hotels which brought thousands of persons to the state annually, and at the same time he developed railway and steamship lines. Then came his most ambitious project, namely, the building of a railroad in the ocean, for in a sense that is what the Florida East Coast railway is. The line is built across and along the Florida Keys, spanning long intermediate stretches of salt water, from Miami to Key West, the most southern city in the United States. The completion of the road brought the city of Havana, Cuba, within ninety miles of railroad transportation to any part of the United States. At the outset the undertaking was called "Flagler's folly," but one difficulty after another was encountered and successfully surmounted and the work is regarded as one of the engineering wonders of the world. It is estimated that the value of the taxable property in the counties exclusively reached by the Flagler roads increased over $50,000,000 since he begon his labors.

Mr. Flagler is credited with having made large donations to churches and charities of which no record was ever kept.

* *

Mayors and College Presidents at School

It sounded a good deal like a joke when the mayor of Philadelphia, the mayor of Atlantic City and a hundred prominent men of Philadelphia, New York, Boston and other eastern cities, including several college presidents, announced that they were going to school at the University of Wisconsin, but sure enough they turned up at Madison last week for a three days' course in municipal economics. The series of lectures which the distinguished students went to attend was on labor, capital, education, social service and administration. Dean Louis Reber was the chief lecturer, assisted by Professor Gillin and other experts. The Chicago School of Civics and Philanthropy installed a special exhibit.

Mayor Blankenburg, white haired and gray bearded, was given an enthusiastic reception by the younger student body, and responded with a brief speech in behalf of the 1,625,000 "stockholders" of the city of Philadelphia corporation. Mayor William Riddle of Atlantic City was accompanied by his wife. She said that she wanted to learn about municipal government, because she expected to be voting pretty soon. Mr. Cook, the Philadelphia director of public works, is given credit for engineering the tour.

* *

New President of Cuba Peacefully Inaugurated

General Mario G. Menocal was last week inaugurated as third president of the republic of Cuba. The ceremonies were elaborate but orderly and augured well for Cuba's future. The new president is noted for civil even more than military achievements. He is a civil engineer by profession and received his education in the United States. He rendered important service to the Americans at the time of the Spanish evacuation and was appointed chief of police of Havana by General Ludlow, at that time civil governor. His management of his department is said to have been exemplary. President Wilson sent a cordial message of congratulation upon the peaceful transfer of power from one party to another, emphasizing the desire of this nation that the future of the Cuban nation shall be one of uninterrupted advance toward prosperity and security—which would preclude another American intervention.

In view of the quasi-protectorate of the United States over Cuba, the following paragraph from President Wilson's address, similar to language which has previously been addressed to Mexico, is taken as indicative of the policy of the government: "The United States has nothing to seek in Cuba, except the lasting interest of the people, the security of popular government, and the development of such personal and commercial relations between Cuba and the United States as will redound to the profit and advantage of both and interfere with the rights and liberties of neither."

* *

A Law Against Gossiping in Wisconsin

Wisconsin has in the past been described as a political experiment station, and recently the legislature made an experiment in the field of morals. The Tompkins bill, providing a penalty of fine or imprisonment for gossipers, has been passed and signed by the governor. It extends the law of slander by forbidding anyone, in the presence or hearing of any other except the person slandered, maliciously to speak of any person in such a manner as shall impair his or her reputation for virtue or expose him or her to hatred, contempt or ridicule.

* *

—Politicians, lawyers and the general public have had their attention and interest drawn this week to the little city of Marquette, Michigan, the scene of the trial of Theodore Roosevelt's suit for $10,000 libel against George A. Newett, publisher of The Iron Ore newspaper, which last year accused Colonel Roosevelt of drunkenness.

Religious World

Directions for American Delegates to Aberdeen

The date originally announced for the opening of the Pan-Presbyterian Council to be held this summer in Aberdeen, Scotland, has been pushed forward one day—from Tuesday, June 17, to Wednesday, June 18. The reason is the probability that delegates would be unable to arrive at Aberdeen in time for the Tuesday opening, since vessels bearing the American commissioners will not likely dock at either Southampton or Liverpool until Sunday, which would not leave time to reach Aberdeen and get settled comfortably before Tuesday evening. Dr. G. D. Matthews, the general secretary, advises delegates landing at Glasgow to wait there for the Tuesday morning train, which will take them to Aberdeen by 2 in the afternoon and give them the company of the Irish delegates for that stage of the journey. Delegates landing at Liverpool can also reach Glasgow in time for this same train. Delegates landing at Southampton he advises to go to London and take trains from there through Edinburgh. Reaching Aberdeen station, the visitors are asked to walk to the Young Men's Christian Association building, which is within a distance of about 200 yards, where they will find the office of the council and will be assigned to homes.

At 2:30 on Wednesday, in St. Machar's cathedral in Old Aberdeen, Dr. George Adam Smith, head of Aberdeen University, will preach the opening sermon and Dr. David James Burrell of New York will deliver the presidential address. The whole delegation will be entertained at tea in the college buildings at 5, and at 8:30 will attend a reception given by the lord provost in the Aberdeen art gallery.

* *

Evangelical Test Not in Danger

The Continent has received the following letter from Fred S. Goodman, international secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association:

"Your news item May 22 regarding the vote on the evangelical basis at the international convention of the North American Young's Men's Christian Associations at Cincinnati conveys an erroneous impression.

"From this item it might naturally be inferred that a very large minority of the delegates were in favor of abandoning the 'Portland test,' which has stood for forty-four years. This is the very impression which a few opponents of that basis are seeking to convey in the light of the vote, 521 to 392. But the fact is that that question was not voted on at all. The commission of fifteen presented two recommendations, one reaffirming the Portland basis and the other offering as an alternative basis for such associations as might prefer it, the basis on which denominations have been invited to membership in the Federal Council of Churches of North America. One member of the commission opposed adding this alternative and the vote was simply on that question to strike out the second recommendation. All of the commission wanted the basis reaffirmed.

"A very small fraction of the minority would have voted against the Portland test itself, which has never been in danger, though a number of association leaders favor a better definition of the word 'evangelical.' Neither in this vote nor in that on the report of the commission of five on the training agencies were the lines drawn between the so-called conservatives and liberals. Other questions entered into both votes. That the convention was overwhelmingly conservative in the best sense of that word, and would have so voted had the issue been drawn, was perfectly clear to anyone who knew the facts. With very few exceptions the great leaders among the laymen, and the secretaries—local, state and international—and the teachers in our schools are progressive men, with their minds open and their eyes to the front; but they know the association's record of increasing usefulness to the church of Jesus Christ at home and in foreign lands, and its steadily growing success in religious education, evangelism and missionary extension, have been made on the basis of personal loyalty to evangelical truth and to evangelical churches, of which it is a vital part. The association movement is, and ever must remain, a loyal and humble servant of these churches and its leaders believers in and exponents of evangelical truth."

* *

—Pride is usually the estimate that one puts upon what he doesn't have.

—Advice is too often a needle threaded at the wrong end.

Editorial

Dangerous Approval

THERE IS A DEEP philosophy underlying Jesus' familiar word, "Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you." That is nothing against popular favor. It only means that there are always some men whose approval is to be dreaded. The things which they approve cannot be of the right sort. When, therefore, a man has taken such a position that everyone approves him, it is obvious that there must be some element of evil in his position, or a certain group of men would be sure to find fault with it.

Probably this is as important for the consideration of ministers as any other class of men. It is the minister's business to have the favor of men in order to do his work. There is no merit in his making enemies. There are certain traits which he ought to manifest, which will meet the approval of all men, but they are not peculiar to him as a minister. Everybody approves kindliness and helpfulness, but there easily comes a time when kindliness is only softness, and helpfulness is only fussiness. When a man finds that he is meeting universal approval, he ought to ask himself in great frankness whether he is paying too high a price for it.

An eminent minister of our times went to a brother minister with real concern a little while ago to say that everywhere he went he was greeted by crowds who wanted to hear him preach. Everything he read about himself was favorable. Everybody seemed to approve him. It raised the great question in his own mind: Was he, then, saying nothing which the human heart resented or recognized as adverse to itself? He feared that he was winning the ear of the public by some claptrap or beating of cymbals, instead of by sounding the clear note of the gospel. That was a fair and wise dread, fortunately not necessary in his case, but necessary in the case of some other men.

This danger of ministers appears in their attitude on moral questions. We wonder how the minister felt who read in the papers recently the chorus of approval of his attitude on the saloon question, as it was expressed by brewers and saloon men and a lax mayor. The mayor held him up as a model to other ministers, saying that here was a man who preached the gospel of the lowly Nazarene, and did not bother himself about politics. The saloon men said that if the church would only take such a sane position as his it would command the following of very many more men than today. The brewers declared that it was refreshing to find a minister who took such broad and liberal views of liberty in these days when most ministers were so narrow. If this approval did not give our ministerial friend some wakeful moments at night, we are sorry, for it was of the most dangerous order.

Sometimes a young minister flatters himself on the fact that everybody in the town thinks well of him. May he not instead ask whether that does not mean that his attitude on moral questions has been a weak one, until everybody is able to count him as on his side? It is very necessary that on moral questions a man be explicitly on one side or the other, though he may take his position with such manifest fineness of spirit that people on the other side will commend him, even though they cannot commend his position.

This danger of the wrong approval appears also in the matter of a minister's faith. It is easy to take such positions that men who have no faith at all, or who hold a very loose faith, will think that the minister stands exactly with them. When an ardent Unitarian came to a minister at the close of a sermon in which he had made some reference to Christ, to say that he was glad to hear him express himself so, because that was exactly the way he felt about Christ, it must have given the minister a considerable shock. He had evidently spoken in too low terms of his Lord. No man who is preaching the gospel of the Son of God wants to preach it in such wise that the deity of his Lord is obscured, or so that men who deny that deity approve him too fully. The same thing appears frequently in declarations about the future, either of punishment or of reward.

The approval of some men is bought too dearly in matters of faith. It may as well be recognized first as last, that the Christian view of life is so different from the world's view that the world cannot approve a plain and clear statement of it. When it does approve with enthusiasm a man must ask himself very seriously whether he has not paid too dear a price by misstating his faith.

More ministers perhaps are in danger, however, from approval in the matter of the Christian life and its practices. It is so easy to lower the standards under which the life is lived. There comes a time when a man finds himself eager to be approved as liberal and broad. He does not stand against certain practices of the world. He does not draw the line on certain amusements. He is "broad" and does not expect Christians to be odd or peculiar. That is a dangerous position in which a minister finds himself.

The truth is, he cannot afford to be strait-laced in the bad sense of the word. The equal truth is, that he cannot afford to be loose in any sense of the word. If he wants everybody's approval, and especially if he wants the approval of the looser people, he is gravely in peril. There is no safeguard against this except to insist rigidly that there is only one approval which really counts. That is the approval of a good conscience, which is kept constantly void of offense against the gospel of Christ.

Reflections on a Moderatorial Election

The dramatic manner of choosing Dr. John Timothy Stone to moderate the largest of the trio of Presbyterian Assemblies at Atlanta was in itself a graphic demonstration of the Christian love which Christian love begets. Of Dr. Stone in his parish work in Chicago and in wider relations with fellow citizens and fellow Presbyterians elsewhere nothing else is so observable as the unceasing outgo of his abounding good will to everybody he meets. And true to the scriptural principle—"With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again"—the unexpected mention of Dr. Stone's name midway of the moderatorial election evoked a spring of good will toward him whose flood was not to be resisted. Primarily his promotion to be moderator was an act of love and affection, and as beautifully impulsive as an act of love should be.

But there was also an element of protest in it which must not be overlooked. The feeling that moderator-making had become among U. S. A. Presbyterians too much a matter of prior calculation gave zest to the privilege of voting for a man not calculated on —especially a man who had not himself been figuring calculations. The skepticism which could not imagine a man strong enough for the moderatorship who had not aspired to the place was suddenly confounded as the Assembly quite jubilantly gave its voice and vote for a man unmistakably capable yet well known to be totally innocent of ambition for the honor.

Of course the denouement was for the moment trying to Dr. Alexander and Dr. Palmer. They had both diligently aimed to keep within bounds of undoubted propriety while their friends spoke of them as available moderatorial possibilities; nevertheless, at the crisis they found themselves involved in what people were calling the wreck of a "system." But it is only just to them to observe that they were victims rather of revolt against practices of other years than of condemnation for their own attitudes. Practically all that could be made the subject of immediate criticism lay in the acrimony that began to develop in hotel lobbies the night before election and the rather too partisan particularity with which some of Dr. Alexander's supporters counted votes before hatching.

But all candidates and all champions of their respective names must by this time be glad, we believe, that Dr. Stone's election has so effectually depreciated set-up campaigns to capture the moderatorial chair. Doubtless Christian principles should resist the temptation to ecclesiastical politics even where the tradition of its success is strong. But it will certainly be easier for all concerned to eschew wire-pulling when the prospect of its futility is thus heightened. So even gentlemen who feel themselves unjustly classed with church politicians can rejoice that by their vicarious disappointments the real church politicians have received notice of "nothing doing" in the political line.

—Preaching to his people with an earnest appeal to bring their children to church, Dr. A. V. V. Raymond of Buffalo spoke vigorously against the idea that it is too much to expect a child to attend both Sunday school and public worship. Said he: "There is a difference between the church service and the Sunday school. One meets a need that the other does not. Both are necessary to true religious nurture. One cannot be sacrificed for the sake of the other. And the time required for both is surely not unreasonable considering the interests involved, and does not make an excessive drain on the vital energies of the child with all the remainder of the day leisure time and a Saturday holiday intervening between the tasks of the week and Sunday."

—Dr. Howard A. Kelly of Baltimore, a widely known Christian physician, has put out a "revised price list"—the valuation of things that he is going to adhere to henceforth. This is the way he ranks now his interests as a Christian man: "First, my duty to work for civic righteousness; next, my family; last, my profession."

Days of Unity and Purpose in Atlanta

THIS ATTEMPT to tell here the story of what happened in Atlanta last week while a trio of Presbyterian legislatures sat there side by side in deliberation and new enactment, is necessarily foredoomed to a sad inadequacy. Do the best that editors may or can in the limited space of a weekly church journal, it is predictable with all certainty that much of human interest and edifying incident will remain unwritten and unprinted. The utmost to be hoped for is that some allusion may cover the most of the subjects which actually condition progress and establish intelligent esprit de corps in the three denominations concerned.

There can hardly be more than an allusion to the successive night mass meetings in the Atlanta Auditorium, where colored evangelization on Monday evening, home missions Tuesday, foreign missions Wednesday and education Thursday appealed to great audiences of commissioners, visitors and townspeople. Among the various speakers it risks invidious distinction to mention any without naming all, but apparently Doctors Arthur J. Brown, Charles L. Thompson, John Balcom Shaw and James I. Vance made the largest public impression.

Even more regrettable is the necessary omission of any sufficient account of what the good missionary women did and said in their foreign and in their home rallies as they met in both interests within the week. And of the most important feature of all the week—the evangelistic meetings held by Dr. Biederwolf, Mr. Mahy, Mr. Trotter and Mr. Higgins—it shall have to suffice for the present to say that this innovation (nothing like it had ever been tried in an Assembly city before) was really the very finest and worthiest factor connected with the Assembly season in Atlanta. In the theater, in the hotel lobbies, on the streets and in several big Atlanta factories the voices of Presbyterian visitors preaching the gospel aroused echoes that will ring farther and longer than any sounds of argument or oratory emanating from the Assembly floors. A typical instance of the influence is that of a young traveling man who heard preaching in the Piedmont lobby and afterwards said to Secretary Mahy: "I have often forgotten my wife and baby at home. But now I am going back to them this time clean."

Of the effect of this intercommunion and fellowship between Presbyterians of varying titles in Atlanta an estimate is impossible now—or perhaps ever. But the original purpose avowedly in bringing the four denominations together was to make people say, "See how these Presbyterians love one another." And people are saying it.

Home Board Vindicated

Country Life Department Left in Somewhat Dubious Position, but It Is Expected to Continue

The issue which had created most pre-Assembly discussion was undoubtedly the attack upon the Home Mission Board in New York. But after commissioners reached Atlanta confidence grew rapidly in an amicable solution. The Executive Commission had not completed its inquiry when Assembly convened and nightly sessions in company with secretaries and members of the board were devoted to threshing out the subject.

When, at the Tuesday afternoon session, the commission made its report all was expectancy. Regret was expressed by Dr. Fulton for the publicity that had been given the criticism of the board. A sweeping and unequivocal declaration was then made by the commission to the effect that there had been "no misappropriation of funds, no malfeasance in office, no question of the integrity or efficiency of the officers of the board, and no usurpation of authority." This was vindication unmistakable.

The only question left at issue was one of method. The systems of both district oversight and departmental organization were commended, but the former, it was advised, should be only temporary. As fast as they can make themselves unnecessary the superintending force should be withdrawn and the supervisory functions of synods and presbyteries enhanced. The expectation was indicated that the Mexican and Indian departments could likewise in time make themselves needless. Larger salaries for missionaries were also counseled.

The one radical recommendation was for the discontinuance of the country life department, its functions to be taken over by the presbyteries and by the social service department. The Labor temple is to be turned over, as had already been arranged, to the Presbytery of New York. The hour was late and the report was adopted without discussion.

The matter was by no means ended, however. The friends of "country life" declined to let Dr. Wilson passively fill the Jonah role and reconsideration was talked about. Wednesday morning afforded the time when the standing committee on home missions through its chairman, Dr. Maitland Alexander, gave a sweeping indorsement of the board, unqualifiedly laying the cause upon the heart of the church and paying a rare tribute to the men on the field. The most notable recommendation was, however, a definition of the supremacy of synodical and presbyterial authority over all board representatives.

Then followed the board speeches. It was a great hour—strong men battling eloquently for their work and winning a great victory. Associate Secretary J. Ernest McAfee made the principal address—a keen, polished, penetrating exposition of the board's policies. He especially stressed the fact that the board last year paid more than ever to western work and larger salaries than ever to missionaries.

Mr. McAfee's eulogy of his superior, Dr. Charles L. Thompson, prepared the way for the ovation which was given the veteran secretary when he arose. "Ovation" is the word. The applause was mighty and long sustained, and then the men rose to their feet in tribute. The mien and courage of a lion marked Dr. Thompson's great speech. A deep passion thrilled through it. The sense of injustice touched his sentences with flame.

Then the chairman of the Executive Commission, Dr. Matthews, arose and declared that the action of the commission should be understood as the stamp of approval upon the board. He said that the recommendation for the discontinuance of the department of country life was only a suggestion to the board for such action, if found practicable. As a board member, Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin promptly assured the Assembly that under this warrant the board would continue the department for the year. Superintendent Warren H. Wilson made a strong statement that appealed remarkably to the commissioners. And thus the matter was left.

A Secretary Resigns

Startling Outcome from the Transfer of Half a Million of Kennedy Bequest to Church Loan Fund

An explosion which startled the U. S. A. Assembly like a shock of earthquake followed the presentation of the report on church erection by Dr. John F. Patterson, the chairman. The report was conjoined with a statement from the Executive Commission touching the long agitated proposition for putting half a million from the Kennedy legacy into loans on church buildings. When this Kennedy bequest of nearly $3,000,000 was received the board voted to invest it all as permanent endowment in Manhattan real estate mortgages. But where so many Presbyterian congregations are obliged to borrow money on their church properties the question must soon arise whether this money would not be more wisely employed if loaned out on mortgage to the churches. It would thus bring as good or better interest and would be virtually as secure, while doing direct the service for which the donor designed it.

The Assembly of 1912 finally directed that an experiment in this policy should be made with $500,000 transferred from the endowment to such a loan fund for the benefit of churches in debt. Dr. D. J. McMillan, secretary of the Church Erection Board, was intensely dissatisfied at this and opposed the Assembly's order as legally impossible, but at the time it was supposed that Dr. McMillan and the minority of eight board members who stood with him had acquiesced. But instead they came to Assembly with an opinion from rival lawyers setting forth that the proposed diversion of Kennedy funds would be an outright and unlawful breach of trust.

In order to confirm the transfer of the half million in question it was necessary for two-thirds of the Assembly to vote in favor of it. Ordinarily the count of a standing vote would have been thought sufficient. With this formidable opposition looming up, backed by legal opinion, the utmost care was requisite, so on this account a roll call was ordered—a resort perhaps without precedent in Presbyterian legislation. And the result was most impressive—yeas 619, nays 54. A hundred or more commissioners refused to vote.

Dr. McMillan was dazed, for he had believed he had the church with him. But he immediately realized that such an outcome amounted to a vote of "want of confidence" in his administration and gallantly accepting the tacit rule of representative government, he acknowledged the defeat by offering his resignation. The Assembly referred the resignation to the board, which will accept it at the first meeting it holds in its New York office. Probably some members on the minority will also resign. It has been long since the church has seen such a dramatic overthrow in its official circles.

Tangle Over Union Seminary

Leaving the Whole Disputed Subject to Rest for a Year with a Committee Seems the Best Way Out

The most contentious and exciting matter arising in the U. S. A. Assembly was the accounting rendered by the committee appointed two years ago to negotiate for "closer relations" with Union Theological Seminary in New York City. The committee succeeded in complicating the whole question to about the uttermost possible point of confusion by splitting itself by diverse opinion into three sections. There were, in consequence, three reports—the majority and two minority opinions—for the Assembly to consider.

The first of these was signed by the chairman, John F. Carson, and five of his fellow members. The second was presented by Elder Elisha Perkins of Baltimore, who was supported by Dr. John R. Davies of Philadelphia. The third (designated as the second minority report) had only one sponsor—Dr. Frank C. Monfort, editor of The Herald and Presbyter of Cincinnati, who had served for only a few months on the committee in succession to Dr. W. H. Foulkes. As originally appointed, the committee had been unanimous in the decision that it had nothing to do with the old puzzle of Union's alleged legal responsibility to the General Assembly. But Dr. Monfort, when he came on the field, was unwilling to abide by this decision and insisted on opening up that legal question to the depths.

The report of the majority told the Assembly that the committee had had very friendly association with the directors and faculty of Union. The sole direct proposition from the committee laid before the seminary authorities was a request for more adequate instruction for Presbyterian students touching Presbyterian doctrines and church organization. The committee hoped that one or two new professors could be appointed for this service, but the seminary responded that it had no money for additional chairs. The best it could do was what it gladly promised—the creation of one or two courses of lectures on particular Presbyterian themes which acceptable Presbyterian ministers would be invited to deliver during the seminary year.

A Statement of Faith from Seminary Leaders

Besides this, the seminary directors had responded informally to a suggestion that the committee would be aided by a frank statement of the religious faith under which the institution is conducted. Embodied in a letter written by President Francis Brown and submitted for approval to both the directors and the professors, this statement was examined with peculiar interest by all commissioners. It was found to be in no sense a formal creed, but a warm expression of working Christian faith. On many crucial points the professors of Union declared themselves emphatically. They did not hesitate to avow their faith in the deity of Christ. The paragraph on this subject read as follows:

> "We speak of the kingdom of Christ, and the kingdom of God, interchangeably, because Christ is, for every one of us, God manifest in the flesh. We declare, joyfully, the deity of Christ, never disassociating this from the humanity of Christ, just as we claim, for our comfort and assurance, the humanity of Christ, knowing well that in him is deity also."

Relative to the atonement and to the authority of the Scriptures, this utterance was equally positive though still entirely unconventional. The following sentences show the tendency of the document upon this point.

> "God's loving purpose in Jesus Christ is redemption from sin. Jesus is the Saviour from sin. By his life of loving righteousness, by his sufferings and death, by his resurrection and glorious life, he removes the barriers, brings us forgiveness and makes us one with God. . . . The Bible is to us the fundamental charter of our faith. It is a book of history and of divine revelation. Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. We cannot look at it in a mechanical way. It is a book of life from which we ourselves draw nourishment, and which we pass on to others with the confidence that it will do for them what it has done for us and has done for the Christian generations. It is a book absolutely unique. To it mainly we owe our knowledge of God's dealings with men in all the early ages; to it above all we owe our knowledge of Jesus Christ our Lord. In it we commune with him. We use it in our teaching and in our devotion. We find human elements in it . . . but those human elements we recognize without hesitation and without fear because we are so sure of the divine power in it. The results of critical inquiry enhance for us its religious value."

Dr. Carson, the chairman, who has been so ill for several months and who is now on five months' additional leave of absence from his church, was, of course, unable to be present, and Dr. D. G. Wylie of New York made the speech for the majority. It was his view that the committee had made decided progress in cultivation of good will between the seminary and representatives of the church. But the majority did not regard it adequate progress and proposed that they be given another year for negotiation.

Over against this Dr. Davies spoke for the first minority report, which set out that since any organic relation between the seminary and the church was obviously impossible, it was useless to continue the committee longer. These two addresses had been in quite a friendly temper, but when Dr. Monfort rose to expound his voluminous second minority report, the polemic spirit began to dominate the discussion and observers remarked that the "taste of blood" had got into the mouths of the commissioners.

Union Belabored and Then Defended

Dr. Monfort stated his premises bluntly—Union Seminary in 1870 submitted itself to the control of the U. S. A. Assembly. While thus continuing a distinctively Presbyterian institution, it received much of its endowment from those who regarded it bound to teach forever the Westminster standards. Since 1892 it had ceased to acknowledge the authority of the Assembly and since 1904 has ceased to require its professors to sign the Westminster Confession, thus taking the position of an independent interdenominational school. All this, Dr. Monfort insisted, constitutes an absolute breach of faith. The whole tenor of his argument was in favor of suing the directors in the civil courts in order to reclaim the seminary property to Presbyterian uses.

He supported this legal argument by long and varied accusations against the doctrinal position of Presbyterian professors teaching in the institution. The statement they furnished the committee he admitted to be almost unimpeachable as far as it went, but he held that its omissions were designed to cover heresies which these professors were unwilling to confess before the church at large. Quite carried away with violent feeling, Dr. Monfort closed his address by loudly denouncing "the Baal of Hindu philosophy" as enthroned in Union and calling on the church to choose between that philosophy and the gospel of Jesus Christ.

President Francis Brown was the speaker set forward on behalf of the seminary to reply to these accusations. He spoke with studied calm and gave the Assembly an admirable exhibition of cool logic

(Continued on page 770)

Conviction Reversed for Six Korean Prisoners

It is "good tidings" indeed which comes by cable from Korea—that the six most prominent Christian defendants in the Korean conspiracy trial, the only ones still held in custody of the 123 prisoners originally indicted, have received from the eminent Presbyterian jurist, Judge Watanabe, sitting in the supreme court of the province, a decision annulling their conviction in the court below. This does not, it is true, set them at liberty, for that is not within the power of Judge Watanabe's court, which considers questions of law and practice alone, and not questions of fact. The six defendants, including the famous Baron Yun, are therefore remanded to the court of appeals for a rehearing.

The point of law on which Judge Watanabe reversed the court below is the definition of seditious conspiracy. He holds that to complete the crime of conspiracy there must have been not only an intent to commit a seditious act but some measure of actual preparation to carry out the intent. Of such preparation the record showed no hint, and the lower court must now produce evidence thereof or acquit the prisoners. Confidence that the prosecution can bring forward nothing of this sort makes it look certain that the retrial must result in acquittal. If that comes to pass the complete vindication of such a large group of innocent prisoners will be the greatest triumph of civil justice over military oppression that modern history has beheld. In any case, Judge Watanabe has justified the international confidence reposed in him.

DR. JOWETT'S MESSAGE

Spiritual Dress at Lord's Table

IN ONE OF THE parables most laden with awe and severity the Lord Jesus describes a man who presumed to be a guest at a wedding "not having a wedding garment." The guest had defied the host, insisting on coming to the feast as he pleased. Ordinary courtesies had been disregarded, and with unpardonable rudeness the man had pushed his way in to the feast. What should we think of a bridesmaid who brusquely insisted upon wearing whatever her fancy dictated, whether gay or somber, fitting or unfitting, and did it without consideration for the general harmony of the circle and in blunt defiance of the wishes of the bride?

But the conduct which would be intolerable in purely human relationships is very common in our relationships to the Lord. When we go as guests to the Lord's supper, that wonderful festival of grace, what is the proper attire? What does the Host wish us to wear? Has he made known his will? For surely, in a matter of this kind, his will is our law; or rather, his wish should be our delight. What, then, has he said about the spiritual garments which he desires his guests to wear at his table? I think we have three clear directions given to us—the garments must be white, and they must be modest, and they must be graceful.

The Whiteness of a Purified Soul

The first necessity in all appropriate attire is the white robe. Everywhere the word of God emphasizes this necessity: "Let thy garments be always white"; "clothed in fine linen, clean and white." Now the only uncleanness is sin. That is the only thing on God's earth that defiles. We may alter the name of sin, but we do not alter its nature. We may go to poetry for some more euphonious word, or we may go to philosophy for some less exacting word, or we may go to popular speech for some less threatening word; but when we have given the thing a new label, its defiling quality still remains. Sin is always uncleanness.

There are two things which can be unfailingly said of sin and its attendant guilt. First, sin always stains. A little while ago the snow had fallen through the night, and I was out in the early morning. Just before me on the road there was a gas cart, with drops of tar dripping upon the virgin robe of the snow. And so it is with the virgin robe of the soul; every sin, every falsehood, every so-called white lie, every deflection from truth and righteousness, deposits its defilement and leaves a black stain all along the way. And nothing that we can devise can wash out the stain. I can do nothing with it. It is possible to deal with a grease spot upon my clothes—some searching agent may drive it out—but no cleansing or refining ministry has ever been devised for the removal of the sin stain; no form of human culture can eradicate it. Even when I may think that the stain has vanished, some circumstance arises which revives it again, as a hidden blot of invisible ink shows its dark face when exposed to the heat of the fire.

And secondly, the defilement is attended by destruction. It is like the stain of some corrosive acid, which burns into a substance and is the minister of destruction. When sin falls upon the robe of the affections, the affections are not merely defiled; they are consumed. When sin falls upon the will, the will is not only rendered unclean, it begins to be eaten away. As the apostle Paul expresses it, sin "will eat as doth a gangrene." It is like a fiery poison; it burns a character into holes.

And yet the requirement of God is that his guests should wear the white robe. How, then, can I go to the feast? Happily, the Lord of the feast is in the robing room as well as in the chamber where he entertains his guests. And by all the testimony of the word, and by all the witness of experience, he is both competent and willing to deal with the rags and the defilement. Nothing can cope with inherent sin but holiness. Nothing can wash out the stain of sin but undefiled affection—the holy sacrificial love of the eternal God. "They have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." Their robes were made clean in the holy life of the Lord, a holy life which manifested itself in unutterable love, in inconceivable sacrifice, the love which revealed itself at the cross. It is in the power of the cross that we find the master of our sin and guilt. In the power of his holy love everything deadly dies, our sin stain changes into purity and our raggedness is transformed into wholeness and holiness. In Christ Jesus we can find a vesture without seam and undefiled.

But the robes are not only to be white, they are to be modest. The Host does not wish us to appear in his presence in loud and showy attire. Many of the Pharisees, who were good religious people by the standards of their day, were yet lacking in modesty, in reticence, in wise reserve. They "loved the garish day"; they delighted to talk about their attire and to show off their religious clothes. The Master said they loved an audience to witness their piety and their generosity. They made a parade of their garments. They spoke about their private religious life, instead of allowing it to speak for itself. It is not that they had no goodness, but they made an exhibition of it, and thereby spoiled it. And so the counsel of the apostle is this: "Be clothed with humility." Our robes must be white and not spectacular. There must be no proud obtrusion, no self-conceit, no "showiness" in the presence of Christ. We are not to sit at the Lord's table puffed up with the sense of our superiority, and conscious of our merits and other people's defects.

And if we are to become clothed with humility, how shall we set about it? I suppose that pride is always begotten by looking down, and that humility is born by looking up. Pride has looked down and seen somebody apparently inferior to itself, and thus become uplifted in conscious and unattractive superiority. The Pharisee looked at the publican, felt his heart swell with pride, and talked to the Lord in this wise: "I thank thee that I am not as other men." The publican took one glance at the awful holiness of the Lord and sank in conscious debasement.

Pride shows its face as the result of unwise comparisons. "They comparing themselves among themselves are not wise." True humility is born when we gaze upon the glory of the incomparable Lord. "When I saw him, I fell at his feet as one dead." "Depart from me, for I am a sinful man, O Lord." Thus are we to become clothed in humility, and avoid the conceit of criticising one another, in the hungry wonder which fills our souls when we gaze upon the holiness of God.

The Grace of a Grateful Spirit

But there is a third requirement made by the Host of the feast. The robes must be white and modest, and they must also be graceful, significant of graciousness and grace. I will mention one suggestion made in the word of God, as to this beautiful attire. "Put on the garment of praise." That is the garment which adds a touch of color and brightness to our dress, and the Master welcomes the guest who comes to the feast in this habit. There is always a wonderful gleam of brightness about thankful people. They who wear the white robes in the Eternal City constantly sing songs of adoration and praise. And purity linked with modesty expresses itself in song, and insures a great welcome among the guests of the Lord.

What sort of praise shall I bring into his presence? I can bring thanksgiving for the mercies that can never be fathomed.

> "Ransomed, healed, restored, forgiven,
> Who like thee has praise to sing?"

I can bring this thanksgiving to the feast:

> "When all thy mercies, O my God,
> My rising soul surveys,
> Transported with the view, I'm lost
> In wonder, love and praise."

When Bishop Westcott came toward the end of his life, and strength had been supplanted by frailty, he turned to one of his sons and quietly said, "I can still do a bit of praise." The good bishop had been wearing that garment all along the road, and it was unconsumed by moth and rust. Now I say this is a beautiful bit of color on the white, modest robes, and it is a color that is very welcome in the immediate presence of God.

In the second place, I can bring thanksgiving for human graces and human exploits. "So many gentle thoughts and deeds circling us round." I can think of the countless beautiful things that are revealed in other people's lives—their love, and their happiness, and their chivalry—and as I think of them I can wear a bit of color at the feast in thankfulness for their triumphs.

These, then, are the robes which the guest must wear who is to be an immediate friend of the Lord; white robes, modest robes, graceful robes. And thank God we are not to seek this attire in our own weakness. I have said the Lord is in the robing room as well as at the feast. We are not left to ourselves; he is willing and ready to prepare his guests. "If God so clothe the grass of the field, which today is and tomorrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?" J. H. JOWETT.

How Rural Poverty Hurts the Church

BY HERMAN N. MORSE

The recent survey of rural conditions in the state of Ohio is one of the most illuminating and valuable services yet accomplished by the Presbyterian Home Board's department of church and country life, of which Dr. Warren H. Wilson is chairman. The following deductions drawn from this survey are furnished by one of Dr. Wilson's lieutenants.

THE COUNTRY CHURCH problem is seen in its clearest and at the same time its most acute form in the poorest sections. In this case the extreme instance is, after all, the best instance, for the problem is less complicated and its elements are more easily distinguished.

In the final analysis the prosperity of the church depends upon the prosperity of the community in which it is located. In all the state of Ohio there was hardly found a strong, flourishing church in a poor and permanently impoverished community. Where agriculture has suffered most the churches also have suffered most, and throughout the state the health of the country church varied uniformly according to the degree of agricultural prosperity.

A comparison of the country churches of six counties in which agricultural conditions were the poorest with the country churches of six of the best counties in the state will illustrate this point. In the poorer counties but 4 per cent of the churches have resident pastors, while 18 per cent are without any pastoral service. In the better counties 19 per cent of the country churches have resident pastors and but 7 per cent are without pastoral service. In the poorer counties barely a fifth of the churches are growing, while in the better counties more than a third are growing. The margin of difference here is too marked and too uniform to be accidental.

This does not mean that where the people are more prosperous they are also more religious. There is as much genuine religious enthusiasm in many of these poverty-stricken communities as in any of the more prosperous ones—perhaps more. Certainly the emotional element is more marked and their enthusiasm is more unrestrained.

Nevertheless, it is true that through certain whole areas of poor farming land the churches have almost died out. That is to say, those churches which require a high standard of living have died out. Such churches do not take root in thin soil. Here are to be found certain poor men's denominations, newer sects with a gospel surcharged with emotion. Such sects often flourish where the land is sterile. Yet as with most shallow-soil growths, there is no assurance of permanence here and these denominations have the same difficulty that the older denominations experienced in building and maintaining permanent churches.

Many Pastorless Congregations Where Farming Declines

In many farming sections of Adams county poverty and a low standard of living have forced out all but these newer sects and have made their position a perilous one; so much so that critical observers have said the time is not far distant when there will not be a really flourishing church in the entire county outside the towns. And yet during a series of country life conferences held in all parts of Ohio none aroused as much interest or elicited as hearty co-operation as the conference in Adams county.

In Lawrence county the circuit system for country churches has been developed to a greater extreme than in any other county surveyed. Here a larger proportion of the country churches have but a fifth or a sixth of a minister's time. This county, too, is the home of poverty. In Washington county there are twenty-four country churches which are pastorless. In this county better agriculture has but just begun to be. Vinton county probably has more country churches served by pastors who live at distant towns outside the county than any other county in the state. Vinton county lands have long been a synonym for poverty. A third of the population has moved out within the last thirty years.

A Vinton county pastor who had worked there as teacher and preacher through a long and active lifetime gave an eloquent utterance to the proposition that good churches are impossible without good farming. After describing the steady decline of agriculture through the impoverishment of the soil and the rapid decrease of population, he told of the vicissitudes of church work in the farming districts and the great odds that the country pastor or teacher was compelled to struggle against.

Recently, when Vinton county possessed the unenviable record of being the only county in the state without a mile of hard road, a strip of pike had been built and topped with limestone. In the summer the traffic crushed this limestone to a fine dust and the wind blew it out over the barren clay by the side of the road. Shortly after the road was lined with a good stand of sweet clover. Where sweet clover will grow alfalfa will grow, and the country which can grow alfalfa need not be poor.

After describing the effects of lime upon that soil where sheep sorrel in the fields showed that the land was sour, this pastor summed up his position by saying that in the future he would preach both the gospel of Jesus Christ and the gospel of limestone—not the one less, but the other more. For he was assured that unless the farmers accepted his gospel of limestone, which meant for them prosperity, his gospel of Jesus Christ would fail of its full effect among them and their churches would continue to languish.

Nevertheless, it was cheering to find in Ohio a few churches that under specially adaptable and capable leadership are achieving an excellent degree of success amid surroundings that are choking other congregations to death. Columbiana county, only an average county from the point of view of agricultural prosperity and possibilities, offers splendid instances of this.

Some Churches That Prosper Anyhow

St. Jacob's Reformed church in Center township is a country church with over 200 members, nearly 20 per cent of whom are under 21 years of age. There are five other churches within three miles, all of them losing ground. This neighborhood has suffered from the rural exodus. Yet this church has grown steadily. It has had a resident pastor for fifteen years, giving full-time to this one congregation. It pays him $700 and furnishes him with a parsonage and twenty-five acres of land. Here is a minister serving a country church who belongs to the country, who knows his people personally, ministers to all of his extended parish and has built up a strong and efficient organization.

Bethel Presbyterian church in Wayne township has a somewhat more fortunate situation. It has half of a township for its exclusive parish and here it has built up a membership of well over 200, nearly a third of whom are young people, making it a church with a future as well as a past. The pastor, young, well trained and enthusiastic, is working in the country through choice and plans to give his life to the rural church. His program is a broad and comprehensive one, which contemplates making Bethel church the center of interest for the community and the source of inspiration for a larger and more wholesome country life. His ministry is aimed at those points at which country life is weakest. Not only is the religious life being fostered, but the social life as well, and those other worthy causes on which the prosperity of the farming community depends—the country school, good roads, proper sanitation and better agriculture. The church is giving its pastor an adequate salary, a comfortable home and nine acres of ground.

Hopewell Presbyterian church in Holmes county is another country church that has broadened its outlook and enlarged its ministry to its community. Here is another country-minded minister who believes that the man who would serve country people must be of them, must know them and speak their language and work with them according to their exact needs. In this church country life institutes, miniature schools of useful living, have been utilized to give the people both vision and inspiration. Religion, wholesome neighborliness, education, better agriculture and all the necessary social improvements have been made parts of one program and of one task. The result is a church with a community religion and a genuinely religious community.

Heathen and Worshiper

The heathen stand on the paving stones,
  On the side of the street where the shops are gay,
They gaze on the church with its somber tones
  And its high, pointed windows across the way.
They say: "It is full of darkness and moans,
  And we in the light of the world will stay."

The worshipers bow in the wondrous aisle,
  'Mid clustering columns, 'mid color and scroll,
While the organ's thunderous notes resile
  From arch and gallery and console.
And the rich light streams through the kindling pile
  To the glory of God, who inspired the whole.

EDWARD ARTHUR WICHER.

"The Girl I Left Behind Me"

When We Boys Braved the "Confeds" Back in '63

BY HERMON D. JENKINS

The Author in '63

FIFTY YEARS AGO! There must be some mistake. Fifty years ago? The mistress of the manse at least will not admit it. But if it is hard to realize the flight of these years it is impossible to deny the date upon my calendar.

Fifty years ago I was a young fellow in Hamilton College. That was my junior year—it all happened "in the brave days when I was twenty-one," as Thackeray translates Beranger. There was a sudden, distressing call for 75,000 men. Lee was headed for Harrisburg, Pennsylvania; he had crossed the Potomac and evidently intended to attack Washington from the north, its least protected side. I had always longed to get into camp and this was my chance. Within twenty-four hours I was on my way south and within the next twenty-four hours I could see the fires the Confederates made as they fell back from Harrisburg where the emergency troops were concentrated—30,000 or more of us, called out to meet the invasion of the North.

There were not muskets enough to go round, so some of us had to mark time; learn the manual of arms in "Camp Curtin" and master company drill. The first gun fired at us was fired from the clouds. The lightning killed three poor fellows within a stone's throw of where I had sought refuge in my "dog" tent. They were the first dead we saw, but not the last.

* * * * *

As soon as our guns came we were off. What guns they were! They called them "Austrians." I never saw the like until forty years later I came upon an exhibit of them in the military museum at Innsbruck, in the Tirol, dated 1836—six years before I was born! I told the soldier in charge of them that I carried one of these in America during the summer of '63, and he said he was "Traurig zu denken darueber," and so was I, for that musket was fourteen pounds. When I was "weighed in" at Harrisburg I weighed 126 pounds and I started out after General Lee carrying fifty-six pounds. But I didn't carry it far. On one of the first marches, when the captured prisoners from Gettysburg began to pass through our column—opened to receive them—one Johnnie cried out as he saw our kits, "Boys, you'll have to carry less baggage if you catch the rest of us." I took the hint and threw away about half my truck that day and the next.

Besides the preposterous muskets given us, we had, each man, forty rounds of ammunition, bayonet and sheath, haversack with three days' rations, half an "A" tent, woolen blanket, rubber blanket, tin plates, canteen, cups, knives, forks and any other old thing the commissary wanted to get rid of. The things we never gave up (besides our guns and ammunition) were our tin coffee cups and our army shoes. The last were the clumsiest footgear a man ever saw and the most comfortable any man ever wore.

Yes, we had our work cut out for us, no mistake. Our duty was to get as close to General Lee's veterans as we could without scaring them too badly! But to prevent too rapid pursuit on our part the Confederates had torn up every rail, burned every railway tie, blown up every bridge and stolen every wagon throughout the center of the state. The country through which we had to tramp had been thus swept by the Confederates twice, coming and going, and there was precious little left for those of us who got the third gleanings. At first we actually suffered for food, like arctic or African explorers, for when you drop 30,000 men down in one spot on a twenty-four hour call there is not enough provision in any small city to feed them three days. I have never been so hungry in my life as I was in the capital of the great Keystone state that summer. We found more to eat in the country, for the farmers had hidden a good deal of subsistence and they freely shared what they had with the "boys." One farmer, who would not take a cent from me or my companion, told me he and his wife had fed 268 soldiers within four days. Our regular fare was hard tack and salt pork—not exactly what one would order at the "Trois Freres," but we were glad if we got enough of anything to fill us up. When Lee had made good his escape from General Meade—not to say from us of the militia—we were camped a week beside a blackberry patch right under Loudon Knob, a bit above Hagerstown, Maryland. Our regiment, 1,000 strong, ate blackberries for a week and there were seemingly just as many when we got through as when we began.

* * * * *

One thing which impressed me as strange was that the boys from the schools, shops and cities outwalked and outcarried the lads from off the farms. But the heat was so terrific that when the day's march would be over the line of wagons picking up the sunstruck and wornout seemed as long as the main column. Many a fine fellow died in a fence corner that day, fanned to the last by sorrowing companions, who did all they could to keep his breath in him.

* * * * *

The first time a man hears the enemy's guns is a moment not to be forgotten. The first time the colonel tells his men to prepare for action will send some of them skulking into the ranks of the standing corn. But not many of them. For the most part I believe real men had rather be shot than called cowards. I remember very well arguing it with myself while trudging along under a gun as big as I was, "Which would a man prefer—to be shot before sundown, as I may be today, or live to be seventy and remember every hour that he played the poltroon?" I did not have to turn the question over more than once. I have lived to see that seventieth milestone, which seemed so far away then, and have no shameful remembrances wherewith to embitter my thoughts of that summer. I never lost any blood for my country, but I lost some very good flesh, which it took me years to get back.

I wish to bear witness that while the army life quickly transforms a man's looks, his physical habits and his way of thinking about many questions, it does not affect his morals—if they be of the right kind to start with. According to Uncle Toby, "the army swore terribly in Flanders," but our boys did not. The language I heard was every whit as good as the ordinary college talk. I neither heard an obscene song nor do I remember ever seeing a game of cards played for money. I do not claim that the army was a prayer meeting, although when in Harrisburg we did have religious services in a great Christian commission tent, but the real men were men on the march and in camp as well as in church.

* * * * *

The singing was the delight of my young heart. When after a day's march, if it were not too long and the fields not too muddy, we had got our fence rails laid for a "mattress" and our little fires going for our cup of coffee, someone would start a war song or sentimental ballad or old-fashioned hymn, and the great volume would sweep on from regiment to regiment, from brigade to brigade, until everyone was rested, refreshed and comforted by the inspiration of sweet sounds. And I remember one march at midnight, when passing through a sleeping village, we passed beneath a flag stretched across the highway and every one of that 1,000 men broke out in "John Brown's Body," so that we made the stars flicker with the roar of that "Battle Hymn of the Republic."

It is a curious fact that after a man has been in the ranks a week he never asks where he is going or what is happening outside his immediate environment. We never knew much about Gettysburg itself until we were home again, although our relatives searched the field carefully for our dead bodies as soon as they could reach it. There was not a mile of wire, not a railway locomotive, hardly a horse or mule in all the southern part of the state. Our regiment went where it was sent and disappeared from its friends as completely as the Titanic sunk in the sea. But it fell to us to show the enemy some kindness, as we received so many of their prisoners and wounded. And I am glad to say that in their treatment of their foes the soldiers and the citizens vied with one another in generosity, feeding the hungry and nursing the wounded until gradually the marks of the great battle were in part effaced.

At the close of the summer our regiment was mustered out and discharged, and twenty-four hours later I made my unexpected appearance in the old home, tanned, emaciated and weak almost beyond recognition and in a suit of clothes beside which the prodigal son returned from the swine field would have looked like a dude.

THE RIVER

By Elisha Safford

I heard the rattle of a drum; I saw the colors fly;
The roaring streets stood hushed a space to watch the troops march by,
While children laughed and clapped their hands as long thin lines of blue
Went trickling slowly through the throng to vanish from their view.

And, as I gazed, my heart athrill, the tiny trickling stream
Became a river, strong and wide, commingling with my dream;
From curb to curb for league on league I saw the river flow
Just as its mighty torrents poured full fifty years ago.

I saw fair lads of tender years, lithe striplings, bearded men,
Borne out upon its rushing tide to come no more again;
I saw them wave a parting hand and call a last farewell
Ere yet the current's fateful power had seized them in its spell.

Within the river's foaming wake I saw the writhing limbs,
The tortured forms, the anguished eyes that war's rude glory dims;
I heard again the fevered prayer, the shrill-tongued cries of pain
And groped o'er ghastly fields of strife all torn by leaden rain.

At lonely firesides wan-faced wives watched through a mist of tears
For husbands who would come no more—or heard the far-off cheers
That rose above the sullen roar, as fierce the battle's breath
Swirled coil on coil above the soil they crimsoned in their death.

Like some resistless, wind-scourged sea its surging waters swept
Until at every hearth was heard the voice of them that wept,
And still it rose and hissed and frothed and tossed its bloody mane
Fed by the thousand rills of blue from mountainside and plain.

I saw at length its angry floods melt in a peaceful sea;
And yet the horror of its flow today comes back to me,
Though on its banks the wild flowers grow and in its mossy bed
The lush grass waves its tangled shroud above the silent dead.

But ever for those souls who dared its maddened waves to stem
Its vanished waters seem to chant a low-voiced requiem,
While from his dreams each soldier starts and points a spectral hand
Across the years of blood and tears to a united land.

The Quartet Choir in Church Music

BY IRA SEYMOUR DODD

THE QUARTET CHOIR is at once a symptom and a cause of the present deplorable condition of our church music. There is something almost pathetic in its genesis. The dim knowledge that there is such a thing as good music and the helplessness of minister, music committee and congregation to do anything within themselves, issue in hiring a quartet to do it for them.

A Few Reasons for the Quartet

There is something to be said for the quartet choir. It certainly simplifies the often difficult problem of providing music for the church service. You employ four responsible—perhaps semi-professional—people to do the work and it is done. Music is thus supplied which is regarded as far more "artistic" than any congregational singing. Then, too, the quartet choirs of a city and its vicinity are a help to musical students. The salaries paid enable promising singers to pursue their studies. And the ideal quartet may even be a spiritual force. When the singers are Christians who consecrate their gifts to the Lord's service there are situations in which they may become very useful.

But when all is said, it remains true that the quartet is psychologically and musically unsuited to the office of the worship of song in the church. Worship in the church, and especially worship in song, should be impersonal. Its purpose is the voicing of the praises of the people, and individuality of singers should be lost.

That which in conventional phrase we call "public worship" is in reality family worship offered to our Father by the assembled brothers and sisters of Jesus. By its very nature it ought to sink individual personality. It is the purest of all collectivism. The minister—what is he but the servant who is called to lead? And the choir must be simply for leadership in the worship of a congregation of souls joined in unison.

The effect of the quartet is precisely the opposite. Nothing that could be contrived so inevitably centers attention on personalities. Two men and two women stand up before the congregation. Their individuality is accentuated by the display of their vocal gifts. However pure and earnest the purpose of the singers, this effect, so fatal to the spirit of worship in a congregation, cannot be escaped.

Emphasis of Individuality Offends

When Richard Wagner brought out his great operas he tried —not altogether successfully—to eliminate the "prima donna." He vehemently insisted that his singers should subordinate all display of person or voice to the action and the spirit of the drama. If such personal self-effacement can be desirable in music drama, is it not a thousand times more desirable when a Christian congregation worships with the voice of song?

The truth is that in a church the quartet is inartistic. Art perishes where means unsuited to a high purpose are employed.

But I hear someone say: "Surely the music of a good quartet is artistic! Its voices are trained voices; the anthems and solos which they sing are of the finest."

Yes, in a concert hall, or in a parlor, this would doubtless be artistic music. But in a church it violates one of the first canons of art—it ignores the fitness of things.

Perhaps it may also be asked: "Cannot the quartet lead the congregation?" But here again the quartet is inartistic. It fails in effective leadership because of its very nature; it lacks the volume of voice in unison which is absolutely necessary.

As a matter of fact, very few quartets know how to sing hymns; and too often they do not take the trouble to try to sing them. One feels the sharp difference between their hymn singing and the more ambitious performance of their anthems. Nor are they wholly to blame. They cannot but feel their lack of solid tone requisite to the leadership of many voices. All this reacts on the congregation; the singing of hymns becomes insensibly a secondary and inferior part of the church service.

It reacts in another way. The finest congregational tunes have a choral character unsuited to use by a quartet, and in consequence such music and the hymns which go with it are neglected. In place of such choral music what the editors of The English Hymnal call "enervating tunes" are mostly used for such singing as the congregation is permitted to take part in.

The Right Leadership for Church Singing

And now what is the right leadership for singing in the church?

A precentor is good only where the people know how to sing and love to sing, and where the hymns and tunes are familiar to everybody.

The greatest church singing I ever heard was led by a precentor. It was in the "great church" at The Hague in Holland. This church is a vast building, an ancient cathedral remodeled to suit the exceedingly plain worship of the Dutch Reformed Church. Several thousand people can be seated, and on the Lord's day morning when I was there it was filled so that there was standing room only. All classes of people were represented in the congregation, from peasants to court officials—for this is the church where the queen attends worship.

There was no choir; only a large and fine organ, and a precentor, and the only hymns were the metrical psalms—a heritage from reformation days. Apparently the psalms were bound up with the little Bibles that everyone seemed to carry. But these people had no need of printed words, nor of musical notes. They knew the words by heart. And they knew the majestic choral tunes for them. When the psalm was announced the organ played the tune, the precentor raised his arms, opened his mouth to sing and instantly his voice was drowned in the magnificent unison of that immense volume of tone.

Never before or since have I heard anything like it. Here was ideal church music, and worship most glorious. But I must, however, confess that certain quartet-nurtured friends who heard it did not like it. They thought it "slow"!

There are few of our congregations in which a precentor would be a success. The art of congregational singing—for it is an art—is too uncommon. A chorus choir is better; and it is an encouraging sign of the times that such choirs are coming into favor in many places. But even the chorus choir can be abused. It should exist not for its own sake but for the sake of the congregation; and it should have a leader who understands and is in full sympathy with the true purpose of church music.

The ideal choirmaster would be a musical scholar who knows and loves music of the true congregational tone. He ought also to be something of a hymnologist; he must have the gift of teaching and he must be a Christian man, for, so far as the worship of the church is concerned, his is an office scarcely secondary to that of the minister. He should be able to work with the minister and the minister with him.

The choirmaster should also have full charge of the music in the Sunday school. We shall never have really good congregational singing until the children—even the little children—are taught to use their voices correctly and to sing the hymns of the church. The common practice of using one hymn book for the Sunday school and another for the church is deadly. Under the better policy the chorus choir would naturally be recruited from the Sunday school.

If our church singing could be put upon a basis something like that outlined it would be revolutionized in the course of a few years. A better class of hymns and tunes, stronger, richer, more spiritual and inspiring, would be learned and loved. The congregation would no longer be dumb; by their unison of song the worship of the church would be broadened and deepened. More people would come to church—more men, more young men.

I do not believe that those who manage the affairs of our churches can know how common on the part of intelligent young men and women is the expression of contempt for the languid and perfunctory character of our ordinary church music. No reform is more urgently needed than a reconstruction of our whole idea of worship in song.

The teacher was giving her pupils a lesson on liberality, The Philadelphia Press says, when one of them said:

"When I have a box of candy, I always give everybody in the house a piece; but I like to give mamma her piece more than the rest."

"Why is that, Johnny?"

"Because she always thanks me and hands it back."

THE WAYFARER

THE CASUAL observer and the tourist from afar may be deceived and write home about money-mad America, and her unsentimental devotion to dollars and business; but we who understand the land and the people know better—we are sure that Americans are—

"Dreamers, dreaming greatly."

Sermons in New Stones

The most imaginative and idealistic people in the world are these citizens of that United States to which has been applied the old phrase, "a nation of shopkeepers." The national policy which in China and Cuba has proved America a knight-errant among nations springs straight out of the dreaming heart of the people, that altruistic heart which is first to the relief of a famine anywhere in the world, first in the cholera camps of Constantinople, first in the field to serve victims of earthquake, fire and flood anywhere. The dreams of chivalrous youth still dominate this young country. A foreigner, looking back from the city upon the new railway station in Washington, a building which ex-Ambassador Bryce pronounced one of the most beautiful in all the world, would be struck by the inscriptions above the portals. The mere fact that Americans are converting railway terminals, like the two in New York City and the one in Washington, into masterpieces of architecture, massive temples of beauty, is indicative of the poetic strain that runs through the thinking of this nation of builders.

The old Hebrew seer wrote of the bells on the horses—the ordinary method of transportation in his day—being inscribed "Holiness to the Lord"; the modern American, who at heart is as truly a dreamer as ever ancient child of Abraham, inscribes his religion in the marble of his railway terminals.

* * * * *

The central panel over the front of the Washington terminal bears three quotations, veritable "sermons in stones"; inscribed by someone with imagination, and to be understood only by the imaginative. They are:

"Sweetener of hut and hall,
Bringer of life out of naught,
Freedom, O fairest of all
The daughters of time and thought."

"Man's imagination has conceived of numbers and letters; of tools, vessels and shelters for art and trade; all philosophy and poetry, and all politics."

"The truth shall make you free."

* * * * *

The panel to the left runs thus:

"Fire, greatest of discoverers, enabling men to live in various climates, use many foods and compel the forces of nature to do his work.

"Electricity, carrier of light and power, devourer of time and space, bearer of human speech over land and sea—greatest servant of man—itself unknown.

"Thou hast put all things under his feet."

* * * * *

After enumerating agriculture and the arts, the panel to the right of the middle, still clinching the thought with a Scripture quotation, which Charles A. Dana used to say was the best way to end an article, records, "The desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose."

* * * * *

A quotation which might profitably be printed on every time table is cut over the driveway at the extreme left entrance of the station:

"He who would bring home the wealth of the Indies must carry the wealth of the Indies with him. So it is in traveling—a man must carry knowledge with him if he would bring home knowledge."

* * * * *

The President of the United States has a private waiting room and a special entrance at the extreme right of the building, and over this the admonitions run:

"Let all the ends thou aim'st at be thy country's, thy God's and truth's."

"Be noble! and the nobleness that lies
In other men, sleeping but never dead,
Will rise in majesty to meet thine own."

* * * * *

In kindred spirit the man who designed the great central concourse of the Pennsylvania station in New York City has succeeded, by the artistic use of maps on the walls of the spacious chamber, in conveying the idea of worldism. The end served is far beyond the immediate use—the traveler is summoned to think of far bourns. Beauty and utility and inspiration are united.

* * * * *

One must needs be a dreamer to build railroads. There is more poetry in the "lines" that thread the continent's thousands of miles than in many of the versified lines from the printing press. Was he less than a poet, who, a generation ago, in building the Pennsylvania terminal in Philadelphia, sculptured on the wall of the waiting room, in heroic size, a picture of American transportation and progress, from the days when men went afoot, on horseback and in prairie schooners, to that other day, then in the future, when man should master aviation? At the front of the sculptured procession is a little child, bearing an airship. Verily—

"We were dreamers, dreaming greatly, in the man-stifled town,
And we yearned beyond the sky-line where the strange roads go down.
Came the Whisper, came the Vision, came the Power with the need,
And the Soul that is not man's soul was lent to us to lead."

THE WAYFARER.

THE HOME COUNCIL

As Grandmother Would Have Wished It

BY ELIZABETH PRICE

OUR beautiful grandmother and old Mrs. Bentley had been friends since they were children, and nothing had ever happened which disturbed their friendship. They were unselfish and always interested in other people. Even after grandmother had a stroke that made an invalid of her, and Mrs. Bentley's rheumatism kept her at home most of the time, helpful messages or gifts, or a little money where it would do good, flew out from the sickrooms like carrier pigeons, making people happy and keeping those two dear hearts young to the end.

They passed away on the same day and we couldn't help being glad that they could take the journey through the valley of the shadow together. Our family lots in the cemetery adjoined and grandmother and Mrs. Bentley were laid side by side, with just the low stone coping between them.

Last year, on the anniversary of grandmother's death, Eva and I went out with flowers. We often went and always took a big box full of blossoms. This time there were roses—American beauties with long stems, tied with a great bow of gauze just the shade of the glossy green leaves.

We took a smaller bunch for Mrs. Bentley. We knew grandmother would have liked her to share them. And besides, Miss Ellen never took anything of the sort to her lot. Miss Ellen is the only Bentley that's left. She's middle-aged, and a fine, good woman whom everybody admires; but how she could leave her mother's grave bare, and get a little white headstone for it instead of a handsome monument, we couldn't understand. To be sure, she is not very rich, but we thought she could afford to do better.

Eva and I were talking about it as we sat on the iron bench under the weeping willow that shades grandmother's resting place.

"It's a perfect shame!" Eva burst out. "Not a flower for dear Mrs. Bentley except what we brought."

"That's nothing new," I told her. "Miss Ellen isn't a bit stingy about other things and I can't think why she treats her mother's memory so carelessly. There she comes now."

Miss Ellen came down the path, her arms filled with—would you believe it—wild daisies and Queen Anne's lace!

"Good morning, girls," she called cordially. "See what treasures I gathered in the meadow across the road. Oh, what beautiful roses—how kind of you to remember mother!"

We didn't say much. To tell the truth, we were thoroughly disgusted. Miss Ellen knelt down and arranged her wild flowers, banking them up, till the grave really looked beautiful. Then she laid a great cluster at grandmother's feet, quite away from the roses we had brought. She didn't speak till she was through, then she came over and sat down on the bench beside us. "Girls," she said in her sweet, quiet voice, "I wonder, sometimes, if it looks queer to my friends that I haven't spent more money on decorating mother's resting place. Does it?"

"Yes, Miss Ellen," I said; "to be quite frank, it does. Eva and I were just talking of it when we saw you coming with nothing but wild flowers."

Eva gave a funny little frightened gasp, but Miss Ellen spoke as serenely as ever. "Thank you for telling me," she said. "Do you know, it never occurred to me till lately that people might not understand. I think in justice to mother's memory I should explain. Shall I begin with you girls?"

"We wish you would," we told her.

"Remember, dears, I am not criticising anyone who does not agree with me, or finding fault with those whose methods differ. It is simply my own idea, and I'm trying to follow what I think would be mother's wish. It came over me the first time I was here after mother's funeral," she went on. "The quantities of exquisite bloom that had hidden both the dear mounds were nothing but faded petals and withered leaves. The ribbons were rain-drenched, the gauzes mere wisps. It looked so desolate and sad to me I couldn't keep from thinking, 'If the money these flowers cost had been spent to help the living, mother's memory would have been more truly honored.' Dear girls, I resolved that day that never again should a dollar of my money be unworthily spent in her name. And my resolution grows stronger with every day that passes."

"But, Miss Ellen, surely you don't call flowers unworthy!" Eva suddenly found speech.

"Yes, dear, for me to buy for her grave. Wait—I haven't finished. Every time I come here, instead of buying the hothouse flowers I should otherwise bring, I spend the money they would cost for someone who needs help. For instance, today, the anniversary of her death, I sent a check to the Fresh Air Society to pay for an outing for a suffering child—in mother's name, of course."

"Was that the reason you got such a small headstone?" I asked.

"Yes, Carolyn. I spent for it one-fourth what I should otherwise have done, and used the remainder to care for a cot in the crippled children's hospital. The bed is called the 'Maria Bentley Bed,' her dear pictured face looks down upon it and the flowers I buy go there to fill mother's favorite vase and smile on someone who can enjoy them. Mother is gathering flowers from God's garden—she doesn't need earth's perishing bloom."

"Yet you brought her these." I pointed to the snowy frame about the grave.

Miss Ellen's eyes filled. "Does it look inconsistent?" she asked. "It's really for my own sake. She used to enjoy these wild flowers and I love to heap them above her. If they had cost money my conscience would condemn me."

I looked at our expensive roses, already beginning to wilt in the sunshine. Eva was thoughtful, too. I could see she was impressed.

Miss Ellen continued softly, "I have bought hair ribbons and sashes for young girls who had been deprived of the dainty things girls love with the money I might have spent for scarfs to tie bouquets together, because I know if mother could advise, she would want this done instead of the other."

I glanced at the green gauze the rising wind was whipping around a thorny stem. A few hours more and its beauty would be lost. Somehow, just at that moment, I remembered 'Gusta's hat with its shabby chiffon trimming. 'Gusta's our housemaid—and she has any number of brothers and sisters to help. "Eva Livingstone, we could have trimmed 'Gusta's hat with that," I declared.

"Why, Carolyn, so we could!" Eva's tone sounded just as I felt. Miss Ellen nodded brightly. "You see, don't you, dears? There is no limit to the good one may do in the name of loved ones gone before, and surely it honors them more to keep their memory fresh and fragrant in grateful, living hearts than to rear shining monuments where few eyes see them, or scatter costly flowers that perish with the hour."

"Yes," we agreed. "We see—and understand."

She left us then, saying she had an engagement and must hurry. Eva and I talked it over, watching our flowers fade as we sat there, and remembering what they cost. "It isn't only 'Gusta's hat, Eva. It's lots of things, when you come to think. I believe Miss Ellen's right."

"Right? There's no question about it. It's a wonder to me that she's the only sensible one, while the rest of us are idiots."

We had it out with mother as soon as we got home, and she finally agreed that we were right. "I'm glad we've come to our senses," she said. "Now let us act accordingly."

The first thing Eva and I did was to fix up 'Gusta's hat. We didn't tell her a thing about it—just put it back into her hatbox and let her find it, and didn't stop at the hat, either; grandmother wouldn't have.

The next flower day Eva and I went out early and gathered daisies and Queen Anne's lace for both the graves, then hurried home to take six wan-faced mission children for an afternoon down the bay, with a good supper thrown in. Next, mother took a carriage round to the Old Ladies' Home and filled it with delighted inmates.

It was the next flower day that we thought of grandmother's pew in church. Father wouldn't let it be given up after she didn't need it any more. Grandmother had sat in the one place for many years, and even after there was no one but herself she still occupied it. Father had the pew door locked after she went and kept the key in his private drawer. It seemed as if he couldn't bear to see anyone else in it, so he paid for it by the year and left it empty.

But on this day when we were together over our fancy work somebody said, "Wouldn't it be lovely if grandmother's pew could be used some way—like Miss Ellen's cot!"

"But it can't be. Father wouldn't consent."

"To what?" asked a big voice at the door, and there stood father himself. We told him about it, then, just as we had told mother, only this time mother helped, too. We hadn't mentioned it before, because we hadn't been sure of his approval.

He heard us through without a word, then asked, "And about the pew?"

"We thought it would be nice to use it some way in her memory," said Eva hesitatingly.

"Perhaps you are right. Mother didn't like to be left out of things. I should be glad if she needn't be, even now." Then he changed the subject so abruptly we knew he didn't want to talk about it any more.

Two Sundays later the door to grandmother's pew was unlocked. A silver plate had been fastened to it on which were engraved these words: "To this pew strangers are cordially welcomed. Rest here in your Father's sanctuary, and may his peace be yours. In loving memory of Catherine Livingstone."

That wasn't all. Once that pew was opened, father couldn't rest contented till he'd filled it. Business men, drummers, casual acquaintances were urged to church, till the strangers overflowed the pew and filled ours, too, which was next.

Of course that had nothing to do with the money we saved from the flowers we didn't buy, except the thought which grew out of Miss Ellen's suggestion. But there are many other things that have. Every time we go to the cemetery, before we start we drop into grandmother's little inlaid box the amount we should once have spent for flowers, and now when anything comes up to be done we know just what we have to count on. It's always poor or sick people we do for—or little needy children.

The sweetest thing about it, it seems to us, is that it has seemed almost to bring grandmother back among us. Before, it was only the lonely cemetery and the big monument that stood for the mortal part of her. Now it's the homage of happy hearts who bear in loving memory our grandmother's name.

YOUNG AMERICA

A Poem Wilhelm Reads

BY HERMA N. CLARK

WILHELM lives next door to me. He goes to German school and he can read German. I go to American school and I can read American, only auntie says I must say I read English. I don't know why "American" isn't right, though.

Wilhelm has taught me some German words, like "knabe." That means "boy," and you have to pronounce it "ka-nob-ba," or something like that. "Father" is "vater" and "mother" is "mutter" and "sister" is "schwester." But "girl" is "madchen," and they put a funny little mark over the "a."

I am glad I don't have to read it in school, the letters are so funny, but Wilhelm can read it as fast as anything. He is in the Third reader now and he read us some poetry last night that auntie said was very pretty in German, and she made it into an English poem. She lived in Germany once, so she knows how to read Wilhelm's books. This is the poem the way auntie wrote it:

THE GREEN VILLAGE

A lovely village I have seen;
The houses there are naught but green.
These houses, be they great or small,
Are gladly given, rent free, to all.

The roads, which lead quite far and wide,
Are sweet with flowers which grow beside;
The pavements, soft as downiest bed,
Are colored like the roofs o'erhead.

Here happy people live, my dear,
And that they love their home is clear;
If you pass by, still as a mouse,
You'll hear each singing in his house.

These happy folk are very small,
Indeed, they are but birdies all;
And the green village, dearest child,
Is what you call the woodland wild.

A Girl Who Swam Lake Geneva

IT IS HARD for people to believe that I never swam any before last summer, but this is explained by the fact that I always spent my summers with relatives who lived in an inland town. When our family went to Lake Geneva in Wisconsin two years ago for the summer I learned to swim in three days, and when the aquatic sports occurred I received some of the honors.

Last year my brother Willis and I declared our intention to swim across Lake Geneva. Mother was willing that I should do this because Willis and I had done good swimming in Lake Michigan when our family—father, mother and we four children—would swim together. Willis and I were the ones that outswam the others. We two would swim out to the diving place, take a dive and swim on out to the floats. The fact that I had more endurance than my brother gained for me his respect, and he always accompanied me—which made me very glad, because my skill as a swimmer often led me to places where I was the only girl among boys and men.

On the first pleasant day after going to Lake Geneva last year Willis, Herbert Bredin of Englewood and I started out to do some long distance swimming. Nelson Brabrook of Oak Park accompanied us in a boat. We really had no intention of swimming across the lake, but we kept on, knowing that we could get into the boat at any time. The boys were more rapid swimmers than I, but they did not want to get too far away from the boat, which stayed near me, so they climbed into the boat about half way across. I kept on because I had not begun to get tired. When my hands would get stiff I would turn on my back and rest them by closing and opening them. Most of the time I used the side stroke.

At the end of forty minutes I stood upon the shore of Cedar point, without once having touched the boat, ready to start on the return swim, but gave it up when we found we could barely get home in time for supper even with our best rowing.

I was surprised that everybody was so interested, but suppose it was because I am the only girl who has made this swim of about a mile. Mother's only anxiety was that it might be a strain on my endurance. I felt as rested, however, when I finished as when I began.

Willis was proud of me, and he said to mother, "The best part of it is she doesn't go around bragging about it." If this letter seems to contradict this statement it is because I want to get it into the Young America page.

Chicago. MARION WARE (age 15).

Would You Call Them That?

Caller—"Well, Margie, how are you getting along in arithmetic at school?"

Little Margie—"Fine. I'm almost up to dismal fractions."

The Picture That Made a Child Sing

ONE DAY a little girl climbed the steps of the Art Institute in Chicago and made her way through the door and up to the big uniformed guard who stood near it.

"Please," she said, "I'd like to see the very prettiest picture there is here."

The guard looked down at the little girl with a friendly smile. "The 'very prettiest picture'?" he said. "I am not quite sure which is the prettiest one, there are so many pretty ones."

The little girl still looked up at him wistfully. "Please," she begged, "the very prettiest picture!"

"All right, missy," answered the guard, "we'll try."

The little girl slipped a confiding hand into the guard's big warm palm, and off they went toward the rooms where hung the pictures which a little girl might like.

Room after room they went through slowly, carefully scanning the walls for the "very prettiest picture." Suddenly the little girl drew her hand from the guard's and sped away toward a picture in which another little girl stood with lifted head, listening.

The child stood silent a moment before the picture and then she broke into a little rippling song. Straight to the little girl in the picture she sang verse after verse of a melody so sweet and so full of cheer that all the people in the room stopped to listen.

The words were in German, so the guard could not understand what the song was about, and the little girl did not tell him. But when the last verse was ended she once more slipped her hand in his.

"That's the very prettiest picture," she said.

"Is it? Why?" asked the guard.

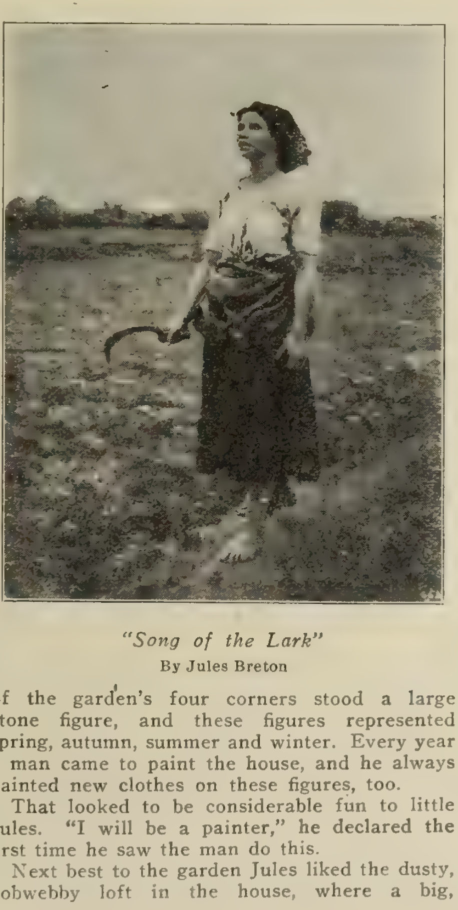
"Oh, I can't tell you," said the little girl. "I only know that it made me very happy—so happy that I just had to sing!"

* * * * *

If the great French painter, Jules Breton, who made the picture could have peeped into the Art Institute that day he probably would have been made very happy by the little girl's happiness, for it would have shown him that the picture said to her the same thing it said to him when he painted it. This painter loved the out of doors, and the fields, and the early morning; and he must many times have listened in the harvest field, just as this peasant girl is listening, to the lark, soaring skyward and pouring out its early good morning song of joy.

When he was a little boy this Jules Breton lived in the country, in a place called Courrieres, where he played, with his brothers and sister, in his father's garden, running down the broad paths, climbing the pear trees, making friends with the birds and frogs and lady bugs and grasshoppers and sometimes stretching out on his back in the sun among the flowers.

It was in this garden that little Jules discovered that he wanted to be a painter. In each of the garden's four corners stood a large stone figure, and these figures represented spring, autumn, summer and winter. Every year a man came to paint the house, and he always painted new clothes on these figures, too.



"Song of the Lark"
By Jules Breton

That looked to be considerable fun to little Jules. "I will be a painter," he declared the first time he saw the man do this.

Next best to the garden Jules liked the dusty, cobwebby loft in the house, where a big, worm-eaten box was filled with books containing wonderful pictures. Jules loved to slip away up there and look at the books, and they taught him to love pictures so much that he was never satisfied till he, too, could paint them.

His first drawing teacher was a man who had drawn a crayon portrait on the side of a barn in the village. This portrait was of a man smoking a pipe—but the pipe was upside down. Jules copied the picture and made the pipe right side up, which everybody thought very smart for so little a boy. And he drew charcoal pictures all over the walls of a large unfinished parlor in the house.

At school Jules copied pictures by the hour. And once he got into a scrape by drawing a picture of a big wolf hound and writing the name of one of the masters beneath it. And he was soundly thrashed for it, too.

But that was not his first scrape. Jules's uncle lived with the Bretons, and in his room was a bookcase with several drawers in which the little boy used to rummage when his uncle was away. Among other things which those drawers contained were some color boxes for painting in water colors, bladders with oil colors and flasks of varnish. Jules tried all the paints on the back of his hand, and pricked the bladders with his penknife, one bursting open and covering his fingers, and the carpet as well, with Prussian blue. The young culprit scoured his hands with sand, and scrubbed the carpet with soap and water, and after lots of hard work succeeded in getting both clean. When he was a little older Jules had a room off the garden which he called his studio, and where he amused himself during his vacations carving figures of peasants in soft stone, and painting on wood with the juices of flowers and berries. His first picture was a sign he painted for a village woman.

Later on, when he went to college, Jules drew from plaster casts, then portraits in pencil and landscapes.

He studied art in Ghent and Antwerp and Paris, working very, very hard, and finally he painted a picture so beautiful and so fine that he was given the Cross of the Legion of Honor, which is the highest honor France has to bestow upon her sons.

Perhaps you have in your home his picture "The Gleaners." "The Song of the Lark" he painted many years later. S. C. R.

BRADFORD HORTON, MAN

BY RICHARD S. HOLMES

CHAPTER XXXI.

"MY SON! MY SON!

MR. ELMORE, as the telegram to his daughter had said, was indeed very ill; pneumonia the doctor had called it. But as Eleanor entered his room, after her hurried journey East, his face lighted to a smile. Her presence seemed to give new hope to the entire household, and the sick man, satisfied now that his daughter had reached home before his life spark had gone out, experienced at once a change for the better as a result of the satisfaction. The physician was surprised next morning, still more surprised the following one, and on the third day he said to Eleanor. "You are a better doctor than I. Your father will recover, I think."

By the end of the week the invalid was able to talk a little. "Dearie," he said on Saturday morning, "has Bradford been found? I dreamed he was coming back to Prestonbury."

"Yes, father," she answered. "Joe and Charlie happened upon him in the forest where they went to hunt."

"And he's here? They brought him home?" came the eager questions.

"No, dear. He couldn't come just now. He's made his home up there in the Minnesota lumber camps among the lumbermen. He's a missionary there."

"His home?" There was a note of disappointment in the feeble voice. "Is he married, then, Lennie?"

"No, dear. He's all alone, except for the men. He's had a wonderful experience and done a wonderful work. He's trying now to build two mission churches—one in each of the camps where he works. He has the money for one; that Englishman I wrote you was with Malcolm Stuart gave it. I thought maybe you'd want to give the money for the other. Wouldn't you like to? If you would I'll send Austin a telegram."

"Yes, Lennie; by all means." The weak voice had grown almost strong with its pleasure. "I'd have given them both if I'd known. This will help, don't you think so," he added wistfully, "toward making things right with Bradford?"

"Surely, daddy dear. Things will all come right by and by. The crooked places are being made straight, the rough places plain."

She spoke with a confidence to which she had to use all her will power to cling. Reconciliation was sure to come between her father and Bradford, yes; but how would that smooth the roughness of her life, while Bradford's work kept him in the wilderness, which she knew he would not ask her to share? None the less, there was real happiness for her in sending the telegram which Sleighton read from his pulpit that Sunday.

From the hour of that conversation Mr. Elmore's recovery was rapid. Before Christmas came he was back in his accustomed place in home and business, and one of his first acts was to forward to Bradford the promised sum. The letter that came in acknowledgment was prompt and satisfactory:

"Dear Mr. Elmore: I have just received through Mr. Sleighton the $5,000 which you so generously sent to aid in my building enterprise. I shall be able now to finish speedily work which is of great importance. I would like to add that Joe Jickers, whom I saw here in the autumn, informed me that you had learned the truth concerning my father and myself, and much as I value the gift of money for my work, I value it far more highly as evidence of your renewed belief in me. Most sincerely yours, BRADFORD HORTON."

It was not until spring that any further word came directly to Bradford Horton from Prestonbury. Then it came in the shape of a letter from Charles Elmore, asking him to officiate at that young man's marriage to Helen Tappan. Neither of them, it seemed, would allow themselves to be married by anyone else. The letter found Horton just at a time when he could clearly see the end of his task, and when he knew that in kindness to both Eleanor and her father he must visit Prestonbury at least long enough for the interview Mr. Elmore so much desired. That it meant for him a struggle he knew, even when he wrote his acceptance of Charlie's invitation. "I wonder," he thought as he mailed it, "if I am strong enough to look into those eyes again and keep the resolution I have made."

In the meantime, Eleanor received a long and entertaining letter from Lucy Sleighton, which included among its other news the statement of Bradford's intention to come East at the time of the wedding. This letter arrived even before Charles received the reply to his and fully set at rest the fear his aunt had felt lest Bradford Horton after all would not feel that he could leave his work as yet. Hardly daring to let herself hope for what she longed for, she had discouraged Charlie from writing. "He'll never come away for so trivial a thing as a wedding," she said, upon which Charlie had indignantly denied that his wedding was a triviality.

Lucy's letter quieted the doubts that the winter without direct word from the Minnesota camps had aroused. "Now, Eleanor Elmore," her friend wrote at its end, "don't you dare let him come back here without you. He says he won't ask you to share such hardships, so you'll have to make him, that's all. We told him he didn't know you, if he thought you'd mind, but you know how he is when he makes up his mind."

"The only trouble would be about leaving father," Eleanor said when she read the letter to Caroline. "I read him what Lucy says, and he said I should go with Bradford if he asks me. But, Carrie, he'll never ask me."

"He may change his mind," said her sister-in-law. "Father would miss you sadly, Eleanor."

"Did you ever know him to change his mind?" challenged Eleanor. "But," with the inconsistency of rebounding hope, "if he does, father says he don't care how much he might miss me; he doesn't want to make us suffer any more."

She did not think to tell Caroline not to repeat the little confidence. Caroline told her husband, and through him the statement Mr. Elmore had made came finally to the ears of Joe Jickers, where it stopped.

So at last June came. Before its last week Bradford Horton was on his way eastward. Each day of the long journey found him happier than the day before, even though each day the undercurrent of his resolutions flowed more turbulently. "I must not, no, I must not!" he repeated firmly; then, with a wavering thought that never finished itself, "and yet——" he would add.

The home built by Barney O'Toole after his marriage to Mary Tappan, two years before, was two miles away from the house on Sunset hill. Horton was to stay with the O'Tooles while he remained in Prestonbury, and when the station carriage set him down before their door, just at nightfall, three days before the wedding, everything was in readiness for the honored guest.

Barney came bounding out like a boy. "Oh, Brad, this is great! I was never so glad to see you before in all my life."

"Hello, Barney!" Bradford wrung his hand. "Cash balance all right today?"

"Not short a dollar. How are you?"

"Tired; happy; hungry as a bear."

"Well, we'll soon fix that. Here's Mary," as the Miss Tappan of the old days came forward to welcome him. "Charlie and Helen are here for dinner, and Joe and Alice are coming this evening. Joe said he wanted to be sure that the wrong malefactor had not been extradited."

"Same old Joe, isn't he?" Horton laughed. "I guess he'll die joking."

On the porch after dinner, in answer to O'Toole's offer of a cigar, Bradford produced a well-worn pipe. "I'll burn this instead, thank you, Barney," he said. "I formed this friendship in the lumber camps, and many a night my pipe has kept me from being blue." He was the picture of embodied comfort when the little druggist and his wife arrived.

The breezes always began to blow in the vicinity of Joe Jickers. He was a veritable son of Æolus. "Hello, Hooter," was his salutation in the old way. "But this time we shan't have to sing, 'Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?' Nary! Court recognizes his long lost brother. How's Poker Bill, Hooter?"

Mrs. Barney made answer instead of Horton. "Stop your nonsense, Joe. The professor has promised to sing for us, and we're going in to the piano, now you've come."

"All right, counsel. Court sustains the objection. But court makes an order that Brad has to tell about his first song in camp; about being a pilgrim and a stranger, and about why Poker Bill called him 'the Hooter,' and then he's to sing us all about heaven being his home, and let us see if Bill was right."

Bradford laughed, as they all did, but before he had told the story through they were serious enough to be ready for his singing of the simple hymn which has comforted so many weary souls and which had won for him his place in the lumber camps.

After that he stayed at the piano for half an hour, passing without interruption from song to song, as if the singing were the outlet of an overcharged heart. Pausing finally, "Pardon me, Mrs. O'Toole," he said, "but a parlor, a piano and people of your sort is a combination that has been denied me so long that I was heart hungry and, I fear, selfish."

"Counsel," said the druggist solemnly, "you have vindicated your right to be called the Hooter."

Mr. Elmore called next morning to take the guest for a drive. The meeting of the two men was characteristic; the younger was undemonstrative, the older courteous. After driving for a while about the familiar streets of the beautiful town, they turned finally into Mount Logan avenue, when suddenly Mr. Elmore's purpose became evident to his hitherto almost silent companion. The carriage stopped near the sequestered nook over in the shadows of the cemetery, and together they walked to the spot now sacred to them both, where they stood with uncovered heads for a time, still silent. At last, very gently, the old man spoke.

"Bradford," he said, "I have chosen this place in which to make such atonement as I can for my sin. Your poor father's body lies here by the side of your mother, my foster sister, whom I dearly loved. They cannot hear me now, but God can, and you. In bitterness of soul you said once that you would never speak to me again, and for years, until today, you have kept your promise. I cannot blame you. But I ask you now, will you forgive me? Forgiveness will not undo the past, and words and sorrow are all that here I can offer you. All that I ever said to you in harshness I wish to unsay. Bradford, will you forgive me?"

The young man's extended hand was his first answer, and with strong hand-clasp the two so long sundered by misunderstanding faced each other in silence for a moment. Then a soft, strong voice said, "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors, and lead us not into temptation but deliver us from evil."

Then, as Bradford's voice failed him and broke, the old man threw his arm around the young man's neck. "My son!" he cried. "My son!" The implication of the words was a thought that even in the moment of high-pitched emotion Bradford resolutely put away from him. Not even Mr. Elmore's wish could make his path different from that he had resolved upon.

The words that came as they walked back to the carriage were a revelation to Bradford Horton that flooded the past unhappy years with light. "You never knew," said Mr. Elmore, "that I was once engaged to your adopted mother when she was Rosalie Morwell. The affair was a boy's and girl's first love, and I suppose it was largely my fault that it was broken, and she had resented that all the years. Your first call on me brought all the past freshly to mind, and that dreadful letter of hers was written mostly to humiliate me, and

(Continued on page 775)

NEW BOOKS

The "fear of living" is a new and deep-seated evil among us.—Henry Bordeaux.

Philosophy of Experimental Religion

The Principle of Authority, by P. T. Forsyth. This new work by the well known principal of Hackney College is worthy of its place in the notable series of his writings. He deals with a pressing problem of current religious thought. The result is called "an essay in the philosophy of experimental religion." Its three sections present the principle of authority in its relation to certainty, to sanctity and to society. This very outline suggests a trait of the style of Principal Forsyth, which is growing as the books increase. We have a steady stream of alliteration, with balanced sentences and phrases, very attractive for a few pages, but giving a sense of effort and affectation.

Willingly overlooking this, so far as possible, we have here a most helpful book. It urges the need for authority in religion, increased by the change of attitude toward the church and the Bible. It finds that authority not in the experience of the individual, since that would be too purely subjective; nor of the church, as such, since that would be too formal, but in the nature of the thing of which the redeemed heart is sure. It is an external authority, voiced in the Bible and the church, but directly realized by the soul. "The source and authority of all Christian certainty, of all moral and final certainty, is the revealing, atoning, redeeming cross." Experience is not the source but the sphere of authority. It is the soul's assurance of the present, living Christ, issuing from the historic and redeeming Christ, which brings it peace.

The Christ who has made the church and whom the church still needs is not a residual Christ, a minimum left after the critical process is completed, but the full-orbed Christ of the apostles, who were set in the divine purpose not to be the first believers and so to lead us all but to do this special and commanding work of interpreting him to the church. "When Paul's Christ goes down, the churches certainly follow." Because the church has this source of authority, it must not compromise with the world. There is danger that it may not conquer the world, but go into partnership with it. "But the modern man is still at bottom the old Adam." He still needs the experience of redemption which is the essence of all revelation. Principal Forsyth's argument is too compact to be fairly represented by quotation. We commend the book as helpful to ministers and laymen. It should have an index or an analytical table of contents. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $2.50 net.

The Law, Politics, Education

Romantic Trials of Three Centuries, by Hugh Childers. Here is a series of twelve famous and complicated legal cases, told in terms suitable to the lay understanding. The longest account is that of the case of the robbing of the Lyons mail in 1796, which dragged on for some time with growing complications. Nearest to our own time is the trial of Disraeli for criminal libel, which occurred in 1838, and was really quite farcical, but was characteristic of the early days of Disraeli. Of largest interest to Americans is the vivid account of the trial of William Penn and others on the charge that "unlawfully and tumultuously they had assembled (to the number of 300) in Gracechurch street and preached to the people assembled." The extended account of this trial is justified by the author's reference to it as a landmark in the history of civil liberty. Certainly most of the procedure would be impossible in our own time. It appears that the jury were fined and imprisoned because they brought in a decision freeing the defendants, when the court wished the decision to be opposite! Since the judge could not fine Penn on the charges brought against him, he fined him for contempt of court and imprisoned him all the same! It is a book well worth the reading of laymen and is a series of illuminating chapters in the progress of human liberty. [John Lane and Company, New York. $3 net.

The Temper of the American People, by George Thomas Smart. It is a relief to turn from foreign characterizations of America based on superficial knowledge to a book written by one who has had the opportunity, the ability and the will to make a real study of this subject. Mr. Smart analyzes the character of the American as it is revealed by his conception of his country, by his attitude toward political, social and industrial questions and by his views of life, society, religion and amusements. While the author is pronounced in his friendliness, his penetration is keen and his judgments are discriminating. Besides, the book is written in literary style so charming that the reading of it will be a delight to the lover of good English. [Pilgrim Press, Boston. $1.25.

The Evolution of States, by J. M. Robertson. This 500-page volume is really an expansion of the author's "Introduction to English Politics," published a dozen years ago. He here takes advantage, however, of the results of much recent sociological study of history, with its tendency to recognize economic conditions as a determining factor. He regards politics, in a general way, as the strife of human wills; and that seems to be a good definition. He proceeds to examine, first, the political forces of ancient history; second, the economic forces in ancient history, and third, the cultural forces of antiquity. This discussion involves chiefly, of course, the Greek and Roman states. Then come what may be termed lesser developments—the Italian republics, Switzerland, Holland, Portugal and Scandinavia. The last part of the study is devoted entirely to English history, stopping, however, at the beginning of the constitutional period. The volume departs somewhat from the commonly accepted views of history, but it is none the less valuable and interesting on that account. [G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. $2.50 net.

The Social Center, edited by Edward J. Ward, presents a complete program for the development of the school into a social center for adults and children of its community. Mr. Ward believes that "it should be the animating civic factor in the community"—an institution which will not only promote the common interest but make that interest interesting. The volume is one of the "National Municipal League" series. [D. Appleton and Company, New York. $1.50 net.

Swords and Plowshares, by Lucia Ames Mead, is another gun fired in the "war against war." Though not a large volume, it is fairly comprehensive, giving a history of the peace movement, presenting an array of antimilitaristic arguments and picturing a hopeful outlook for the abolition of war. It will meet the requirements of those who are seeking, amid the abundant "peace literature" of the day, a single volume which will afford a fair knowledge of the subject. Baroness von Suttner has furnished an introduction. [G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. $1.50 net.

The Hibbert Journal

The Hibbert Journal for April, 1913, comes with its familiar fullness and richness of religious and philosophical thought. The first article, by Professor Josiah Royce, is on "The Christian Doctrine of Life," and lays stress upon the Christian idea of a fraternal community, combining with it the idea of atonement. These two ideas, as evolved in and through human experience, Professor Royce places at the center of the Christian system. The second article, contributed by J. E. Carpenter, is in a certain way the counterpart of the first and is entitled "The Buddhist Doctrine of Salvation." Next comes an essay on the "New Spirit in the Drama," by John Galsworthy. Professor L. P. Jacks then addresses himself to the question, "Does Consciousness Evolve?" Balfour writes on telepathy and metaphysics; Professor Sorley on the question, "Does Religion Need a Philosophy?" N. Jarintzoff pictures the life of the Russian clergy; John A. Hobson attacks the question, "How Is Wealth to Be Valued?" Professor B. W. Bacon tells of the course and results of New Testament criticism in the last century; Rev. Hubert Handley deals with the question of biblical criticism and the work of the pastor; and the series of social service papers is continued by Captain W. Cecil Price, with the Boy Scout movement as the special theme. [Sherman, French and Company, Boston. 75 cents net.

Religious Works of Note

Helpful Essays on Debated Questions. Under this general caption the Methodist Book Concern has just begun to issue a series of short studies on some vital questions affecting the newer conception of the Christian religion. Among the first booklets in the series are "The Autographs of St. Paul," by Marcus D. Buell, professor in the Boston University School of Theology, which aims to bring together the results of the best scholarship in recent years on the writings of the apostle Paul. The author shows that the effect of the discussions on these wonderful productions has been to bring clearly into view the personal characteristics of the great apostle and to vindicate their genuineness and trustworthiness. "Biblical Criticism and Preaching," by George Elliott, attempts to place in their right relations the results of the literary and historical criticism of the Bible and the work of the preacher. The author is a believer in sane criticism, fears nothing from it and shows how it may be made a source of new insight and power in bringing the messages of the Bible to modern life. "The Synoptic Problem," by Doremus Almy Hayes, professor in Garrett Biblical Institute, summarizes the questions raised by the first three gospels, thus enabling all students of the Bible who may not afford the time for minuter study to become acquainted with the field in a general way. "Some Moral Reasons for Belief in the Godhood of Jesus Christ," by George P. Mains, is limited to the examination of the argument from the appeal of Jesus to the moral nature. The biblical proof texts are not ignored, but the main stress is laid upon the universal experience of Christians as supporting the deity of Christ. [Eaton and Mains, New York. Each 35 cents net.

The Inspiration and Authority of Holy Scripture, by J. Monro Gibson; with introduction by Principal P. T. Forsyth. This is one of the earliest volumes in the "Christian Faith and Doctrine" series issued with the design of furnishing the plain but intelligent laymen with the latest thoughts of evangelical Christian leaders on the cardinal facts of the Christian religion. Dr. Monro Gibson has been given in this series what will seem to many the most difficult of all tasks, i. e., that of expounding to the evangelical believer why he should still accept the Bible as inspired and authoritative after abandoning the earlier evangelical theory of inspiration. Dr. Gibson, however, proves fully adequate to the delicate and difficult task. He speaks from his own experience. He had accepted the Christian Scriptures as inspired in the older sense of the word, according to which "inspiration" meant a guaranty of scientific accuracy. From this standpoint he found himself obliged to move step by step to the position whence he now views the Bible as the word of God designed to fill its reader with the Spirit of God, to guide him away from his sin and into faith in his heavenly Father through Jesus Christ. Toward this end he believes that the Scriptures are adequate and infallible. Dr. Gibson explains and vindicates his position with the zeal of one who has found it a source of joy and of peace. [Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. $1 net.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

June 8, 1913—Joseph Forgives His Brethren

Everyday View of the Lesson

By J. L. Scott

Lesson Text, Genesis 45:1-46:7. Golden Text, Psalm 133:1: Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!

No one can be content and live a life at variance with his true self. Joseph must be Joseph or lose his own self-respect. For days he had been an actor upon the stage; the exigency of the occasion demanded it. But the time had come when he must appear in his true character. The tie of blood is stronger than position. Pharaoh might transform the slave into a king, but there his power ended. One's relationship can be neither forfeited nor lost. Jacob is still the father of Joseph and those eleven brothers are still of his own flesh and blood. The prodigal may leave his father's house, but he takes his sonship along. The great white way may lead him into a far country, but at the other end stands the old homestead with its ever open door. This truth finds wider application than in a single incident. It reaches out and touches the very nature of God. Some things belong to us by virtue of our manhood, and this is one. We all finally get back to ourselves. Nothing can separate us from the love of God.

Joseph Judges Brethren by Present Rather than by Past Characters

Love was the inspiration of all that Joseph did. The terrible discipline through which he compelled his brothers to pass was for their final good. The plea of Judah was an earnest revelation of their transformation. The hatred that they had shown him did not exist toward Benjamin. The affection for the gray hairs of their father had no place twenty years ago. Twenty years ago someone did you a wrong and you have hated him ever since. That one incident has remained as the criterion of his true character. But time brings about the widest changes. Since then he may have become a different man. The old offense would now be impossible. Such was Joseph's judgment of his brethren. He would weigh them in the scales of the present.

The disclosure was entirely natural. Nothing could be farther removed from all studied effect. At last the real brother stood face to face with his own. Incidents such as this are their own interpreters. No comment can add to their strength or purpose. Joseph acted from the impulse of his nature. Reason had stepped down from the bridge and the heart was at the wheel—the Egyptians were dismissed from the room simply because they did not belong there. Impulse is a fountain, while reason is sometimes a cake of ice.

Joseph Seeks Overruling Providence in Actions of His Brethren

"I am Joseph; doth my father yet live?" That Israel was alive he knew very well, but for the moment he had lost himself. The brethren naturally retreated from his presence, but emotions with strong men are always transient. Joseph regains his self-control and asks them to come nearer. "I am Joseph, your brother, whom ye sold into Egypt." He was still their brother. Wrongs do not alienate relationship. Christ is still our brother, however unworthily we may have lived toward him. Recrimination is the resort of small minds. The deed had been done and even remorse could not undo it. Joseph believed in an overruling Providence and sought to apply like belief. He would find a higher purpose even in sin. The reconciliation of sin to reason he did not attempt. God's will does not stand behind our sins, but it does stand above them. He directs our way.

Joseph's theology is still in force. The world is ruled by it. Man is morally free and at the same time the scepter of God touches the horizon on every side. When Joseph was sold into Egypt God went along. His brothers sold him, but God sent him, and overruled every moment of his life. Some things we believe because we understand them, but more things simply because they are.

When Adam fell God set him at work, and such was the course pursued by Joseph with his brethren. Nothing is accomplished by idle regrets. If one has done wrong the best reparation is to do right. Those ten men had something to do. Their work, like duty in general, was both pleasant and unpleasant. They must return to Canaan and assure their father that Joseph was alive and master of Egypt. The intelligence involved the confession of their own guilt. The blood-stained garment was possibly still a relic at the old home. But everyone must face his own past. Israel would be incredulous. They themselves must be convinced before they could convince their father.

The interpreter was gone. Love speaks a language that all can understand. Joseph kisses the entire eleven. Even those who had been the most malignant received the kiss of forgiving love. But Benjamin was the nearest to him. The two fell upon each other's neck and wept tears like drops of blood. And after this they talked together. The subject of that conversation is left to conjecture. There lives no record, but the unwritten Scripture at times appeals to our greater interest. Israel no doubt was uppermost in the mind of Joseph. Did he often speak of his absent boy and was the name of Rachel still a household word? This would have been of interest to Joseph, although we suspect that things more in common filled in the hour. Conversation is a mutual pain or pleasure. In nothing does the mark ot a true gentleman more unmistakably show itself. Disagreeable subjects are best dismissed with silence. The reopened sore never heals.

Return of Brethren to Canaan Beginning of New Epoch

Diverse as the lives of those men had been, there was much left of common interest. The old life in Haran and the visions of their father would appeal to all alike. And that strange promise given to the fathers could not have been foreign to their thoughts. As yet it was still a dream, but a dream that bound the family together. Life is largely made up of conversation. Thought expresses itself in words and words culminate in action. Once more these brothers took up a line of march toward the land of their fathers. It was the beginning of a long history. An old man awaited their coming as he had done before. But evil no longer led the procession. The flush of youth came back into his face and his voice for the moment lost the tremor of age. "It is enough: Joseph, my son, is yet alive: I will go and see him before I die."

The Lesson Verse by Verse

By Hermon D. Jenkins

Analysis—Joseph is not ashamed of his poor relations. He teaches the presence of a personal providence. He gives not out of pity but out of love.

The writer of the epistle to the Hebrews puts it down as one of the characteristics of Jesus Christ that he is "not ashamed" to call us brethren (Heb. 2:11). More than one successful and famous American has ignored his parents after he became a national figure.

Joseph in the presence of the court may restrain his personal emotion, but he never denies family ties. He thought more of his aged and now needy father than of the powerful and opulent Pharaoh. It is one of the beautiful traits of a beautiful character that he was not ashamed to call his family what they were, his kin. The well bred person reserves for the privacy of domestic life pet names, tender embraces, the exchange of kisses. It was not because of shame but a demand of good taste that Joseph should be alone with his brethren. But when he had exchanged confidences with them he published to all Egypt that these were his brethren and he would protect them and honor them and make their welfare his personal interest. It was a noble thing to do and he did it in a noble way.

Joseph Demands Privacy Not to Protect Himself but to Protect Brethren

Verse 1—His own story involved their story. He could not tell who he was without telling what they were. The story of their evil-doing was inwrought with the story of his advancement. Besides the natural instinct to veil one's deeper feelings, there was present a purpose to shield his brothers who had been so guilty.

Verse 2—Mark, he did not curse, "he wept." The wrong which they had done him was base, but what they had purposed was baser still. And as yet there had been no marked signs of contrition on their part. They were in a measure changed men; that is true. Hardship and suffering and the necessity of seeking help may have humbled them. But they had, so far as we know, made no reference to the past which would say plainly that they recognized their sin and deplored it. But Joseph did not wait for them as we might wait. He was too fine a character to haggle and squabble over a good deed. Just as God has loved us being yet sinners (Rom. 5:8) Joseph loved his brethren imperfectly reformed.

Verse 3—A true son is never weaned from home. Joseph's affections go back to the old home, and 'mid "pleasures and palaces" he still feels "there's no place like home." His mother had long been dead, but the tie between him and his father had never been broken. When that tie is snapped either the father or the son is greatly to blame. God never meant it to be parted in time or eternity.

It Is Oft Consoling to Be Overruled by Providence

Verse 5—Often the only consolation we can have in the past is that God would not suffer it to be as we intended it. It would be a fearful thing to go on living and not believe that there was a heavenly Father ruling and overruling our lives. The old story of the orphan lad lured back to London by the sound of its church bells, and becoming London's lord mayor, is true to life. The trifles which we have hardly noted at the time have decided our longest courses. The picking up of a pin has led to fortune. The closing of a door by a passing gust of wind has shut us out from harm. The belief in God is a poor belief if we separate it from a belief in a special providence, the belief which Joseph held and which he taught his brethren.

Verse 7—Joseph does not for one moment think God has put his wicked brothers in his hand that he may execute revenge, but for the exhibition of saving kindness. He is not preserved to be their judge but to be their savior.

Verse 8—While carrying out this divine purpose incidentally he has become a blessing to Pharaoh also. Grace is diffusive in its effects. A man refuses to prosecute one who has done him wrong. He is not gracious simply to the man he spares but to his wife and children, who had no part in his wrongdoing. The opportunity to forgive his brothers was the opportunity to be a father to all Egypt. We seldom realize how far a little candle throws its beams.

Real Love Is Bountiful Rather than Economical

Verse 9—Real love is not characterized by a "cheese-paring" policy but by largeness. As Solomon gave to the queen of Sheba twice what she asked (I. Kings 10:13), so Joseph invents new ways of blessing his family. He is not content to send them rations. They are to come down and share his wealth where he himself enjoys it.

Verse 10—Even beyond the days of their scarcity he provides for their future, as God gives us a gospel for eternity as well as for time (I. Tim. 4:8). He would carry his father and brethren and their families through the long famine yet to be endured, but he will create for them a home, a home for that indefinite future which awaits their descendants. Doubtless by this time they had begun to feel anxious for their children, as they saw how slender their resources grew under this continued failure of crops.

Verses 14, 15—The beautiful thing about it all is that Joseph was not one speaking from high to low, from the plane of the ruler to the low level of the slave, but he gave them heartily and without hesitation those kisses of affection without which all the corn in Egypt would fail to satisfy the heart.

> "The gift without the giver is bare."

The wealth without the kiss would have humiliated those whom the corn with the kiss made new men. To learn to give at all is something; to learn to give as Joseph gave is to learn one of the supremest lessons of the divine life.

DEVOTIONAL SERVICE

BY EDWARD ARTHUR WICHER

Week Beginning June 1, 1913

FOREIGN MISSION TOPIC—The home base.

Every great enterprise requires for its furtherance and development an adequate organization. There is needed a missionary organization among the men who already hold the Christian religion and who are not directly in contact with the heathen, that they may be able, each one of them, to have a share in the propagation of the truth of Christ. Thus the missionary organization, and the church which sustains it, and the conviction which animates it, constitute the home base of the foreign mission enterprise.

The vigor of the campaign in the field is directly proportioned to the strength of the forces of the organization at home. The depth of conviction, the consecration of life and life's resources, the faith in the efficacy of prayer and the pervasive power and influence of the indwelling Spirit of holiness in the church of the homeland, are the guaranty of the permanence and effectiveness of the work of missions abroad.

The whole church, when it is normal, is a great missionary organization, commissioned to give the gospel to every creature, called not to be ministered unto but to minister. No church member fulfills his calling if he does not have a part in the extension of the kingdom of Christ into the whole world. And the reflex influence of an interest in missions abroad is doubtless the most uplifting force in the life of the church of America today. Every pastor has become an advocate of missions.

The missionary conviction of our own church embodies itself, so far as the foreign field is concerned, in the Board of Foreign Missions. This board consists of twenty-three members, who are divided into three classes, and of whom one class is elected each year by the General Assembly to serve for a term of three years. The secretaries of the board carry out its administrative policy, conduct all its correspondence both with the missionaries and the churches, and generally give light and quickening to the church's interest. They make extensive use of the missionaries who are home on furlough, and who are able to supply the latest information about actual conditions in the fields. Assistant secretaries cover special departments of the work and separate territorial divisions.

There are six splendid woman's boards, which, with their thousands of auxiliaries, cover the entire extent of the church and reach into the remotest hamlets of our land. "The women that publish the tiding are a great host." Their work has been characterized by an admirable blending of enthusiasm and discipline, of courage and common sense. Their work for women in lands where the doors are closed to men has been one of the noblest, the most tender ministries of the age.

The young people's societies are regularly observing a monthly missionary service, to which they bring their offerings, and at which they are being trained in youth for missionary work in the church. Most of the Sabbath schools are following in the same direction. Excellent manuals for both classes of work may be had from the offices of our board.

The thousands of mission study classes engaged in by Christians of all ages and conditions have inspired enthusiasm and given a sound basis of knowledge to the workers for the kingdom. Adequate knowledge of missionary methods and results will always kindle zeal for the cause.

The Bible societies have rendered an indispensable service in translating the word of God into almost all known languages, and giving it away, or selling it at a price within the reach of the poorest man.

Missionary books and literature are essential to progress. There is a fine bibliography (though now three years old) in the sixth volume of the reports of the world missionary conference. The continuation committee has produced The International Review of Missions, which is a quarterly publication of the highest merit. The Missionary Review of the World remains also of first-class value, while the publications of our boards are indispensable to the Presbyterian.

Missionary conventions held in various centers are effective in the same direction. Among recent movements we should especially name the Laymen's Missionary Movement and the Men and Religion Movement. Indeed, every religious convention today has its missionary department. A visit to a missionary exhibition has sometimes proved an awakening to people who had otherwise remained untouched by the sense of the propaganda. All student assemblies, the greater number of which in this country are held annually under the auspices of the college Y. M. C. A.'s, are steadily emphasizing missionary obligation.

The greatest agent for raising up candidates for the foreign field has been the Student Volunteer Movement, which twenty-five years ago swept through the colleges of this continent with the force of a new revelation of grace and duty. So far as statistics are available, the total number of volunteers who sailed under various missions boards between the years 1886 and 1910 was 4,377. They went to every non-Christian country of the globe.

The church should also know of the conference of foreign mission boards held early in February of every year in New York City for the discussion of common plans and problems, for the distribution of the fields of labor and the promotion of unity of policy.

What can we Christians at home do to aid in the work of foreign missions?

1. We can have convictions. And no man ever really believed anything without seeking to impart his conviction to another man.

2. We can give our money. But only when we have first given ourselves. God could save the heathen world without our money, but he cannot save it without us. And when we give ourselves our money follows.

3. We can pray. Our prayers, vibrant with the compassion of the heart of Christ, triumphant in his faith, are the very life-blood of this holy service. Let us follow the prayer calendar of our church.

4. We can yield ourselves to the Spirit of God, to be used of him; to be swayed according to his will, to be touched, uplifted, purified by his infinite love. His Spirit becomes our spirit, if we will take him into our hearts. And when Pentecost has fully come to us all nations will hear the mighty works of God in their own language wherein they were born.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE

COMMENTS IN BRIEF BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

June 8, 1913

THE PROBLEM OF PEACE

TOPIC—"Seek peace, and pursue it." I. Peter 3:8-18.

This is not the time or land of the serene heart. Restlessness marks present-day America. Everybody seems to be running madly to and fro in search of a new sensation. These ever changing fashions, each worse than the one before; the crop of varying fads; the multiplication of highly spiced periodicals and books; the novel diversions, many of them tending toward debased ideals—all these clear signs of the times speak anything but hearts at peace. Every observer is aware of this. But he is aware also that our bewildering American pace reveals a desire for something that will satisfy. Our restlessness only denotes a hunger for rest. Our discontent is a manifest quest for peace. There never was an hour when the clear, sure voice of Christianity, offering the perfect peace of the gospel to all men, was more needed than it is just now.

He who is at peace in his own heart will not be at war with his neighbor.

Amiability is, ordinarily, a virtue. It is one of the fireside traits that make home happy. The contentious man is not easy to get along with. The peaceable disposition, which suffers long and is kind, makes Christianity attractive in the ordinary, home-keeping experiences of life.

There is a peace of the great ocean, and there is a peace of the stagnant pool. One is peace born of power, of repose, of restraint, of mighty life; the other is the peace of deadness and ineffectiveness, incapable of stress and storm. The peace that we should seek is the peace of strength, the ocean tides of divine might suffusing our being to make it potent. This peace is imparted. It is not something to be won by seclusion from all of life's activities. "My peace I give unto you," said Christ. His life was one of stress, yet of peace. That is the sort of peace that he imparts—the peace which gives quietness amid all the storms of life. For the power of Christ and the peace of Christ are inseparable.

The art of getting along genially with all sorts of people is a fine one, and at its best is one of the Christian graces. But it has its temptations, to insincerity, shallowness and fear of men. More fundamental and abiding and efficacious is the grace of being in right relations with God. At peace with God, harmonious relationship with all his creation naturally ensues. The whole world of nature seems at one with the soul which is aglow with the fellowship of God's love.

International peace, the "peace on earth" of the angel song, is possible only among men of good will. Let us not deceive ourselves here. We cannot legislate war out of existence. A mind of brotherliness and sympathy among the people alone can make peace real and enduring. The objective of peace propaganda should not be the parliaments of the nations but the minds of the common people. The new diplomacy helps the common people to understand one another. Nowadays it is the will of the people themselves that makes or prevents wars. Therefore to help men to be brethren is to bring in that reign of peace on earth toward which the world has travailed for millenniums.

"If religion has done nothing for your temper, it has done nothing for your soul," someone has wisely said. The heart of peace is proof of the soul's faith.

Peace is sometimes to be fought for, as well as prayed for. That may seem paradoxical, but it is true. Spinelessness is in no wise a quality of peace. Lack of character and cowardly conformity to essential evil have never promoted lasting peace, although it has sometimes postponed the inevitable struggle until nobler men have come on the scene to face the issue. There have been holy wars. Resistance of oppression has been noble. Every battle for truth has served the cause of ultimate peace. In the order of qualities truth must be put first and peace second.

Peace must be in human hearts before it can be in the nation.

To have more of peace, seek more of Christ. "He is our Peace."

The one great truth to which we all need to come is that a successful life lies not in doing this, or going there, or possessing something else—it lies in the quality of the daily life. It is just as surely success to be just and courteous to servants or companions or the chance comer, as it is to make a noted speech before an audience, or write a book, or make a million dollars. It is achievement on the spiritual side of things; it is the extension of our life here into the spiritual world that is alone of value. This extension is achieved, this growth toward higher things is attained, by our habitual attitude of mind. It develops by truth and love and goodness; it is stunted by every envious thought, every unjust or unkind act.—Lilian Whiting.

MISSIONARY WORK

Urgent Need for More Workers

The Presbyterian Board of Education sends out a statement of plain facts, which need no comment. They speak for themselves: "There is need today of over 1,600 men, and less than 500 men are available to supply this need. There are 771 men in our theological seminaries and we are graduating this year only 193, many of whom will enter the ministry of other denominations than ours. The synodical superintendents come on from the West to our seminaries for men to occupy the fields and are forced to return empty-handed. The president of one seminary reports that he cannot respond to one-third of the calls for pastors. The appeal for men to go to China asks that 'immediate steps be taken to increase in the near future, particularly within the next three years, the staff of missionaries in that field.' But where are we to find these missionary leaders? During the past year 835 men were commended for aid to the Board of Education by their presbyteries. Of these, forty-one were declined for various reasons, making the total number of students aided 794, an increase of six new men over last year. Of these 344 are in the seminary, 357 in college and ninety-three in academy. There were 117 men below the senior class last year who did not renew their applications to the board this year. That means that about one student in eight dropped out either temporarily or permanently. The greatest need today is for a praying church. If we can get the church to pray and Christian parents to consecrate their children to this glorious work of preaching the gospel there will no longer be a dearth of candidates for the ministry."

Secretary Saw Ox Carts and Chickens

Dr. Stanley White, secretary of the Presbyterian Foreign Mission Board in New York, and his wife visited the Etah mission, where Dr. A. G. McGaw is the leader of the wonderful work for the low caste peasantry of India, and the circumstances of their traveling thither convinced the missionaries that there was no pretense about the determination of these official visitors to see the Indian mission field. The whole force of missionaries on the field went out to meet Dr. and Mrs. White seven miles from town. They found the secretary and the secretary's wife in a country cart, in which they had ridden twenty-eight miles to that point. When they left Etah they had to endure a nineteen mile ride in the same vehicle to the nearest railroad point on their further journey. As Mr. McGaw writes, the missionaries came to the conclusion that Dr. and Mrs. White, being out to study Indian missions, were "on the job all right."

The thoroughness with which Dr. White prosecuted his inquiries also impressed the workers. They say that he fairly looked questions at them, besides submitting a long list of printed questions. But the understanding and sympathy which the secretary showed endeared him to all the workers, and he rose to the climax of their esteem when he said to them that Etah is "perfectly fascinating."

One of the mission problems discussed with Dr. White was the poultry problem. Twenty-five lusty, thoroughbred American chickens are the latest addition to the mission force of the station. From a standpoint so remote as the United States, it may not be clear what chickens have to do with religion; but Mr. McGaw knows, and so does Mr. Moore, who has particular charge of the chicken proposition. The poultry annex to the mission station is to solve the problem of the distressing poverty of its low caste converts. It is impossible to establish them in decent community life unless they have a large income, and the raising of chickens seems to be the best way out, for there are excellent facilities for marketing eggs and table birds at Delhi, Lucknow, Cawnpore and Allahabad. The Imperial hotel at Lucknow has sent in an order for 300 eggs daily.

Observance of China's Day of Prayer

The first account reaching this country concerning the official observance of China's day of prayer, lately proclaimed by the Chinese government, is contained in The Japan Advertiser of Tokyo. The Advertiser calls the meeting which took place in Peking one of the most remarkable ever held in China. It was opened by Pastor Meng in charge of the Independent Christian church, who called attention to the fact that it was the first time in the history of China that the government had requested the Christians to meet in prayer for the country.

President Yuan Shih Kai and the minister of foreign affairs, Ku Cheng Hsiang, were represented by a special delegate, Wellington Koo, who made an address. Mr. Koo said: "I am here representing President Yuan Shih Kai and Lu Cheng Hsiang, the minister of foreign affairs. Both the president and Mr. Lu take interest in this meeting which has been called for special prayers for the nation at this time. The old book says that the root is in the heart and if the heart is right, the man will be right and so the family and so the whole nation. It is the power of religion that is necessary today. Christianity has come to China for now over 100 years. It was born in Judea and spread all over the world.

"Although under a republic there is equality in religion, the president and Mr. Lu realize that Christianity has done very much for China. Christians are not regarded now, as under the Manchu dynasty, as a special class by themselves, but as citizens of the republic, and their work has done much to promote morality among the people of this land. We come with this expression of good will to this gathering of Chinese which has met here for prayer for the nation at this important time of its reorganization."

An Example of Presbyterian Mission Work with Immigrants

The Young People's Society of the Bohemian Church, New York City, with Dr. Vincent Pisek, the pastor, taken at the twenty-fifth anniversary of the church. Photo by Zaklasknik.

Both Sides of China's Opium War

A missionary in southern Shantung, China, out of his observation throws considerable doubt on the sincerity of the claim made by the provincial officials of an earnest attempt to stamp out the growing of the opium poppy. It has been thought, during the disturbed times of the revolution, more of the poppy was planted than in the last two or three years preceding, and early in the year the governor at Tsinanfu sent out with a great public flourish forty-eight deputies to investigate poppy cultivation. These soon returned reporting that much poppy seed had been planted in the autumn, but at the time of their visit it had all been plowed under. The missionary writes that he is now in a position to contradict this statement and doubts whether many of the deputies made any investigation at all. Moreover, he notes a fact which looks bad for official honesty—that ordinary farmers are not growing opium, but the poppy fields are confined to the farms of men who have some sort of relation to the "political machine," either officials of the lower courts or their intimates.

In spite of this pessimistic report the same missionary writes, however, that genuine progress is being made in the suppression of opium smoking. Not only have there been in the last two years no new smokers added to the victims of the drug, but nearly all former users of the drug have quit the habit, except those much weakened by past indulgence, the aged and the wealthy. In a city well known to him he finds that where there were formerly seventy dens with about ten habitues each, there seem to be now only thirty, which are very difficult of access and cater to not more than four or five customers apiece. At the same time Dr. E. W. Thwing from Peking reports that in Fukien province fully nine-tenths of the poppy fields have been destroyed. In both these provinces, in Kweichow, in Shensi and Yunnan, the troops have been used in destroying growing poppies. In Szechuan 1,300 opium smokers have been sentenced to three weeks' imprisonment each in order to break the habit.

Dispensaries Versus Hospitals

In her report of the Fatehgarh dispensary Dr. Annie Young of India shows that the need of a hospital cannot be filled by a dispensary. "One patient," says Dr. Young, to illustrate the point, "gave this answer one day when asked what sin was. There are five sins, she said; one was to kill a Brahman, one was to kill a cow, one was to eat animal food, because by so doing life was destroyed, one was to break a leaf from a tree; the fifth she had forgotten. Every day brings some who come for the first time. Possibly it took much persuasion to get the sick person to come or allow herself to be brought. The whole experience is new, and she has heard awful tales about the doctors. In such an attitude of mind she is asked to drink in and digest the story of One who has come to save her from her sin. One or two visits usually suffice. They are cured or grow tired and forget the new teaching they have heard. Take these same patients, get them into a hospital bed in clean clothes and they will be much more receptive. Seed sown under such conditions will not all be caught and held on the thorns."

Board Notes and Announcements

—"The Way of the Cross" was Mrs. Coy's theme, leading the Friday morning meeting of the Board of the Northwest, Chicago. Among those brought together there by "The World in Chicago" was a presbyterial president, who said, "It seems always that we come in here through the gates of prayer and go out through the gates of praise." Mrs. James D. Jeffrey, president of Michigan Synodical Society; W. M. Danner, secretary of the Mission to Lepers in India and the East; Mrs. Danner, Miss Davis of the Baptist mission in Burma and Miss Edna S. Cole of Siam were all welcomed. Miss Cole, who with Mary Margaretta Campbell of blessed memory went out in 1878 to establish the first boarding schools for Laos boys and girls and who has been since 1887 principal of the Harriet M. House School in Bangkok, gave good news of her graduates. One of them, although having a large family of her own, has a Christian school of girls in her own home, employing another graduate to teach it. Mr. Danner told of eighty-two mission stations where Protestant missionaries are caring for lepers. He also mentioned the two leper colonies in our own country—that in Massachusetts, whose fifteen members are all foreigners, and that in Louisiana, most of whose seventy-four members are native born. Of all the missionaries in charge of such asylums, only one is a leper, and she contracted the disease two years before she went to the work.

The Open Hearth

The Base of Friendship

I have just returned from conducting a funeral. At the undertaking rooms there were present beside myself the undertaker and the driver of the sled which served as hearse. At the grave our numbers were increased by the presence of the gravedigger. The four of us lowered the body into the place prepared in the frozen earth, and standing in the deep snow I consigned "earth to earth."

The man who was buried was one whom I had known for several years. His barber shop in the little creek town where he lived was an acceptable loafing place. He made the men welcome there. As so many men in this northland have done, he drifted away from early habits and became a common drunkard. He died sitting in a chair in a saloon. His earnings had been largely spent there. Because he spent his money freely he was welcomed to the barroom circle. The habitues of the place were his "friends." He had no others, and he did not have them. Although due notice had been given, no "friend" came to the funeral. His poor old mother in the states was unable to meet the burial expenses. His "friends" did not volunteer to do so. And so, with the minister, the undertaker, the gravedigger and the hearse driver in attendance, he was buried at the public charge.

There is on my desk a letter from a man who is a prisoner in the Washington penitentiary. He is eligible for parole. I have been in correspondence with him since he was sentenced four years ago. He asks me to take for him the necessary steps, here where the crime was committed, looking toward his release. He numbered his "friends" by the score before his misfortune. Now he turns to the minister whose services he never sought while other "friends" sufficed. And this is what he says: "The most of peopl are too much taken up with their own affairs to have any superfluous energy for other peopl welfar or misfortune, and I find that it is only the head of a chirch ore the man that has the love of God shade abroad in their hart that lands a healping hand."

I rejoice that in this far northland, with its many lonely hearts and blasted lives, the exemplification of true friendship is made possible through the ministrations of the church of Christ. Our Home Mission Board is making possible here in Alaska such a defense of the faith as challenges the attention of the man in trouble. It is a powerful apologetic. In the testimony of this convict is the evidence of the presence of the Friend, and the base of all true friendship: "I find that it is only the man that has the love of God shade abroad in their hart that lands a healping hand."

Fairbanks, Alaska. JAMES H. CONDIT.

Whistling in Sunday School

May we have the opinion of a limited number on the subject of whistling in the Sabbath school? Is it usually adjudged quite suitable for the boys to whistle the tune, while the girls sing? There is a pianist and a small orchestra. Can anything rightly be added to the service that does not instruct or add to the devotional spirit of the hour? Is it going forward or backward? If forward, let us have it by all means. If backward, let us protest and raise the standard of this church service.

SUBSCRIBER.

Death and the Old Prayer

The writer was taking care through the night of an aged saint near the border. Giving her a drink of cold water and helping her to turn in bed, she said, "Now I don't think I'll trouble you further tonight; I am perfectly comfortable." He sat near her door, listening, when he heard the simple prayer of her girlhood:

"Now I lay me down to sleep;
I pray thee, Lord, my soul to keep.
If I should die before I wake,
I pray thee, Lord, my soul to take.
And this I ask for Jesus' sake."

Eighty years old, but a little child again! No fear, no shrinking; nestling to her Saviour's bosom. Not for a great deal would the writer have missed those petitions and the childlike faith and the memory. The next night she died in her sleep, as sweetly as a slumbering infant.

There is no difficulty about it. The writer has seen many die. He has never seen an elderly saint or a little child afraid of going to heaven. L. P. BOWEN.

Vacancy and Supply Reflections

The report on "vacancy and supply" of pulpits in our denomination is, in some sense, pitiable as I see it. I have often wondered why so many ministers find it necessary to retire early in life from the sacred calling to which they in all sincerity gave their lives with great hopefulness at the start. It is not so in other callings. They were no doubt sincere and had ability. For many years now I have been among the ministers without charge, having been obliged to retire on account of the nervous strain upon me from certain causes in the make-up of our congregations, officially and otherwise. I have for twenty years been in touch with pastors over a large portion of our country and have been not only tolerated in many pulpits but very kindly treated. But I predict that before many years elapse many more pastors will "break down." Many pastors are suffering, uncomplainingly, on account specially for want of hearty cooperation, spiritually, of the officers of the church. Many of our elders are more inclined, in my humble opinion, to consider their official position in the light of an officer of a lodge rather than that of an institution to save the world and are many of them men of habits that are not Christian.

Then, too, many of the membership are more intensely interested in bridge and other godless pursuits than they are in their church and know nothing of the spirituality that always goes with the profession of a Christian when we have "put on Christ" in the true sense. An elder remarked to the writer in speaking of a new church building in course of erection, "They are building that church for a clubhouse," knowing well the conditions in that particular organization. We have too many members as well as elders in our churches who know nothing of a change of heart, or what is meant by Acts 3:19 or Romans 5:1.

I may be too critical, but my heart goes out very tenderly toward pastors who are required to be so many-sided that it is difficult to define just where they belong, so different from the old-time pastors, who, like St. Paul, could say: "This one thing I do." This much from one who is not particularly concerned about a pension or ministerial relief. C.

Sermons, Buildings and Finances

Is it not time the sermon age was over? Sermons, buildings and money; money, buildings and sermons—these have been the center of the life of the church since my eyes were first opened in that organization. From the ladies' aid to the session have we not largely substituted the means for the end? Our church and congregational meetings are social and statistical. Where is the heart of the church, anyway? That vital organ seems nearest when the preacher pours out his soul in a sermon. But preachers come and go. Is nothing but the building left when the preacher goes? When he inspires the people, why doesn't he come down from the pulpit and say to the church members, "Now, what are you going to do about it?" How would it do to work out a sermon in small or large groups for a few weeks without further preaching?

When the community is to be stirred religiously we have sermons every night, and the members are quite evangelistic, asking people to come and hear, hoping they will become regular devotees of sermons, buildings and finances. Why should it not be a part of the regular church discipline that every new member should have a place in the regular service under the care of one or more older or wiser members in some special department?

Why cannot half our ministers be trained as leaders in Christian work instead of sermonizers? In any community such a leader could always find two or three who would "go and tell" and they in turn would form other groups of Bible students and prayer circles. Then an inspirational sermonizer could occasionally call all the people together. We need many meetings for specific prayer and conference, and a minister could direct the lay members in any line of work where life can be influenced. Our religious education demands leaders, not lecturers. In working out our own salvation we need the Montessori plan, not the old cramming system.

Ward buildings for union Sunday school work should soon be in order. Y. M. C. A.'s are the best kind of workshop. Our Christian homes would be much more Christian if used frequently for gatherings for prayer and conference; the children and parents together being social in distinctively religious things. I am sure if the church authorities tried to work out plans whereby the sermon, the building and finances were not the most vital part of our organization the people would soon cooperate.

J. B.

Sunday Baseball and Shows

The writer was greatly pained when he saw the picture of our good President at a baseball game. What an opportunity our President missed to accomplish a mighty act of salvation for the American youth! Had he turned down the invitation to the game—indeed, had he publicly announced that he would not witness a game of baseball played when either of the clubs, or any of the members of either club, were guilty of playing on the Sabbath day, what a great influence it would have had on the morals of our nation—what a Godsend it would have been to our young men and women, for, I am sorry to say, even our young women are falling so low in good morals as to attend Sunday baseball. All candid people must confess that Sunday baseball is a great curse to our nation.

The writer, an "old school" Presbyterian, was once the most enthusiastic baseballist in the land. When the old National League fell from grace and began playing on Sunday, and especially when in our state a law was passed legalizing Sunday baseball, then the writer went clear out of the baseball business; never attends a game, won't even read a score. The same way by the Sunday "show." When the picture shows held Sunday performances he quit attending them on any day of the week on the ground that any institution that is so immoral as to hold Sunday games or shows on the Sabbath day is too degraded to be supported even on weekdays. We must save our Sabbath or lose our liberty. They are inseparable.

JAMES P. L. WEEMS.

A Rigid Test of Christian Reality

While my own Christian life dates from Feb. 9, 1911, I have made the essentials of Christianity a study since then and have arrived at certain conclusions. I believe that, up to date, with the possible exception of the first few weeks after my conversion, my own Christian life, judged from my own viewpoint, has been a failure.

When the Spirit worked in me to convict me of sin, I took the steps to set myself right in the sight of God. Then I set about the work I found to do and tried to become a soul winner. I had some slight success—enough to assure me that any Christian who really has the desire to win souls may do so. Gradually my ardor cooled and I became the average Christian man, until now I think I can fully sympathize with the average Christian. And yet I am not as blind as many of those about me, for I can see what I ought to do, and what God expects me to do, and yet I do not do it.

The devil tells me if I speak out and tell my fellow Christians what they should do if they would please the Master they will retort, "You are a kicker," or, "Why do you not practice what you preach?" From my viewpoint they would be justified in making just those retorts, and yet I believe I have a message for the world if it would only listen.

Through The Continent I earnestly desire to reach my fellow failures and see if I cannot arouse in them, and at the same time in myself, such a desire to win souls for Christ that they, and I, shall see ourselves as Christ sees us and, seeing, shall change our lives to make soul winning the one thing in them that matters.

It is well to be a "pardoned criminal." It is well to attend the constituted services of the church, and to speak, and pray, and sing. But, according to my reasoning, this is not enough. Only the soul that has a burning desire to win souls for Christ, and attempts to put it into effect, leaving results with the Master, is the Christian for whom a reward is laid up in heaven. We "pardoned criminals" will get to heaven, I hope; but unless we do the Master's will I fear we shall be more discontented there with our lowliness than we are in this life.

Our churches are not dead, as some fear; they are very much alive. They are doing a work that is well—but are they doing the work that counts with the Master? Are our best church members concerned with the vital work of winning souls? If they are, I have written in vain. If they are not, my object is to arouse them to what I consider the supreme test of the Christian.

CHARLES H. THOMAS.

Summer Rallies and Conferences

Expect Many at Hollister

Attendance at the fourth session of the Presbyterian Assembly of the Southwest at Hollister, Mo., from July 29 to Aug. 17 is expected to exceed the attendance of previous years. An enlargement of the facilities of this conference place of Presbyterians in the heart of the Ozarks will make it even more attractive this year. A conference for young people will also be held under the direction of Rev. William Ralph Hall. Dr. E. E. Stringfield, Kansas City, Mo., is secretary of the assembly.

Laymen Talk Missions at Lake Geneva

The third summer conference of the Laymen's Missionary Movement will be held at the Y. M. C. A. camp, Lake Geneva, Wis., July 26-31 for the leaders of the church in the United States and central Canada. The conference this year will be of special interest because it will prepare for the united missionary campaign being planned by the home and foreign missionary boards of the United States and Canada, which is to culminate in a nationwide simultaneous canvass in March, 1914. The secretaries of missionary boards who met in Chicago May 6 were unanimous in passing a resolution heartily indorsing the conference as the preparatory conference for this united movement.

The national leaders of the Laymen's Missionary Movement and of the various missionary boards and pastors and laymen of the widest reputation have been obtained for the program. Delegates may be registered through F. J. Michel, field secretary, 19 South LaSalle street, Chicago.

Christian Citizenship Subjects

Interest in the approaching world's Christian citizenship conference, Portland, Ore., June 29 to July 6, appears to be centering in the sectional conferences to be held during the forenoons of the week in which the assembly is to be in session. Commissions of from five to nine members each, representing different countries, are now investigating the following subjects: "Peace," Professor Edward Krehbiel, Stanford University, Cal., chairman; "The Family," Dr. R. C. Wylie, Pittsburg, Pa., chairman; "Mormonism," Professor O. F. Davis, New Richmond, Wis., chairman; "Public Education," Rev. W. F. McCauley, McKeesport, Pa., chairman; "Intemperance," Dr. Edwin C. Dinwiddie, Washington, D. C., chairman; "The Sabbath," Albert T. Moore, D. D., Toronto, Canada, chairman; "Prison Reform," Judge McKenzie Cleland, Chicago, chairman; "Capital and Labor," Rev. Charles Stelzle, New York, chairman; "Personal Evangelism and Social Service," Rev. George G. Mahy, Philadelphia, chairman; "Social Purity," B. S. Steadwell, La Crosse, Wis., chairman. Each commission is to report with recommendations as to how present conditions can be remedied.

Special interest also attaches to the "plan of action" in process of preparation for the solution of the great moral problems with which governments are constantly dealing. This plan will consist of two parts—"The Principles of Christian Citizenship" and "The Christian Method of Political Action." The principles to be announced will have to do with the family, the church and the state, and will also deal with international relations. Information concerning the conference can be obtained from Dr. James S. Martin, 603 Publication building, Pittsburg, Pa.

A man and his wife in Maryville, Tenn., who recently adopted the tithing system, have given $500 for land for a woman's Bible college in China.

Notes of "The World in Chicago"

One of the exhibits which attracts large interest at the exposition is that of the work in lumber camps under the direction of Rev. Frank E. Higgins. Mr. Sornberger, one of Mr. Higgins's converts and for six years an evangelist among the loggers, has constructed models of typical buildings used in a logging camp. A portion of the roof of each log building is removable for explanation of the interior arrangements of bunkhouse, dining hall, stable and blacksmith shop. The sleds with their big loads of logs are also shown. Mr. Sornberger himself explains the exhibit to the crowds.

The Kaffir children, who give frequent exhibitions in one of the halls in the annex of the Coliseum, attract capacity crowds at each performance. This group of children with leopard skin garments sing hymns in their own language and in English. They were brought from Africa specially for "The World in Chicago."

The scientific temperance exhibit at the head of the stairs on the balcony at the middle of the Wabash avenue side contains many pungent lessons in charts and figures. One of the charts is from statistics by Judge Gemmill of the Chicago court of domestic relations and shows by different size houses the cause of unhappy homes. Drink is responsible for 46 per cent of the troubles which come before the court. Another charge chart shows that 75 per cent of all the children who appear in the juvenile court owe their trouble also to drink. The mortality of children of drunken and sober mothers is shown by different numbers of small black dolls among rows of white ones. The influence of alcohol in the death or feeble-mindedness in offspring is shown by a graphic family tree of an investigated New Jersey family where the effect of drink unto the third and fourth generation is traced.

The city mission work of Chicago is well displayed on the balcony. Olivet Institute has a large showing of pictures and charts. The recent survey of Fourth church is set forth.

Many out of town visitors attend the exposition, staying several days to study the curios and learn something of the customs in various countries through the constantly repeated programs by stewards.

"Twenty-five dollars will support an evangelist a year in Africa" is one of the compelling signs in the African section.

"When a sick man in China lacks courage they give him pulverized tiger bone," said the demonstrator at the medical mission booth one afternoon to the curious crowd attracted by medicinal objects of the Chinese. "If a man has a sore eye he can't see well, and to permit him to see well he should have more light, so the native doctor sticks a small knife into the eye." Then followed evidence of the advances made by missionary activity.

Korea attracts a large crowd at all times and the programs by stewards are well carried out. One dialogue presents a native woman who has heard a missionary speak. She has been told that women have souls, and upon this being repeated to her neighbors, they with a little urging agree to hear the strange visitor.

Colored people are in charge of the exhibits from Hampton Institute and other negro schools.

Seats for the evening performance of the pageant at the Auditorium theater have been sold out a week in advance and at recent performances people were turned away for lack of room. The operalike setting forth of religious themes with the brilliant costumes and large chorus is attracting many besides regular church attendants. The full performance is given every afternoon and evening except Sunday.

Some Ways of Working

Advertising in Small Towns

Some pastors who see the half-page advertisements set in display type which large daily papers of the country are using to exploit the churches of their city sometimes feel that they can have nothing of the sort in the small papers of their town. Not so with Rev. James M. Hamilton of Hebron, Neb. Following the same idea of larger advertisements in presenting the features of church work and church activities which would appeal to the people outside of the church, he has incorporated in a series of weekly articles in the church news column of the local papers very clever appeals to the nonchurch-going public. These advertisements are set by the local papers in regular type as part of the church announcements and are attracting attention outside of the immediate vicinity of Hebron. The editors of the papers show by their cooperation that they are willing, as most editors are, to assist the work of the church. One recent announcement was based upon Secretary Bryan's proposal for worldwide peace. Mr. Hamilton showed that the creation of peace sentiment was perculiarly and properly a work of the church and he urges people who have the same views on peace to cooperate with the church.

Another advertisement sought to reach the business men of Hebron. It could be used with slight changes in practically any small town, especially in the West, where the business men are continually seeking to boost the commercial prosperity of the municipality. The text of the announcement was as follows:

THE BUSINESS MEN'S AD.

The business men of the city have issued an envelope for advertising purposes. On the envelope it is stated that "Hebron is noted," among other things, for its school buildings, business blocks, banks and churches. Why are the churches mentioned? For the same reason doubtless that the schools and business enterprises are.

THE AD MEANS—

1. That churches are as essential as stores in the development of a town.

2. That they are as much an asset as the stores.

3. That they are as valuable an advertisement as the stores in attracting to the town people who have money and time and business ability to invest.

As no one wants to locate in a schoolless, storeless community, so our business men believe no one wants to locate in a churchless community. And are they not right?

A MANIFEST DUTY.

The duty of the community is plain, then—it is that the local churches shall be supported as loyally and heartily as the local stores. Are you doing that?

We invite you most cordially to all the public services in the local PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH next Sunday. These services are arranged for your benefit. We want you to take advantage of them next Sunday. We invite you to church therefore. You will find there a free seat, inspiring music and a helpful gospel message. Bring the children. There is a special talk for them at every morning service.

Uses The Continent in Prayer Meeting

The Continent is used by Fort Morgan (Colo.) church in solving one phase of the weekly prayer meeting. In the past the pastor, Dr. Warren H. DuBose, found it hard to get the people to respond readily in prayer meeting, and to suggest thoughts on the topic of the evening. Lately he has been taking the suggested thoughts in The Continent, clipping them apart and giving them to different ones at the meeting, asking them at least to read them, but suggesting that they use the clipping as a suggestion for the expression of their own ideas in regard to the topic. Some just read their clippings, but many of them after reading give their own ideas. The formality of the service is broken up and many are led to take part who otherwise would not. Dr. DuBose says: "If readers will notice the articles discussing the prayer meeting topics in The Continent they will find that each thought can readily stand by itself and be a point of suggestion to some individual."

—Rev. O. M. Jones, pastor of First church, North Yakima, Wash., invites attendance to church services by stimulating memory of the pioneer days. A recent bulletin carries this message: "Pioneers came many times ten to fifteen miles on horseback and forded the Naches river to establish this church and attend her services. Hundreds of lives have been influenced and made happier because of their sacrifices. Would you do something to help and encourage others? Attend the evening services. The congregations are made up largely of strangers. Give them the encouragement of your presence."

Studying Work of the Deacons

Following the suggestion made at a recent meeting of Fort Wayne Presbytery a diaconate convention was held at Columbia City, Ind., May 13 for the purpose of studying the church's obligation along the lines of temporal ministry and the duty of the diaconate as set forth in the church's scheme of organization. Following a day of careful study and planning, resolutions were adopted suggesting to presbytery the advisability of that body urging the churches to undertake the performance of their temporal ministry, as churches and in an organized way, under the leadership of the local diaconates, who should be chosen with cautious regard to piety and wisdom. It was also urged that sessions should give into the care of the deacons the temporal ministry and that churches should carefully weigh the advisability of forming their diaconates to include both deacons and deaconesses. The union of all diaconates within presbytery and conventions by them were also suggested.

Work for National Prohibition

According to the announcement of the future policy of the Anti-Saloon League by Purley A. Baker, general superintendent, the adoption of the income tax amendment to the constitution furnishes prohibitionists with an argument to meet those who profess to believe that the nation needs the income from liquor licenses to assist in paying expenses. National prohibition through a constitutional amendment is to be the goal toward which the Anti-Saloon League will bend its energies. More than half the counties of the country and entire states, embracing two-thirds of the territory and one-half of the people, have outlawed the saloon.

Children Can Help Missionaries

Statements of the large need for help in sending Sunday school missionaries into the fast growing regions of the West have been issued by Dr. Alexander Henry of the Board of Publication and Sabbath School Work. He suggests that the need for additional funds could well receive special consideration by the Sunday schools on Children's Day. It is through the work of the Sunday school missionaries that scores of communities are reached which otherwise would have no Sunday school or preaching.

Missionary Union to Meet

All missionaries of evangelical churches or those under appointment to go to the foreign field are invited to attend the international missionary union which will convene for its thirtieth annual gathering at Clifton Springs, N. Y., June 4-10. Free entertainment is offered to missionaries, who will have an opportunity to compare information concerning their work. The corresponding secretary is Mrs. H. J. Boswick, Clifton Springs.

A Secret Order for Purity

Rev. Richard W. Lewis, pastor at Paris, Tenn., has organized a secret society for young women under the name of the Key League. The League is elaborating a ceremonial ritual similar to that of fraternal lodges. Initiation will be provided in three different degrees. The object of the order is to stipulate for men as high a standard of life as men demand of women and to discourage marriage except on the basis of a single standard of purity.

Religious Meetings at Chautauqua

"Church militant" week Aug. 17-23 at Chautauqua Institution promises to attract a large number of religious workers to Chautauqua, N. Y. Among the speakers will be Moderator John Timothy Stone and Rev. Charles Stelzle. A foreign mission institute under the leadership of Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery will be held during the week beginning July 27.

According to a bulletin of the North Carolina state board of health liquor is to blame each four years for more deaths than occurred in action during the four years of the civil war.

Suppose

This Dish Met You

Suppose you came down to breakfast and wanted something extra nice. And you found at your plate a dish like this—either Puffed Rice or Puffed Wheat.

Porous, brown grains—eight times normal size—made to taste like toasted nuts.

Ready to serve with sugar and cream. Ready to mix with your berries.

A million people this morning, in all probability, found that on their breakfast tables. We are making forty million dishes monthly to supply the lovers of these foods.

If you served something else, the folks at your table found nothing quite so good.

For these foods can't be imitated. Their texture comes through a steam explosion. Their flavor is due to terrific heat.

There is no other way known to make cereal foods as delightful as these Puffed Grains.

Puffed Wheat, 10c Except in Puffed Rice, 15c Extreme West

Here's another way of serving. Float the grains like crackers in a bowl of milk.

They are thin and crisp and porous. At a touch of the teeth the grains will crush into almond-flavored granules.

You get whole grain wafers, made more digestible than any other process makes them.

Or use them where nut-meats taste good. Use them in candy making, or as garnish to ice cream.

These are cereal confections. Yet they are cheap enough to be served as liberally as other cereal foods.

The Quaker Oats Company
Sole Makers—CHICAGO

(429)

News Notes from Various Fields

Washington

New Churches in Growing State

A church which cost only $35 in money to construct has recently been finished at Zillah, where the congregation had been paying $3 a Sabbath for a hall in which to meet before Rev. C. E. Botts became pastor. A lot and building material were obtained and the people did the work. The building is plastered and electric lighted. The church at Naches is planning for a larger structure and Kittitas church is also becoming crowded.

Rev. Frederick Tonge, pastor of Davenport church, has been asked by the home mission committee to look after the church at Larene, seven miles away, and Egypt, sixteen miles away. Men of the town, and not all Presbyterians, take him to his appointments in the afternoon in their automobiles.

By the will of David R. McKinlay, deceased, the deacons of Westminster church, Seattle, are given control and direction of an estate approximating $500,000 to be devoted to an orphanage. This is a memorial to the mother of Mr. McKinlay, who was a member of Westminster church. The estate will become available at the death of Mrs. McKinlay. By the terms of the same will $5,000 is given for a manse to Westminster church. F. M. Silsley, D. D., is pastor of the church.

Colorado

The Christian Citizenship Union recently held a meeting at Central church to protest against the removal of Miss Josephine Roche as city amusement inspector.

Central church, Denver, has installed a moving-picture show room in the basement of the church. Shows are given free every Friday night to a crowd of nearly 500. Dr. Robert F. Coyle is pastor.

The men of First church, Boulder, have generously provided the funds to send their pastor, H. B. Hummel, D. D., to the World Presbyterian Alliance Council, which meets in Aberdeen, Scotland, and to the world's Sunday school convention at Zurich, Switzerland. The pastor was chosen delegate to the alliance at the last General Assembly.

Two Denver churches are about to become vacant. Corona church pulpit will be vacated June 1 through the resignation of Rev. Merwin A. Stone, who has accepted a call to First church of McPherson, Kan. Rev. J. Mont Travis has resigned the pastorate at Westminster for the purpose of rest and recuperation. He will, however, continue his work as chairman of presbytery's committee on home missions and church extension.

Oregon

For the first time in years Ashland church is completely out of debt and a balance of several hundred dollars in the treasury will be used this summer in redecorating the church and buying a new carpet. Since the coming of the present pastor, Rev. H. T. Chisholm, the attendance at public worship and prayer meeting has doubled. During the last six months the Sunday school has increased 50 per cent. Graded lessons have been introduced in eight grades. The men's Bible club has been doing a good work along social lines. This class and a special class for young ladies meet after the morning service. It is hoped that a wing may be added to the building to accommodate these extra classes at the time of the regular Sunday school. The church has six mission study classes and a catechism class of twenty. The women's organizations are especially strong.

Nebraska

St. John's chapel, a country church in Box Butte Presbytery, last year gave $2.60 per capita to the various boards.

May 18 the corner stone of the Bohemian church of Thurston was laid with appropriate exercises and an address delivered by Rev. H. A. Brown of Emerson. This church will be built of brick and when completed will cost about $9,000. Rev. Jerry Stulz of Dubuque Seminary is supplying this congregation.

About 1,700 confessed conversion at a recent series of evangelistic meetings at Lincoln under direction of Dr. Charles R. Scoville.

Women of First church, Omaha, in the six weeks following the storm there made into garments 1,836 yards of cloth. From a dozen to twenty women were at work almost constantly at the church or at their homes helping the relief.

Rev. H. A. Brown was installed pastor of Emerson church May 8. Alex Corkey, D. D., of Wayne; Samuel Light, D. D., of Randolph, and J. M. Caldwell, D. D., of Wakefield took part in the service. This church has attained self-support.

The Board of Church Erection has a letter from Rev. William J. Eby, home missionary at Broadwater, asking for pews or seats, pulpit and pulpit chairs, which some church is contemplating disposing of. This is a little band of Presbyterians struggling hard to build a chapel in which to worship.

California

W. C. Patterson, a prominent member of Immanuel church, Los Angeles, and a banker of that city, recently died at Naples, Italy.

Fillmore church the past year has organized an Endeavor society with fifty members and has paid all indebtedness, amounting to over $1,300, on the manse and church building. Rev. S. F. Shiffler is pastor.

The California legislature on a recent Sunday not only continued its labors in Sacramento all day but part of Sunday night. It is said that two Presbyterian elders, members of the body, had to choose between attending sessions on Sunday or leaving the care of important bills to others.

Rev. William Carter, secretary of the International Peace Forum, recently urged the people of Pasadena church to send telegrams and letters to Governor Johnson urging him not to sign the California antialien bill. He preached on the subject, "Our Attitude Toward China and Japan; Is It Christian?"

The Santa Clara congregation is looking forward under the direction of the pastor, Rev. James Falconer, to the erection of a new church. During the past year a number have been added to the membership. The representative of the Sustentation and Relief fund was given $1,000 on his recent visit there.

Santa Barbara, cursed by the saloon for all the years of its history, redeemed itself May 15. All saloons, bars and restaurant licenses were voted out, to take effect Aug. 1. The guiding spirit and leader of this splendid campaign was G. W. Wadsworth, D. D., one of the field secretaries of the temperance committee of the church. The committee was induced to relieve Dr. Wadsworth from other field work for nearly two months, and he thus became free to devote his time exclusively to Santa Barbara. He organized the men, held parlor meetings for the women, came personally before the schools, churches, clubs and other organizations, arranged a most telling temperance exhibit, did some splendid publicity work in the daily papers, met the business men and won their confidence, and in every detail managed a dignified, good-natured, fine-spirited, victorious campaign. The liquor men are still wondering how it happened. The same effort was made in 1907 and again in 1910, but on both occasions met sore defeat.

Texas

Rev. R. J. Smith began a revival in his new tent at Arlington May 25. He uses a large army bugle to call the people together for service.

Rev. French McAfee of Port Royal, Pa., has been formally welcomed to the pastorate of Taylor Street church, Fort Worth. Already several members have united, bringing considerable financial strength. Mr. McAfee hopes to have Taylor Street church stand at the head of Presbyterian churches in Texas in offerings to missions.

Rev. M. E. Chappell, the new pastor of Hemphill church, has received several members recently.

Rev. George M. Oakley, president of Fairemont Seminary at Weatherford, preached the baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class of the Arlington high school recently.

A new church at Rome was dedicated May 18 by Rev. Joseph P. Hicks of Fort Worth. Rev. Edgar Hubbard is pastor. He is at present in school at Trinity University and will receive his B. A. degree at the June commencement.

Iowa

First church, Davenport, will raise $6,500 to refresco and repair the church during the coming summer.

Sinclair Memorial church, Cedar Rapids, Rev. F. H. Shedd pastor, has recently wiped out a debt of $3,500.

Dr. E. N. Bradshaw, until recently pastor at Leon, will leave in a few days for Ruby, Alaska, where he will act as home missionary.

Rev. S. Turner Foster, who has been called to Westminster church, Cedar Rapids, will probably be able to take up the work about July 1. For about five years he has labored in Hopkinton in the Reformed church and the Presbyterian church.

Rev. Otis G. Dale of La Junta, Colo., and Rev. Marion Humphreys, Central church, Davenport, who were seminary classmates, have exchanged pulpits for three months. Mr. Dale has been granted a leave of absence from his pulpit on account of his wife's health. Mr. Humphreys has recently resigned from the Davenport church.

Kansas

A new manse is under construction at Liberal, where Rev. H. A. Holshouser is pastor.

A debt of $4,500 of several years' standing was recently wiped out by First church, Hutchinson, Rev. John S. Blayney pastor. Dr. D. M. Skilling of St. Louis recently held evangelistic meetings and also assisted in the reorganization of the brotherhood. The brotherhood conducts evening services at Irvin Memorial church.

R. M. Tinnon, D. D., pastor of Herrington church, was elected an honorary delegate to General Assembly. Contributions by presbytery, afterwards supplemented by the church, for carfare added to the honor. A request to the stated clerk of Assembly for a seat on the platform as an ex-moderator of the former Cumberland Presbyterian Church was also sent.

Wyoming

A society of girls of Cody from 10 to 15 years of age has earned every penny of $300 to pay for a new bell for their church.

Rev. J. Morton Young is building a parsonage at Elk Mountain after the latest approved modern bungalow type.

Rev. M. F. Newport has taken hold of the work at Saratoga in the North Platte valley and the people are encouraged as never before. With an automobile he could reach outstations and supply the whole countryside with preaching, which he is willing to do if transportation could be provided. Student H. Ray Berger of McCormick Seminary is supplying for the summer in circuit work in the same valley, with Encampment as headquarters.

Oklahoma

Rev. S. A. McPherson, who has recently taken charge of East Ardmore church, has received a cordial welcome.

First church, Ardmore, at the close of a prosperous year, decided to erect a new church building to cost about $25,000. The choir, among other church organizations, pledged $500. The ladies' aid recently gave a pure food sale, which netted them $450 for the building.

North Carolina

Rev. H. B. Searight has entered upon the sixth year of his pastorate of First church of Washington (which is the oldest Washington in the country, having been founded and named in 1776). This church sent a very gratifying report to presbytery and raised the pastor's salary.

The Sunday school of the home mission church at Jupiter, of which Rev. W. S. Harold is pastor, is badly in need of fifty second-hand song books. This school has a Bible class which meets Sunday afternoon and often has an attendance of fifty.

Pennsylvania

Lansford First church has increased the salary of the pastor, Dr. Irwin P. McCurdy, 50 per cent, dating from April 1.

Honey Brook church, Rev. R. J. Johnston pastor, has received a baptismal font from James Boyd of Philadelphia as a memorial of his wife, who died about a year ago.

The Presbyterian churches of Wilkes Barre have profited greatly from the services held there by Rev. William A. Sunday, the total number of accessions to the four churches being 1,135.

Plans are being considered for the erection of an adequate building for the Sunday school and congregation of First church, Phœnixville, Rev. George M. Hertzog pastor. The membership has increased largely during the last two years.

Miss Lillian Albert, a graduate of the Deaconess Training School of the Reformed and Presbyterian churches of Philadelphia, has accepted a position with Tamaqua congregation as pastor's assistant, and in connection with her work will conduct a kindergarten department daily in the Sunday school room of the church.

Minnesota

Owatonna First church has decided to build a new structure upon its present site to cost $15,000.

As an outgrowth of the young people's institute which was recently held in St. Paul it is possible that a summer conference for young people will be conducted annually at White Bear lake, near that city.

Dr. John P. Williamson, son of the founder of the church, delivered the charge to the people at the installation of Dr. John T. Bergen as pastor of First church, Minneapolis. This is the oldest Protestant church in the state.

Michigan

May 6 Rev. George L. Guichard was installed pastor of Reading church by Rev. J. A. Seibert of Adrian, Rev. C. E. Thomas of Hillsdale and Rev. F. C. Colvin. Mr. Guichard has been laboring on this field since last November with success.

Rev. C. W. Sidebotham was installed pastor over the church of Munger May 13. Rev. T. S. Anderson of Bay City, H. R. Stark, D. D., of Saginaw, and Rev. C. W. Hastings of Saginaw took part. The membership is almost entirely rural. Mr. Sidebotham came from a ten years' pastorate in Lake City.

New York

The fortieth year of the ministry of Dr. John McColl was celebrated recently at Gorham. He gave an historical sketch of the work he has done.

First church, Plattsburg, has begun the construction of a new manse. The former manse, nearly a century old, was sold a year ago. The building will be of blue stone and pressed brick and will cost, completed, over $14,000. It is expected that when ready next winter for occupancy the building will be free from debt. Rev. John Bailey Kelly is pastor.

Wisconsin

The splendid singing of the Sunday school of Horicon church is one of the attractive features of the work on this field.

Arkansas

Rogers church has decided to erect a new brick building to cost $12,000. Rev. J. H. Kirkpatrick is pastor.

Indiana

Increased interest in mission study and larger contributions are shown in the report of Third church, Fort Wayne, Rev. Edward Montgomery pastor. The Sunday school is one of the flourishing departments of the work.

Thorntown church has made plans to celebrate its eightieth anniversary May 29—June 1. Invitations were sent to more than 300 former members. Rev. Hugh N. Ronald is pastor.

New Jersey

A manse is under way at Plainsboro, to be occupied by the new pastor, Rev. George A. Burslem.

At the May meeting of the Newark Presbyterian Union the speaker was Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin, pastor of Fifth Avenue Baptist church, New York.

New Brunswick Presbytery recently ordained two members of the senior class of Princeton Seminary—John Franklin Steiner and Reuben Archer Torrey, Jr., son of the well known evangelist. Both young men are under appointment of the Foreign Board for work in China.

Ten memorial windows were dedicated recently in First German church, Orange. The windows were given by members of the church and others to commemorate the work of several persons who were prominently associated with the organizing and upbuilding of this church, which is forty-four years old.

Idaho

Both church and manse at Ilo have been enlarged. Rev. Milo B. Fiske is pastor.

Rev. W. I. Hill has taken charge of the work at Fargo, a new and promising field, where a church will be organized in the near future.

North Dakota

Presbyterians of Jamestown expect to spend $30,000 this summer on a new edifice.

A series of successful evangelistic services was recently held at Glenila church, Calvin, by Dr. F. E. Smiley and W. P. Hanson. Practically all the boys and girls in the Sunday school joined the church.

Another experiment in church union will be tried by the Methodists and Presbyterians of Glenburn and Omemee.

Tennessee

Plans are being made for the building of an annex to Greeneville church, Rev. John S. Eakin pastor. The Sunday school has grown rapidly and more room is needed for the classes.

New Providence church, Maryville, is discussing the erection of a Sunday school building and subscriptions are now being made for that purpose. Over $500 was recently given to the China fund.

New Mexico

Although limited in membership and means, Las Cruces church under the pastoral care of Rev. Thomas A. Mitchell is making its influence felt in the community. On a recent Sabbath a number of scholars from the Sabbath school united with the church.

Montana

Rev. H. Addison Mullen, formerly pastor of First church, Pocatello, Idaho, has begun work at Central church, Butte. The church has been thoroughly renovated at a large expense.

English Services at The Hague

Travelers in the city of The Hague, Netherlands, during the coming summer who desire to attend church service conducted in the English language are most cordially invited to worship with the American church, maintained by the Reformed Church in America, at 44 Prinsestraat, near the post office. Services will be held at 11 o'clock from June 29 to Aug. 24 by Dr. A. DeWitt Mason of New York City.

Is there a remedy for the plight of the middle-aged, middle class, salaried man?

"At fifty or fifty-five what is there for the average salaried man? Tragic as it is to make the admission, if we are honest we cannot deny that he lives in fear. Prudent and economical although he has been, his salary has never enabled him to save; by rigid self-denial, often by foregoing actual necessities, he has managed to keep up a few thousand dollars of life insurance so that his wife shall not be absolutely penniless at his death. But that is the extent of the saving. If he should lose his place, in a few weeks he would be a pauper, his furniture and his clothes are all that he has to show for his life's work, and that realization is a fear that never leaves him. It is not imaginary; it is very real.

"It is among salaried men—to distinguish a class from the wage-earning workingman—that the greatest discontent exists at the present time, and that is the most distinct feature of the social unrest. For members of the salaried class are good fathers and husbands, the bulwark of respectable society, the great majority leading sober, useful lives, trying to do their duty faithfully, rendering valuable service to society, the support of the church. Is there a remedy for the plight of the middle-class man?"

Is there a remedy for the middle aged minister's plight, a salaried man on a third less than a workingman's wage?

There is only one answer—

PENSION

Do you want to help the minister and the church to remedy the plight which is as bad for the church as it is for the minister?

If you are interested write

Ministerial Relief and Sustentation
WILLIAM HIRAM FOULKES, General Secretary
507 Witherspoon Building - - - Philadelphia, Pa.

Will Extend Outdoor Evangelism

Additional Points to Be Reached by Meetings—Christian Endeavorers in New York Observe Anniversary—Ordain Ruthenian.

NEW YORK—The National Daily Bible Institute is starting outdoor evangelistic meetings in new sections of the city. The new points occupied are at Battery Place and Washington street, at 12 o'clock each day, and at Madison Square, and 128th street and Third avenue at 7:30 each night. Thursday night Beacon Light Mission, one of the branches of the institute, will hold a reunion of men who have been converted in the meetings of the mission. Representatives of neighboring churches will be present. The address will be given by Don O. Shelton, president of the Bible institute.

Rev. Leon L. Hellyer, recently graduated from Princeton Seminary and ordained by St. Louis Presbytery, is in New York completing an extended study of Jewish missions in this country and Canada. Mr. Hellyer, a Hebrew Christian, has been appointed to one of the immigration fellowships offered by the Home Board, and will further perfect himself in study and work abroad.

An appeal has been issued by the Hungarian Hospital Association for funds with which to build a Hungarian hospital in New York City. There are more than 150,000 Hungarians in New York. In some cases no diagnosis can be made of the sick now because the Hungarian patient cannot express himself in English.

Dr. Merrill in Episcopal Church

Dr. W. P. Merrill of Brick church, while attending Assembly at Atlanta, on Sunday, May 18, preached at St. Luke's Episcopal church in that city under special dispensation of the bishop of Atlanta. Dr. Merrill wore the full cononical vestments of an Episcopalian clergyman, entered with the formal processional of rector and choir, and preached from the regular post of the rector in the chancel. Dr. Wilmer, the rector, interpolated in the morning prayer a special petition for the blessing of God on the Presbyterian Assemblies in session in the city.

Rev. W. P. Shriver is prosecuting steadily his efficiency canvass and campaign to which the Presbytery of Brooklyn invited him within its bounds. As a means of bringing the results to bear directly on the local congregations, Mr. Shriver has brought an "efficiency exhibit" before meetings of the men of several churches already.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the New York City Christian Endeaver Union was celebrated at West End church last Friday, with John R. Clements, president of the state union, as the principal speaker. Following the afternoon session, a silver jubilee dinner was held at the Hotel Grenoble.

Henry W. Hubbard, for thirty-four years president of the American Missionary Association, died suddenly last Thursday in one of the private booths of the safety deposit company, where he had gone to transact some business for the association.

Jews Give Minister Bible

When Rev. Ora Jason Cohee, who graduated recently from Union Theological Seminary, was bidding farewell to his Jewish clubs at Hope chapel and Hope house he was presented with a number of significant gifts by the young people. One club presented him with a handsomely engraved loving cup. Another gave him a beautifully bound Bible, with the autographs of the members. Ordinarily such gifts would not call for special mention, but when one knows that when the neighborhood work was started three years ago the people of the community were bitterly antagonistic, one concludes that changes have taken place and that animosity has given place to love. A group of Jewish young people giving a Bible to a Christian minister is a picture hard to duplicate.

New York Presbytery held an adjourned meeting May 15 at Hope chapel to ordain Joachim Glazko, a graduate of Bloomfield Seminary. Mr. Glazko is a Ruthenian and during his early life was a member of the Othodox Greek Catholic Church. Before coming to America he joined the Stundists, a Protestant denomination in Russia similar to the Baptists in this country. In America he affiliated with the Ruthenian Protestants of New York and Newark. He has worked as editor and writer for local Ruthenian publications and through his literary efforts for his countrymen has won their love and devotion. Many of his friends from Newark attended the service together with the Russian, Ruthenian and American congregations of Hope chapel. The sermon by Rev. A. P. Ivanyshyn was preached in the Ruthenian language. Professor F. W. Jackson of Bloomfield Seminary and Rev. John E. Fleming, pastor of Hope chapel, also took part.

Scotch church, Dr. David G. Wylie pastor, has called as assistant Rev. Warren J. Conrad. Mr. Conrad was one of this year's graduates from Princeton and will be ordained in Scotch church next Sunday. He will be in charge during the absence of Dr. Wylie in Europe.

Last Thursday in Wyckoff Heights church of Brooklyn the new pastor, Rev. Dedros K. Apelian, was installed. Rev. John H. Kerr, Dr. Joseph Dunn Burrell, pastor of Classon Avenue church; Rev. L. O. Rotenbach of Bethany church, Dr. T. F. Steele of Mount Olivet and Rev. Carl Jaeger of Ebenezer church took part in the services.

Attacks Present Dress of Women

Miss Bartelme, Juvenile Judge, Urges Ministers to Persuade Mothers to Change Attire—Advice to People with Leisure.

CHICAGO—As a result of addresses before the Chicago Church Federation Monday efforts will be made by the Protestant ministers of the city to see that liquor selling and dance halls are divorced, and the judges of the juvenile courts will be invited to communicate with the executive of the federation when help can be given Protestant children in trouble. Miss Mary Bartelme of the juvenile court told the ministers that the Catholics were very much more careful to follow up children brought before the juvenile court than were Protestants. She condemned severely the present fashion in women's skirts and urged ministers to preach against it. She also suggested that women with leisure and men with little to do could bring brightness into the lives of children in orphan asylums by paying personal attention to some particular child for an hour a week. Mrs. Virginia Brooks Washburne told of the evils in dance halls of the city.

Presbytery next Monday will be the guests of the Presbyterian Training school at a luncheon arranged by the ministers' association in honor of Dr. John Timothy Stone. Presbytery will meet at the training school at 10 o'clock. The speakers will be Doctors Hill, Luccock, Boyle, McClure and T. E. D. Bradley.

"A Social Program for Evanston Churches" was outlined by Dr. S. G. Bronson of Garrett Biblical Institute at a meeting at Second church, Evanston, last week. He recommended that all the churches should work together to reach the 3,000 people who he estimates are now untouched by any church influence. He suggested evangelistic tent meetings and support of the weaker religious organizations by the stronger.

Rev. E. Wade Koons and Mrs. Koons are the latest additions to the instructors at "The World in Chicago" among the Presbyterian missionaries. Mr. Koons was the official representative of the Koreans to General Assembly. They return to their station the last of June.

Vote on the four dry bills before the legislature, made a special order for May 14, was postponed for two weeks in spite of efforts of the anti-liquor forces to bring the matters to an issue. A strong fight is being made to pass the measures.

Special days at "The World in Chicago" during the past week or so have added much to the interest shown in the exposition. A parade of all the stewards in costume last Tuesday was one of the big special events in which all denominations participated. The general prayer meetings in the lecture hall each afternoon at 4 o'clock attract large companies of people. Short prayer services are also held by stewards just before each relief started on its work.

Memorial Day exercises were held at Olivet church last Sunday afternoon. May 31 has been named as Olivet Day at "The World in Chicago."

Closing exercises of the first year of work of the Italian mission on Taylor street were held last Friday with a good attendance of mothers. This work has been very successful.

The marriage of Miss Harriet McClure, daughter of Dr. J. G. K. McClure, president of McCormick Seminary, to Douglas Stuart will take place at Lake Forest church June 10. Dr. Boyle and Dr. McClure will officiate.

To the woman who bakes, Royal is the greatest of time and labor savers. Makes home baking easy, a pleasure and a profit.

ROYAL Baking Powder

The only Baking Powder made from Royal Grape Cream of Tartar

With minimum trouble and cost biscuit, cake and pastry are made fresh, clean and greatly superior to the ready-made, dry, found-in-the-shop variety.

Dr. J. T. Henderson and Rev. Walter Getty, secretaries of the national brotherhood, returned from General Assembly much encouraged by the expressions of confidence in the work of the brotherhood which were made during the meeting. The rally and dinner of the men of the three Assemblies was well attended.

Miss Carrie A. Bradley, a daughter of the former sexton of Second church, has been appointed deaconess of that church. She has been connected with Christ church and has had considerable experience.

Dr. John Timothy Stone, moderator of General Assembly, last Sunday afternoon took part in the first of what will probably be many special meetings this year when he preached at the dedication of Wilmette church, Dr. James M. Wilson pastor. Others taking part in the exercises were Dr. E. P. Hill and Dr. George B. Safford, and R. J. Brown and E. A. Kerr on behalf of the local congregation. The building, lot and furnishings cost $25,000. At the services there was raised $4,600, completing the cost of the building except for a small mortgage.

School and College

Dr. John Grant Newman, pastor of Chambers-Wylie church, Philadelphia, will deliver the annual address at the commencement of Maryville College June 5. The baccalaureate sermon by the president, Dr. Samuel T. Wilson, will be delivered June 1.

Dr. Robert F. Coyle of Denver will deliver the commencement address at Hastings College, Nebraska, June 11. Dr. B. M. Long of Lincoln will deliver the baccalaureate sermon on the Sunday preceding. Dr. Coyle is an ex-moderator of General Assembly and Dr. Lincoln is moderator of the Nebraska Synod. Dr. Crone, the president, recently received considerable encouragement in his endowment campaign in New York.

Gail Borden
EAGLE
BRAND
CONDENSED
MILK
THE ORIGINAL
Is the Mother's best resort when Nature's Supply is Insufficient

Bible Has Been Read in Schools

No Law Needed in Philadelphia to Compel Its Reading—70,000 Children Not in Sunday School Items from the Churches.

PHILADELPHIA — Presbyterian ministers have appealed to the governor to sign the bill requiring all teachers of public schools to read at least ten verses of Scripture at opening of school each day and they are much gratified at his decision to do so. As far as Philadelphia was concerned the bill was unnecessary, as the Bible has always been read by its teachers and no objection has ever been raised, it is said, to their doing so.

Philadelphia has 235,000 boys and girls; 70,000 of these are said not to be enrolled in any Sunday school. The county Sunday school association will seek to awaken its 720 Sunday schools to the duty of reaching these the next year.

First Church of the Covenanters, which had as its pastor for fifty years the late Dr. T. P. Stevenson, widely known in his connection with reform movements, hopes to obtain as his successor Rev. M. M. Pearce of Pittsburg and formerly of St. Louis.

BANK WILL BE TREASURER

Philadelphia North Presbytery has chosen the Norristown Trust Company as treasurer of the combined offerings of its churches and benevolent individuals for home mission causes. An apportionment of these will be made to synod, presbytery and the Home Board after a conference of their representatives.

On the first Monday in June at their regular meeting the Presbyterian ministers of the city will listen to reports from presbytery's commissioners to the General Assembly.

Dr. N. W. Conkling of New York, who recently gave $100,000 to endow the "president's chair" of the Western Theological Seminary, was for some years a pastor in Philadelphia, first of Scots church and then of Arch Street, being succeeded in the latter by the late distinguished Dr. J. L. Withrow, a former Chicago pastor.

Dr. Leander T. Chamberlain, who died recently in Pasadena, Cal., eminent as a scientist as well as minister of the gospel, was well known in this city, being related by marriage to prominent citizens.

The collegiate commencement of Lincoln University will occur June 3. Thirty-four young men will graduate. A tablet erected by the alumni to the memory of the late President Isaac N. Rendall, D. D., will be dedicated.

Licentiate William Hawthorne was ordained last week to the gospel ministry by the Presbytery of Philadelphia in Union tabernacle, Dr. Robert Hunter pastor. The sermon was preached by Rev. William Muir Auld of Calvary church and the ordination prayer made by Dr. J. Gray Bolton.

PRESBYTERIANS NUMBER 53,000

Philadelphia Presbytery has now upon its roll seventy-eight churches and eight missons, and nearly 42,000 communicants. Its Sunday school membership is over 36,000. There are twenty-nine additional Presbyterian churches in the city, with a membership of 11,000, belonging to Philadelphia North Presbytery, thus giving the church 107 organizations in the city and a communicant membership of 53,000.

The 166th annual convention of the Lutheran Ministerium of Pennsylvania and adjacent states recently rejected by a large majority the recommendation that no congregation pay its pastor less than $1,300. W. P. WHITE.

Patterson of Belfast in Detroit

Temperance Worker Opens Series of Meetings June 1—His First Appearance in America—Immanuel Church to Celebrate.

DETROIT—The witty Irish orator, Robert J. Patterson of Belfast, Ireland, founder of the "Catch-My-Pal" movement, will begin a ten days' total abstinence campaign Sunday evening, June 1, in First church. This is his first appearance in America. Some of the leading reform workers of the city are back of the movement, believing as they do that the drinking habits of the people even more than the weakness of present laws are responsible for the evils that pertain to the liquor traffic. Saturday night, June 7, Dr. Patterson will speak in Roberts hall, East Detroit. Sunday afternoon, June 8, a union mass meeting will be held in Woodward Avenue Baptist church.

The Northern Baptist Convention concluded an eight days' series of great meetings in Woodward Avenue Baptist church May 28. Over 2,000 delegates were here from all the northern states. The program included names of noted leaders, East and West, and in both the home and foreign missionary fields. The Protestant pulpits of the city were largely occupied by the visiting Baptist ministers last Sunday.

Members of Immanuel church are planning to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of their church June 1-2. They will also celebrate on these days the second anniversary of the dedication of their present edifice, which is conceded to be one of the finest and best equipped in the city. At the Sunday morning service the pastor, Rev. A. H. Cameron, will give an historical sermon and in the evening Elisha Fraser will speak on "Presbyterian Men of Detroit Twenty-Five Years Ago." Dr. Jaquess, superintendent of church extension in Detroit, and Rev. J. Frederick Fitschen, Jr., pastor of Jefferson Avenue church, will also speak. Monday evening a banquet will be served in the gymnasium by the ladies of the church, at which 500 persons are expected to be present.

Good Things in This Issue

"They say" that straws show which way the wind blows. If this homely figure may be used in connection with some interesting news items in this issue of The Continent there are several indications of the church's progress. See on page 766, first item, how anxious the people in a small Washington town were for a church. Central church, Denver, has a free moving-picture show in the basement once a week, page 766. Systematic work drove out the saloons from Santa Barbara, Cal., page 766. Small towns are following the lead of cities in intelligently urging the claims of the church in the local papers, page 764.

Some of the summer gathering places for inspiration, page 764; a cry for men who want hard tasks, page 762; and a discussion of certain forms of church music, page 754, are bits of this issue which are specially interesting.

In memory of the war of half century ago The Continent has a personal reminiscence by Dr. Jenkins and a poem by Elisha Safford, pages 753-754.

"LIKE MAGIC"

New Food Makes Wonderful Changes

When a man has suffered from dyspepsia so many years that he can't remember when he had a natural appetite, and then hits on a way out of trouble, he may be excused for saying "it acts like magic."

When it is a simple, wholesome food instead of any one of a large number of so-called remedies in the form of drugs, he is more than ever likely to feel as though a sort of miracle has been performed.

A Chicago man, in the delight of restored digestion, puts it in this way:

"Like magic fittingly describes the manner in which Grape-Nuts relieved me of poor digestion, coated tongue and loss of appetite, of many years' standing.

"I tried about every medicine that was recommended to me, without relief. Then I tried Grape-Nuts on the suggestion of a friend. By the time I had finished the fourth package my stomach was all right, and for the past two months I have been eating with a relish anything set before me. That is something I had been unable to do previously for years.

"I am stronger than ever and I consider the effects of Grape-Nuts on a weak stomach as something really wonderful. It builds up the entire body as well as the brain and nerves." Name given by the Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true and full of human interest.

PRESBYTERIAN TRAINING SCHOOL of Chicago for Christian Workers

Organized in 1908 by the Board of Church Extension of the Presbytery of Chicago

Pagan religions have their goddesses as well as gods.

The Roman Church has the Holy Mother in the foreground of her system.

Our Protestant Church has the Father and the Son in the foreground and is daily realizing more fully that she herself, as the Bride of Christ, is to "mother" the peoples of the world.

Her heart still burns with holy zeal to "go into all the world and preach," but now, as never before, she is moved by a passion to "mother all peoples." Every physical, mental and spiritual need of humanity has in it a challenge to her mother-heart, and in His name, and under His guidance, she is seeking to discharge her duty.

This extension of her field demands enlargement of her directing force. The training of such a force is one of the tasks for which The Presbyterian Training School was established. Women, especially college graduates, inclined to such service are urged to correspond with the School.

Address H. B. McAFEE, Director
210 East 50th Street
Chicago, Ill.

HARRY W. JONES
Minneapolis, Church Architect Minnesota.

M. P. MÖLLER PIPE ORGANS

Builder of the large electric organs in Euclid Avenue Presbyterian Church, Cleveland, Ohio (2 organs); Russell Sage Memorial Presbyterian Church, Far Rockaway, N.Y.. and Bedford Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, N.Y.; the three-manual organs in Westminster Presbyterian Church. Detroit, Mich., Presbyterian Church, Mt. Vernon, Ohio, and instruments in almost 200 other Presbyterian Churches alone. Specifications and estimates on application. For catalogues and particulars,

Address, M. P. MÖLLER,
HAGERSTOWN, :: MARYLAND

YOU CAN REACH THE PEOPLE'S HEARTS THROUGH SONGS!

Use the best, they cost no more and you will get better results with the same effort.

GREAT REVIVAL HYMNS

Arouse intense interest and enthusiasm. That's why your church can adopt no better collection. Let us send you a copy, postpaid, for examination.

THE RODEHEAVER COMPANY
Publishers of Songs for Men, Chorus Collection, Solos, Duets, etc.
12 W. Washington St., :: CHICAGO

PIPE AND REED ORGANS AND PIANOS

Pure, sweet tone. Superior quality. Attractive styles. We sell direct at factory prices. Write, stating which catalog is desired.

HINNERS ORGAN CO., PEKIN, ILL.

Days of Unity and Purpose in Atlanta

(Continued from page 750)

and good temper. Holding the second minority report to be entirely irrelevant because the committee was never instructed to take up any such question, Dr. Brown nevertheless answered it with uncompromising denial. He declared that Union became interdenominational only after the directors had learned from the best professional counsel that the way was legally open for the change. Even with that, however, they did not make the change until fully satisfied that they had also a perfectly sound moral right to alter the status of the school. Particular care was taken to interview all the institution's benefactors, or the heirs of benefactors deceased, and assurances were obtained from all that they were pleased to see Union enter a larger field. The directors widely made known and still profess their willingness to repay any sum of money to givers, or representatives of givers, who are dissatisfied with the institution's departure from the Presbyterian Church. But no such claim has been filed in all the nine years since Union's constitution was thus amended. The seminary, therefore, feels absolutely conscience clear in its present interdenominational work and has, of course, received on its new basis gifts greatly in excess of the property and endowments it accumulated while distinctively Presbyterian.

Seminary Willing to Be Judged by Its Alumni

Dr. Brown went on to say that he found it hard to restrain his temper only when he came to face the accusation that Union was teaching a Hinduistic philosophy or anything else than the simple gospel of Jesus Christ. To this he could only say that it was absolutely untrue. He held that so far from unsettling candidates for the ministry the influence of Union has been distinctly to steady faith and hold young men to the Presbyterian Church. Practically all their students come to them from the universities of the East, and all of them come saturated with modern philosophic doubt. It is from this material that Union must make Presbyterian ministers zealous for the salvation of men through the atonement of Jesus Christ. And Dr. Brown insisted that there are hundreds of men now at work in the Presbyterian fellowship who prove the success of the seminary in this particular. For one example, he mentioned Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin of New York, whose congregational report for the past year shows more additions on confession of faith than that of any other minister in the Presbytery of New York.

General debate on this theme was spirited, but only in one or two places did it strike fire. It came out that Union Seminary feels no desire whatever for any sort of indorsement from the Presbyterian Assembly. It has chosen its independent standing deliberately. Nevertheless, it fully intends to proceed with the new lectureships contemplated for Presbyterian students without regard to whether the action of the Assembly is favorable or unfavorable. The Assembly was likewise told that the right of the directors to take the seminary out from under Presbyterian control was fully canvassed in 1892 and no ground of proceeding against them in a civil suit could be discovered even by so astute a lawyer as John J. McCook.

With these facts in view the sentiment of the Assembly seemed clearly in favor of dropping the whole matter, although a motion offered by Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston before the debate began had been lost by a vote of 314 to 466. To move again to lay on the table was, therefore, inadmissible, but ex-Moderator Matthews, watching for the "psychological moment," saw a more feasible way of ending the debate by moving to commit all three reports together to a new committee of seven, which is to investigate "the legal, ecclesiastical and spiritual relations of Union Seminary" and report to the General Assembly a year hence. This proposal commanded almost instantaneous approbation from the whole Assembly, and with a nearly unanimous vote was speedily passed.

It is already anticipated that the report of the committee next year will be largely a "pro forma" affair, leaving Union Seminary and the Presbyterian Church to go their ways and serve in their several tasks with more peace than if a bond of relationship were to be established between them. The suggestion of suing Union for a return of property accumulated while it was under Presbyterian domination was treated by the great majority of commissioners as sheerly unthinkable.

STANDING BY THE MINISTRY

Veterans Disabled and Students Still in Preparation Get Assembly's Ear and Heart.

In the "U. S. A." Assembly as in both the others the word and the preacher of it were honored in session after session, and a real solicitude was more than once displayed over the welfare of the ministry. (In passing, the statement was made from the platform that the average salary of Presbyterian ministers in active service is $730.)

The "maiden speech" of the secretary of the Board of Relief and Sustentation focused particular attention upon that board. And Dr. William Hiram Foulkes demonstrated that no mistake had been made in calling him from his important New York pastorate to lead this revitalized cause. Delivered on Monday in the great Tabernacle, amid a periphery of confusion and movement, the address held the commissioners enrapt. It played upon all the strings of the harp of the human heart. With felicity and fervor, epigram and incident, the cause was set forth as rarely ever before. A new dignity and appeal invested ministerial relief at the close of the address, and the $10,000,000 endowment seemed no impossible goal.

The fact that Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin had presented the report of the standing committee upon the board made Dr. Foulkes's work at once easier and more difficult, for Dr. Coffin is a master of platform utterance. He announced that the maximum annuity to beneficiaries is now $400, with $500 as the objective; and that lay missionaries, men and women, who have been ten years in the service of a Presbyterian board, may be entitled to go on this honor roll. Provision is also being made for temporarily disabled ministers. The pension idea, rather than that of relief, was stressed.

One of the popular laymen of the Assembly, President John Willis Baer, reported for the Board of Education, and the ever-eloquent secretary, Dr. Joseph W. Cochran, made the principal address. He was followed by Dr. Hughes, upon the state university work, and by the president of the board, Dr. J. Beveridge Lee. The theme of the latter's address was the dedication of sons to the work of the gospel ministry.

POPULARIZING THEOLOGY

Two Assemblies Adopt Documents for This Purpose - a Catechism and a Statement

The intermediate catechism, prepared by the committee of which Dr. McClure was chairman at first and Dr. Schaff later, is now safely and permanently embedded in the literature of the Presbyterian Church, although, of course, it is not admitted as a document of theological authority. This is said to be the first catechism ever constructed by Presbyterian hands in America. It was indorsed for publication by the Assembly of 1912, but the committee was continued for another year to make revisions which use might suggest.

In the year intervening the catechism did come to remarkably large use, and Dr. Schaff, the chairman, was able to cite a number of conspicuous demonstrations of its value in actual church work. Dr. Charles Little, former Assembly moderator, for one example, wrote that in his whole ministry of forty years at Wabash, Ind., he had not been able to employ catechetical instruction with his young people until this new intermediate catechism had been put into his hands. This he found usable and with great profit employed it in preparing a class of young people for church membership. Dr. Schaff also told the Assembly that the catechism had already been translated on the foreign mission field into the Chinese and Lao languages and used for instruction of mission converts. Revisions made since 1912 were very slight.

Both Dr. Schaff and his colleague on the committee, Dr. McKibbin of Cincinnati, indorsed the orthodoxy of the catechism.

In the Southern Church a twin of this catechism, so far as date of origin and similarity of purpose are concerned, is the "Brief Statement of Belief Drawn from the Standards of the Presbyterian Church in the United States." To this form was amended the title of what the

Heavy Investments in Mortgages

An especially interesting announcement has been issued by E. J. Lander and Company, Farm Mortgage Bankers, of Grand Forks, N. D. It reproduces a page of a recent report by the examining committee of policy holders of one of our largest life insurance companies. The summaries of the company's investments show how great is their confidence in real estate mortgages. In part the report reads:

Real Estate Mortgage Loans...	$159,182,168.99
Bonds (market value).........	79,344,820.00
Policy loans..................	43,751,676.06
Premium notes................	883,012.62
Real estate....................	2,854,323.57
Cash resources................	3,534,247.87

"Real Estate Loans—We find in number 22,070 loans, and in amount $159,182,168.99. The average interest rate on all loans is 5.016 per cent. We find a very remarkable record of prompt payment of interest on these loans. We wish particularly to commend the Company and the officers responsible for their efficient system which enables them to secure and conserve such a safe and profitable investment."

A copy of this announcement can be secured by writing to E. J. Lander and Company, Grand Forks, N. D.

SLIDE RENTING. STEREOPTICONS. NEW METHOD & SUBJECTS. CHURCHES REDUCED RATES.
MOORE-HUBBELL & CO. 713 MASONIC TEMPLE.

WANTS AND HELPS

Rates for classified advertising, Three Cents a Word, including the address. If desired a "box" address may be used, responses being sent to THE CONTINENT and forwarded to advertiser.

CASH MUST ACCOMPANY ORDER

MISCELLANEOUS

FOR CHURCH WORKERS—LADIES' AID AND MISsionary Societies are raising money without donations selling Valentine's Absorbent Dusters and Dust Mops. The only fifty-cent mop. Special offer by letter. Agents and societies should write. Valentine Duster Company, Urbana, Ohio.

TEN MINUTES AND LESS THAN FOUR CENTS WILL bring good returns if you invest them in a letter giving the names and addresses of men and boys who have come to Chicago to live. The Presbyterian Brotherhood will be the connecting link between them and the nearest church. Write to Dr. Francis M. Fox, 509 S. Wabash ave., Chicago.

PRESBYTERIAN ASSEMBLY OF THE SOUTHWEST, Young People's conference, Hollister, Mo. Conference July 29, Aug. 5, 1913; assembly, Aug. 6-17, 1913. Write the secretary for information. E. E. Stringfield, secretary, 3614 E. 59th St., Kansas City, Mo.

SUCCESSFUL CITY PASTOR, YOUNG MAN, WOULD like to change to town or village work. Address "V," Continent.

BEAUTIFUL SOUVENIR BOOKS COMMEMORATING the meeting of the General Assemblies at Atlanta can be obtained for 30c each. Only a few hundred left. Address L. L. Knight, Atlanta, Ga.

AGRICULTURIST AND FARM SUPERINTENDENT will be open for position October 1st. Experienced in handling large propositions with registered cattle and thoroughbred horses. Do not care for gentleman's place proposition but that conducted on a practical and scientific basis. Desire ample time to investigate your proposition and you me. Address Box U, The Continent.

WANTED—BY A CHRISTIAN YOUNG WOMAN, position as church secretary and pastor's assistant. Address T, care of The Continent.

REV. F. HARVEY OF REDMOND, ORE., WILL SUPPL information to church-attending Presbyterians respecting climate of Central Oregon; irrigating advantages; 30 sunny days; no cyclones.

ORGANS

FOR SALE—A SECOND-HAND PIPE ORGAN O first class make, in fine condition. Has fifteen speaking stops. A bargain to quick buyer. Address Pipe Organ care of The Continent, N. Y.

TOURS

WANTED—YOUNG PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER Naturalist, and well acquainted with camp and outdoor life, will take a company of boys on a driving tri through Yellowstone Park and Jackson Hole Country thi summer. Start from Chicago early in July. Limited number of boys from fifteen to eighteen wanted. Write Th Pilot, care The Continent.

YOUNG PASTOR ON EUROPEAN TRIP WOULD CONduct economically small number well recommende boys. Address G. H. F., care Continent, N. Y. office.

HEALTH RESORTS

PENNOYER SANITARIUM (ESTABLISHED 1867 Chicago suburb, Northwestern Railway. Grounds (1 acres) fronting Lake Michigan. Modern, homelike. Fo rest, recreation, treatment. Booklet. Address Pennoye Sanitarium. Kenosha. Wis

Attractive Sunday Evening
With McIntosh illustrated sermons. Write for catalo
McIntosh Stereopticon Co.
37 Randolph Street :: Chicago, Illino

committee drafting it had called a "Brief Popular Statement." The second article of it, dealng with the Bible, was also changed, so as to assert that "the Scriptures are the word of God" instead of "the word of God is contained in the Scriptures." And into the paragraph on "Christ the Redeemer" was inserted an unequivocal declaration of the virgin birth. When these changes had been made Professor R. C. Reed of Columbia, S. C., a member of the committee, asked the privilege of putting his name to the report which he had previously refused to sign. And though influential men on he floor argued that the new epitome of Presbyterian faith was needless, the sentiment of Assembly ran strongly in its favor, and when the matter was tested out by vote the Brief Statement was adopted by 119 to 64.

This Brief Statement of the Southern theoogians, like that formulated by Northern theologians in 1902, is not to be considered a docrinal touchstone for testing orthodoxy. But t is to be distributed broadcast wherever men are asking what Presbyterians believe and each, and the Assembly guarantees it as not misleading. It is to be hoped that it will win its way as splendidly as has the Brief Statement of Northern origin, to which Dr. William McKibbin of Cincinnati paid a remarkable impromptu tribute in the U. S. A. Assembly. When somebody said that the Brief Statement of 1902 had amounted to nothing, Dr. McKibbin strenuously responded that on he contrary the Brief Statement had done more to fortify and popularize the Westminster Confession than anything else done in this country within the last generation.

AN UNLUCKY RESOLUTION

t Aimed at Union but the Suppression of It Relieved Embarrassment

There came near being an embarrassing conretemps in the field of church union negotiaions when the U. S. A. Assembly adopted a resolution inviting the other denominations ncluded in the Federal Council of Reformed Churches to join through committees in a conference looking to organic union of this whole array of churches in one. This resolution, presented by Dr. W. H. Roberts, chairman of Assembly's committee on church cooperation and union, was passed in an odd fragment of ime without the slightest deliberation. Nobody asked what it meant, for the U. S. A. Assembly s always for anything that spells union, and nothing more was necessary than to perceive t was a union resolution.

But the mischief of it was that among the churches thus to be invited to a union conference was the Southern Church. The Southern Church's invitation to the U. S. A. Assembly ast year was accompanied by the plainest hint hat union was not to be mentioned in any formal way at Atlanta while the two bodies were sitting side by side. And it would not have been except for an unforeseen circumstance occurring in Philadelphia in the early spring. A joint meeting of committees was held there to consider further the proposed union of the Presbyterian and Reformed (U. S.) Churches. The Reformed committee on that occasion reported that the union movement was agging in its church, and to reenliven it suggested that a bigger plan, comprehending all denominations of the Presbyterian family, be set afoot. It was to please these Reformed friends that Dr. Roberts brought out this idea before the Assembly at Atlanta.

But the U. S. Presbyterians were at almost he same moment answering memorials from certain of their own presbyteries in Texas which wanted steps taken toward uniting both sorts of Presbyterians who face each other in that state—U. S. and U. S. A. To this the response returned was that in view of pending plans for oining Southern with United Presbyterians it was inopportune to undertake any other union at the same time. This foreshadowed the cerain rejection, in the U. S. Assembly and probably in the United Assembly, of the overure for Presbyterian family union initiated in he Assembly U. S. A. This was awkward; t is not pleasant to ask one's host to do a hing which he is bound to refuse. But the act of the veteran Dr. Roberts was equal o the occasion. When he faced about and ealized the disconcerting position of affairs n the direction of the Southern Assembly he tuck away that uncomfortable resolution in a leep, dark pocket and forgot it—till after final adjournment of all the Assemblies. It will not now be heard from publicly till a year hence, and by that time it will doubtless be more welcome all around.

But though the Southern hosts thus avoided the subject of organic union in parliamentary deliberations—so as to save the feelings and allay the fears of conservative souls who suspected in Atlanta's great "quadrilateral" the stage setting for a union stampede—they freely talked union privately and often alluded to it in public. It was plain that their opinion of their cousins from the North had not been lowered by this happy invasion, while supposed differences between the denominations grew strangely less in this light of close-range comparison. Some avowed antagonists of union even announced their sudden conversion to the union faith.

This mutual good will was heightened by the peculiar felicity of the speeches made in the Assemblies incident to the interchange of fraternal delegates. These gentlemen were assuredly all inspired by the eloquence of fervent lovingkindness to their neighbors.

ALL DYING INFANTS SAVED

So U. S. Assembly Declares, but Not Enough Presbyteries Agreed to Amend Confession

The Assembly U. S. had its customary bout with the question of elect infants. Ever since 1900 this subject has been before each annual Assembly of the Southern church, and has vexed liberal and conservative alike. When the session of 1913 began in Atlanta it was known that last year's effort to settle the question had counted only for another failure. The overture sent down to presbyteries from Bristol last May proposed to make the Westminster Confession read: "All infants dying in infancy, being elect, are saved." This amendment received the approbation of a large majority of the presbyteries, but was defeated, nevertheless, because it did not command the three-fourths which the constitution requires for a doctrinal change.

This sort of result, however, only accentuated the unrest. Eight presbyteries immediately petitioned for a resubmission of the same proposition as before. But the Assembly, thinking this beside the mark, considered that it saw a better way out by simply declaring on its own responsibility that the confession as it stands, saying "Elect infants dying in infancy are saved" really means what the defeated amendment would have made it say unmistakably: "All infants dying in infancy are saved." The vote to send forth this declaration stood 135 to 44. It was explained on behalf of the minority that not half a dozen men among them doubted that God would redeem all dying little ones, but the remainder regarded the truth as a matter not taught in the Scriptures, but only indicated. Therefore they held it not proper material for a creed.

Whether this solution will allay agitation is doubtful.

NOTHING ON THE DOCKET

Assembly's Judges Came to Atlanta and Enjoyed a Season of Idleness

The "supreme court" of U. S. A. Presbyterianism, as the Assembly's judicial commission is often styled, was convened at Atlanta because a half dozen cases had been appealed to the Assembly from various sources, and it was supposed that the Assembly's judges would have an unusually laborious session. But when the judicial committee, of which Dr. Palmer was chairman, met and went over the papers, it found two or three of the cases involving no issue of either doctrine or polity, while the rest were submitted in such an illegal form that they could not be tried. The former were dismissed, the latter sent back to the synods for review or correction.

The commission was thus left without any work to do. Dr. Forbes of New York having resigned as secretary, Dr. W. K. Spencer of Ionia, Mich., was elected in his stead. Certain amendments to the rules of the court were suggested by Stated Clerk Roberts, but after long consideration the commission decided to let the rules stand as they were. Simpler forms were drafted, however, for taking appeals, and it is hoped that in the future it will less often be necessary to turn back cases because they are not prepared according to the requirements of the book of discipline.

Newspapers and Everybody
Everywhere
are talking about
Mrs. Wharton's
Novel
The Custom of the Country
A Story of New York Society
now running in
SCRIBNER'S

SEND NOW for a reprint of the early chapters. Free.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE
597 Fifth Avenue :: NEW YORK

The Colonial
AND
Mineral Baths
Mt. Clemens, Mich.
OPEN ALL THE YEAR

PERMANENT RELIEF FROM RHEUMATISM
AND A SPLENDID PLACE TO REST AND RECUPERATE

TRAVEL TO
THE C. E. CONVENTION
ON A SPECIAL TRAIN
Enjoy all the advantages of private cars, congenial companionship and freedom from responsibility at a
LOWER PRICE
than you must pay to travel with the crowds. Booklet with complete information from
THE REX TOURS, Marquette Building

SMITH GRANITE MONUMENTS
Perfection in the granite cutter's art. Our booklets are of interest to intending purchasers. Mailed on request.
THE SMITH GRANITE CO.
Westerly, R. I.

DON'T THROW AWAY YOUR DISCARDED Furniture, Clothing, Magazines, Papers, etc. YOU can do great good by sending them to the Chicago Christian Industrial League, helping the church to find work for the idle, to shelter the homeless, to feed the hungry and to preach the gospel to the men of the down town streets. Over 1,000 men helped annually. Every little counts. Send a card to GEORGE A. KILBEY, 12 East 12th Street, Chicago, Ill.

KIMBALL PIPE ORGANS
HONORED
By the highest award at the World's Columbian Exposition in 1893, the greatest in history; and the same honor bestowed by the International Jury of Awards of the A. Y. P. Exposition, Seattle, 1909.
W. W. KIMBALL & COMPANY
Pipe Organ Builders :: CHICAGO

Perhaps the most interesting of the cases turned back this year was the appeal of Will K. Reeme of Kansas City, who is determined to try out the legal fate of a Presbyterian trustee who signs a petition for a liquor license. The defendant in the action is W. H. Lucas of the same city. Missouri Synod, which passed up the case at its last session, was instructed by the Assembly to try it out to an issue at its next meeting. This greatly gratified Mr. Reeme.

GRADED LESSON SOLUTION

It Contemplates Revised Lessons All Through, but Fully Sustains Graded Principle

Though it had been given out before Assembly that the Board of Sabbath School Work at Philadelphia was content with the report of Dr. Charles Little's committee on the graded lessons and would make no fight on that committee's disposition of the question, there was much talk on the floor of the U. S. A. Assembly about a possible rally of friends of graded lessons to break the back of opposition against them. It was particularly resented that the committee should brand the lessons as teaching salvation by character rather than salvation by regeneration.

But milder counsels prevailed. Friends of graded lessons were in control of the standing committee of which Dr. W. H. W. Boyle was chairman, and through it they gained a considerable advantage before the report of Dr. Little's committee was heard. This was the adoption in Assembly of an order that the lessons of the senior and intermediate courses, which the special committee had ordered withdrawn from sale on Sept. 1 next, should still continue available for customers wanting them, though sent out without the board's imprint. Meanwhile, as Dr. Little's report showed, the Board of Sabbath School Work is busy preparing new lessons in these grades and revising the lessons in the elementary grades in hope that all other Presbyterian denominations will eventually find them acceptable and the Congregational and Methodist members of the present syndicate perhaps not be alienated.

This result in practical effect confirms graded lessons in the American Presbyterian Church as a settled agency of religious instruction.

ADMINISTRATIVE CONCENTRATION

Three Presbyterian Denominations Seek Efficiency Through Guiding Committees

Predictions that the Executive Commission of the U. S. A. Assembly would be called to account for exceeding its functions because it initiated what was variously called an "inquiry" and an "investigation" into the affairs of the Home Mission Board went unfulfilled. The commission wisely disarmed complaints by itself presenting very early in the Assembly session resolutions expressly declaring that "the commission has no power or authority except such as has been expressly conferred on it by the General Assembly." In particular it was resolved that "the General Assembly has not conferred on the commission any authority to interfere with the purely administrative work of the boards and kindred agencies of the church." These sentiments so clearly expressed seemed to satisfy everybody that the commission was not grasping for power beyond its province and so disturbance on that score soon quieted down.

In the Southern Assembly a strange situation had been created by a sudden revolt at Bristol last year against the committee on systematic beneficence. This committee, made up of representatives from all the synods of the church, was appointed originally to secure cooperative action among the benevolent boards—or executive committees, as the Southerners name them. The committee gradually drifted into administrative questions, and so frightened an element in the church which always dreads centralization. So at Bristol in 1912, as aforesaid, a revolution, suddenly sprung on the committee, stripped it of practically all its powers.

But the progressive spirit in the Southern Church reasserted itself during the year and a popular demand for the restoration of the committee to its former functions was one of the most clearly felt influences at work on the Atlanta Assembly. Accordingly there prevailed almost without opposition a report which put the committee on systematic beneficence back to virtually its former basis. It was authorized to meet in conference with the executive secretaries of missions and other benevolent causes, and then recommend to the Assembly whatever will "coordinate, unify and advance the work" of these various boards. The committee is to make up the annual budget for benevolences and to nominate members and secretaries of the benevolent agencies. As will be readily seen, this systematic beneficence committee will be found exercising a degree of centralized power hardly paralleled by even the Executive Commission in the U. S. A. Church.

The "million dollar campaign" of the Southern Church will be handled jointly by this committee and by the Laymen's Missionary Movement. The purpose of this effort is to raise, over and above the present benevolent gifts of the denomination, $500,000 for equipment and $500,000 for reenforcement of the forward movements of the church at home and abroad. This is to go along with a continuously pushed campaign of evangelism in all the congregations. Of the equipment sum $100,000 is planned to go into a missionary training school.

The United Presbyterian denomination is working at a very similar task—indeed, started about it a couple of years earlier. The aim of these courageous endeavorers is to lift the regular giving standard of United Presbyterians—for all the causes represented by their boards—high enough to provide a total of $1,000,000 every year. For the year just ended the denomination came encouragingly close to the goal—the total ran up to practically $900,000. Next year, their faith tells them, they will reach and possibly overpass the mark.

STAY IN FEDERAL COUNCIL

Such Was the Decision of Southern Presbyterians by an Utterly Surprising Majority

Several subjects handled in Assemblies made much less trouble than had been anticipated. Among these was the relation of U. S. Presbyterians to the Federal Council of Churches. An agitation for withdrawing the denomination from the council had accumulated great apparent power, partly from a much mistaken impression of Dr. Shailer Mathews, the president of the organization, and partly from a feeling that the council tends exclusively to social Christianity. On these grounds it was argued that Southern Presbyterianism would compromise its reputation for orthodoxy if it remained a part of the council.

When Assembly met the opinion of close observers was that its members were about equally divided on this question. But the committee that handled the subject enjoyed some illuminating sessions. One member afterwards said on the floor that what he learned in committee absolutely convinced him that his prejudices against the council had been ignorant. Moreover, some of the most stalwart defenders where you know that the principal is positively safe and the interest will be promptly met?

(Continued on page 774)

YOUR ENDOWMENT

Is Your Endowment Fund Properly Invested

MOST colleges are NOW using, and the day is not far away when every one will take advantage of the First Lien Farm Mortgage that nets them 6%, for their permanent endowment fund. Satisfactory arrangements can be made through our company whereby your Treasurer and Trustees can be relieved from all detail and anxiety. All they will have to do will be to bank the interest checks as they come due.

We can furnish mortgages to aggregate from $1,000 to $500,000. No endowment too large for us to handle. We want to talk to you about it and convince you of our assertions. A card will bring full particulars without obligation. Send us the names of the Trustees that we may be enabled to get in communication with them.

Individual investor's interests looked after in a careful, conservative way. Write for "Hord's Investment Guide." It's free.

W. D. HORD CO., Inc.
32 Broadway :: New York

3% or 7%
WHICH DO YOU GET FOR YOUR MONEY?
Savings Banks pay 3%. Farm Mortgages yield you 7% secured by never failing wheat land in Eastern Washington. Security double the amount of the loan. Mortgage and notes signed by farmer and wife. Abstract certified to by responsible Attorney. Nothing safer. Write me for particulars and references.
B. F. CULP, P. O. Box 493 Walla Walla, Washington

6 and 7 % Sure
When you purchase from us a mortgage on Improved Georgia City or Farm Property you take as little chance as is humanly possible. You receive from 6 to 7 per cent and you can be sure of receiving it regularly. Our property appraisals are the work of successful experts. We are extremely careful in our estimates of the moral hazards. We protect your principal with ample security. Let us send you our list of loans and interesting literature. Address "Dept. F."
Sessions Loan & Trust Co., Marietta, Ga.

FIRST MORTGAGE FARM LOANS
6% We offer only select first mortgages on improved Northeastern Oklahoma farms at 40% value of farm. Interest collected semi-annually and remitted investor without charge. SEND FOR BOOKLET. 6%
PARKER-WISE INVESTMENT CO.
VINITA, OKLAHOMA

NORTH DAKOTA
FARM MORTGAGES
THE IDEAL INVESTMENT
¶ 30 years Residence and Business activities in Banking and making Farm Mortgages. ¶ Write for my Booklet, Investment Facts, and List .075
WALTER L. WILLIAMSON, LISBON NORTH DAKOTA

SEASONED
North Dakota Farm Loans
and
FARM LAND BONDS
Netting 6%
Write for particulars regarding our investment service. Highest references.
R. C. KITTEL & CO., CASSELTON NORTH DAKOTA

FARM MORTGAGES bearing 6% interest, first liens on improved farms. Original papers held by the investor. Principal and interest GUARANTEED; interest payable at the Hanover National Bank, New York. Thousands of satisfied customers for references. We've been doing the same thing for TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS
The W. C. Belcher Land Mortgage Co.
Capital $320,000.00.
Fort Worth. Texas

6 1/2 % Net First Mortgages
on improved OKLAHOMA FARMS from $200 up are safe investments. I have sold them for years to ultra conservative investors with entire satisfaction. Write today for list and interesting BOOKLET "E." Refer to Dun or Bradstreet.
GEO. R. FISH, Investment Banker, Ardmore, Okla.

6% NET GUARANTEED AS WELL AS BACKED BY 20 YEARS OF SUCCESS
Farm Mortgages sold by us net six per cent, and we guarantee their payment. Interest remitted the day due. Write today for booklet and references and ask your local banker to investigate us.
BROAD & BOMAR, Bankers, Ft. Worth, Tex.

7% FARM MORTGAGES 8%
Title guaranteed. On choice farms in Panhandle and fertile valleys of Eastern New Mexico. No loan made for more than thirty per cent of value, nor closed until examined and approved by our experienced examiner who is an officer of Company. We collect and remit interest free. Larger loans drawn to net investors 7 per cent; small ones, 8 per cent. Write for sample application, references, etc.
The Union Mortgage Company, Clovis, New Mexico

Farm Mortgages 6%
Your money safe and your income sure. Send for descriptive pamphlet "C" and list of offerings. 30 yrs. experience. Highest references
E. J. Lander & Co. Grand Forks, N. D.

Readers will confer a favor on the publishers of The Continent by mentioning this paper when answering advertisements.

SAFETY AND 7%

IDAHO offers today a splendid field for safe and profitable investments. Carefully selected first mortgages on improved CITY AND FARM property are securities which will give you no worry, but will return regularly and promptly an excellent interest return, ranging from 6 per cent to 7 per cent, and occasionally even higher. The city of Boise has trebled its population in ten years, and the agricultural districts in which the IDAHO TITLE AND TRUST COMPANY and THE NATIONAL TRUST AND SAVINGS COMPANY operate are among the most productive in this prosperous state.

CHARLES B. COXE
President
BOISE :: IDAHO

WHERE TO INVEST WITH SAFETY AND GOOD PROFIT

The famous Corn Belt of Eastern Kansas offers the best possible field for safe and profitable mortgage investments. This territory was settled 60 years ago and during that time has been thoroughly tested as a fine agricultural and stock raising country. We have been in this field for 40 years and during that time have never lost a dollar for an investor. Loans negotiated by us exceed $25,000,000. Your money when placed in our First Farm Mortgages will be absolutely safe and net you excellent interest return. Write us for particulars and references.

J. L. Pettyjohn & Company
Olathe, Kansas

REAL ESTATE LOANS

6% Safest, Most Promising and Profitable Investment on the Market Today 6%

During the Past 30 Years no Client has Lost a Dollar.

BEVERLY H. BONFOEY
Send for Booklet B UNIONVILLE, MO.

6%

GILT EDGE SMALL MORTGAGES

Amount	Security
$2 000	$7.500
1,400	5,175
1,100	5,975
1,000	6,200
700	4,425

We have been supplying mortgage investments like these oContinent readers for many years, and would like to tell you more about them. Address a postal inquiry to

ASSOCIATED MORTGAGE INVESTORS
KINGMAN N. ROBINS, Treasurer, Granite Bldg., Rochester, N.Y.

The safest investments from the viewpoints of

INCOME and SECURITY
are carefully selected
REAL ESTATE MORTGAGES

When made and guaranteed by experienced and financially responsible persons and corporations there is nothing better. For years we have made such loans in one of the best agricultural districts in America. Full information on request.

THE JEFFERSON TRUST COMPANY
McAlester, Oklahoma

5½% and 6% Interest

The most careful investor always selects a choice farm mortgage when placing funds. Ask for detailed information, references and list of offerings.

G. W. HART, Pres. The Merchants Bank
BRYANT SOUTH DAKOTA

High Grade Farm Loans
Oklahoma Farm Mortgage Co., Oklahoma City U. S. A.

Financial Situation

Quick Sale of Bonds by a Department Store Shows Large Amount of Idle Capital Confidence from Continued Advertising.

The amount of idle capital in the United States is a constant source of speculation by bankers and investment houses. The ready acceptance by the people of the idea of the postal savings bank and the large deposits which this newly established governmental institution has attracted to itself was a great surprise to many. Additional evidence that the people of the country generally have a large amount of money which they might invest comes to light from time to time.

A few days ago a department store in St. Paul, Minn., decided as a novelty to offer for sale bonds of the city issued to secure paving projects. Never before in the history of investments had municipal bonds been offered over the counter of a department store. More than one city has sold its debentures to citizens across the counters of public officials, but it evidently had never occurred to anyone to offer securities as freely as one would a bargain lot of shoes. In two hours $35,000 worth of bonds was disposed of and the next day twice as many were sold to investors who were still waiting in line with money in hand when the last bond was taken. Most buyers of these securities brought cash and in many cases the discolored appearance of the money made it evident that long cherished hoards were being brought to light.

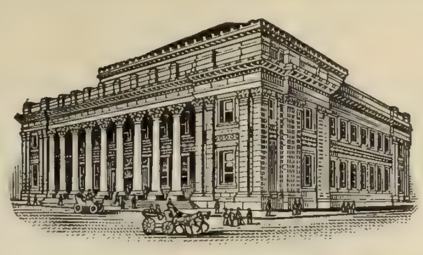
Investment Will Follow Confidence

Whether or not this form of disposing of securities becomes popular remains to be seen. It is probably true, however, that there is in other cities of the country as much idle capital as was brought to light in St. Paul in two days. Careful students of investments who have kept track of the earning power of the nation contend that the investment field has only been scratched. Probably over the country thousands of people who have been able to save from $100 to $500 would be delighted to have an opportunity to invest their savings at 6 per cent if they could be assured beyond the peradventure of a doubt that they would not wake up some morning within the next six months and find that the firm to which they had intrusted their capital had been closed by the federal authorities. Financial advertisers with safe securities who persistently tell the people of the opportunities they have are more and more reaping the benefits of their faith. There are advertisers whose announcements are now appearing in The Continent who for more than a dozen successive years have been steadily building up the confidence which readers show in the securities they offer.

May Want Larger Interest

Tending, perhaps, to show the desire of the people to obtain a larger return on their money than is afforded by savings banks are the figures of the savings institutions of New York state for 1912. During that twelvemonth, which was comparatively prosperous, there was withdrawn from all the savings banks $423,000,000. This is an increase of nearly $15,000,000 over the withdrawals for 1911 and is much larger than the amounts taken out in 1907 when an unfortunate period of lack of confidence in the banks prevailed. The withdrawals of 1912, however, were exceeded by the deposits to the extent of $11,700,000.

A recently published table by the bureau of labor statistics compares the prices of a number of widely used articles of food for the past twenty-three years. Using as a base of 100 the average price during the decade 1890-1899 inclusive, it is shown that the average price for 1912 was 157. This is another statistical proof, if another be required, that it costs more to live now than it did a number of years ago. According to this table the highest price during all the period was the last year shown, 1912.



Stability, Courtesy and Efficiency

Have Been the Factors in the Growth of the

Illinois Trust & Savings Bank

Without the Assistance of Mergers or Consolidation of Other Banks

Capital and Surplus
$15,000,000.00

LA SALLE ST. & JACKSON BLVD.

ILLINOIS TRUST SAFETY DEPOSIT COMPANY

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

6% SECURITY, RATE AND SERVICE 6%

Is what we offer YOU in our FIRST LIEN REAL ESTATE MORTGAGES. They are placed only on income bearing property on a basis of 40 per cent actual value.

INTEREST and PRINCIPAL remitted on due date by NEW YORK check.

EIGHT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES attest the soundness of these mortgages by purchasing in increasing volume.

Write for list, information and references to

REYNOLDS MORTGAGE CO.
R. B. BISHOP, Vice-Pres.
FORT WORTH TEXAS

Selected FARM LOANS

I offer only First Mortgage Farm Loans made by thoroughly reliable firms who have stood the Test of Time. I diversify as to climate, rate and crop yield. Interest and principal collected free.

Ask for Circular No. 101

G·F·CARSON
717 JEFFERSON BUILDING, PEORIA, ILLINOIS.

4 Per Cent

BONDS SECURING POSTAL SAVINGS FUNDS
BONDS YIELDING 4%-5% PAYABLE SEMI-YEARLY
BACKED BY CERTIFICATES FROM UNITED STATES TREASURY
CERTIFYING THEY PROTECT POSTAL SAVINGS BANK FUNDS
AVAIL YOURSELF OF THIS PROTECTION
SEND FOR OUR BOOKLET "BONDS OF OUR COUNTRY"
BONDS SENT TO ANY BANK OR EXPRESS
COMPANY SUBJECT TO EXAMINATION
BONDS BONDS
THE NEW FIRST NATIONAL BANK COLUMBUS, OHIO

5 Per Cent

Days of Unity and Purpose in Atlanta

(Continued from page 772)

of the faith contended that if the council were bent in any wrong direction, that circumstance made it the duty of conservatives not to go out and abandon it but to stay in and set it right.

In a considerable degree contributory to this decision was the favorable action in all the Assemblies on the proposal of Dr. W. S. P. Bryan of Chicago for the three denominations to join in drafting a declaration that personal spiritual religion must always take primacy over and above social religion. Five members were named from each Assembly to work on this declaration.

It was in connection with this theme of federation that Dr. R. F. Campbell of Asheville proposed in the Southern Assembly a very interesting plan for increasing the importance of the other specialized Federal Council of Presbyterian denominations. He advocated the creation of an upper house of that federation, in which the different denominations concerned shall have equal representation, just as the states in the national senate. With the existing federation to serve as a lower house—representation therein being proportionate to membership—a joint body would be created in which the lesser denominations would not be overwhelmed. The plan was laid over for a year.

A POPULAR SECRETARY

Commissioners Insist on His Speaking Overtime Concerning Vacancy and Supply

It was in the last hours of Assembly that the report of the committee on vacancy and supply came on, but the commissioners were so much interested that they forgot their haste to adjourn and insisted that Dr. Walter H. Houston of Columbus, the committee's secretary, should speak thrice as long as the time schedule permitted. Dr. Houston said he had no hope that anything but episcopacy could ever effect a complete solution of the problem of ministerial employment and pastoral supply, but he thought an approximate solution could be achieved under Presbyterian polity, if the experiment could be made with patience and sufficient time for results allowed.

For thirty years, said Dr. Houston, the church has tinkered with this subject, but has always balked when it came to paying the price of it. Now it has once more undertaken the task, but Dr. Houston declared he had no heart to put into the effort unless the church is prepared to face the cost of trying out the committee's plan for five years. He said nothing conclusive could be arrived at short of that time. If in five years he and the committee cannot accomplish definite improvement in the situation, he will be ready to quit.

The Assembly was manifestly in the utmost accord with the speaker, and a budget of $6,500, to be taken out of the contingent fund, was granted the committee most willingly.

FOREIGN WORK PROSPERING

Three Foreign Boards Bring In Reports of a Most Encouraging Year

In all three of the Assemblies the theme of foreign missions claimed reverent attention. Dr. A. W. Halsey's address before the U. S. A. Assembly was a thrilling piece of living speech, fully maintaining the sustained standard of the secretarial addresses which this body hears annually from its foreign mission executives—Speer, Brown, Halsey and White in turn.

The facts of the foreign mission year as interpreted by Dr. W. R. King, chairman, in his report were wholly encouraging. The churches gave $706,000—$13,000 more than ever before in a single year; the Sunday schools likewise exceeded their previous record, and the women's societies went above every total except that of 1912, when they raised a special jubilee fund. Total receipts of the board were over $1,900,000. And this does not at all take into account the $133,000 already paid in on the China emergency fund, the success of which has been one of the past season's most cheering delights.

As The Continent has already stated, the Southern Church's Foreign Board raised the utterly unprecedented and almost undreamed of sum of $600,000, wiping out a long-standing debt. For next year the systematic beneficence committee made up a foreign budget of $520,000, which, with the debt out of the way, will extend the current work considerably. The United Presbyterian Foreign Board was not able to rejoice in complete extinction of debt, but it did announce increased gifts sufficient for work in hand and a margin by which the debt was comfortably reduced.

BROTHERHOOD ANNEXED

The "U. S. A." Assembly Receives It Under the Wing of Ecclesiastical Indorsement

The Presbyterian Brotherhood has become a part of the official machinery of the Presbyterian Church U. S. A. In its original conception the brotherhood was to be a voluntary fellowship without any formal ecclesiastical connections, but the organization has not flourished, and diagnosticians have attributed its anæmia to its isolation from General Assembly. A year ago at the request of the brotherhood's national council Assembly appointed a special committee on "closer relations," and this committee, with Dr. H. C. Swearingen as chairman, reported this year a plan doing away entirely with the autonomy the brotherhood has heretofore exercised. Instead of the national council being elected by the national convention as heretofore, this plan proposed to transfer this electing power wholly into the Assembly's hands.

A "national convention" called in the Kimball hotel at Atlanta was attended by thirty or forty commissioners and presided over by Charles T. Thompson of Minneapolis. Inasmuch as the national officers were fully in harmony with Dr. Swearingen's report, it was the work of less than five minutes to amend the constitution in accordance with this arrangement. Next day Assembly confirmed the change by adopting the report on the subject.

By this action the following official council was chosen to succeed the voluntary council heretofore in charge: Ministers, A. H. Barr, Baltimore; R. R. Bigger, Cleveland; H. C. Swearingen, St. Paul; W. N. Sloan, Helena; George N. Luccock and W. C. Covert, Chicago. Laymen, T. D. Foster, Ottumwa; Hugh H. Hanna, Indianapolis; D. D. Dayton, Minneapolis; James J. Parks, St. Louis; R. W. Harbison, Pittsburg; William A. Arnold, Paterson; Charles S. Holt, John M. Coulter and Henry D. Crowell, Chicago.

The brotherhood now enrolls 47,000 Presbyterian men in 930 organizations. Mr. Holt, who has been national president from its origin, was handsomely complimented by an Assembly resolution.

In the Southern Church the brotherhood has been completely absorbed in the Laymen's Missionary Movement. In the U. P. Church it has been made a department of the Board of Home Missions, so that George E. Raitt, its secretary, ranks as a secretary of home missions. Rev. Walter Getty, the national secretary of the U. S. A. brotherhood, is also a U. P. minister loaned for the purpose—a bright example of church comity.

That there runs through all these churches the same kind of brotherhood spirit, however, despite differences of organization, was amply demonstrated in a delightful "common meal" of the men of the three denominations at the Kimball, where nearly 400 diners attended an informal banquet. Dr. Covert presided, and while the men ate he managed to keep going as lively a series of two-minute speeches as ever graced any occasion of unconstrained fellowship.

NO OFFICIAL ORGAN

U. P. General Assembly Affirms Former Action in Favor of a Denominational Free Press

The United Presbyterian Assembly was a singularly placid gathering. Moderator Russell in his closing address congratulated the commissioners on the absence from among them of "the fool that rocks the boat." Such a state of affairs, it goes without saying, produces little for the newspaper man to chronicle.

Aside from the matter of union with the Southern Presbyterian Church, which was laid over till next year, the only theme of interest that got outside of the lines of routine was the question of Board of Publication policies. A few months ago Dr. E. M. Milligan was made general manager of the U. P. publishing house, and in his first report to Assembly he was obliged to stigmatize the commercial methods which he found in vogue there as unbusinesslike—though in no wise dishonest, as he was careful to say.

The same board had come in for a great deal of criticsm because some months ago it took over The Christian Instructor, a U. P. organ published in Philadelphia, which at that moment was on the point of complete collapse. This action of the board was in the face of the Assembly's direct decision less than two years earlier that it did not desire the board to publish for it an official organ. Naturally The United Presbyterian, an independent paper published in Pittsburg, resented the board's violating this order and bringing The Christian Instructor from Philadelphia to Pittsburg under official auspices. The friends of The United Presbyterian were amply stsong enough to maintain the free press policy as against the idea of an official organ. The board was instructed to dispose of The Christian Instructor, and it is likely that The United Presbyterian will buy it.

At the same time attention was called to the fact that The Christian Union Herald, which was established as a Sunday school paper, had in late years gradually been taking on the character of a denominational journal, competing also in the field which The United Presbyterian regarded as lawfully its own. The Assembly promptly said that this, too, must stop, and directed the board to put the paper back on the original basis.

When news of these actions reached Pittsburg, Dr. R. J. Miller, the board's editor, who has been directing both The Christian Union Herald and The Christian Instructor, telegraphed his resignation to Assembly. It was not, however, accepted.

CHICAGO THE NEXT MEETING PLACE

Moderator Stone's City and Church Get Next Year's Meeting of the Assembly

"The City of the Open Door," as Moderator Stone characterized his home town, was voted the next Assembly meeting place, and that with considerable enthusiasm. Elder E. H. Smith of Chicago Fourth church presented the invitation and Dr. William C. Covert seconded him, eulogizing "the great Stone church" in which the Assembly would be entertained.

Dr. Covert was launching off into a eulogy of Chicago, when Moderator Stone, who had surrendered the chair to the vice-moderator, besought that he be shut off, else he would talk all night on that theme. "Besides, I want to say a few words myself. I am not going to let them rob me of my job. This is what I came to Atlanta to do." He quite "brought down the house" when he gave as one of the good prospects of the Chicago Assembly the passage from Hebrews: "Know ye that our brother Timothy hath been set at liberty."

The United Presbyterians fixed on Newcastle, Pa., as their next meeting place and the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. decided to go to Kansas City.

Assembly Brevities

—The additions on confession of faith last year were larger than ever before in the U. S. A. Church—85,000. But the net increase of the church was only 24,000.

—The U. S. A. vice-moderator was Elder Frederick A. Booth of University Place church, New York City. Dr. Stone chose Mr. Booth out of tender memories for his brother, the late Dr. Henry M. Booth, who was president of Auburn Seminary when Dr. Stone graduated from that institution.

—Dr. Frederick J. Sauber as chairman of the committee on narrative distinguished himself by doing what nobody before him had ever done; he recommended that every pastor should see to it that some church paper goes regularly into every home of his parish. And Dr. Sauber emphasized it, too, in a way showing that he meant it.

The Assembly U. S. A. indorsed with right good will the work done for training foreign-speaking ministers at Dubuque Seminary, Dubuque, Iowa, and at the request of Doctors Bess and Clokey, who represented the seminary in Atlanta, a committee was named to help President Steffens raise more endowment. Dr. David G. Wylie of New York is the committee's chairman.

Bradford Horton, Man

(Continued from page 758)

in answer to a note I wrote that night you called, hoping to reconcile you and her to each other. Ah, well!" he sighed, as they started for the drive back into town, "the outcome of it has been almost ten years of sorrow for you; but through it all you have been noble, Bradford, far nobler than I ever was in my best moments."

Stopping at the bank, where Bradford wanted to see his old haunts, he found a note which had come to Barney. Bradford read the note and tossed it to O'Toole. "Mrs. Elmore wants me to dine tonight."

"Good enough!"

"Can't be done," said Bradford briefly. "There's the wedding rehearsal tonight."

"That's not till 8:30. Besides, some of them will be going to the church, too. You'd better go; they're anxious to see you."

Hardly convinced that he would do well to accept, Horton left the bank and wandered over to the seminary, which he found closed and locked. Unable to seek out his old room, he sat down on the steps where he had so often sat with Sleighton, and the old day dreams came back to him. Rousing himself suddenly with determination from his contemplation of the old vision of a graceful girl with lustrous eyes, he shook himself into active purpose.

"This won't do, Brad," he said to himself. "You're getting ready to have every pin on your alley go down at the first bowl. Come out of it! You'll have to see her sooner or later and you might as well go now and get it over."

So when the Elmore carriage called at Barney's that evening for Bradford, he was ready in the shabby best suit which was all he had for occasions great and small.

If a memory visited him on that two-mile drive of the last time he had entered the house on Sunset hill, the grim outline of it was erased by the welcome he received from the waiting family. Truly, things had changed. Eleanor, at the library door, feeling shyly that she must wait for him to make the advance, if he ever should, lost, in the sudden consciousness of his presence, all sense of reserve, all thought of everything except that he was there at last and that she loved him, and came to him with both hands out, her transfigured face upturned to meet his kiss.

There came no stinging rebuke from her father, as Bradford stooped and took her in his arms. Instead, his own soul was on fire, and a thrill went through him that made him first hot, then cold. Only by summoning every power in his soul that made for self-possession could he keep from the surrender of every one of his heroic resolutions, and putting her gently from him turned to accept with heartiness Mrs. Elmore's kindly greeting.

If Eleanor, at once overjoyed and trembling with suspense lest what she feared might be true and he should go away without a word, took little share in entertaining the guest, there was no lack of conversation. Skillfully Mr. Elmore led the talk that enlivened the dinner, drawing from Bradford details none of them had known about his beginnings in Prestonbury—lamp story and all, even to the mention of the quarter of an hour that he had spent upon the carriage stone before their house on that first day of his arrival. The reminiscent chat ran on through dinner and back into the library, where Mr. Elmore said at last:

"Bradford, when this wedding is over your visit with our cashier will be done, and we all want you here for our guest for as long as you will stay. This is your home now and always, I want you to be sure."

Bradford braced his will for the effort he had known would come. "You can never understand," he said, with the cool indifference which he had found was his only means of defense against his own emotions, "how much I appreciate this invitation, nor how hard it is for me to decline it." Eleanor's face turned white; he saw it, saw her hands pressed together, but he went steadily on. "I leave the morning after the wedding for Glencoe. I haven't seen my sister for five years, and I've promised her to be there that night."

"What?" said Mr. Elmore disappointedly. His back was toward his daughter, where she sat half in shadow. "Is this all the visit you will give us, just this one night at dinner?"

From behind him there came an echo in a shaking voice. "Is this——" The father turned and saw his daughter's face. As the catch came in her question he broke in, "But you've got to see the 'Shelter,' Lennie's house up at Jake's, you know. How long are you to be in Glencoe?"

"All through July, I expect. I want to tramp the old hills once more where I used to go in my boyhood." He tried to make his voice ring as if that were really his great desire, but he could feel the lack of sincerity in his own words as he hurried on, "Then I must turn back westward to the camps, to my jacks, to the work to which God has called me."

There was conviction in the last words, but Mr. Elmore continued his plea. "But stop on your way West, my boy. Don't go without a sight of the 'Shelter.' Let us know what day you're coming and the 'Antigone' will be at the foot of the lake, and you can row up to the house."

The final "No" for which he had steeled himself was on his lips when its utterance was checked. Eleanor had risen and come from shadow out into the full light of the lamps. From the wistful pleading of her lustrous eyes there flashed to his brain a new idea. Suddenly he saw that on the altar where he desired to sacrifice himself for her he was offering up instead the heart of the woman who, he saw in this moment of illumination, would count nothing a sacrifice, so that they might be together. Her voice joined the pleading of her eyes, and he heard her say, in simple repetition of her father's words, but with meaning far more profound, "Won't you come, Bradford? Won't you, please?"

After five seconds, that seemed to Bradford Horton like an eternity, so completely did his purpose change within their span, he found voice to speak.

"Yes, Eleanor," he said. "I will stop at the 'Shelter.' I think we both have suffered long enough." He turned to Mr. Elmore. "At the grave of my father and mother this morning you called me son. Did your words mean this?"

"Yes, my son," said Mr. Elmore, his face alight. Mrs. Elmore was crying quietly. "I built the 'Shelter' for you and Lennie."

She had slipped into the circle of his arm as to the place she had waited for through weary years. "Dear," he said, looking down into the sweet face close to his, "this will mean hardship for you. It means loneliness, discomfort, privation for you."

"No, Bradford! No!" she cried joyously. "It means home, rest, peace. It means a hungry heart satisfied."

The curtain at the French window parted and Ansley Jickers entered unannounced from the porch. "I just stopped in," he began, "to take Lennie—— Oh!" [THE END]

Western Rural Pastors Confer

The second annual institute for rural pastors in the Rocky mountain and western states will be held at Estes Park, Colo., July 23 to Aug. 7. The institute will be held on the beautiful conference grounds of the Y. M. C. A. in Estes Park.

Among the subjects to be considered are "The American Church and School in the Country," "The Value of the New Pedagogy to the Pastor," "Fundamental Truths of New Testament Evangelism," "Religious Pedagogy." Some of the speakers will be Dr. Warren H. Wilson, secretary of the department of rural church work of the Board of Home Missions; Moderator John Timothy Stone, Chicago; E. I. Bosworth, D. D., dean of Oberlin Theological Seminary; Richard C. Morse, general secretary of the international committee of Y. M. C. A.'s; C. C. Robinson, secretary for boys' work international Y. M. C. A.; A. E. Roberts, secretary country work department, international department; Dr. Frank K. Sanders, president of Washburn College, and Frank T. Bayley, D. D., pastor of Plymouth Congregational church, Denver.

Waldensian Pastors Speak English

The following Waldensian pastors in the larger cities of Italy all speak English and all are glad to welcome tourists traveling in Italy during the summer:

Rome, Arturo Muston, 107 Via Nazionale, and Ernesto Comba, 6 Via del Caravita; Naples, G. D. Buffa, 25 Piazzetta Tagliavia; Florence, Professor Rostagno and Professor G. Luzzi, 51 Via del Serragli; Leghorn, Dr. G. Grilli, Via Giuseppe Verdi, 3; Siena, G. Petrai, 5 Viale Curtatone; Lugano, Paolo Calvino, Paradiso, Lugano, Switzerland; Milan, S. A. Costabel, 7 Via Fatebene Fratelli, and D. Revel, Via Petrarca, 16; Como, B. Revel, Via Rusconi, 9; Verona, G. Silva, 5 Via Liceo; Venice, A. Balmas, Palazzo Cavagnis; Brescia, A. Simeoni, 23 Via Giordano Bruno; Torre Pellice (Waldensian valleys), C. A. Tron, D. D.; Turin, Ernesto Giampiccoli, 15 Via Pio Quinto; Genoa, Francesco Rostan, 21 Via Cesare Cabella; Nice, P. Longo, 50 Rue Gioffredo; Messina, E. Corsani, Via Maddalena; Palermo, D. Bosio, 36 Via Maqueda.

Calendar and Record

Presbytery Meetings

Maumee—Toledo, June 9, 10 a. m.
Otsego—Margaretville, June 5, 7 p. m.

Moderators Elected

Flint—D. D. Carmichael.
Sioux City—C. G. Butler.

Stated Clerks Elected

Flint—Edwin H. Bradfield.

Ordinations

Cincinnati—George F. Browne, May 19; E. V. Belles, June 17.
Flint—Irwin E. Bradfield.
Holston—A. B. Morrow.
Red River—William J. Bell, William Anderson, Jr.
Southern Oregon—H. C. Hartranft.

Resignations

New Jersey—Moorestown: Edward Haines Kistler.

Calls

Idaho—Buhl: O. Jones Roberts, Salmon
Illinois—Decatur First: C. E. Jenny, St. Louis, declines; Olney: A. R. Brown, Altamont.
Iowa—Cedar Rapids Westminster: S. T. Foster, Hopkinton.
Kansas—Hutchinson Irwin Memorial: W. K. C. Thomas, Princeton.
Maryland—Baltimore Babcock Memorial: Edward Haines Kistler, Moorestown, N. J.
Michigan—Harbor Beach: Irwin E. Bradfield.
Minnesota—Wendell: William Anderson, Jr.; Winona: J. F. Cowling, Osage City, Kan., declines.
Missouri—Grant City: N. M. Tatum, Sycamore, Ill.
Montana—Butte Central: H. A. Mullen, Pocatello, Idaho.
Nebraska—Hastings: James W. Bean, Cherokee, Iowa.
Ohio—New Richmond and Monroe: E. V. Belles; Gahanna: J. G. Currey, Kilbourne.
Oregon Sumpter: C. E. Morrison, Audubon, Iowa.
West Virginia—West Liberty: I. C. Yeakel, Baltimore.

Installations

Iowa—Red Oak: J. K. Driver, May 8.
Michigan—Saginaw Immanuel: Andrew Doremus, May 21; Harbor Beach: Irwin E. Bradfield, May 14.
New York—Amsterdam Emmanuel: George Martin Gordon, May 9; South Amenia: Dr. Beers, May 22; Unadilla: Frank W. Townsend, May 13; Margaretville, C. Carson Bransby, June 5.
Ohio—Cincinnati Mount Washington: J. B. Foster, June 8; Westwood: E. M. Martin, May 4; Cincinnati Fourth: S. I. Gear, May 14.
Pennsylvania—Palmerton First: W. T. S. Seyfert, May 8.
Washington — Stanwood and Birmingham: Hazen T. Murray.

Vacant Pulpits

Illinois—El Paso.

Change of Address

Owen, O. H.—Lodi to Chippewa Falls, Wis.
Schaub, F. L.—Santa Fe, N. M., to Siloam Springs, Ark., for the summer.

Accessions

Illinois—Oregon, 13, May 4, S. S. Cryor.
Michigan—Saginaw Grace, 5, May 4.
Pennsylvania—Philadelphia St. Paul, 18, May 11, J. Beveridge Lee; Philadelphia Hollond Memorial, 8, May 11, C. A. R. Janvier; Phœnixville, 18, April 27, George N. Hertzog.

Churches Organized

Washington—Skykomish, 31 members, W. A. Motter supply.

Newspaper Report.

Washington, May 9.—Immigration to the United States has been heavier this year than during the three previous years, 747,998 immigrant aliens having been admitted to this country during the nine months from July, 1912, to and including March, in addition to which 140,901 non-immigrant aliens were admitted. Immigrants from the Russian empire predominated during the period, 176,252 persons from there having entered, compared with 162,395 in 1912. Italians were next with 150,383. In March the net gain to America was 90,374, the largest in any month since May, 1910.

Dubuque German College and Seminary is facing the tremendous work of educating moral and religious leaders for these incoming thousands. We have sent out 159 ministers who have assumed leadership of their countrymen in America. The task to which this Presbyterian institution has set itself includes the education of a sufficient number of strong men of all the races represented in this country to leaven the huge number of immigrants, strangers to American customs and religion. In addition to this growing task is the further pressing requirement of pastors for the many established German and Bohemian congregations of the Middle West. Taking a part in this statesmanlike work for the uplift of foreign-speaking peoples in America will make you the partner in a far sighted project. We need your interest. We feel that if you know of the work which we are doing you will do all in your power to aid us. The college in ten years has grown from twenty-three students to nearly two hundred and the faculty and equipment has increased in proportion. There is a small endowment which must be doubled to provide for the regular running expenses of the institution. Every $10 added to this fund [illegible] in higher manhood. The story of the Holland tailor who founded this institution is inspiring, as is the account of self denial by students, some of whom came from religious persecution in Asia and Europe to study here to be preachers. Drop us a line that you are interested. Address Dubuque German College and Seminary, Dr. C. M. Steffens, President, Dubuque, Ia.

Spar' sMarionE †jan14
1205 Springfield av

54 Books in One Great Volume

FREE

To Continent Subscribers

¶ In a year The Continent gives its readers in quantity of reading matter the equivalent of fifty-four copies of Ralph Connor's story book "Black Rock." Bind up your fifty-two issues of The Continent for a year into a complete and permanent volume by

THE EMERSON BINDER—"A Binder That Binds"

Each issue may be inserted week by week as it arrives.

"It's as simple to insert a weekly issue as filing papers and requires but a few seconds."

¶ How often have you wished to read an article or story in some back copy of The Continent only to find that copy lost or mutilated? You can now have your Continents in the form of a durable and attractive bound book, ready to refer to at any time, and a handsome addition to your library. After the volume containing the entire year is completed, you may either remove the copies, to be bound in the usual way, or you may simply place the binder and contents on your library shelf. The words "The Continent" will be stamped in gold on the front. It is bound in full black cloth.

¶ By special arrangement we will send this binder absolutely free and postpaid to any present subscribers who will send us a new yearly subscriber for The Continent at the regular $2.50 yearly price. Here's a chance for you to get that friend to subscribe or, if you prefer, send the paper to him as a present. If you cannot do this, we will, as a special courtesy, send the binder to you postpaid at its regular retail price of one dollar.

Address THE CONTINENT

509 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill. 156 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y.

Do You Use Trains on Sunday?

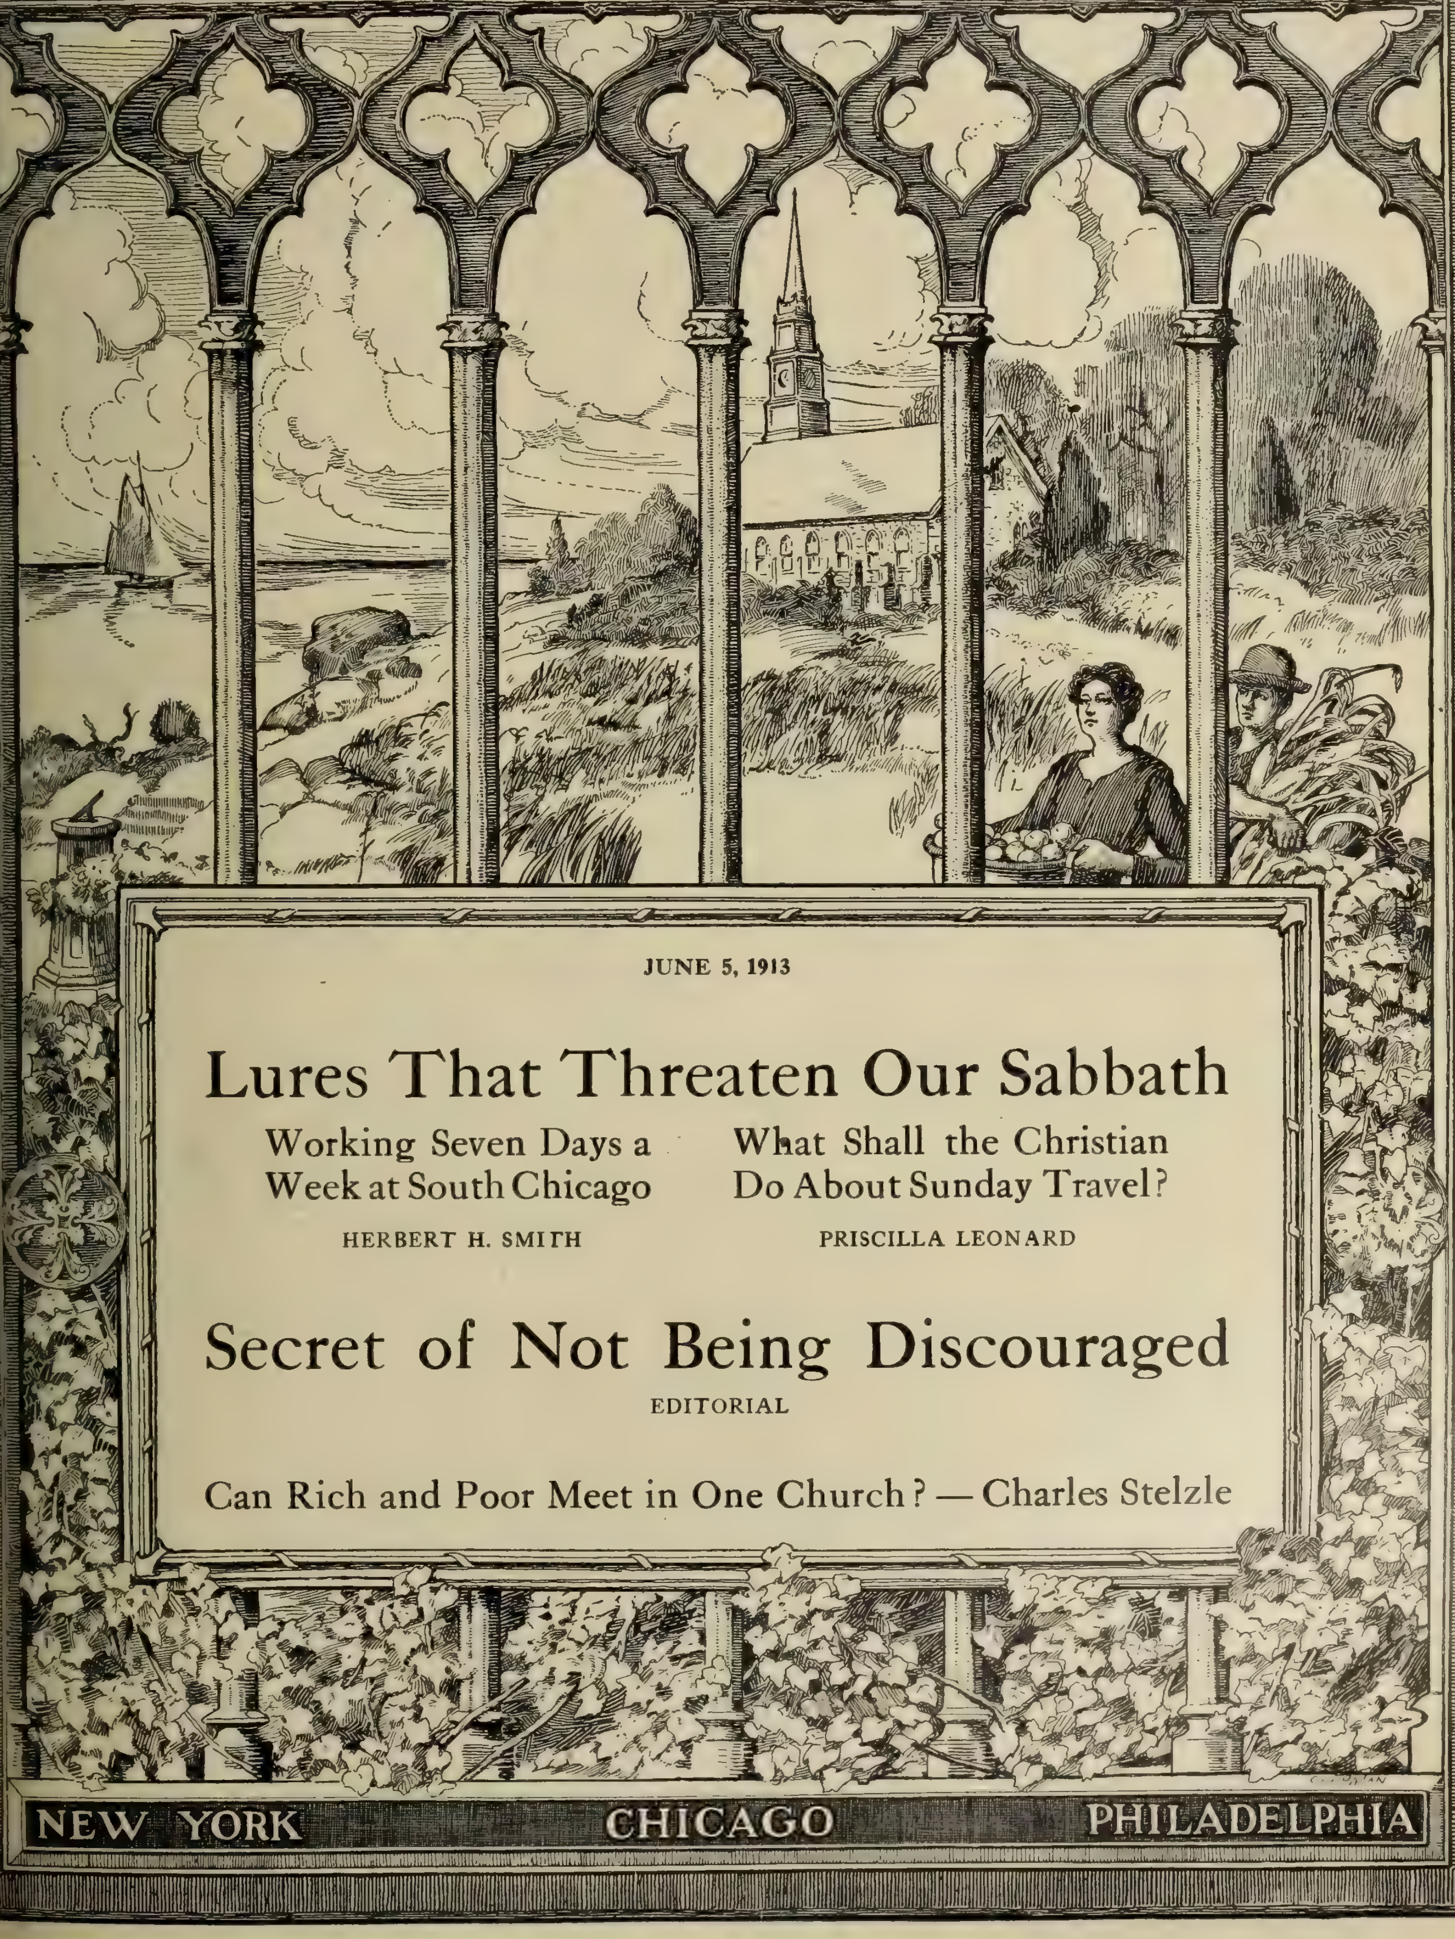
"When Christianity Travels" is a series of delightful sketches with a pungent moral by Priscilla Leonard. The first of these appears next week in The Continent and concerns the prevalence of Sunday travel. The effect on violators of the fourth commandment is pointed out as well as the selfishness of depriving others of their day of rest.

Six Chapels for One Church

In the heart of the Middle West a work is being done among the laboring people which D. W. Montgomery well brings to the attention of readers of The Continent. East End Church, Ottumwa, Iowa, multiplies itself by six. Of course the pastor, Dr. W. H. Hormel, works hard, and his wife speaks each Sunday night, but the laymen do much. The many Sunday schools, social centers and evangelizing stations are largely supported by men. The effect on the community has been large and deep. This account may give you inspiration to attempt the same outreaching in your town. You will be eager to see the outdoor pictures and the new ideas for recreation in the Vacation Number, June 12. There will be found suggestions for those who must stay at home and those who can travel during summer.

How often in the past month have you had a desire to do something practical to make the church more efficient? Perhaps because you didn't see a feasible way of doing it the desire died right there. Revive the impulse now and determine to do this one thing for the church: Speak to a friend who does not take The Continent about the many good things it contains each week. Follow this up and persuade that friend to send us $2.50 for a year's subscription, or better, send it yourself. Many people have told us that no one can read The Continent for a year and not be a better church worker. You can thus spread the use of religious literature.

The CONTINENT



JUNE 5, 1913

Lures That Threaten Our Sabbath

Working Seven Days a Week at South Chicago

HERBERT H. SMITH

What Shall the Christian Do About Sunday Travel?

PRISCILLA LEONARD

Secret of Not Being Discouraged

EDITORIAL

Can Rich and Poor Meet in One Church? — Charles Stelzle

NEW YORK CHICAGO PHILADELPHIA

Illinois

The School That Makes For Manly, Self-Reliant Men

BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY

The Headmaster and Instructors are all men of wide experience in the "Boy Problem"—all University Graduates. BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY is ideally located in a town of 1500, 35 miles from St. Louis. Healthful environment, Christian influence. Prepares young men for business or college; Graduate Courses in Academic, Normal, Commercial, Instrumental and Vocal Music. Also has special Department for young boys. Two regular army officers have charge of the Infantry, Cavalry and Artillery. Fine military band. The ideal school for YOUR boy. For information, write HEADMASTER, BUNKER HILL, ILL.

Georgia

AGNES SCOTT COLLEGE

DECATUR (6 Miles From Atlanta) GEORGIA

Letters—Philosophy—Science—Home Economics

B. A. Graduates, from this college, are admitted, without examination, as candidates for the M. A. degree in the leading universities of the North and East

No Preparatory Department Dormitory Capacity Limited to 300

For Catalog and Bulletin of Views, address the President

F. H. GAINES, D. D. LL. D.

Indiana

WABASH COLLEGE

CRAWFORDSVILLE, INDIANA—80th YEAR

Opening Day September 16th. A college of liberal culture tor young men. Modern equipment. Strong teaching force. Moderate expenses. For particulars address GEORGE L. MACKINTOSH, Pres.

South Carolina

Converse College

Spartanburg, S. C.

A Standard College for Women.
No Preparatory Department.
Confers degrees of A. B., A. M., B. Mus.
Near Blue Ridge Mountains.
Ideal winter climate. No malaria.
ROBERT P. PELL, Litt. D., President.

Connecticut

HARTFORD

W. Douglas Mackenzie
President

Theological Seminary

Scholarly and practical training for the ministry. Faculty of thirteen resident professors besides special lecturers. Notable library of 95,000 volumes. Liberal scholarships to students of high rank and graduate fellowships. Open to college graduates of all Christian denominations. Address
Dean M. W. JACOBUS.

School of Religious Pedagogy

Degree Course tor graduates of colleges and theological seminaries. Diploma Course prepares lay workers for salaried positions in all kinds of Christian service, church, Sunday-school, mission and settlement work. Correspondence Courses for teacher training. Demand for trained workers greater than supply
Address Dean E. H. KNIGHT.

The Kennedy School of Missions

A Graduate School for Special Preparation. Interdenominational. For candidates, appointees and missionaries. Large faculty and library' Courses in phonetics, certain vernaculars, history and religions of mission fields, sociology, Bible, business methods, etc. Address The Secretary, E. W. CAPEN.

Theological Seminaries

THE SAN FRANCISCO THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

SAN ANSELMO, CALIFORNIA

OPENS SEPTEMBER 18th.

Located in one of the most beautiful suburbs of San Francisco, the city of the Panama Pacific Exposition in 1915.

Offers a complete theological curriculum, including English Bible, Missions, Religious Pedagogy, Sunday School Work, and Christian Sociology. A large range of electives. Address

President WARREN H. LANDON, D.D.

AUSTIN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

PRESBYTERIAN—FULL COURSES
OPENS OCTOBER FIRST, 1913

ROBERT E. VINSON, President, AUSTIN, TEXAS

Theological Seminaries

OBERLIN

A high-grade Theological Seminary in a university town famous for eighty years as a religious, educational, musical and missionary center. Theological students share all advantages of the stimulating Oberlin life. Broad elective privileges. Degrees B. D. and A. M. Close comradeship with a strong, friendly Faculty. 81st year begins Sept. 25, 1913 Apply to

Junior Dean G. Walter Fiske, :: Oberlin, Ohio

Lane Theological Seminary

Walnut Hills, - - CINCINNATI, OHIO

For catalogue and other information inquire of
PRESIDENT WILLIAM McKIBBIN.

Iowa

PARSONS COLLEGE

OFFERS

To youth of both sexes superior advantages in securing an education.

IDEAL LOCATION.
STRONG FACULTY.
MODERN EQUIPMENT.

88 years of service to the church and country.
W. E. PARSONS, President. Fairfield, Iowa

Pennsylvania

Main Hall

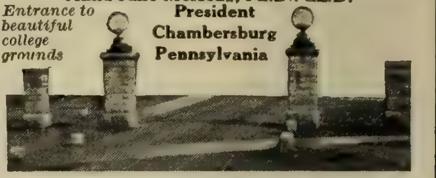
Wilson College

FOR WOMEN

Connected with the Presbyterian Church

Beautiful situation in the Cumberland Valley: extensive campus, water supply approved by the State Board of Health, careful provision for the health of students, a good social atmosphere, a strong faculty, high intellectual standards, solid and thorough work. Courses lead to the B.A. degree. A good department of music. Strong religious influence. Catalogue and views on request.

Anna Jane McKeag, Ph.D., LL.D.
President
Chambersburg
Pennsylvania



Entrance to beautiful college grounds

BEECHWOOD

A Cultural and Practical School

FOR YOUNG WOMEN, AT JENKINTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA.
College Preparatory, College Departments—Conservatory of Music, Arts, Arts and Crafts, Domestic Arts and Sciences.
M. H. Reaser, Ph.D., :: :: :: President

Kiskiminetas Springs School

FOR BOYS

Each boy studied and his work adapted to his needs. Character developed alng positive lines. Known and indorsed by every American University. Broad business course for boys not going to college. Beautiful new dormitory and 136 acres of land have just been added to equipment. Opens 26th year, under same management, Sept. 23, 1913. Write for catalogue.

Kiskiminetas Springs School, Dept. 12, Saltsburg, Pa.

Kansas

Send a Postal Card for

The College of Emporia Picture Book

Containing Snap Shots of

Real College Life

Address Pres. H. C. Culbertson, Emporia, Kansas

Michigan

Young Man! Be a Manual Training Teacher

It is a field that offers great opportunities and much larger salaries than the usual business opening. The demand for teachers greatly exceeds the supply.

THOMAS NORMAL TRAINING SCHOOL

offers a special one year course thoroughly equipping you to teach the subject. All our men graduates this year are now placed at salaries averaging $90 a month. Term opens Aug. 29. For catalogue address secretary,
THOMAS NORMAL SCHOOL, 3030 W. Gd. Boul., Detroit, Mich

Tennessee

WARD-BELMONT Uniting and continuing Belmont College for Young Women (24th year) and Ward Seminary for Young Ladies (49th year). Opens Sept. 25th. Jennie Taylor Masson, Regtr., Box J, Nashville, Tenn.

CUMBERLAND UNIVERSITY

Ideal location. Coeducational.
Write the President, LEBANON, TENN.

Virginia

Mary Baldwin Seminary

For Young Ladies. STAUTON, VIRGINIA.

Term begins Sept. 11th, 1913. Located in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia. Unsurpassed climate. Modern equipment. Students from 34 States. Terms moderate. Send for catalogue. Miss E C. WEIMAR, Principal.

Kansas

Oswego College
Oswego, Kansas

Vocational-Cultural for young women

Subscription Terms—The subscription price of The Continent is $2.50 per year payable in advance.

Postage is prepaid on all subscriptions in the United States, Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, Guam, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, Cuba and Mexico.

Foreign Postage—For Canada, 50 cents should be added for postage, and for all other countries in the Postal Union $1.10 should be added for postage.

Remittances should be sent by draft on Chicago or New York, Express or P. O. money orders payable to The Continent. If personal check is sent, 10 cents must be added for collection.

THE CONTINENT

Continuing The Interior (Established 1870) and The Westminster (Established 1904)
PUBLISHED WEEKLY

THE McCORMICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, Proprietors
Oliver R. Williamson, Publisher

CHICAGO
509 South Wabash Avenue

NEW YORK CITY
Presbyterian Building, 156 5th Avenue

PHILADELPHIA
Witherspoon Building

Entered as second-class matter October 6, 1910, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879. Copyright, 1913, by the McCormick Publishing Company.

Acknowledgments—Within two weeks the date following name on "yellow label" will show to the first of what month subcription has been paid. No other receipt is given unless stamp is sent.

Change of Address—Kindly send us both old and new address a week previous to the date of the desired change.

Discontinuances—No subscription is dropped without a definite request from the subscriber; otherwise it is assumed that he wishes to continue.

Manuscripts—The Continent does not accept responsibility for damage or loss of manuscripts sent to it for consideration.

Advertising rates on application.

IN THIS ISSUE:

THURSDAY, JUNE 5, 1913

How Not to Be Discouraged............ 781
Editorial—
  Because His Hour Was Not Yet....... 784
  Atlanta's Great Hospitality............ 784
  Possibilities of Andrew and Philip Brotherhood 784
  Roman Hypocrisy on Divorce.......... 785
The World.............................. 782
Religious World........................ 783
Can Rich and Poor Meet Together in Church?..............Charles Stelzle 786
"Extra Money" Versus the Sabbath of the Worker (Illustrated)..H. H. Smith 787
Buddhist Finds Peace.....Paul P. Faris 788
When Christianity Travels—Should We Use Sunday Trains?...Priscilla Leonard 789
The Home Council—How We Made Independence Day "Sane." (Fourths with Continent Readers):
  Cooperation in Ohio Town..John Sharpe 790
  The Small Boy No Loser..Mary R. Smith 790
  A Case of Substitution..Ella G. McSurely 790
  An Eleventh-Hour Celebration ....Helen R. Moore 790
Young America—How Runty Pig Got Even ....Maude M. Huey 791
The Sunday School ....J. L. Scott, H. D. Jenkins 792
Devotional Service...... E. A. Wicher 793
Young People's Service................ 793
Missionary Work........................ 796
New Books—
  Philosophical Discussions.............. 797
  Books for Young People............... 797
  Bible Studies.......................... 797
The Open Hearth........................ 798
News from Religious Field—Beginning 800
Financial Situation..................... 805
Calendar and Record.................... 807

Around the Shop

This week the Around-the-Shop Man presents a varied program, in which a number of The Continent's good friends are permitted to speak each his little piece. No. 1:

"I put my Continent on the reading table of the public library every week."

That's a practical little speech. Some folks can't spare time to carry the paper downtown every week, so they send us a little extra, and Uncle Sam and we do the rest. But this brother enjoys doing it himself.

—

This from a veteran former professor in Lafayette College, beloved by a great company of graduates. It is the sort of comment the Around-the-Shop Man feels like framing and placing on the wall of his office:

"I am blind and aged and it is hard to get some friend to read me The Continent, but I cannot do without it. I inclose $2.50.

"Rev. Selden J. Coffin."

—

"On a train coming into New York City recently two gentlemen (not Presbyterians) were overheard conversing about church affairs. Finally they came to the question of religious newspapers, and one of them said to the other: 'It makes no difference what denomination one belongs to, one has to admit that The Continent is in a class by itself among religious newspapers.' "

Of course we trust everyone will admit that it's a good class to be in. Now for the next gentleman:

"By the way, your Around-the-Shop Man is the real thing. He deserves unstinted praise for the superb way in which he handles his limited section of the paper with such variety and effectiveness. Tell him so for me. It is always the first thing I turn to every week."

(To keep the editors from being too proud.)

P. S.—You can have the Around-the-Shop department for your friend at the regular rate of $2.50 a year. No charge for the remainder of the paper.

EDUCATIONAL

Missouri

Missouri Valley College
MARSHALL, MISSOURI

College, Music Conservatory, Academy

Co-educational; four modern buildings; modern laboratories; library; museum; beautiful athletic grounds; forty acres in campus; all buildings heated from one heating plant; lighted by electricity; standards high; location ideal; Marshall and Saline County are "dry"; most beautiful and prosperous city. Opens September 8, 1913. Write for catalog.

WILLIAM HENRY BLACK, President,
405 College Street, Marshall, Missouri.

CHRISTIAN COLLEGE
and Conservatory of Music For Young Women Columbia, Mo.

Non-sectarian. 63d year. Offers highest scholast'c courses amid distinctively moral and Christian environment. Located in a "city whose business is education." 20 college-trained instructors; 5 large buildings; 20-acre campus; outdoor sports; home care. Art, Music, Elocution and Domestic Science.

Mrs. L. W. ST. CLAIR-MOSS, President, 740 College Place

Lindenwood For Women. Est. 1831 Fully accredited by the University of Missouri.
Two years' recognized university work. Music and Art. Domestic Science, regular course with diploma. Preparatory Department. Modern buildings. Ideal climate. 50 minutes from St. Louis. Terms $350. Catalogue. Address
George Frederick Ayres, Ph.D., Pres., Box 297
St. Charles, Mo.
Junior College

California

GIRLS' COLLEGIATE SCHOOL. "Casa de Rosas"
Twenty-second year begins September 25th. Accredited at leading colleges. Music, art, gymnasium, domestic science. Beautiful buildings, fine equipment. Limited number of resident pupils.
Miss Parsons and Miss Dennen, Principals,
Adams and Hoover Streets, Los Angeles, California.

New Hampshire

The Phillips Exeter Academy
Unusual opportunities for boys of exceptional character and ability. 133rd year opens Sept. 17, 1913. Catalogue and views.
Address HARLAN P. AMEN, Principal, Exeter, New Hampshire

EDUCATIONAL

Illinois

NURSES are given a thorough and practical three years training at PASSAVANT Memorial Hospital Training School.
They also have the advantages of a monthly cash allowance, a separate Nurses' Home, and affiliation with the Illinois Training School for Nurses. For further information, address
MISS E. C. GLENN, R. N.,
149-151 West Superior Street. - - Chicago, Illinois.

TODD SEMINARY FOR BOYS
An ideal school for young boys near Chicago. No serious sickness in 60 years. We educate the whole boy. Send for prospectus. NOBLE HILL, Woodstock, Ill.

NORTHWESTERN
MILITARY AND NAVAL ACADEMY
Highland Park, Ill, & Lake Geneva Wis.
A select school with a high standard of Academic work. Physical, moral and social benefits of a Military and Naval life. Limited enrollment. Catalogue. Address Col. R. P. Davidson, Supt., Lake Geneva, Wis. Chicago Office Room 305, N. Y. Life Bldg. 'Phone Randolph 1537

Illinois Woman's College
A Standard College—One of the Best.
Grants degrees. College of Liberal Arts (full scientific and classical); College of Music; School of Fine Arts; School of Expression; School of Home Economics. Academy Course for younger girls. Ideal home life. Magnificent equipment. Catalogue on request. Expenses reasonable. Address
PRESIDENT HARKER, Box 31, Jacksonville, Ill.

Frances Shimer School of the University of Chicago. For girls and young women. Academic and college courses. Music, Art, Domestic Science. 61st year, Catalogue.
Rev. Wm. P. McKee, Dean, Box 602, Mt. Carroll, Ill.

Indiana

Before Deciding Where to Attend School
Send for catalog of Valparaiso University, Valparaiso, Indiana. This is one of the largest institutions of learning in the United States.
Thorough Instruction at Lowest Expense.
Catalog mailed free. Address
H. B. BROWN, President.
O. P. KINSEY, Vice-President.

A mighty church will lead

General Assembly at Atlanta decided that the church, through a committee, should lead in helping Dubuque German College and Seminary to get an adequate endowment. This means that in the future the institution will be able to extend its helpfulness to larger numbers of foreign speaking young men. You will want the satisfaction of having a part in this forward movement in behalf of a great mission aid of the church. May we tell you something of the institution and the men we have sent out? Address Dubuque German College and Seminary, Dr. C. M. Steffens, President, Dubuque, Ia.

EDUCATIONAL

Ohio

OBERLIN
OHIO
Oberlin Conservatory of Music

Offers unusual opportunities for advanced study of music in all its branches. Enjoys the intellectual and social life of Oberlin College. Faculty of 36 specialists. 816 students last year from 42 states and 6 foreign countries. Four-year high school course or its equivalent required before entering courses leading to degree of Bachelor of Music. Fall term opens Sept. 24th. Send for catalogue and musical year book.
CHARLES W. MORRISON, Director, Oberlin, Ohio.

The University of Wooster

Synodical College of Ohio
CO-EDUCATIONAL
The Department of Biblical Instruction is known as the

FLORENCE H. SEVERANCE
Bible and Missionary Training School

YOUNG MEN are trained to become directors of Religious Education, Sabbath School Workers, Assistants to Pastors, Y. M. C. A. Secretaries. Prospective Medical Missionaries may receive their religious training at Wooster before entering a Medical School.

YOUNG WOMEN are trained to become Foreign Missionaries, Home Missionaries, City Missionaries, Pastors' Assistants, Church Visitors, Sabbath School Workers, Y. W. C. A. Secretaries.

Students may take this work in connection with the COLLEGE COURSE or may take the THREE YEARS TRAINING COURSE. For full information address

REV. CHALMERS MARTIN, D.D. Wooster, Ohio
Ask for Catalogue A.

The WESTERN COLLEGE for WOMEN

OXFORD, OHIO
FOUNDED 1853

Ranked with Leading Eastern Colleges

A center of stimulating life for thoughtful students. Comprehensive curriculum; definite religious influence. 350 beautiful acres; campus, farm, garden. Music and Art Departments of special brilliance. Domestic Science. Outdoor Athletics: Gymnasium. Illustrated literature on request.

Mary A. Sawyer, A. M., Lit. D., Dean.

THE OXFORD COLLEGE for WOMEN—FOUNDED 1830

One hour from Cincinnati. Ambitious students, brilliant faculty. Standard four year course, B. A. Degree. Rate only $355.00. Art, Music, Expression, Normal Domestic Science, Business. Write for "Seven Points."

JANE SHERZER, Ph.D. (Berlin), Pres., Box 2, Oxford, Ohio.

Kindergarten Training

Miss E. B. Montgomery, Principal. Courses in Oberlin College, possible—Daily Practice in 10 practice kindergartens—Charges Moderate—Graduates readily find positions. 20th year begins September 24th, 1913. For catalogue address Secretary OBERLIN KINDERGARTEN ASSOCIATION, Drawer 9, Oberlin, Ohio.

Harcourt Place School

FOR GIRLS

College Preparation and Advanced Courses in Languages, Literature, History, Expression and Music. Summer travel class in Europe. Winter vacation cruise to Panama.

Address Miss Merwin, Principal :. Gambier, Ohio

Minnesota

SHATTUCK SCHOOL

1867 MILITARY 1913

27 per cent enrolled are related to Alumni.
Write for Catalogue and Athletic Book.
Boys 8 to 12 in separate school.
Rev. James Dobbin, D.D., Rector.
Rev. Edward T. Mathison, Associate Rector.
FARIBAULT :: MINNESOTA

Wisconsin

Milwaukee-Downer College
Milwaukee-Downer Seminary

Milwaukee, Wisconsin

College Courses lead to Bachelors' Degrees.
Home Economics Training Course for Teachers.
Seminary admits to Eastern and Western Colleges.
Music Department directed by Emil Liebling.
Art, Elocution, Athletics. Location combines advantages of city and country. For information specify College or Seminary catalogue. Miss Ellen C. Sabin, President

RIPON COLLEGE

RIPON :: :: WISCONSIN

ORIENTAL LIMITED

Spend Your Vacation
In
Glacier National Park

— a Tremendous Scenic Region

Located in Northwestern Montana—in the heart of the American Rockies—this new national playground, with its 1,500 square miles of towering mountains and glistening glaciers, its teeming trout streams and 250 mountain lakes, its chasms and cataracts—offers you a delightful vacation at small cost. A magnificent new hotel has been erected at Glacier Park Station, the eastern gateway. A chain of Swiss Chalets, throughout the Park, operated in connection with this modern hotel, affords excellent accommodations. Rates $3.00 per day, American plan.

Vacation Tours $1 to $5.00 a Day

Tours through the Park by auto, stage, horseback, launch or afoot may be made at $1.00 to $5.00 a day. These tours comprise jaunts through fascinating scenery — over scenic mountain roads and trails and expansive glaciers, stopping en-route at the chain of Swiss Chalets or camping out. The summer climate is cool—invigorating—delightful.

Low Fares
Every Day This Summer

Low round trip fares are in effect daily via the Great Northern Railway to Spokane, Seattle, Tacoma, Vancouver, Victoria, Portland and many other Pacific Coast points, permitting stop-overs at Glacier National Park. Special Convention fares on certain dates.

Books Free Write at once for descriptive literature and aeroplane map-folder, containing full information as to the cost of the trip. Tear out the reminder coupon — get these FREE books today.

C. W. Pitts, Gen. Agt. Pass. Dept.
210 S. Clark St. Phones: Har. 893-311

S. Lounsbery, Gen. Agt. Pass. Dept.
1184 Broadway, N. Y. Phone Mad. Sq. 7725

H. A. Noble,
Gen. Pass. Agt.
Great Northern Ry.
Dept. 123 St. Paul, Minn.

"See America First"
GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY
National Park Route

"See America First"

Panama-Pacific International Exposition, San Frncisco, 1915

Reminder Coupon

This is to remind you to write for booklets and aeroplane map of Glacier National Park.

Address

H. A. Noble, Gen. Pass. Agt.
Great Northern Ry.
Dept. 123, St. Paul, Minn.

131

WANTED—LAMPS AND LIGHTS FOR IMMIGRANTS AND SAILORS

"THY WORD is a LAMP unto my feet and a LIGHT unto my path."
We furnish the Bible in 51 languages to the immigrants and sailors and to the poor of our city, to lodging houses, hotels, hospitals and prisons. $20,000 is needed to complete an endowment fund of $200,000 for this work. Don't let us lose that which is already promised on the condition that we raise the whole sum. Address,

NEW YORK BIBLE SOCIETY

66 Bible House, New York

JOHN C. WEST, President, JAMES H. SCHMELZEL, Treasurer, REV. GEORGE WILLIAM CARTER, Ph.D., General Secretary

THE CONTINENT

CONTINUING THE INTERIOR (ESTABLISHED 1870) AND THE WESTMINSTER (ESTABLISHED 1904)

VOLUME 44, NO. 23 JUNE 5, 1913 WHOLE NO. 2245

Nolan R. Best, Editor—156 Fifth Avenue, New York. Oliver R. Williamson, Publisher—509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago. William T. Ellis, Editor Afield—Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia. The McCormick Publishing Company, Proprietors

How Not to Be Discouraged

DISCOURAGED, are you, because the thing you have been trying to do in the church or for your community isn't coming out as well as you expected? Perhaps the trouble is that you have been expecting too much—at least, expecting too much too quick.

Does that sound impious? Can a faithful Christian look for too great results in religious work? "Attempt great things for God; expect great things of God"—William Carey's thrilling motto—has been held forth everywhere as a model for Christian faith.

And it is a good model if understood. But it mustn't be understood with any impatience in it. Impatience ruins all its virtue. And Christian discouragement is generally impatience.

In one sense, discouragement is a noble fault. It is the shadow of a fine enthusiasm gone by. The weakling and sluggard are never discouraged. There must first be some stir of courage to make discouragement possible.

So the very fact that a Christian is discouraged signifies that there is the quality of a worker in him. And usually all that's needed to bring out of him the powers of a worker again is some antidote against impatience—against expecting too much of God too quick.

✠

Plenty of that antidote is to be found in the words of Jesus Christ. The ordinary thought of those who think about it at all is that Jesus lived an urgent, high-pressure life, and keyed up his disciples to the same tension. But the truth runs just the other way.

Jesus was always quieting down good men's impatience with the slowness of things—with the delay of results.

Whenever the Master explained the character of his mission—whenever he asked, "How shall we liken the kingdom of God?"—the parables he chose were always illustrations signifying slow development and long waiting.

Modern imagery for the advancement of good in the world is mostly made up from army metaphors. "Like a mighty army moves the church of God" is sung ringingly whenever the spirit of Christians is stirred for some big work. And when speakers elaborate the note, they talk of battles and charges, and assaults and other military strategies, which mean rushing action and quick effect.

Or if some feel that figures of speech drawn from war and battle are too hackneyed, or out of place in an era of peace, they almost invariably fall back on similes taken from machinery. Then we hear the church talked of as a big factory that ought, on a fair efficiency basis, to turn out so much finished product per day.

And without question there are phases of Christian duty in the modern world which are vividly pictured by these war and machinery illustrations. Undoubtedly Christians will go on using them.

But they ought always to be used with this sense of limitation—they do not come from Jesus.

Jesus never spoke of himself and his followers as an army—still less as a machine.

This latter idea is so foreign to him that it sounds almost like sacrilege when suggested in connection with his name.

✠

What then was the sort of picture which came most naturally to Christ when he wanted to define his work and that of his disciples?

Nearly always he thought of himself and of them as farmers—sowers and reapers and caretakers of vines or sheep. Sometimes he brought in the comparison of watchman and again of fishermen. Once he compared those who did his service with the housewife who mixes yeast in flour and sets it aside to "rise."

And what common idea connects these metaphors? They are all occupations in which the workers must wait for results.

The sower sows his seed and has to wait for it to grow and ripen. If there are tares in his field, he must wait even to get rid of them. The woman must wait until the yeast has time to work. The fisherman must not be disheartened if the net comes in empty.

There is a season for the vine to yield and for the flock to increase; the season must be waited for. And the watchman has nothing to do but wait.

These are the parables with which Jesus set forth the kingdom of heaven, and so far from promising results forthwith, they all call for the kind of faith that can work just the same without results.

They speak of courage without even tokens of encouragement. After the green blade of the wheat begins to show, the sower, of course, has some pledge of the harvest, but before that there must be a lapse of time, while the buried seed germinates, when there is nothing at all to give a sign of reward for his effort.

✠

What does all this say to the worker discouraged for lack of recompense to his labors? It says to him that with Jesus standing at his side, he can continue in faith none the less.

It says to him on the authority of Jesus that if he is sowing the good seed with all the faith and sincerity of his soul, he can share every whit of the confidence of Jesus himself that there is good ground somewhere near where the good seed cannot fail to bring harvest.

And so the Christian worker can simply refuse to be discouraged in any circumstance.

To be sure, this is a teaching that lazy men and careless men and self-loving men can wrest to their own destruction. It is in fact a teaching that they have no business with at all. The truth of patience and waiting belongs only to those who have the good seed and are forever busy sowing it.

The self-loving man may, on plea of waiting to see the harvest, defend himself from inquiry into his motives, his spirit and his methods—which may in fact be such as must make his spiritual agriculture altogether ineffective. The careless man may slip out from the Christian obligation to be thorough. The lazy man may quit work entirely.

But all these perils do not rob the faithful and diligent Christian of the comfort of knowing that no human sight can mark his labors useless because no green blade is yet springing through the ground.

The fisherman who has just drawn an empty net deserves the full understanding of his Master's patience to cheer him to cast again.

✠

Sometimes, though, a quick and amazing success follows a man's first efforts in a new field. People exclaim: "See how quick that man gets results!"

But he has not evaded the laws of his Master's kingdom. If these praises of men sound sweet in his ears, let him turn and read in the Scripture where it is written:

"Others have labored, and ye are entered into their labors."

The World

The President Sounds an Alarm Against Lobbyists

President Wilson has broken another presidential precedent by publicly attacking the host of lobbyists who are working to check or weaken the tariff bill now pending in the senate at Washington. In his statement, issued last week, the President said: "I think the public ought to know the extraordinary exertions being made by the lobby to gain recognition for certain alterations of the tariff bill. Washington has seldom seen so industrious or so insidious a lobby. . . . There is every evidence that money without limit is being spent to maintain this lobby and to create an appearance of a pressure of public opinion antagonistic to some of the chief items of the bill. It is of serious interest to the country that the people at large should be voiceless in these matters, while great bodies of astute men seek to create an artificial opinion and to overthrow the interests of the public for their private profit. . . . The government in all its branches ought to be relieved from this intolerable burden and this constant interruption of the calm progress of debate. The members of the two houses would rejoice as much as I to be released from this unbearable situation."

The genesis of this remarkable statement is described as also remarkable. Meeting the newspaper correspondents the President asked them why they did not inform the country of "the misrepresentation being fostered by the tariff lobby," on which one of the correspondents parried by asking why the President did not break the standing rule against allowing himself to be quoted. Thereupon he dictated the declaration of war just mentioned.

Although ostensibly addressed to the general public, the President's charges made a tremendous stir in Congress. Senator Cummins immediately introduced a resolution calling for a sweeping investigation. It was passed after being toned down by amendments, and under it the judiciary committee of the senate is to report the names of all lobbyists attempting to influence any such pending legislation and the methods which they have employed to accomplish their ends. The committee is also to ascertain the names of senators to whom representations have been made, and by whom made and the circumstances; also whether any senator is financially or professionally interested in the manufacture or sale of articles affected by the tariff bill, or in any other legislation considered during his term as senator. The President is respectfully invited to aid the committee in its inquiry and has promised to do so. The possible scope of the inquiry is broad enough to cause some spectacular developments before the Underwood bill becomes a law.

Congress Has Bills to Regulate Lobbying

Two bills are pending in Congress designed to curb the activities of lobbyists, of which President Wilson complains so strongly. One was introduced by Senator Kenyon of Iowa and the other by Representative C. B. Smith of New York. They provide that all lobbyists shall be registered and required to obtain a license before appearing before any committee or previous to carrying on a campaign for or against proposed legislation. These bills are based on the theory—usually but not always correct—that any outsider working to advance or to block bills is the representative of some special interest with a private ax to grind, and is not simply a patriotic citizen, animated by altruistic motives.

Manufacturers and Bankers Asked for Data

United States senators these days are apparently making earnest efforts to obtain information for legislative guidance, and if the business men of the country tell them all they want to know there will be some earnest thinking on public problems done by American manufacturers and bankers.

Twenty-nine questions relating to the tariff have been formulated by the finance committee of the senate and sent to American manufacturers. The list embodies sixteen questions proposed by Senator LaFollette, and the interrogatories are to be answered under oath. The committee states neither the report of the bill to the senate nor final action by the senate will be delayed to wait for answers. Preliminary questions relate to the manufacturer's identity, amount of capitalization and statement of assets, liabilities and earnings, the commodity produced, raw materials used and their source. Other questions relate to the percentage and value of product exported, number of concerns engaged in the manufacture of the same commodity, whether any of these producers are organized into a trust or price-controlling combination, or for any other purpose, what proportion of the production is by such a trust and what proportion by independent producers, and the difference, if any, in the price charged for the product in the domestic market by the independent producer and by the trust producer. The manufacturer is asked to state the amount of wages paid during each of the last three years and the total value of product for the same years. Four significant inquiries are made as to the cost of production per unit of the same product in foreign countries, the percentage of labor cost to the total cost of a unit in competing countries, what part of the duty under the Payne-Aldrich law represents the individual manufacturer's profit, and whether the manufacturer has a pecuniary interest in the maintenance of a high tariff on his commodity.

The financial men have thirty-two interrogatories relating to the nation's currency system and how its defects should be remedied. The senate's banking and currency committee asks for an enumeration of the points for and against the existing system, the kinds of security for national bank notes and how these notes should be issued; also as to the advisability of a central reserve association or "regional" associations and branches, and the features designed to obtain elasticity, the relation of state banks and trust companies to national banks, and other questions of a technical but highly important character. If Congress makes speed with the tariff bill it is understood that currency reform may be taken up for decisive action within a few months.

Verdict for Roosevelt in Libel Trial

Colonel Roosevelt won a verdict in his suit for libel against Editor Newett of The Iron Ore newspaper at Marquette, Michigan, last week. At the close of the plaintiff's case Mr. Newett took the stand and made a statement that he had been misled by widespread rumors as to the habits of the former President, but that he had been unable to find any witnesses to substantiate the printed charge on which the suit was based. Following this retraction Colonel Roosevelt addressed the court, saying he desired only nominal damages (which in Michigan means 6 cents), adding that he went into the case because he wished once for all, during his lifetime, to clear his reputation and make it impossible for similar "slanders" to be repeated.

Disclosure was made in the course of the trial that Roosevelt occasionally drinks light wines and champagne, and that he had once been seen to drink two glasses of the latter beverage. But the charge that he got "drunk frequently" was denied by many men who have known him intimately for long periods of years. There was testimony to prove his excellent physical condition, particularly as shown after his attempted assassination at Milwaukee last year, when his surprising rally from wound and shock was held by his physician to indicate the entire absence of alcoholic taint. Robert Bacon, former secretary of state and former ambassador to France, whose acquaintance with the ex-President began in college, swore that Roosevelt's habits had always been temperate, as did James R. Garfield, Jacob Riis, Gifford Pinchot and several newspaper correspondents. One and all denied that the colonel had ever been under the influence of liquor. It was also testified that the colonel does not taste whisky nor beer, does not use tobacco, and objects to profanity and obscenity.

Treaty of Peace in Turko-Balkan War Signed

The Turko-Balkan war officially ended on Friday with the signing of a preliminary treaty of peace in London by delegates representing Turkey, Bulgaria, Servia, Greece and Montenegro. The eight months' war was thus closed with very simple ceremony, the only dramatic feature being an expression of keen regret voiced by Delegate Popovitch of Montenegro. He declared that his nation was profoundly disappointed with the terms it has been obliged to accept and added, "We have been despoiled of the fruits of our victories," and uttered a hope that Great Britain, which had taken the leading part in depriving Montenegro of Scutari city and fortress, would take steps to compensate Montenegro.

Dr. Daneff, the Bulgarian peace delegate, asserted that the signing of the treaty assured Balkan peace as well as general peace, and he believed that Europe had been saved from one of the most thorny problems of the age.

While the relationship between the civilian representatives of the allies shows improvement, news from the military front the first of the week was warlike. Bulgarian artillery was reported to have fired on a Greek position and there was a feeling of acute tension in Macedonia between Servia and Bulgaria.

The one man above all others who is receiving praise from all sides for the successful progress of the peace negotiations is Sir

Edward Grey, the British foreign minister. His patience, persistence, determination and tact have saved the situation more than once during the past few weeks.

However, it must be remembered that there are still important questions of detail to be settled by the great powers and the former combatants. The European ambassadors are now considering a constitution for the new state of Albania, as well as the exact southern frontier of that state, and the status of the Ægean islands; nor has the reapportionment of Macedonia and Thrace been settled.

* * *

Death of Prize Fighter in Canadian Ring

The prize fighting "game"—the word game being a euphemism for both brutality and graft—has received another severe setback in the death at Calgary, in the Canadian province of Alberta, of one of the combatants in a widely advertised "boxing match." The victim was a big, husky young man, and the fight had hardly more than begun when he received a blow in the jaw which dislocated his neck and injured his spinal nerve centers to such an extent that he was dead before most of the spectators realized that he had been hurt. Next night the arena where the battle had been staged burned down from a fire of supposedly incendiary origin.

Meantime the disreputable Jack Johnson, who holds the "world's championship," continues to get himself into more disgrace and infamy, further lowering whatever standing prize fighters may have had in the United States. And it is not likely that Canada will show them any further hospitality. A local minister of the gospel in Calgary did himself and his cause no good by making a public speech from the ringside before the fatal battle began.

* * *

Military Conscription Unpopular in New Zealand

Military conscription has been making trouble for the Labor party ministry of New Zealand. With the avowed purpose of demonstrating its patriotism and also of gaining approval in England, the ministry obtained the passage of an act enforcing military service upon youths under the voting age. But the boys and their parents rebelled. Several thousand prosecutions for refusing to enlist and for desertion have followed since the enactment of the law, putting many boys in jail.

One case which has attracted attention is that of a prosperous English farmer from Kent, Lettar by name, who emigrated to New Zealand with his family a year and a half ago. After half a year's residence his two younger boys were "summoned to the colors," but they refused to go, saying they had not come from England across the world to New Zealand to be trained for soldiers. They were put in jail for short sentences, and a few months later they and a third brother who had reached the cadet age were again summoned. Instead of complying they fled to Australia, where they were joined by their relatives, and the whole family sailed back to England. The incident is being used as a political weapon by opponents of the Labor ministry and as an argument against enforced military training.

* * *

British Authority Says the Opium Traffic Is Dead

Announcement has lately been made in the house of commons that the British government has decided to send no more Indian opium to China. In commenting upon the statement, The London Times says that no excitement is called for because the Indian opium traffic is already dead, having come to a natural end when the government of India stopped the sales of opium for export early in the present year. The doom of the traffic was sealed when China, regardless of ill-advised treaty obligations, forbade the opium merchants to distribute the drug, thereby forcing the accumulation of 20,000 chests of opium in port warehouses. These 20,000 chests are to be "absorbed" by China at the rate of 2,000 chests a month. "It is perhaps as well," says The Times, "not to peer too closely into this final flicker of the opium traffic." While many Englishmen, including The Times editors, were inclined to stand on the letter of the treaty and sympathize with the Shanghai and Canton merchants and bankers, yet The Times admits that the traffic is morally indefensible and expresses the hope that the Chinese government will be able to stamp out the opium habit.

* * *

—After a majority of the members of the New York state senate had exonerated Senator S. J. Stilwell of the accusation of soliciting a bribe the case was taken into the courts and a few days ago a nonpolitical jury promptly found him guilty as charged. The moral appears to be that charges of legislative bribery are best tried by men entirely dissociated from the accused.

Religious World

Student Ideal in Statue at Princeton

At Princeton on Memorial Day there was unveiled on the university campus a bronze figure by Daniel French representing an ideal student, combining physical, intellectual and spiritual strength. The monument is the gift of Cleveland Dodge of New York, and commemorates the organization of the Intercollegiate Young Men's Christian Association, which was initiated in Princeton in 1876 by a group of students, among whom the donor's lamented brother, William E. Dodge, Jr., was a leader. The dedicatory addresses by John R. Mott, President Hibben, Baron Nicolay of Russia and Dr. A. W. Halsey were brief and simple, in keeping with the unostentatious character of the ceremony. Mr. Mott and Baron Nicolay were present in Princeton in connection with the meeting of the executive committee of the World's Student Federation. This federation is holding a conference this week at Lake Mohonk, with delegates present from forty countries, including about eighty-five professors, secretaries and students from Europe.

* * *

Baptists Want Uniform Lessons Made Doctrinal

The month of May saw two great Baptist Conventions held—the Southern at St. Louis and the Northern at Detroit. The principal debate at St. Louis was over a proposition favoring the withdrawal of Southern Baptists from connection with the international Sunday school committee, and from use even of the uniform lessons. The graded lessons were repudiated by this denomination some time since, but the radicals who would have cut the connection completely were defeated by the wisdom of the Sunday School Board, which proposed instead that Baptists should petition the international lesson committee to construct a method of studying the Bible by "topics, characters and periods rather than by detached passages." Under this topical treatment the Convention expressed the hope that the lesson committee would be able to provide instruction in the doctrines common to all evangelical denominations and leave a certain period to be supplied with denominational lessons adjusted in each church to its own special tenets. This solution so far satisfied the convention that no one voted against it.

In the Northern Convention Henry Bond of Vermont was reelected president. The chief address of the sessions was delivered by Dr. James H. Franklin, foreign secretary of the Foreign Missionary Society, who had just returned from an around-the-world tour of missionary inspection, and who had the most encouraging reports of the fields that he had visited. The missionary enthusiasm of the Convention was throughout its most noticeable note.

* * *

United Brethren Vote for Church Union

In the quadrennial General Conference of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ held in Decatur, Illinois, the outstanding question of the sessions was the proposed union of the denomination with the Methodist Protestant Church. Combined the two would make a body of half a million members. During the past two years a joint committee has drafted a syllabus of union, including both a creed and the outlines of a form of government. This was submitted to the General Conference for approval, and when it came up for consideration the members of the Methodist Protestant committee were in attendance and addressed the United Brethren delegates. Bishop W. M. Bell of California responded for the United Brethren, appealing to his fellow churchmen not to neglect the opportunity for accomplishing a work of church unification which, he predicted, would set going a general movement for union among related branches of Protestantism.

When the vote was taken there were no voices against the resolution which declared that the General Conference "commits itself unreservedly to the proposed policy of union with the Methodist Protestant Church." Those in opposition were willing to postpone their contest with the unionists until the voting in annual conferences and local congregations. It is provided in the union plan that the question shall first be submitted to the annual conferences, and if approved by three-fourths of them, it shall be submitted to a popular vote of the private membership. If the question again obtains a three-fourths' majority, the bishops are to convene the General Conference for final ratification. The church union commission and the editors of the church papers were officially instructed to work in favor of the union idea.

Editorial

Because His Hour Was Not Yet

AS THE DISCIPLES looked back on the experiences of Jesus, they found themselves wondering how he had walked immune for so long. They remembered that sometimes he had taken himself out of the way and so seemed to be protecting himself. At other times, however, he seemed to dare danger and nothing happened to him. There were men who had made themselves his enemies, and they would have liked to seize him. Once or twice they did reach out to take him, and then something led them to withdraw their hands, and he went free and unhindered.

It is not likely that at the time the disciples thought much about it, but afterwards as they looked back, the fact arrested their attention. He was not living a charmed life in any cheap sense of that word. He was sometimes helped by public opinion. The very justice of the situation was, of course, something of a protection to him. But the more clearly they looked at the facts the plainer it became to them that there was a higher word to be said. There was a controlling Hand, which was over the whole situation. Jesus was not "taken" by his enemies "because his hour was not yet."

God's clock had not struck. Until it struck there was nothing that men could do. They were not at all conscious of the fact that they were being held back, and they moved in perfect freedom, but over their free and active lives there hovered all the while the plan which had its grooves into which they ran, and its dates which they had to meet. His hour was not yet. It was not the time. As the disciples looked back years after, that assurance grew upon them.

Some of us can remember an experience of childhood which impressed that upon us. It was when we were told the story of the plan of Abraham for the sacrifice of Isaac. We watched the departure of the father and son from the home; we watched them make their journey to the mountain; we watched them go up to the mountain top; we heard Isaac ask his father where they were to find the sacrifice for the wood which they were carrying. The condition grew more tense as we went on. We saw the altar built, and the wondering Isaac bound and laid on it. Then we saw Abraham's hand raise the knife to offer the sacrifice.

It all comes back as we go over the story again. What if God had not spoken just then? What if Abraham had not heard that voice and turned and looked and found the ram caught in the thicket? And our wise mothers, having brought us to the climax, always made us feel that God is never too late, that he always comes when we have to have him and that he never misses the connection with our life's need. Doctors come too late; fathers and mothers arrive when the trouble is over, but God never comes too late. The great things never happen until God's time comes.

When God's clock strikes, then things may happen. When they do occur, therefore, we have a right to say that his clock had struck. Can we miss the comfort and reassurance of that? We are such bustling, busy people, and we strain so to bring things to pass, and are so distressed when there are any delays. Or we are so concerned when things do happen prematurely, according to our judgment. Can we not learn to lie quietly down upon the assurance that God has his hour when his great events occur? Somewhere around our free agency his mold clasps down and the great events come in their time.

The realization is meant to give us a great feeling of safety. It does not take away from us the possibility of doing unwise and rash things. It leaves us much to repent of. But after all, it suggests that there are Hands over ours, which really control the matters that count. We sometimes wonder why we do not do things, and we make labored explanations of our human delays. Then there comes to us a revealing lightning flash, which shows that we are working under a plan. That plan never encourages one of us in indolence or idleness. It brings us constant inspiration that the purposes which God has are sure to be brought out, and that we are to put ourselves in line with them. The victory is not under discussion; it is assured; when the hour strikes for it, it will come. But on which side we shall be when it comes—ah! that is for us to say.

Atlanta's Great Hospitality Worth the While

Review in fresh and fragrant memory of recent events at Atlanta must necessarily involve the question whether the abounding hospitality of Atlanta's hearts and homes was justified by the effects of the undertaking on which citizens there spent such extraordinary pains. This concentration of the official bodies of four Presbyterian denominations in one place was avowedly intended to disseminate a sense of unity among them all. Was the experiment successful—and justified by its success?

The Continent has no doubt of it. To be sure, there was less public ado of fraternity than might have been expected, but all three of the Assemblies—U. S. A., U. S. and United—which had legislative business in hand, were so completely occupied with their respective affairs that visiting back and forth was practically impossible. And the joint evening meetings were strictly specialized on urgent affairs of Christian service, so that after the first of them comparatively little was said on the general theme of church union. Nevertheless, there was no hour of any of these joint mass meetings—nor indeed, any hour while the three Assemblies were in separate session—that did not contribute its quota to that cumulative consciousness of identity which Atlanta was aiming to produce. The very atmosphere made it so. There was everybody present in Atlanta from all Presbyterian names, and everybody was like everybody else.

In the background of all minds the proximity of so many Presbyterian neighbors shed an unwonted light over routine transactions. Each of the fellowships was constantly visible in the horizon of others, and the psychological result is the creation of a mental habit which will forbid Southern Presbyterians, United Presbyterians and U. S. A. Presbyterians alike to think of themselves hereafter as lone and isolated. And just that mental state—the state which no longer allows one church to reflect on the others as "strangers and foreigners"—is the most essential preliminary to a coalescence not planned and constrained but in free course of life spontaneous and inevitable.

Not to be too philosophical in explanation of it all, the simple fact is that men and women of all tempers and of all the denominations concerned who were present at Atlanta, came away more favorably disposed toward union than before. The Continent does not believe there was an exception to this. People who had already made up their minds for organic union of the Presbyterian family returned from Atlanta to their homes feeling more eager for it than ever. People who have feared or opposed it departed at least less antagonistic than before, and many—especially in the Southern Presbyterian Church—changed over from opposing to favoring. And in one sentiment everybody from both wings drew closer together—that is, in the sentiment that the result, whether it comes sooner or later, must be left to work itself out in natural progress of fraternal feeling, as God's Spirit may guide to spiritual apprehension of spiritual unities already accomplished. So even those that still hesitate before unfavorable effects that they dread, are no longer in panic for fear somebody shall take advantage of them. In establishment of this confidence it was well for union that no steps to union, other than those previously initiated, were undertaken in Atlanta. It was a time of Christian fellowship, pure and simple, and no man may complain of the results unless he is prepared to denounce Christian fellowship itself as an ill thing.

In The Continent's opinion the meaning of this two weeks of May in the city of Atlanta in the year 1913 will grow continually larger—as the scroll of church history in the United States unrolls. Yet if by any means there should no more develop from it than mutual acquaintance of North and South and East and West, even that alone will justify the warm-souled thought of Thornwell Jacobs, which, indorsed and realized through the great-heartedness of the "Atlanta spirit," secured the simultaneous assemblage of the representative life of four Presbyterian denominations in that city.

◆

Possibilities of Andrew and Philip Brotherhood

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip, which came to pass last month, was celebrated with so little of display that much less than an adequate impression of the event has entered the public mind. Here is one of the most intensely spiritual and most devotedly practical of modern Christian organizations which has quietly lived out twenty-five years of service, and today, with methods tried and with enthusiasms rekindled, but under efficient control, the brotherhood is more vital and withal fitter for usefulness than in all its earlier history.

The more one studies what Dr. Rufus W. Miller in the first years of his ministry set afoot, and what he and General Secretary Howard Taylor, with the aid of many strong helpers, have going today, the more one feels the great possibilities that their organization contains. Founded on what should certainly be a minimum of Christian purpose with any layman who counts it worth while to avow himself a Christian at all—the promise to pray daily for the kingdom of Christ and to strive to bring someone within the hearing of the gospel every week—the brotherhood sets forth a standard of Christian service which is strong enough to enliven, yet not heavy enough to overburden, the least or greatest of Christian disciples. Meanwhile its thought and plan concerning Christian unity affords a connection among believers vital enough to express the highest ideals of interdenominational harmony, and yet free enough not to offend those zealous for denominational distinctives. With a federal council comprising delegates from the councils of various constituent churches the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip singularly combines cochurch relationships with denominational spirit and gets the force of both.

"Andrew and Philip" ought to grow. The Continent believes the organization is destined to spread from its now comparatively limited area in the East into larger acceptance West and South. Though originating in the Reformed Church, of which its honored founder is now a leading denominational official, its greatest present development is in Presbyterian congregations. Indeed, the largest and most successful chapter is that of Bethany Presbyterian church, Philadelphia, whose chapter house, given by Elder John Wanamaker, was dedicated in connection with the quarter centennial observances; and the general secretary, Rev. R. Howard Taylor, is a Presbyterian minister whose pastorate, prior to his entering upon this work, was with the prosperous church at Oxford, Pennsylvania. The elasticity of the Presbyterian Brotherhood fully provides for accepting chapters of "Andrew and Philip" as integral parts of that movement. So in every respect Presbyterian congregations should be an open field for "Andrew and Philip" extension.

Roman Hypocrisy on the Divorce Question

It is unpleasant to be obliged so often to direct attention to the hypocrisy of Roman Catholic prelates in their endless boasting that their church is the world's stanchest—sometimes they say only—defender of the sanctity of marriage. But intelligent citizens, concerned at the rapid growth of the divorce evil, cannot afford to be deceived into accepting the Roman hierarchy at its own valuation as an ally in the war on divorce. The first interest of the hierarchy is not quashing divorce but confirming the sway of the church over family life. Where the sway of the church is acknowledged the mere fact of separation between honestly wedded husband and wife proves nothing obnoxious to the priestly mind.

A case in Quebec, already celebrated and promising to become still more famous, illustrates this. Napoleon Tremblay, whose wife and himself had been strict Catholics all their lives, being married in regular church form by the proper parish priest, got tired of Mrs. Tremblay after six years of wedlock and wished to divorce her. A fact unknown to either of them when they were married, but discovered afterwards as they compared their ancestral trees, furnished his way of escape; they were fourth cousins. Yes, the church authorities admitted that was an impediment to the marriage, but a dispensation from the bishop would have fixed it all right if they had asked for it. And that they could have yet, provided they would pay the required fee. But Tremblay wasn't wanting the marriage regularized, and so he refused to pass over the cash desired. Well, the priests concerned were willing to accommodate; it would have been nicer if the man would pay, but since he wouldn't, they weren't small enough to show any hard feelings—and so they told him he was free from his wife—in fact, never had been married at all.

But Mrs. Tremblay didn't want it that way. She had some reputation at stake, to say the least. So she has been fighting the case from one court to another in Quebec, and now proposes to carry it over seas to the final court of appeal in the British empire—the king's privy council in London. It is likely there to become as notable a matter as the McCann "ne temere" case in Ulster, and the Roman casuists won't have any better chance than they had in the McCann case to make the official attitude of their church look either fair, decent or honest.

—"Catch-My-Pal" Patterson of Ireland—an Irish Presbyterian minister—has landed on the American shore and will be talking temperance to Americans all summer. Mr. Patterson believes in pledge signing as the best means of fighting drink just as wholeheartedly as Father Mathew and Francis Murphy ever did, and his work promises to be bigger than either of them ever accomplished. Mr. Patterson is not at all professional, but "always at it" with personal zest, and on the liner Cameronia, in which he crossed from Glasgow, the daily newspapers say that he was successful in pledging most of the members of the ship's crew and many of the passengers before the vessel docked in New York.

—The announcement that Dr. W. H. Oxtoby, pastor of the great Tabernacle church of Philadelphia, has accepted the chair of Old Testament exegesis in San Francisco Seminary cannot fail to occasion regret in eastern church circles, from which Dr. Oxtoby's personality and influence are about to be withdrawn. But looking at the matter in the large, and considering the benefit of the whole church, one cannot refuse to applaud the wisdom of the choice which the seminary directors have made. And of course that means that Dr. Oxtoby is right in accepting the appointment. After the long controversy over the teaching of his predecessor, Dr. Day, it would be vain to intimate that Dr. Oxtoby is going to an easy situation. But his constitutional evenness and balance of temper make the new professor singularly adapted to the task of reconciling and satisfying extremes—so long as those extremes are all comprehended within the steadfast loyalty to the Scriptures, inspired of God. And certainly the synod itself, weary long of the long debate, is prepared in spirit to receive such a man. With all these happy conditions considered, it is a prophecy, as sure as it is pleasant, to predict a successful and useful incumbency for Professor Oxtoby in San Francisco Seminary.

—When Dr. Phraner died a few weeks ago the statement that he was born in 1822 made his biography seem like a leaf drawn from pioneer history. Yet there is a man still in active and vigorous pastoral service in the Presbyterian Church who was born two years before Dr. Phraner, and who thus renders even 1820 a virtually contemporary date. This is Dr. Elisha W. Stoddard, the Presbyterian minister at Succasunna, New Jersey, a delightful village in the uplands of northern New Jersey near Lake Hopatcong, where he celebrated this spring the fiftieth anniversary of his pastorate and the sixty-third of his ministry. Dr. Stoddard's long white beard makes him impressively venerable in appearance, but his devoted parishioners are always commenting on the youthfulness of his spirit. In his church work the Christian Endeavor society is his favorite interest, and the young people of the church are his stanch and enthusiastic supporters.

—The British Weekly anxiously inquires on its first page: "Is Mr. Chesterton a Roman Catholic?" Americans will be surprised to find that made a matter of question at this late date. The American conclusion, not from knowing the redoubtable Gilbert, but from reading his books, was long since fixed in the understanding that he is a thick-and-thin adherent of the pope. All Romanist journals on this side the ocean laud him unreservedly as the champion of their faith. It would seem that the only possible way to doubt Mr. Chesterton's Romanism would be by means of the assumption which some maintain, that in his wild passion for paradox this dazzling essayist is always to be understood to mean the opposite of what he says.

—Statistics recently gathered show that the Established Church of Scotland clings almost as tenaciously as does the Church of England to fermented wine at the communion. Only ninety-four congregations among the approximately 1,500 parishes of the Scotch church take the communion in unfermented grape juice. On the other hand, nearly half the congregations of the United Free Church have discarded intoxicating wine from their communion tables—733 in all. It is said also that practically the whole body of the United Free Church ministry has now adopted total abstinence, while in the Established Church a host of reverend "moderators" are still known for the moderation they boast in drink.

—When Moderator John Timothy Stone next May preaches the sermon opening the 1914 Assembly in his own church, he will set a new precedent in Presbyterian history. No Presbyterian Assembly ever before met in the retiring moderator's church. The nearest similar occurrence was when Dr. Henry Jackson van Dyke was elected moderator in his own church in Brooklyn and presided through the sessions in his own pulpit. Dr. W. W. White in the Southern Assembly duplicated Moderator Stone's experience in that he was elected moderator in the first Assembly which he ever attended.

—Correspondence from Bern, Switzerland, published in a French paper, declares that 1,200 Swiss, mostly from the Bernese Highlands, migrate to the Mormon Zion in Utah by the great Salt lake each year. Letters which return from these emigrants are usually full of bitter disappointment and discouragement. They find themselves exploited mercilessly by their more sophisticated Utah neighbors, and one of the disillusioned Switzers wrote recently to a friend in Bern: "If I had learned to lie and cheat as they all do here I should perhaps suffer less from hunger."

—The man whose religion costs the least always wants the most change back.

—Formality is the crust that forms on the bread of life.

Can Rich and Poor Meet Together in Church?

BY CHARLES STELZLE

THE PROTESTANT churches of America are composed of class groups. There are churches for the rich and other churches for the poor; not simply because these churches happen to be located in neighborhoods occupied exclusively by rich or poor but because each of these groups living within the same general area have organized churches for their own class.

It frequently happens that an old aristocratic church is conducted in the very midst of a tenement house district without making the slightest impression upon the community, its membership coming to the services from homes far removed from the neighborhood. On the other hand, working people often organize churches of their own within a stone's throw of old and well established religious institutions, which, it would seem, should amply provide for their spiritual needs and give abundant opportunity for Christian service.

Congregations of Diverse Classes Are Rare

It is undoubtedly true that there are some churches which combine in their membership both rich and poor; but in almost every case it will be discovered that these churches are either located in comparatively small towns in which class distinctions have never been emphasized, or where neighborhoods do not change very often, but consist of families which have long known each other, or where there is an industry in the town which begets a common interest in other relationships, or where the "poor" consist of the class which is quite closely related to the rich either through personal service, such as house servants, gardeners, or coachmen, or of the "clerk class" who attempt to imitate the genteel habits of their employers, and who prefer not to be regarded as "workingmen," even though their salaries are often only half as large as the wages paid to manual toilers. There are other instances in which a few of the rich and a larger number of the poor worship together; but it is ordinarily true in such cases that this unusual condition is due to the influence of a remarkable personality, either in the pulpit or among the laymen

But in general, it would not be denied that there are today within the church distinct strata of society, living their own lives and apparently having nothing in common, either socially, economically or spiritually. Is it possible to overcome this situation?

Before we proceed to answer this question let us dismiss the insinuation that the Roman Catholic Church is not affected by the matter which we are discussing. While it is true that both rich and poor worship in the same great cathedrals, to which they must go if they attend church at all, nevertheless, they ordinarily worship at different hours of the day, rarely coming into social contact, and they attend the "mass" very much as all classes of people go to a doctor's office—they have nothing in common beyond their sense of fear or their need of healing.

Workingmen Cannot Afford Costly Service

One reason why the workingman will not attend the rich man's church is that he prefers not to go where there may be even the suggestion of patronage. He is fully conscious that in the maintenance of the costly upper class church he cannot contribute his fair proportion of the operating expenses, and he will not have the employing class pay it for him. Therefore, if he is at all inclined to attend church services, he will usually go to the church composed of those whose equal he is in financial ability. In this he is to be commended, for, in general, it is desirable that the workingman should pay proportionately for the spiritual benefits which he enjoys.

In considering this aspect of the subject, it will be seen that if rich men and poor are to worship together, there must be greater simplicity in the maintenance of religious worship. This does not refer to the contribution of gifts to outside benevolences, such as missions and other philanthropies, but to the support and conduct of the local church in question. Neither does it mean that there must be no great and beautiful church buildings—the rich may well erect such and the poor should assist to the extent of their ability—but in the support of such churches there must be greater democracy, which means that there must be less ostentation.

One cannot here go into a discussion of methods. The point is briefly that the poor must be made to feel that they may—and should—contribute toward the running expenses of the church without feeling that such contributions are so small that they are being pauperized.

So much has been said about the failure of the poor man to attend the rich man's church that most of us have come to believe that this phase of the subject contains the whole problem. But isn't it just as reasonable to expect the rich man to attend the poor man's church? Indeed, the rich man is assumed to have the broader culture, and he should find it less difficult to take naturally his place in the humbler house of worship than it would be for the workingman to fit into a group with which he is entirely unfamiliar. It would actually require no greater hardship or humiliation for the rich man to take this step into the life of the opposite group than it would be for the poor man to do so. Also the workingman would feel more at ease if he were the "host" than if the situation were reversed.

As a matter of fact, the rich man would discover among the poor genuine values in both character and true religion quite beyond the conception of the average man of his class. If a sufficient number of rich men could be induced to take their membership, with that of their families, into a particular church of the kind under consideration, it would help greatly in breaking down the barriers between rich and poor in the church. Such an arrangement should not be unusual in this day when so many men and women of wealth and culture are giving themselves to work in social settlements and similar enterprises. There is no reason why this plan may not become quite common in church work just as soon as a few strong leaders take the initiative in the matter. Nor does it necessarily follow that there need be any difficulty with regard to purely social affairs, for the plan does not necessarily involve the exchange of social courtesies.

Social Complications Affect the Problem

Women are more to blame than men for the lack of democracy in the church, because social life plays so large a part in their affairs. Many really capable women of moderate means, to say nothing about poorer women, are made to feel extremely uncomfortable on account of the perfectly obvious dominance of richly dressed women in the congregation. It may be said that the poorer women should exhibit more grace in the matter, but it must not be expected that they alone should develop a spirit of humility; it should be much easier for the well favored to do so, particularly in the matter of dress.

There is no doubt that social functions in the church have much to do with the question under consideration. In some of our larger cities "social unions" have been organized, having for their expressed purpose the discussion of the problems of the church and the encouragement of general sociability. But these organizations are apparently intended to discuss only those problems which are of interest to the well-to-do and to encourage sociability only among an exclusive set, if one is to judge by the price charged for each "plate" at the stated dinners and the requirements in the matter of dress. Usually these affairs are stiff and formal, and it seems to require a tremendous effort to keep the "unions" alive. It would add greatly to their value and to their vitality if they could be conducted upon a more democratic basis, and if the charge for the dinner would not cost more than a day's wage of an ordinary clerk or workingman. The unfortunate thing is that these functions are usually the only occasions upon which the people of the denomination in the city can get together.

Simple "socials" are very desirable in the average church, but it is a problem how far the Protestant church should push the matter of so-called social life. Church fairs and suppers conducted to raise money have a doubtful social or religious value, even though they may result in a slight financial gain. There can be no denying the fact that they frequently result in strife among the women having them in charge, and they more often destroy the spirit of democracy than develop it. The church must never forget that its chief function is the enrichment of the spiritual life, though, of course, it must permit whatever social spirit may be aroused to express itself in a perfectly normal manner.

Church Must Distribute Official Responsibility

There must be greater democracy in the management of the churches. The movements with which workingmen are identified outside the church are shot through with the spirit of democracy. Socialism has an increasing grip upon workingmen because it insists that the affairs of the socialistic form of government shall be "democratically administered." Even as it is, the working people who are already in the church are not proportionately represented in

(Continued on page 788)

"Extra Money" Versus the Sabbath of the Worker

How the Temptation of Overtime Pay Tends to Blunt the Spiritual Sense of the Worker in an Industrial Center at the Edge of Chicago

BY HERBERT H. SMITH

Typical Mill Workman

On His Way to Work

"OF COURSE it seemed a little strange at first, but I got used to his working all the time." It was the alto of the church choir speaking, the mother of two children whose father forms one of the army of nearly 10,000 that makes steel rail and structural shapes for skyscraper buildings at the great plant in South Chicago. She had been asked how she liked to have her husband work all night, for fourteen hours, seven days a week.

"And then, too," she added quickly, "the extra pay comes in handy"—and the secret was out.

"More money"—sorely needed, no doubt—is overcoming in many working people of South Chicago their innate respect for the Sabbath. Nor is South Chicago different from thousands of other communities in the United States where the soda water clerk jauntily tosses sirup and water together for multitudes who a decade or two ago slaked their Sunday thirst at the kitchen pump. The steel mills are not alone responsible for the constant violation of the laws of God in this industrial city, constituting the eighth ward of Chicago. In this collection of 67,000 people are fifty factories, some of them nearly equal in size to the branch of the steel corporation. And surrounding this suburb are thirty other towns, each with a group of industrial enterprises, not all of which interrupt their whirling wheels long enough to remember that one day in seven was ordained for worship. A recent government report shows that 15 per cent of all employees in the iron and steel industry generally work seven days a week.

This Boy Works Every Sunday Night

Nearly 70 Per Cent of the Men at Work Sundays

A report that in the Presbyterian church of South Chicago forty-five of the sixty-five men in the congregation had to labor on Sunday served as the incentive to this search for the cause of a broken Sabbath. Not only are a large majority of the men of this church employed on Sunday, but also on every other day of the week. On account of some young men who work only on the first Sunday of the month, the pastor, Rev. S. C. Adams, has changed the time of the communion service. When the sacraments of the church must be made to accommodate the pretended need of a corporation whose object is the amassing of wealth, it surely deserves serious attention by friends of the Sabbath.

And the reply of the Scotch woman indicates in a way the attitude of many of the people of the town and church. They accept the conditions of labor as inevitable. A few, led by the pastor, who doesn't believe in letting apparently inevitable wrong triumph, have started an effort to lessen the demands for Sunday work.

Listen to the comment by another good Presbyterian about her husband. She was sewing on a quilt in the church on a very stormy day. Scotch, like her husband, she reveres the church.

"My husband has worked every night, seven days a week, for thirteen years now. He never gets a chance to go to church. For a while he tried to go after the night's work, but he soon gave that up. Every fall he takes off time to go shooting, but then he's maybe fifty miles from a church." This was uttered in no complaining tone, merely as a statement of fact, and to take off time once a week to attend church seemed not to enter into her calculations. He is a railway switchman and is paid by the hour, as are practically all the employees in the shops of the same road and in the steel mills, the largest centers of employment.

That these cases are not isolated was shown by interviews with other women whose husbands not only work seven days a week but thirteen or fourteen hours or more a day. And there are other men to take their places if those who care to go to church interfere too seriously with the routine of the corporations which stand behind the pay roll. When the alternative of seeking other employment or working seven days a week is to be faced the attitude of a community toward Sunday labor has much to do with the decision. These church adherents are not numbered among those unskilled laborers who by their massing near the steel plant make a very serious community problem in South Chicago. Those more or less recent immigrants are not Protestants. Nearly half of them come to America to find their fortune and hope to return to their native smiling valleys with as many as possible of the plentiful American dollars. The pay of the unskilled laborers is not large, and according to the general superintendent of the steel company, cutting the hours of labor from twelve to ten, with promise of the same pay, will not deter them from staying to earn additional sums for the other two hours. The same official is authority for the statement that on occasions when the plant has been closed on Sunday and the foreigners told not to come to work on that day they have been found working as day laborers on the streets, or at odd jobs wherever they may pick up a dollar or two on their day of rest. This, it is said, is the repeated experience with unskilled hands who choose South Chicago as their field of employment.

Several years ago there was reported an order from the head offices of the steel corporation limiting the hours of labor in many of the plants, together with a rearrangement of shifts so that the minimum of Sunday work would be required, the effort being made to give every employee one day in seven off. In fact, last summer the amount of Sunday work at the South Chicago plant was reduced to 3 per cent. Work seven days a week, however, not long ago involved nearly half of the men of this plant, and 720 of them worked twenty-four hours every two weeks.

The making of steel, like the making of daily newspapers, requires the constant attendance of men. In many manufacturing plants there are fires to be kept up and certain processes of production to be kept in motion, but it has been admitted that even in steel making the work can be reduced to very little continuous effort if the authorities desire.

Agreement of All Factories Said to Be Necessary

The statement of W. A. Field, general superintendent of the Illinois Steel Company, is that Sunday work can be stopped only by an agreement among all factories. He says that workers who fail to earn their $2.30 a day seven days a week in one factory will move to another where work is constant, and so great is the demand for men that the steel makers highly praised Mr. Taft for his veto of the bill restricting immigration. There were enough orders for structural steel on hand two months ago to keep the plants busy all year, it is said. Profits must be made on the millions of common stock issued when the steel trust was born, and Sunday work will help pile up the profits.

Mr. Field believes that the present generation of foreign laborers presents a hopeless task in relation to the inculcation of American ideals. He thinks the hope is in the coming generation and at his personal expense does much to promote settlement work among the children of foreigners in South Chicago.

The speeding up of the factories means that finished products must be shipped on Sunday; cars must be shifted; switching crews must work. So, too, must the repair departments of the railways keep up with the extra pressure, and the Baltimore and Ohio shops help keep South Chicago mechanics away from church.

What the future influence may be upon the morals of the community it is not too early to say, even though the full results cannot be clearly discerned. The workers demand alcoholic stimulants on Sunday as on week days and the saloons about the plant are open at 6:30 a. m. or before to catch the trade of the men just beginning their Sabbath labor in the mills. Surrounded as the young people are with abounding evidences of Sabbath breaking on the part of their parents, who are in the grip of corporations, it will take heroic effort to lead the people away from the golden calf. Some of the workers themselves realize the debilitating effects on the moral and physical man from constant work, and the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen recently concluded a long conference in which one of the demands was less Sunday work.

The Presbyterian church is well located for moral leadership and half a dozen other Protestant churches are helping to urge the sanctity of the divinely appointed rest day. The unusual church difficulties are, however, heightened by the domestic duties of the wives of Sunday workmen, who return for supper just as the time for evening service approaches. Most of the church adherents who are tied to the industrial wheels are strongly religious and many are active workers when their relief from labor will permit.

Can Rich and Poor Meet Together in Church?

(Continued from page 786)

our ecclesiastical bodies. Rarely does a workingman sit in any of our church courts, even in the local church. There is being developed more and more in our churches a kind of "professional layman" who monopolizes all the offices and functions of the church. Usually such officials are either men of wealth who have retired from business or are about ready to do so, or they consist of professional men who have a fair degree of leisure.

It may be said incidentally that the ecclesiastical legislation which is enacted under such influence is not ordinarily of the kind which appeals to the self-respecting workingman. The references to the workingman in such discussions are not very flattering, and they usually reveal a deep-seated ignorance of his hopes and aspirations. While workingmen haven't the same amount of leisure that is at the disposal of the average lay member of our church courts, it should be remembered that any number of them attend labor and lodge conventions, but their lost time and expenses are borne by the organizations represented. They should not be expected to pay all their own expenses when representing the church at conventions. It would seem only fair that the church should pay them enough to make up for any loss incurred while serving the church in this special manner.

But under the present system of conducting the average rich man's church, workingmen simply will not attend its services, although many a preacher in such a church would give his right hand if he could succeed in bringing workingmen into the building. Neither the preacher nor the workingman should be unduly blamed for this situation. The workingman is simply human in his action. He is following his natural social instincts. Even the fact that he is a Christian does not necessarily change his spirit in this particular. It is next to impossible to break down his long standing class spirit. Not that he dislikes his rich fellow Christian; he simply does not feel comfortable in his company. The rich man may not be any more to blame for this than the poor man, but it is a fact which must be given consideration in any discussion of the question as to whether the ideals of democracy may be realized within the church.

"Fresh Air in Jerusalem"

An elderly woman of important mien recently drove in state to a busy book store, says The New York Sun.

"What do you wish, madam?" asked a clerk, recognizing with inward misgivings what is known as a bad customer.

"Have you got 'Fresh Air in Jerusalem'?" the woman demanded.

"Who wrote it?"

"I don't know. You ought to know. Everybody is reading it."

The salesman retired to search through all the various catalogues, and came back with the report that there was no such book.

"That's not true," the old lady retorted. "I'll go to So-and-So's, where they keep up with the new books and where they have intelligent clerks."

The customer was handed into her carriage and the coachman was starting the horses when she opened the door, popped out her head, and said:

"I know who wrote that book—Henry van Dyke."

"But Henry van Dyke's new book is called 'Out of Doors in the Holy Land,' madam."

"I don't care. It's the same thing," and on she drove.

Buddhist Finds a Heart of Peace

BY PAUL PATTON FARIS

PASTOR GIA had just completed his sermon in Lang Yia church and he was turning to take his hymn book to announce the concluding hymn. Suddenly the quiet of the congregation was broken by a voice. "I beseech the pastor to grant me baptism."

The minister looked up, and the eyes of all were turned on the man who walked up the aisle toward the pulpit. It was Hu Shih Zwin, a capable, even distinguished, teacher in the school for boys. The congregation knew him well. Formerly a devout Buddhist, even after his connection with the mission school, he had depended on the practice of the customs of that creed for peace of heart. Compulsory attendance on church service had quickened his conscience, and by day and night he wrestled with the leadings of the Spirit of God.

Sleep departed from him, and after a few weeks he was unable to attend to his classroom duties. In his distress of spirit he turned still more steadfastly toward the creed of his training, his devout family doing all in their power to help him to find quiet of soul in the rites of Buddhism. Yet was he in torment of heart.

One Wednesday afternoon at prayer meeting Mr. Hu leaped to his feet, and with face turned toward the skies earnestly confessed his sins and besought the pardon of the Father. Since that day the Christians of Ichowfu had been bearing his burden on their hearts, and praying for his salvation that would bring peace to his heart and sleep to his tortured body.

When, therefore, Hu Shih Zwin publicly asked for baptism the clergyman turned willingly toward him, feeling confident that God had wrought his own work in the man's soul.

In the presence of the congregation, intent on every word, and of the three elders, Pastor Gia asked a few simple questions, to which the suppliant returned ready and convincing replies. The sexton had run for a bowl of water as soon as he understood the loudly called request and brought it forward as the brief examination was concluded. Then, though the request had been an unusual one, the minister proceeded with the baptismal sacrament. After a few words of prayer Hu Shih Zwin, child of God, walked back to his seat, the congregation rejoicing in assurance that now he was to find peace of soul.

But as the days went by it became evident that not yet was all well with Hu. Still was he unable to rest by night, or to attend to his tasks by day. Evidently some trouble, some reservation, was preying on the man's conscience. His classes were neglected, he walked the streets hollow-eyed, like a lost soul unceasingly seeking some power to stay the gnawings of remorse.

At last the end came and the secret was revealed. Again the congregation was sitting silent in its place, the minister had concluded his discourse, when once more that voice rang through the church, "I have something I must say!"

Half staggering to the front of the auditorium, Hu turned a haggard face on the people who had been praying for him.

"For many nights I have not slept," he said passionately, and the wild look of him made some of his hearers turn restlessly in their seats. "I have felt that I was at the point of death. I deeply feel that my illness is nothing but the result of sin. My sin I acknowledge, and now—I wish to dedicate myself unreservedly to the Lord as a minister of the gospel. I have not been willing to take this step, but now I wish to announce that when I recover I shall serve God in the ministry."

A silence of intent interest pervaded the room. "My faith," went on the impetuous voice, "my faith is not yet deep enough. But I believe that the faith of Pastor Gia has reached home. I therefore request the pastor to place his hands on me and pray for me."

To this second emergency also the resourceful minister was equal. He stepped to the side of the quivering speaker, laid his hand on the man's shoulder and said, "Let us rise for prayer."

The prayer that followed was of gratitude to God for Hu Shih Zwin's repentance and surrender, for the congregation and the pastor's assurance of his salvation, and for his determination to become a preacher of the word, and of fervent petition for his speedy recovery of health.

At the final "ya-men" uttered by the pastor Mr. Hu lifted his hand above his head in affirmation, and solemnly proclaimed: "I desire to become the true servant of heaven!"

Again he resumed his place, assured at length of peace for his soul.

Next morning Elder Djang Kei Zwin sought out the former Buddhist at his home. Within he heard a movement. "Are you there, Shih Zwin?" called the elder. "How is it with you?"

A vibrant voice replied. "Just awake—I slept all night. At last at last, I have found a heart of peace!"

When Christianity Travels

SHOULD WE USE SUNDAY TRAINS?

BY PRISCILLA
LEONARD

As a writer who travels frequently, Miss Leonard is able to speak from direct observation of the apparent attitude of many Christian people toward the Sabbath when they are away from home. In subsequent articles she will have more to say of the bearing of Christians while among strangers.

IN A MEETING of locomotive engineers some years ago in Washington one engineer spoke of Sunday trains, and their results in his own life. For seven years, he said, he had never been free to spend a single Sunday with his family. When he did see them for a few hours he was often so tired that he fell asleep while eating and had to be waked to finish his meal. No wonder that, in the home of another such worker on the railroad, his little daughter, to whom her mother was reading the story of creation in the first chapter of Genesis, said, as the seventh day and its rest was read about:

"Mother, we shall have to get God to make an eighth day so papa can rest and be at home with us!"

Yet America is a Christian nation. The trains that flash by on Sunday are not filled with heathen, bent on defying the ten commandments. They are filled, on the contrary, with Christian people for the most part, born and brought up in Christian homes, affiliated with churches in some way, and exceedingly careful about some of the commandments, at any rate. There may be godless people on Sunday trains often and often. Nobody denies that. But it is equally true that if, from every train even on the most crowded summer Sunday, all the travelers who have affiliations with any church were taken off there would be an array of empty seats. It is because Christian people travel on Sunday that Sunday trains run.

The matter might as well be faced. There are many modern Christians who eliminate the fourth commandment from their lives when they want to go from one place to another, and Sunday happens to be the most convenient day. Trustees of churches, women serving on church committees, Sunday school teachers and scholars, are found on the Sunday trains, with the patient engineer at the throttle, on his seventh day's job, wondering why these church folks take away Sunday rest from his life. A certain railroad conductor told Dr. Wilbur Crafts once that during the month just passed he had worked thirty-eight days and another man on the same line had worked forty. He meant day's labor, as measured by extra hours. One engineer, measured at this rate, was said by his son to have worked fourteen months in one year. When such overworked, driven men, with never a day of rest, end by neglecting signals, and sending their trains into a terrible wreck, there is no occasion for surprise.

Plausible Arguments for Sunday Work

The Sunday traveling Christian would rather not think of these things, naturally. He or she prefers to talk about the necessity of the Sunday excursion. Think of the pleasure it is to the poor workers of the city to get out into the country or down to the seashore for a few hours. What other time can they have? Is not a day of rest for them far more necessary than a day of rest for the trainman? There is only one of him, and hundreds of them. It sounds plausible, until it is taken apart. In the first place, the Christian who is able to go on an excursion any other day of the week cannot plead necessity in going on any Sunday excursion. In the second place, why are not the wage workers given a Saturday half holiday? They ought to have it, and in many lines of work this half holiday is now the accepted rule. That gives the wage earner a chance to enjoy an excursion that does not make other wage earners work on Sunday. The question of fair treatment of wage earners is bound up with Sunday rest.

Thus the Sunday traveler is, consciously or unconsciously, standing in the way of better weekday conditions for his fellow men. The fourth commandment is no academic theological pronouncement. It is a human rule of conduct, laid down when man was created because he was created as he is, with need for rest and worship, recreation of body and soul, one day out of seven. Take away his Sunday and soon his weekdays become cramped and crowded, too. The workingman's soul is forgotten, and then his body is oppressed. But when his soul is cared for, and Sunday is restored, sacredly, to him, the rest of the week is leavened by the same thought, and inhuman hours cease, and Saturday is also made more restful. Nothing will make the workingman believe in the reality and activity of the church of Christ as will the restoration of his Sunday to him. Nothing can make the workingman take Christianity seriously as long as Christians help to overwork men on Sunday.

So the fourth commandment must be taken as part of Christian life today. The Sunday traveler must meet its demand, and not wave it aside. He must show that there is a real necessity for his use of a train on the day forbidden by the commandment. In some cases there is such a necessity. When a steamship leaves New York for Naples, when a transcontinental train starts on its journey toward the Pacific, the voyager must spend Sunday, when it comes, on train or boat. Yet, even here, there are five-day liners that could leave on Monday and be across the Atlantic before Sunday, and the Monday train from New York will reach San Francisco before the end of the week. If enough Christians cared, the railroads and steamship lines would care, too, and would make specialties of such trips. The very fact that such a suggestion seems absurd to many pew holders only emphasizes the fact that they never have thought hard about the Sunday travel question, or tried to adapt their movements to a strict Sunday observance along this line.

Sunday Mails Not a Necessity, Government Shows

Inconvenience is one thing. Necessity is another. The United States has recently inconvenienced many men by refusing to open the post office any longer on Sundays at any hour. But, as a railroad man of thirty years' experience, high in office in a large railroad, once said, "If ever there was a necessity for Sunday mail it ceased with the telegram," and he went on, "There is no valid excuse for railroad traffic, either for mails, passengers or freight, on Sunday. If ever there was a necessity for moving perishable articles on Sunday it has been removed by the refrigerator cars."

It is a small amusement park that does not draw 5,000 every Sunday at the least. It is a most unusual amusement park which can be run, too, as a Sunday resort and not become a scene of questionable conduct and a place of real temptation for the young. Thus the breaking of the fourth commandment involves the further breakage of other commandments.

If the Christian who travels cares nothing for being his brother's keeper, he cannot escape the effect of Sabbath breaking upon himself. "Sunday excursions are so much cheaper than weekday trains, so we always travel that day. We have to, you see, on account of the money," explained a woman whose husband was the owner of a thriving little business. For a few dollars these two prosperous people were losing the balance of their consciences. They were letting the love of money tighten its grasp upon them. Now it is safe to say that Sunday is never realized in its fullness of blessing until the Christian has sacrificed something worldly to it. Every commandment implies that there is an easier opposite policy than to keep it. The Sunday traveler who has vanquished conscience, and worships expediency, convenience or gain more than the holiness of the Lord's Day, is so much the poorer in Christian possibilities henceforth. Neither business nor pleasure should grasp at Sunday for its own. The day belongs to God, not to man; it belongs to God, for man.

Tourists Who Lose Track of the Sabbath

"I haven't known, for the last two months, when Sunday came," said a young girl, laughing, to a friend. "We have been traveling all over the West, and one day has been just like another. We met lots of people who were having the same experience. Of course at home here we go to church, but on a trip it is different." This sort of thing is common, as all tourist agencies know. Yet in every town through which the railroads pass there are churches, and stopovers are allowed for everywhere. What does Christianity mean to such Christians? Certainly not a guiding principle of daily life.

In the matter of Sunday traveling, the Christian salt may be said to have lost its savor. How then shall it be salted? That is a personal problem for the church; and the stern words of Christ, "It is thenceforth good for nothing but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men," ought to remind every Christian that there is no half-way business about witnessing for him.

THE HOME COUNCIL

How We Made Independence Day "Sane"

Fourths with Continent Readers

[The following stories of Fourths which have been celebrated sanely and still without sacrifice of fun or patriotic ardor, were written in response to the editor's request for personal "sane Fourth" experiences. It is hoped that they may hold some helpful suggestion for friends in council whose homes the sane Fourth movement has not yet touched.]

Cooperation in Ohio Town

THE VILLAGE where I was pastor was no-license and also was especially attractive because near the lake. But except for the firecrackers of the boys there was nothing doing on the Fourth. On that day there was often an exodus to the neighboring cities to see the fun. Sometimes the temptations there would play havoc with previously made good resolutions. The suggestion from Dr. Warren A. Wilson that the church should seek to provide healthful amusements started me thinking.

Early in May I sent out letters to the fraternal organizations and the other church of the town asking them to elect three representatives to meet in a conference to plan for a Fourth of July celebration, no delegate to represent more than one society. The meeting was held and a plan presented. It took slowly at first, but finally the worth of the thing caught. Committees were named on finance, publicity, parade, music and sports.

We were blessed with splendid weather for the Fourth. In the morning a parade led by a hired band was suprisingly good and did what we hoped it would—it gathered the people early to spend the whole day together. In the afternoon we had a ball game, a band concert, and foot races on the main street; in the evening a variety entertainment, with songs, etc., on a platform in a vacant lot near the center of the village. Upwards of a thousand people thus spent a happy day enjoying innocent festivities. There was no drunkenness, no disorder.

The expense was between $80 and $100, most of it raised among the merchants, who profited by the extra sales. The money raising was hardest, but we managed it at last.

Colored stock posters, bought from a New York firm, and on which the events of the day were printed by the local printer, were pasted around the country and did all the advertising necessary.

These celebrations have now been continued for three years and have stimulated other near-by villages to do the same. It is quite possible for any village to undertake such a simple celebration as has been described.

Cleveland Heights, Ohio. JOHN SHARPE.

The Small Boy No Loser

OUR "SANE FOURTH" committee planned, first, to fill the day so completely that the small boy would find no license for regretting the absence of the eliminated customary racket; second, to enlist every citizen, old and young.

Public, private and parochial schools contributed floats which made up a pageant of American history. A large bunting flag was offered as prize to the school sending the best float. High school pupils presented historical tableaux. Physical directors and playground supervisors trained the young children in folk dances and flag drills. Boys contributed the circus parade, and exercised much ingenuity.

Explanatory printed matter was sent a month in advance to every home; also a return envelope addressed to the sane Fourth committee, requesting each family to inclose the amount formerly given the children for Fourth of July spending money. The ward committees collected these cash envelopes and left coupons for each child, entitling the holder to free ice cream, crackerjack, lemonade and pop.

How our indifference vanished and enthusiasm grew as details were perfected! At 6 a. m. July 4 at public bath and boat houses supervised contests began in diving, swimming and rowing, to which all boys were eligible. At 9 a. m. a band concert was given at Capitol park, centrally located. At 10 a. m. the parade appeared. The first float was placarded "Landing of Columbus." Next came "Pocahontas and Captain John Smith," then "The Landing of the Pilgrims," "Washington Crossing the Delaware," and others. Next the clown band appeared; a huge cat securely caged, placarded "Royal Bengal Tiger"; a made-up elephant, and a broncho—"The Dangerous Western Beast of Burden"—etc. The parade ended, prize winners were announced and the declaration of independence was read.

Two parks in opposite ends of the city were selected for the afternoon program, duplicated at each park. Here the tableaux showed "Washington's Marriage," "Paul Revere," "Lincoln Freeing the Slaves" and other notable scenes. Folk dances and flag drills followed, interspersed with national airs. In the evening fireworks on the lake shore completed the program.

All bills are paid and we have a small bank balance ready for this year's celebration.

Madison, Wis. MARY RANDALL SMITH.

Verses Old and New

JUNE

When June has stirred, and opened gracious eyes
Upon the earth, and cast abroad her flowers;
When she has kindled in the summer skies
The lamp that burns her incense through the hours;
It seems that such a lavish sacrifice
On June's high altars, in such bounteous showers,
Proves Nature's prodigality not wise,
Wasting her substance on her favorite's dowers.
Yet when has prudent Nature e'er been found
In error? Every month brings gifts as rare
As June's, and when the cycle rolls around
The next year's June will be as sweet and fair.
All joy, all life, does Nature give, and more,
And, giving, serves but to increase her store.
—St. Nicholas.

A Case of Substitution

AN EXPERIENCED teacher once said to me, as I was trying to make a little child give up a harmful article, "Why don't you try substitution?" Last year the Sunday schools of our town decided to try substitution. Instead of leaving the children to their own sweet will on the Fourth, and then blaming them for the noise and accidents, we would help them to celebrate the day by having a union picnic.

In order to secure the largest attendance possible a beautiful grove on the edge of town was chosen as the place for the festivities. This did away with carriage hire and allowed people to come for part of the day, if not all.

In the morning there were athletic events of different kinds. The committee in charge had arranged a program which took in all ages and sexes. It had also secured from the business men small prizes, which added to the interest. There were races for little boys, races for little girls, races for the primary classes and races for the adult classes. There was also the usual three-legged race, a sack race, etc.

In the afternoon a band concert was held and the congressman of our district made a speech, followed later by a ball game by the business men. Everything was free. The slight expense of the occasion was met by the various schools.

An effort had been made to make the people of the town feel that it was not merely a Sunday school picnic but a picnic for the whole community. The attendance showed that the effort had been successful. Three-fourths of the town were there, regardless of church affiliations. Although the attendance was large, there were no accidents. Conveyances were not allowed in the grove and firecrackers were strictly forbidden on the picnic grounds. Boys were there in abundance and seemed just as happy as if they had been burning their fingers and deafening their neighbors with noise.

Everyone was pleased and the teachers felt well repaid for their labors.

Oxford, Ohio. ELLA GLENN MCSURELY.

An Eleventh-Hour Celebration

ONE SUMMER when I was visiting a cousin on a farm in Kansas it was decided at a late hour to hold a sort of church family picnic at a grove two miles away, instead of attending the big Fourth of July celebration twenty miles distant.

A lunch was prepared, but there was no thought of a program, though ropes were taken for swings and the balls and bats were not forgotten. But a niece just from college was also a guest, and she, perhaps anticipating a dull day, took along books of patriotic and old songs, also one of recitations.

At 10 o'clock we, with perhaps a dozen other families, were on the grounds, and after greetings and introductions the niece, after consulting some of the older heads, announced that a program would be held after dinner and that every person present must be prepared to take part by singing, speaking, reading or telling stories. She would call upon each with pencil and paper to take the names, she said.

At once there were exclamations of "Oh, I couldn't to save me!" "I never can do it in the world!" But when she appeared with her jolly, mischievous face everyone submitted and, entering into the spirit of the thing, set about recalling what he might be able to do.

The program opened with a duet by the visitor and the minister's wife, and the hearty applause this called forth was accorded each succeeding number. The children, prepared by school training, responded modestly and pleasantly when their turn came. Patriotic songs interspersed here and there among other features were sung and enjoyed by all.

One old lady told a thrilling story of her youth. She was gathering eggs one day, she said, when she reached into a nest behind some bushes and was struck on the hand by what proved to be a large rattlesnake. At this point she paused.

"Oh," someone cried, "is that true?"

"True!" said she. "Do you doubt it? Well, when solicited, the stipulation was to tell a true story, if possible, if not, to make one up. Now, I'll yet you guess about this one." And she sat down amid shouts of laughter.

This Fourth was voted by all to be one of the most enjoyable days ever spent; and the other neighbors, returning from the big celebration hot, tired and disappointed, wished with all their hearts they also had remained at home and been "in it." HELEN RATCLIFFE MOORE.

Marshalltown, Iowa.

Baby Was Well Preserved

During the progress of the morning bath of a 7-month-old baby a little neighbor girl came into the room carrying a doll which she had received for a present a few weeks before, and which was minus an arm and a leg, and otherwise much the worse for wear. She watched the bathing silently for a moment.

"How long have you had your baby?" she asked at length.

"Seven months," replied the proud mother.

The child looked wistfully from her dingy doll to the shining pink baby.

"My," she said, "but you have kept it nice!"

YOUNG AMERICA

How Runty Pig Got Even

BY MAUDE MORRISON HUEY

"I'D LIKE TO KNOW who could scratch out a worm in such dirt as this!" Young Chicken Longlegs looked about him disgustedly. "It's hard as flint. My toes ache."

"Well, I guess you'll have to if you get any breakfast. I heard Mother Bell say she wasn't going to waste any more good corn on us," Sister Specklebreast informed him. "She said it was spring, and we had the run of the whole farm, and we weren't laying any eggs, anyhow."

"Huh! I never expect to lay any eggs!" said Longlegs haughtily; "besides, I don't call this a farm—it's a rock pile." "Well, you'd better get busy and scratch. Talk never got anyone anywhere."

"It didn't, eh!" Longlegs straightened up. An idea suddenly struck him. Neighbor Jones's pet pig Runty was squeezing into the garden. "Just watch me!" Longlegs put on his very grandest air and went to meet him.

"Good morning, Runty Pig!" he said cordially. "Fine morning, isn't it? How are you?"

"Oh, just tolerable!" said Runty Pig, eying Longlegs suspiciously. His entrance into that garden was usually welcomed with a shower of rocks. Mrs. Bell said that his sharp snoot could root up more garden stuff than she could plant in a week. Chicken Longlegs regarded that snoot with envy. It certainly must be a valuable possession when it came to unearthing worms.

With a quick glance at the house to see that no one had witnessed his entrance save the friendly rooster, Runty Pig set to work with vigor. Placing his sharp shovel nose to the ground he began to plow a furrow.

"Quite a little excitement in our coop this morning," Longlegs gossiped entertainingly. "Mother Topknot and Mrs. Ruffle-Feathers got into a dispute about which one laid the largest egg. They had to call in old Cock-o'-the-Roost to settle the matter." A wriggling pink worm rolled out of the dirt at Runty's nose and Longlegs snapped it up. "Great spell o' weather we're having, Runty Pig. Looks a little like rain this morning, though, don't you think?" Peck! Another worm! "I've often wondered why you didn't come over here to root, this is such a good garden—plenty of worms. My sister and I scratch here every day, but she's only a girl, and I get tired of her company. I'm so glad you came over, Runty Pig. You must come every day. I'll be only too glad to show you over the place." That time he got two bugs and a big fat cut worm.

"Uh-huh! So talking doesn't do any good!" Longlegs strutted over to his sister. "Just look at my crop! I couldn't hold another worm if I tried. It's all a question of using your head, my dear!" Poor Specklebreast looked up sorrowfully. Alas! her crop was still lank enough.

"No more scratching for me, not if I know myself. From now on I live like a king."

Runty Pig came every day and Chicken Longlegs met him at the gate and went around with him, always amiable and eager with the latest bits of news with which to entertain his visitor. They rooted up last year's potato patch and the cornfield, then they began on the little bed by the back door, where Mrs. Bell had sowed her early lettuce and radishes and young green onions. But here their enterprise was short-lived, for Baby Boy spied them and called to his mamma, and the whole family rushed out with brooms and mop sticks and drove them off.

After that the gate was nailed up securely and they were obliged to go over into Neighbor Jones's garden, which had been pretty well rooted over before, and poor little Runty Pig had a hard time of it, with the saucy rooster snatching every dainty morsel.

"I'd like to know who that great gandery rooster belongs to, anyhow! If he doesn't stay away from here I'll fix him!" said Mrs. Jones crossly, as for the fortieth time she shooed him away from her pet pig's supper.

Mrs. Jones was a woman of her word. But, of course, Chicken Longlegs didn't know that, and kept on coming, and sure enough, one day when he stepped under a queer looking box to eat a dainty morsel of meal he had spied, plump! down went the thing over his head, and he was fast in an old chicken crate.

"He's too skinny to eat till he's fatted, and land knows if he's worth it; but, anyhow, I'll keep him out of mischief for a while. There, now, you impertinent young rooster, how do you like that?"

Chicken Longlegs didn't like it, not a bit, for now the tables were turned. The trough where they put his feed and water, which, by the way, happened to be one that Runty had outgrown, was just outside the coop, and he was supposed to stretch his long neck through the slats to eat and drink.

Runty Pig soon saw a chance to get even for the many indignities that had been shown him. As soon as the feed was put in poor Longlegs's trough up he would come and, thrusting in his big snoot, would shovel it up at one mouthful. The poor rooster could only flutter about distractedly and squawk his indignation.

The same thing happened day after day, till Longlegs grew thin and wabbly and had to lean against the slats to crow, which he hadn't the heart to do very often.

"Don't you think you are carrying this joke a little too far?" he appealed to Runty Pig miserably. "I'll starve to death at this rate. It's a shabby way to treat a friend. I've always been civil to you."

There was a mischievous little twinkle in the corner of the pig's eye as he peeped through the slats at the penitent rooster. "Well, maybe we are about even," he said, with a fat grunt of satisfaction. "I would hate to see you starve to death, and I don't want more than is coming to me. I was just thinking that we might make a sort of compact—if you'll promise to go home and scratch for your own worms I might let you out of here. I said I might."

"Oh, if you only would, Runty Pig! I would be so grateful. I would do anything—anything!"

"Remember that everything in this world has to be paid for sooner or later. There's always a day of reckoning ahead for the fellow who doesn't play square." With that Runty Pig put his big shovel nose under the crate and overturned it, and away flew Chicken Longlegs in an awkward, giddy flight.

Sister Specklebreast looked up from her scratching. "Why, brother!" she cried compassionately. "How ill you look! Where on earth have you been all this time?"

"I've been learning that the only sweet worms in the world are those we scratch for," said Chicken Longlegs meekly.

The Elephant's Shower Bath

In the hot climate of India the elephant needs daily baths. His trunk he uses for his shower bath, but he likes to have his attendants finish his toilet with a good massage. For this purpose they use bricks, after his body has been well bathed. Nothing softer than a brick would make any impression on his tough skin. During the hottest weather the working elephants are given a vacation, beginning, in some places, as early as April, and continuing till cooler days.

Caught the Wrong One

An English school inspector, visiting a provincial school, was much worried by the noise in the next room. At last, unable to bear it any longer, he opened the door and burst upon the class. Seeing one boy taller than the others talking a great deal, he caught him by the collar, carried him to his own room and planted him in the chair, saying, "Now, sit there and be quiet!"

Ten minutes later a small head appeared round the door, and a meek little voice said:

"Please, sir, you've got our teacher."

Swallowed His "Object"

"Object" drawing has brought a new anxiety into the schools. In certain districts youngsters may be seen moving schoolward with hatchets, knives, hammers, chisels and similar things, as materials for their drawing lesson. The other day, just as one of these lessons was about to begin, a small boy was found standing tearfully at his teacher's desk.

"I've swallowed my object," he explained, with an alarming gulp.

"What was it?" asked the teacher anxiously.

"A banana," replied the would-be artist with a final gulp.

Rhymes to Remember

A CATLAND LAW

Pussy caught a mouse for dinner,
  But the mouse was wise and old.
"Wait a bit," spake he unto her,
  "Have you never yet been told
That there is a law in Mouseland
  That pronounces it disgrace
To begin to eat your dinner
  Ere you go and wash your face?"

Pussy felt ashamed. "A cat should Do as well's a mousie can!"
Loosed her claws—and in a jiffy
  Off the wise mouse lightly ran.
Very vexed, the pussy scolded:
  "Mouseland laws would work disgrace!
This shall be the law in Catland—
  'After eating wash your face!'"

—Little Folks.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

June 15, 1913—Jacob Before Pharaoh

Everyday View of the Lesson

By J. L. Scott

Lesson Text, Genesis 46:28—47:12, 28-31. Golden Text, Romans 8:28: To them that love God all things work together for good.

Life is a series of migrations. This was especially true of the patriarchs. Their abiding city was always in advance. They were the custodians of an idea. That idea was the unity of God. It was given to Abraham of the Chaldees by God himself. Truth belongs to mankind. The patriarch was commanded to move out from among his kindred and for a time rested at Haran, 500 miles away. Again the voice of God was heard, and an altar in the west marked the divine presence. Abraham died and the charge was committed to Isaac, his son. His successor in turn was Jacob. Like his ancestors, Jacob had a theology better than himself. It began and ended with the unity of God. It was a long hark from Chaldea to Hebron, but the idea had been faithfully transmitted from father to son.

Announcement That Joseph Lives Turns Jacob's Sorrow to Joy

The patriarch was now an old man and had driven his stakes apparently for the last time. His life was full and his memories were grateful—all save one. This memory grew darker to the patriarch from year to year. He had twelve sons, but one "was not." Twenty years before Joseph had gone away and had not returned. Over his absence there hung a suspense worse than death itself. Was Joseph living or dead? Who knew? One day as the old man sat in his house a caravan halted before his door. His eleven sons had just returned from Egypt, whither they had gone to buy bread. Their salutation, "Joseph is yet alive," fell like a crash from the skies.

Age turned to youth and Israel determined to see his son once more. But Canaan was the land of promise, and to abandon it might seem to be abandoning God. But God's will and Israel's wish went hand in hand. For Egypt the father held a special aversion, but Joseph was there. His presence redeemed the country. The kingdom was a small matter to David in comparison with the life of Absalom. Above all else towers the father's love.

The country about Hebron soon presented a strange sight. The flocks and herds were driven in from the fields, and the descendants of Israel, with their retainers, resembled an army gathering for battle. It was not the migration of a tribe but of a nation. As they approached Beersheba the patriarch realized that he was about to cross the border. And there he halted and offered a sacrifice to the God of his fathers. And God appeared to him as he so often had done before.

God Always Provides a Way of Obedience to His Commands

Vast changes had taken place since Abraham and Sarah had visited that same country, and for a similar reason. Then it was famine and now the same skeleton threw its evil shadow across the way. That journey is a symbol of life. Israel would have found it impossible but for the provision of Joseph. When God says "Come," there is always a way by which we may obey.

The migration is finally over and Israel encamps on the borders of Egypt. He has his misgivings, but faith in Joseph keeps him strong. We are all facing a mystery that we call the "other life." It is a land of silence, unknown and untried. Our faith is in One who, as a Brother, will intercede with the King. Beyond this all is shadow.

Israel has reached the land of Egypt and Judah is sent forward to inform Joseph. The royal chariot was soon thundering down the way and Israel and Joseph are once more father and son. It was the supreme moment of the patriarch's life. "Now let me die, since I have seen thy face." For over 100 years he had lived and toiled. Field had been added to field and herd to herd, but never once had he said, "My life is full." But now he had seen Joseph, and for him the world held nothing further that could be of value to him.

But Israel's time had not yet come, and his remaining years belonged to Egypt. The custom of the country required that he present himself to Pharaoh, which he hastened to do. Custom is inexorable, and Joseph made no effort to avoid it. He proceeded to instruct five of his brethren in the intricacies of court life. Why he selected just five has been made the subject of speculation, but doubtless his own common sense so directed. Court manners cannot be taught in a single lesson. Those brothers were shepherds or cattlemen and not likely to feel at ease in the presence of a king. Here again we see the wonderful judgment of Joseph. He entered the throne room robed as an Egyptian of the highest rank and with him five shepherds in plainest garb. In reply to Pharaoh the shepherds assumed nothing beyond what they were.

Majestic Simplicity Attends Israel's Audience with the King

But Israel was also present, and to him the king would give a special audience. The old man approached the king probably leaning upon the arm of his son. The courtiers would naturally fall back while the venerable sheik stood in the royal presence. "How many are the days of the years of thy life?" There is a majesty about age that never fails to command respect. Israel twice extended his right hand and blessed the king, then retired.

The story of that scene was written under the dictation of a wisdom above the author's own. The surroundings are lost in the simplicity of the record. Those men had not gone to Egypt simply to eat bread; they had gone also to earn it. Joseph might, as a political ruler, have appointed his brothers to subordinate positions about the palace, but they had been keepers of cattle from their youth, and the country needed shepherds more than it did politicians. So as colonists they were assigned to Goshen, where they became of service to the king and to themselves. As for Jacob, he sat peacefully in the sunset while he "was gathered unto his people."

The Lesson Verse by Verse

By Hermon D. Jenkins

ANALYSIS—Egypt was Israel's school as well as his home. Frankness pays better than cunning, and the king recognizes even in a stranger the majesty of true piety.

A situation which tests filial loyalty is the sudden appearance of an aged and rustic parent upon the scene of his prosperous son's great estate. The temptation to conceal rather than parade his family was the stronger in Joseph's case because his father and brethren belonged to an alien race, were engaged in a pursuit peculiarly repugnant to Egyptian prejudices and came into the land as refugees from famine. Although in his earlier life Jacob had an assured place among the sheiks of Syria (or Palestine), he was at this time broken by age, weakened by grief and humbled by financial reverses. All the greater honor to the son who, though he had risen as the fortunes of his family had sunk, had not forgotten those ties which bind an honorable man to his kin!

Some years ago there was published a valuable book by an American author giving the history of the Pilgrim colony in Holland previous to the emigration to America and the settlement at Plymouth. It was shown how much of the Pilgrim polity and creed was borrowed from the Dutch. That brief stay of our Pilgrim fathers in the Netherlands was of incalculable value when they became exiles and colonists. So we may say of the Israelites that their stay in Egypt was a part of that providential preparation which alone, by God's grace, could fit them for their great role. When they returned to Canaan 400 years later they took back with them, in the personality of their leaders, views and ambitions and abilities which they did not possess when Jacob went out.

Joseph as Frank with Pharaoh as He Is Loyal to Jacob

Chapter 47, Verse 1—Joseph does not beat about the bush. He does not conceal from the king that here were more mouths to feed (ch. 46:6-7), large flocks to be cared for and that the people and herds were already camped in the best part of the state. The drought had yet a long time to run (ch. 45:6). It was a bold step to take, a hazardous liberty to confess. But like all deeply religious men, Joseph was not a man willing to conceal. More men lose by timidity than by courage.

Verse 2—The next step of this moral hero was to present representatives of his family to the king. He chose enough to show their mien and not enough to confuse judgment.

Verse 3—As if anticipating that his brethren might not be so bold as he, Joseph had instructed them not to conceal their calling. Knowing the antipathy of agriculturists to shepherds (ch. 46:33-34), the temptation would be strong to call themselves something else, Joseph believed that antipathies are overcome by confession rather than by concealment. Better that they should tell Pharaoh themselves than that someone else should charge it against them. Even to our day the fight between the farmer and the ranchman goes on, and the sheepman has been from time immemorial hated by the other classes. Sheep eat not only the grass but the roots as well. Egypt was not at this time in a mood to welcome flocks and herds any more than caterpillars and locusts (Joel 1:4).

Verse 4—So the whole truth was out. They had come to stay. They were hard pressed at home. They made no false motions. But with it all they prayed for the royal permission to occupy the part of the land where they had camped.

Frankness Won Where Concealment Might Have Failed

Verse 5—Pharaoh accepted their statement at its face value. These men had not always been so truthful (Genesis 37:29-34), but Joseph taught them that honesty was their best policy, and so it proved.

Verse 6—In order to make them feel more secure, Pharaoh took them into his own employment. Nobody would molest them if the herdsmen wore the insignia of the king's employment. At the same time Pharaoh rightly insisted that those of their number appointed to places of trust and emolument should be appointed because of fitness and not simply because they belonged to the party that was "in office."

Verses 11-12—At the close of this passage we are told how Joseph carried out the instructions of the sovereign. He settled his brethren—and they were a virile, intelligent race—in that part of the land which later, under another dynasty, was especially selected for development by the king, so that it was known par excellence as Rameses's land. It was here the great ruler built his storehouses and concentrated his wealth (Ex. 1:11), naming one of the new cities after himself. But in all this Joseph acted as much for the king's interest as for that of his family. So has China in our day found it to her interest to place Americans in charge of her railways and Englishmen in care of her customs. So Persia sought to redeem herself from bankruptcy by calling an American to reorganize her treasury. Putting the family of Jacob in power was not that they might profit by "graft" but to prevent "graft" on the part of others not under the control of Joseph.

Pharaoh, Feeling Spiritual Superiority of Jacob, Accepts His Benediction

Verse 8—William Henry Seward, Lincoln's great secretary of state, tells how when he visited China he one day stopped to look at a little cooly, who, abashed and frightened, stammered out the question, "How old are you, sir?" It was the universal salutation of politeness. The question of Pharaoh was not one of idle impudence but the conventional way of signifying respect. Even now, in our new western world, we address our church officer as "elder," whatever his years.

Verse 9—But Jacob feels in all humility that he has not attained that pinnacle of veneration which belonged to his fathers; for he had not reached their age (Gen. 25:7) and did not seem likely to do so.

Verse 10—Nevertheless when, perhaps at a hint from Joseph, Jacob offered to pray for him Pharaoh bowed his head and accepted his priestly intercession. When General Booth visited the king of Sweden the king knelt while the venerable leader of the Salvation Army prayed. Vital godliness is reverenced today as it always has been.

DEVOTIONAL SERVICE

BY EDWARD ARTHUR WICHER

Week Beginning June 8, 1913

Topic—The prodigal son. Luke 15:11-32.

This is the most impressive, the most beautiful and the most profound of all the parables. It is a precious gem, whose incised surfaces flash back the light in whatever way we turn it. There is probably no passage of Scripture that has been more attractive to the commentator and the preacher; and this is equivalent to saying that there is no passage which has ministered more directly to the spiritual and devotional life of the church.

—

This chapter of Luke contains three parables of the lost—the lost sheep, the lost piece of silver and the lost son. And the reason for all three is found in the first two verses. "Now all the publicans and sinners were drawing near unto him to hear him. And both the Pharisees and scribes murmured, saying, This man receiveth sinners and eateth with them." The prodigal son was the publican and the sinner; and the interest which Jesus took in him was displeasing to the elder brother, who symbolized the correct Pharisee and scribe.

—

The prodigal son is not excused by Jesus. He is depicted in his true colors; and he is ungrateful, vain and headstrong. His father has always loved him, labored for him and saved for him; and yet he has no attachment to home. The restraints of his father's roof are irksome to him; the hours are too regular, the peace and contentment too monotonous. He would fain experience the excitement of the big world. Life at home is mere insipidity, and his palate craves a stronger flavor. So he says: "Father, give me the portion of thy substance that falleth to me." According to Jewish law this would be half the amount the elder brother would receive; that is, about one-third of the entire inheritance (Deut. 21:17).

But had the son the right to demand it during the father's lifetime? This question has been debated by modern scholars, but evidently it was not disputed by anyone in the parable. And if there had been any failure in the logic of the situation the argument would have lost its force in the ears of the scribes. We have here probably a survival of an ancient custom of inheritance, whereby wills took effect not at death but as soon as they were drawn. It would seem that it was customary for fathers, when they felt themselves to be failing, to give over their property to their children; and thus the younger son was not making so extraordinary a request. He was simply asking his father to hasten an act that could not long be delayed in any case.

But it is a cruel request. It is the request of a son who no longer feel the interests of home to be his interests; who looks upon his father rather as the means of the gratification of his own desires than as the object of his reverence and love.

—

After he has obtained his separate property, however, he cannot enjoy it at home with an unlimited license. So he journeys into a far country, where there are no family restrictions. Now he has traveled and seen life, and become handsomely emancipated from the narrow ideas of his childhood. "He wasted his substance with riotous living." This phrase has given to the parable the title by which it has been known in the tradition of the church. The son is a prodigal. While his property lasts he doubtless congratulates himself on his liberty, though even liberty without love soon cloys and becomes of doubtful value.

—

Downward progress is swift. The prodigal soon spent all. Then there arose a mighty famine in that country, and he began to be in want—no unusual condition in the Levant of that age. "And he went and joined himself to one of the citizens of that country; and he sent him into his fields to herd swine." He had now reached the depths of degradation for a Jewish soul—he was a swineherd, to a foreigner, in a foreign land.

—

But he himself was not a citizen of that far-off country. He was still the son of the father who dwelt back yonder in the homeland. He was not in the place where he naturally belonged. "He came to himself," and was homesick for his father's house.

—

Underneath the parable we feel the throb of the heart of a wayward, suffering humanity that has lost its way from its high calling of sonship, has fruitlessly squandered its precious patrimony, and is now trying to fill its belly with the husks that the swine did eat. It is a food that cannot feed men; for their needs are not the needs of the swine. Wherever he goes the prodigal carries with him a dissatisfaction with the provision of the world. Augustine cries: "Thou hast made us for thyself, and our hearts are restless until they rest in thee." The hunger of a human soul can never be satisfied with the husks of this world. The infinite void of a human heart can never be filled with any accumulation of mere finite things. There are prodigals who sit at richly laden tables in banqueting halls, and in whose hearts there is a gnawing and a craving that the world can never assuage. They are sons in a distant country, to whom husks are offered instead of bread.

—

But the father's love has never grown cold through all the lonely days of waiting. After all, that eldest son at home cannot give him any great consolation; he does not feel enough. The father feels alone. And he waits. His habitual seat is by the window that looks down the long road upon which his boy disappeared. Will he not come back again that way?

—

He does come back, in shame and penitence. He has prepared his confession for his father's ear. He will not ask to be received on the old footing of sonship; for he has sinned away his inheritance. Let him now be as one of the hired servants in the house. They serve for hire, and not for love. They ask for wages, rather than the approval of a kind father. Let his be the station, but not the disposition of one of these. He is not worthy to have a son's place, because he has not treated his father as a father; and yet as a servant he may be near his father, and often see his father's face. Unobserved, he may reverence him.

—

Unobserved! What wandering son ever slipped back to his heavenly Father's house unobserved of that loving eye? His is no grudging reception, no cold forgiveness. He meets his son a long way off and forgives him before he can even ask him. His love goes before the son's penitence and follows after. The father throws his arms about him in the way and gives him the kiss of reconciliation (Gen. 33:4; II. Sam. 14:33; Ps. 2:12). And yet the confession must be spoken. It is spoken after the kiss, after the pardon; but it is nevertheless spoken. There is no true penitence that passes away with the word of reconciliation. It leaves a lasting sense of unworthiness, that all the father's loves does not, cannot, dispel. Indeed, the only worthiness the son can bring to the father is the abiding sense that he is unworthy.

—

This son is still a son. He has been a disobedient son, but still a son. And the father is still a father; and he will honor his son by bidding the servants bring him the finest robe in the house, the signet ring and a pair of sandals. All of these things were unnecessary for the purposes of clothing merely; they were the marks of joy and consideration which the father showered upon the son. And the calf, which had been fattened in the stall, and reserved for some high occasion of feasting, was now brought forth; for never could there be a gladder, happier day than this. "For this my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, and is found."

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE

June 15, 1913

MAKE THE BIBLE YOUR OWN

Topic—Favorite verses. II. In the Proverbs. Proverbs 4:10-27.

[Mr. Ellis's usual comment failed to reach the office of publication in time for insertion.]

This is the second of a series of subjects dealing with favorite verses in various portions of the Bible, and consideration of the corresponding topic in Psalms, discussed in April, brought home to more than one Endeavorer the fact that he didn't know Bible verses as he would like to. Usually the people who don't have favorite verses are those who have read the Bible little or have read it to little purpose. They have not linked the eternal truths of the book with their own lives. But some Sunday schools and some Endeavor societies still cling to the idea that it is well in youth to memorize passages from the Bible. Verses thus learned will recur to the mind again and again after they are apparently entirely forgotten.

—

The passage named for the lesson is peculiarly appropriate in view of the closing school year. "Take fast hold of instruction," says verse 13. This is not the precept of the high school or college teacher—"Don't forget that lesson"—but it means the same thing. The Bible passage was written by someone who knew what he was talking about, as any Endeavorer of experience can testify.

—

"Keep thy heart with all diligence" is another excellent maxim for young people. You can well afford to stop and weigh the effect of any act and try to discover whether or not it will have a tendency to pollute your heart. People probably had as much trouble distinguishing quickly between right and wrong in the days of Solomon as they do now. So the proverb says, "Remove thy foot from evil." The only safe way is to keep absolutely clear of anything which will tend in the slightest degree to cause you to leave that which you instinctively know is the path of rectitude.

—

The leader for this meeting might introduce a novelty by getting as large a number of members as possible to indicate before the meeting which are favorite verses. If a considerable proportion of the membership responds to this invitation the leader can determine easily which are the most popular verses in Proverbs.

—

If your society has not recently tried any scheme to prevent the form of service from getting into a rut, this meeting will be as good as any other in which to reverse the chairs, or have them grouped in a different way to awaken renewed interest.

—

Ask your pastor for his favorite verse in Proverbs.

—

Everyone can find a helpful epigrammatic saying in Proverbs which he may adopt on the spot as his favorite verse if he has never had one before. This meeting lends itself readily to a reenforcement of the determination of weak members to take part in every meeting.

—

If the society is small and there is any danger of not finding enough helpful suggestions during the hour, have a selected few prepare in advance to tell why they chose their favorite verse, or how it has helped them.

—

People have favorite pictures, favorite colors, favorite friends—why not favorite verses?

—

Those Endeavorers who at various times have marked favorite passages in their Bibles might note all verses they have thus indicated in Proverbs and see which one now expresses most to them.

—

Reading a marked Bible is like talking with an old friend who recalls pleasant incidents of long ago.

—

Here are a few extracts from Proverbs which many people have found helpful:

The fear of Jehovah is the beginning of wisdom.

Wise men lay up knowledge.

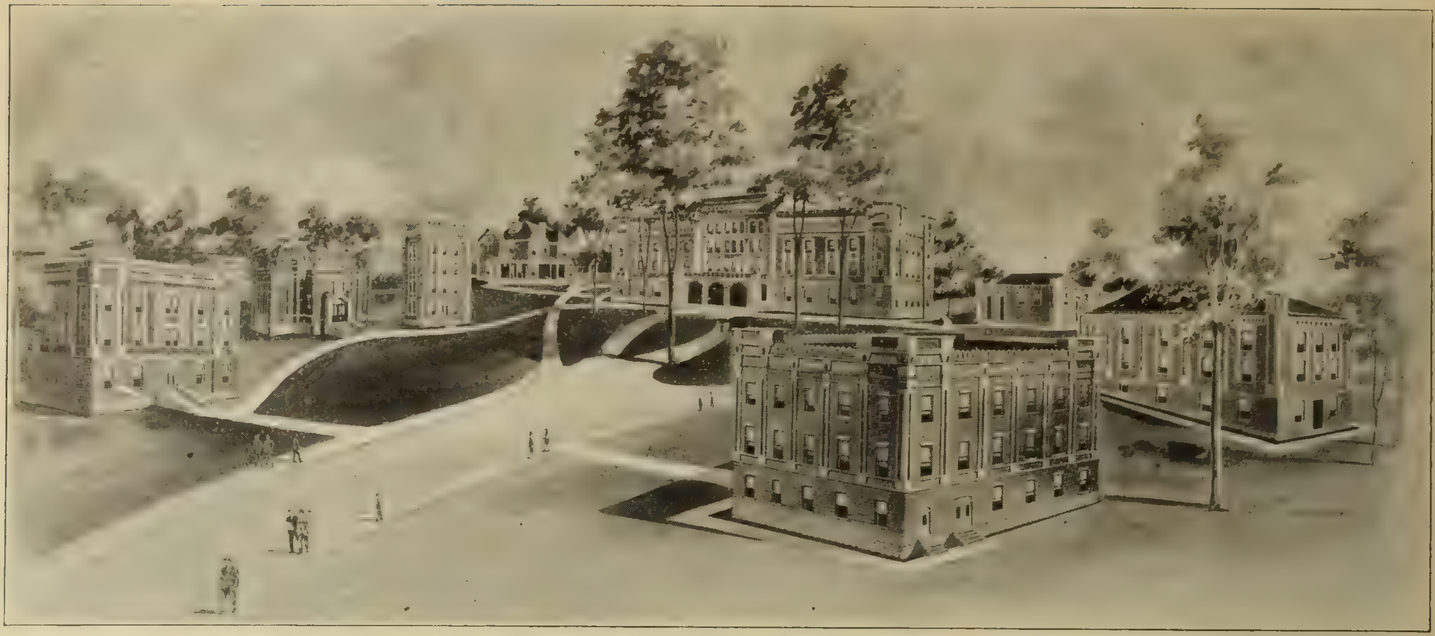
The fear of Jehovah prolongeth days, but the years of the wicked shall be shortened.

Lying lips are an abomination to Jehovah.

Evil pursueth sinners.

In all labor there is profit.

A soft answer turneth away wrath.



The Campus at Castle Heights School for Boys

This view does only partial justice to the attractiveness of the situation, the splendid avenue of trees leading up to the center having been removed from the picture in order to make the buildings visible.

Leading Boys to Manhood at Castle Heights

An Enterprising Southern School in Which the Boy Receives Strict Training, but a Fair Deal

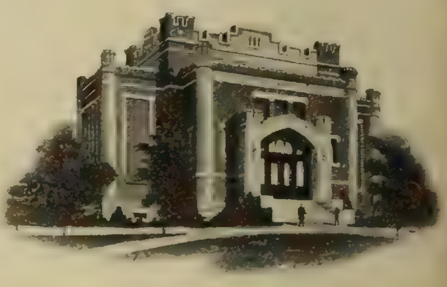
BY OLIVER R. WILLIAMSON

YOUR BOY! What visions you have had of the future which shall be his, of the things you could not do that he may achieve, of the fuller life it is your privilege to help him to secure! You and I, who are not educators by profession, have in mind no program that may be defined in courses and periods—that we must trust to the instructors in whom we shall hope to place our confidence—but we look through and past the years of preparation to one supreme goal. Our boy may not prove to be an intellectual prodigy, he may not become a famous leader in professional or commercial life, but he must be a Man, with a big M. As the constant action of the elements and the normal changes of the seasons are imperceptibly affecting the character of the growing tree, so every hour and every day of the lad's life is counting for good or bad in the creation of his character. We mean that this time of youth shall not be wasted.

Realizing the tremendous seriousness of your responsibility in this connection, you are almost certain to find yourself perplexed when the question of the boy's boarding school forces itself upon you. You yourself cannot give him that sympathetic supervision which in an ideal state would be a duty of the parent. Where can his good qualities be developed, his youthful impulses be properly guided, his body made sturdy, his spiritual life be nurtured, his gentlemanly characteristics be stamped indelibly upon him? Here is a weighty question—where?

Where Shall Your Boy "Find Himself"?

It was to offer an answer to this question that three men of sincerity and individuality came together some years ago to form an association remarkable in the educational world. These men believed that while efficiency is an essential of education, character is the true goal. They were convinced that a compelling field for the development of their ideals presented itself in the preparatory education of boys, and they have staked their lives to the fullest limit on this possibility. How correct their judgment was has been demonstrated in the eleven years of Castle Heights School's existence at Lebanon, Tenn. I. W. P. Buchanan, Ph. D., the senior in association with the school, had begun his educational career as head of the male school in Gallatin, Tenn., afterwards teaching mathematics in Lincoln and Cumberland Universities and spending two years as principal of Fort Worth high school. Dr. Laban L. Rice, with a wide experience as an educator, was professor of English literature at Cumberland University. Oscar N. Smith, A. M. (Princeton), following successful years in public and private schools and Princeton Summer School, came to Castle Heights in 1903. These three men, with a wisely selected staff of instructors, have given the boys' school at Lebanon a standing which could have come only from a sincere and wholehearted spirit of service to American young manhood.



Rutherford Parks Library

This charming building was the gift of a loyal former student

Athletics Are a Properly Controlled Part of the School Life, and the Students Have Developed Some Very Successful Contestants

High Ideals Plus Proper Equipment

It is easy to conceive of men who are in their ideals and experience admirably fitted to deal with boys, but who may accept the responsibility without reckoning upon the necessity of the best sort of material equipment. But while high purposes will be still to a degree effective in dilapidated and comfortless environment, certainly they will not come anywhere near being perfected. There must be physical as well as spiritual ideals of living. Cleanliness, convenience and healthfulness relieve the boy from the distracting thought of even minor privations, and though he may not at the time appreciate them, these conditions enter into the development of a well-rounded manhood. When the three Christian men who head Castle Heights School began their work, therefore, they realized that their contribution of personality and educational ability must be made under best conditions. The buildings were constructed upon careful plans and made attractive, highly substantial and spacious. The investment of money has been exceptionally large, but the school provides probably the best boys' school equipment to be found in the South. The main building, containing offices and dining room, gives the architectural key to the other structures, all of which are of brick, with stone trimmings. There are six others besides the residence of Professor Rice—the exceptionally fine gymnasium, with its popular swimming pool and bowling alley; the spacious chapel and study hall, containing also recitation rooms and a number of living apartments; the tower building, with hospital suite, guest room and bedrooms; the Halls building, with recitation rooms, exclusive meeting places for school organizations (there are no fraternities) and student rooms; the detention house, a small and well arranged structure to which an occasional negligent student transfers his abode temporarily; and the charming Rutherford Parks library, presented by a former student.

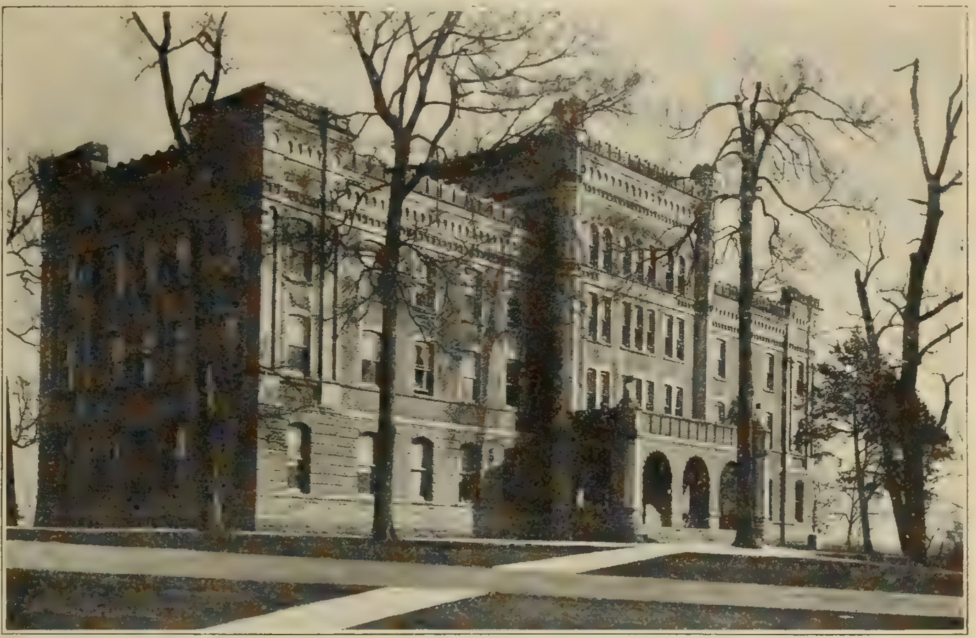
Not without sagacious prevision have the buildings been grouped closely upon the hilltop campus. In all their activities, in their rest and recreation periods, the boys thus come quite normally under the watchful eyes of the conscientious headmasters, and without being made unpleasantly conscious of supervision the boys' hours and minutes are fully accounted for. The rules of the school are indeed very strictly enforced, and the watchmen of the night are quite as vigilant against "breaking campus" or unapproved diversions from regimen as they are against fire. But unless I am greatly mistaken every student comes gladly to submit because he discovers quickly that every fellow is given an absolutely "square deal" by Dr. Rice, the kindly though inflexible disciplinarian.

Athletic Excellence and the "Average Boy"

Castle Heights has made an enviable record in athletics. In competition the school has shown a "quality" that has earned the respect of many bigger, older and better known institutions, and the reality of the respect which Castle Heights representatives have gained is evidenced by sundry tokens of victory held in proud possession by the hilltop community. An investigator who proposes to tell just what he sees naturally felt himself threatened with some embarrassment just here, for he believes that an exaggerated emphasis upon competition in school athletics is not by itself the best demonstration of the school's physical conservation of its students. Happily both theory and practice at Castle Heights allay one's fears. "All the school for The Boy, and The Boy for all the school," is a fair expression of the governing theory. First of all, the boy is entitled to and receives individual attention to his physical needs. That attention suffers from no discrimination because he may never be a center rush, or a cross-country runner, or a star on the basket ball team. The big "gym" and the field sports are for each and all just so far as they may benefit the individual. Out of a large group of sturdy boys there arise, naturally, a few who are are specially equipped physically for excellence in sports. Rightly directed, their superiority tends to proper emulation and gives all the boys a pride that means much in the spirit of the school. The boy who is not and never will be an athlete feels that he has a share in the athletic life of the school, while he is quite certain to have gained in muscle and flesh, in endurance and correct physical bearing and habits during his school experience.

Conditions That Keep the "Hospital" Empty

The least used part of the institution is the cozy "infirmary" created to meet possible emergencies and promptly to segregate any contagious ailments that may reach the student body. Seldom is there call for the service rendered by this department; but it is there, ready to be invaluable should occasion arise.



Main Building, Around Which Are Grouped the Handsome Structures at Castle Heights

The mild climate, the strict sanitary precautions, the splendidly pure water of mild medicinal quality, abundant light and air, regular hours and constant physical exercise assure to the students practically without exception the normal "huskiness" of boyhood. While speaking on the subject of physical culture and general health, it is interesting to note also that at Castle Heights there is freedom at proper times for the boy to indulge in those characteristic outdoor recreations that every man recalls with keenest pleasure—the thing he did because he "just wanted to." I have often thought that the youth sent early to boarding school must miss the "Come-on-fellows" part of boyhood, the occasional aimless excursions to the creek and across country that the boy doesn't want to plan beforehand or to be too strictly questioned about afterwards—not because he does any wrong but because he cherishes and enjoys the free play of his instinctive association with nature. The region about Castle Heights affords ample field for such relaxation, and the honor of the boys has quite invariably stood the test of liberties granted. It should be said that athletic standing is not permitted to justify negligence of studies.

Castle Heights School seeks to give the boy the best possible preparation for college, professional school or business, and to make his years of preparation count in the fullest degree in establishing the standards of true manhood. The genuine earnest of success in this endeavor is presented in the characters and the sincerity of the three Christian gentlemen who are putting their lives into this endeavor. While the institution is privately owned, it is not commercialized in the desire to make profits. A large number of boys are enabled to earn their way wholly or in part; the expense to the student ($380) is probably less than at any other school in the country possessing equal equipment; and a democratic spirit prevails that binds students and faculty together in most agreeable relationship. All the headmasters and instructors are earnest Christian men who tactfully keep before the boys those ideals which are indissolubly associated with a recognition of the spiritual element in life. They deal with the boy at perhaps his most difficult period, and I am ready to believe that if he is not infinitely made better and stronger and more efficient by his association with such men the fault lies entirely in the boy himself and his previous training. Such a boy is not likely to be admitted, or to remain long if he should prove impossible. But it is safe to say that such boys are rare indeed and that they are not found in the homes where this is read.

Thus much I have told you of Castle Heights; now, to do your son justice, find out more for yourself before making your important decision. An hour's ride from Nashville, Tennessee's thriving capital city, takes you to the pretty town of Lebanon, seat of famous Old Cumberland University and of Castle Heights. A visit is always best; but if you cannot take time for the journey you should have your questions answered before all the reservations for the new year are taken.

Always Room for Everybody in the Attractive Dining Hall—and Plenty to Fill the Plates When the Bell Rings

The Entire First Floor of This Building Is Occupied by a Chapel with Ample Space for All the Students and Faculty

MISSIONARY WORK

Recruiting for Home Missions

One of the most important acts of the Atlanta Assembly was the approval of the numerous overtures from presbyteries charging the Home Board to push for the enlistment of recruits for the home missions service. Of course all measures are to be undertaken in loyalty to other interests of the church and in cooperation with other established agencies. The college visitation plan which the Education Board has worked out with such signal success furnishes a field of cooperation which that Board is most cordial in opening. Plans are already being laid by which the home mission forces can cooperate with the Board of Education next school year.

Accurate estimates show that of the 2,000 vacancies in Presbyterian pastorates at least half are in fields where the right sort of leadership could enable the Presbyterian Church to discharge a large responsibility. One thousand strong and capable churches could be set at work where now the community suffers for the lack of efficient spiritual ministry. This makes no reckoning of the new fields to be reached and new churches to be organized. Verily some new and vigorous and intelligent recruiting for home mission leadership is needed.

Ten Years' Work in Laguna

Churches of Laguna province, Philippine islands, last winter celebrated the tenth anniversary of the first preaching of the gospel in that part of the islands. The first converts in the province were baptized at Bifian in 1902. Then there were no organized churches or church buildings. Now there are approximately 1,000 baptized Christians, three fully organized churches and sixteen organized congregations. Most of these congregations have their own chapels. In addition to the enrolled members, it is estimated that there are about a thousand Protestant sympathizers who attend the services irregularly. The influence of this Protestant element in community affairs throughout the province is becoming increasingly strong. In one town the president of a congregation is the leading man of the neighborhood. In another barrio the president of the congregation was elected a member of the town council at the last municipal election. In another place the vice-president of the municipality is a member of the congregation.

It has been found that only a small percentage of the student element attends the services held in the native tongue, but the announcement of a service in English will usually attract large numbers of students, who come mainly for the sake of the English, but who remain because of a genuine interest.

A new town has been opened to the missionaries by the extension of the railroad. This is Bay, on the southern shore of the lake. Before the railroad reached the town five converts were baptized. This beginning was due to a railroad foreman, who was a Christian and a former member of the Presbyterian church in Tondo, Manila. Immediately upon his removal to Bay he started to hold meetings among his friends, then when two Methodist women came to Bay temporarily, he enlisted their services. Finally the people agreed to send word to the missionary in Pagsanhan to come and baptize the new converts.

When the missionary arrived with nine helpers meetings were held Saturday night, Sunday and Sunday night, and large crowds attended. The whole community seemed eager to hear about the gospel. There was little opposition, but one man gathered a group about him after one of the meetings and harangued them something after this fashion: "Who are these evangelicals? If you join them you turn your back on your liberty. They prohibit gambling. They prohibit cock fighting. There is no freedom in their way." The parish priest also tried to keep his people away from the Protestant services, telling the people from his church pulpit that the devil had come down and that the strangers' meetings should not be attended. His advice, however, was little heeded.

Policeman Resigns Because of Profanity

The idea of a policeman resigning his position because his superior officer used profane language is hardly conceivable to ordinary city dwellers. But George Long, an Indian convert in the Wolf Point mission in Montana, of which Rev. E. Edward Evans is superintendent, was greatly distressed after he became a Christian because of the indecent language which his superior officer used. George went to the man and begged him to cease, and when the officer refused the converted Indian handed in his resignation, saying that he would be willing to serve again whenever his superior decided to amend his talk. This same George Long was ordered by one of the subagents to work on the Sabbath during the threshing time. But this the stalwart Christian could not do, and so he asked the mission to intercede for those who were thus compelled to break the fourth commandment. Needless to say, this appeal was successful, and the order was withdrawn. George Long is an elder in the Wolf Point church and is president of the Y. M. C. A. in his district. He became a Christian only about two years ago.

Death of Peking Medical Missionary

A cable has been received by the Board of Foreign Missions in New York announcing the death of Dr. Francis J. Hall of typhus fever. His decease was very sudden and no details are yet available. Dr. Hall, who was a graduate of Yale University and Johns Hopkins Medical School, was appointed to China in December, 1905, and sailed for his work the following year. He leaves a widow and two children.

Christian Revenge in Shansi

Oberlin Memorial Academy in the province of Shansi is one of the most beautiful revenges for affliction and injustice that the Christian church in any place has ever recompensed to those who have done it wrong. The institution is located at Taiku, standing on the site where, prior to 1900, a prosperous missionary settlement had grown up, manned by fourteen representatives of the American Board, and nearly all graduates of Oberlin College in Ohio. In the terrible Boxer outbreak of that year all of these were mercilessly slain and the property of the mission was almost entirely wiped out. But the mother college in the United States was not content to abandon the field. Three years later Oberlin sent out Dr. and Mrs. Hemingway and Mr. and Mrs. Corbin to reestablish the old academy, and in 1907 it began teaching again under the presidency of a Christian native of Shansi, Hsiang Hsi K'ung, himself a graduate of both Oberlin and Yale, and of high repute in China because a member of an ancient and wealthy house and a direct descendant of Confucius. Mrs. D. Willis James of New York City has just given the academy a beautiful nine-acre park in Taiku for its campus, and latest reports show a total enrollment of over 600 students.

Missionary Brevities

—The church at Soochow, China, over which Rev. O. G. Crawford has been missionary pastor, has become self-supporting and called a native Chinese pastor, Rev. Chu Sin Sen. At the first communion in Mr. Chu's pastorate there were fifty candidates for baptism.

—During the recent war in Mexico Miss Jennie Wheeler was alone in the girls' school at Saltillo, with only five girls and two servants to keep her company. One day the federals rushed through the building and up to the roof, and commenced firing from there. Finally one of the missionaries in the city reached her, and persuaded the soldiers to leave, explaining that this was American property and a girls' school. Without hesitation the colonel called his men down and took them elsewhere.

Board Notes and Announcements

—The Friday morning meeting of the Board of the Northwest, Chicago, was addressed on Presbyterial Day by Mrs. E. Wade Koons and Mrs. Ralph G. Mills of Korea. Dr. Mary Fulton of Canton, who during her twenty-eight years in China has often had more than 200 patients a day, and besides her woman's hospital has also established the first woman's medical college in that country, called the place of prayer "a power house, with enough power to bring Christ to China's 438,000,000 people." Another visitor was Rev. C. A. Killie of Paotingfu, whose work in China began in 1889 and who was among those besieged in the legation in 1900 when 270 of his parishioners were martyred and not one recanted. He compared the spirit of that time, when of all the mission buildings in north China not one brick was left on another, with the friendliness of the Chinese and their rulers now. E. M. Wherry, D. D., of India, whose service in the Punjab began in 1867, also testified to the supreme importance of prayer and showed the need of more teachers for Lodiana and Woodstock. Miss Edna Cole of Siam asked prayers for fellow missionaries greatly tried by illness. Said a senior officer of the board: "I wish the missionaries would remember that we need their prayers."

Africa, China and India in Three Striking Mission Books

Surely one may not criticise a missionary because the book he prepares describing his experiences deals largely in the first person singular. We have in mind no missionary with a story worth telling who could have avoided the personal references without an appearance of affectation. D. Crawford, the English missionary who writes "Thinking Black," has, however, succeeded marvelously in keeping himself out of his own limelight. His book is about the Africans, not about the missionary, and one puts the volume down really wishing Mr. Crawford had not been quite so modest. Twenty-two years "without a break" in central Africa is a career that would have excused him. His story is written in a vivid style, and we have seen no book that presents so clearly the primitiveness of interior Africa and its people. The poor outcast insane woman whom he found living in the trees, as wild and unapproachable as any beast of the forest, was only an extreme evidence of the narrow gap between the human and the brute. The headway made by missions is convincing proof of the efficacy of the gospel even with folk to whom the missionary and his message are at first worse than foolishness. But the tremendousness of the task before the church will grow upon the reader. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $2 net.

A missionary who can spend half a lifetime in China without losing her facility in the use of American slang, as Miss Charlotte E. Hawes has demonstrated in her addresses during her present furlough at home, can certainly be trusted to be a live enough person to write about new thrills in a thrilling fashion. And her book, "New Thrills in Old China," which has in it the story of both the Boxer uprising in 1900 and the republican revolution in 1912, is a vivacious "moving picture" of events as dramatic as any generation of mankind has ever witnessed. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $1.25.

A decided innovation in missionary literature was that beautifully illustrated volume, "Lotus Buds," which appeared in 1909. Issued in quarto form, with fifty full-page photogravures, it was almost a "life size" revelation of the children of India and the Christian work in their behalf. An edition de luxe on Japan vellum was issued at the same time. Now we have an octavo edition, with fifty engravings in halftone, less expensive but still an exceptionally attractive book. Miss Amy Wilson-Carmichael, the author, is associated with the work for Indian children at Dohnavur, Tinnevally district, South India, and is the author of several earlier books that received high appreciation. In spite of the dreadful evils so clearly pictured, the book is optimistic and there is a relieving humor in the descriptions of the many perplexities that attend the teacher's dealings with brown children as well as white. Truly in childhood, if not later, all the world is kin, and no one can read this book without a heart-stirring not only for the child victims of India but for the innocents who suffer distress in America. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $2 net.

NEW BOOKS

New Philosophical Discussions

Vital Lies, by Vernon Lee. With all the emotional fervor which is traditionally supposed to characterize the feminine mind—but which in some cases is best exhibited by the other sex—Vernon Lee in these two volumes tilts against the temporary edifices of modern thought. As a devotee of science, she attacks the modern and progressive ideas of the religionists—and makes rather a mess of it into the bargain. Professor James, Father Tyrrell and the still living mythologist, Ernest Crawley, are the main warriors against whom the venerable student of æsthetics here goes out, while she devotes one chapter to the philosophy of syndicalism as expounded by Mr. Sorel, the French labor leader and anti-intellectualist. Unfortunately Vernon Lee seems to believe seriously what Peter F. Dunne said jokingly (through Mr. Dooley) in regard to pragmatism—that it is a philosophy based on the theory that any truth which doesn't work is a lie, and that a good working lie is the truth. So Vernon Lee tells us that James is an obscurantist, and that the pragmatic validations of ideas are made purely from the standpoint of immediate utility. No reader of Schiller and Dewey will be seriously alarmed at this attack, which rests fundamentally upon a naive acceptance of the sufficiency of intellectual categories which those authors, to say nothing of Bergson, have put out of court. [John Lane Company, New York. $3 net.

An Interpretation of Rudolf Eucken's Philosophy, by W. Tudor Jones. Dr. Jones is one of the numerous pupils of Professor Rudolf Eucken. In this volume he aims to reproduce the essentials of his teacher's philosophical system in as simple and brief a form as the subject allows. Professor Eucken's personality and views are at the present day exercising such a deep influence throughout the civilized world that an exposition of them by a competent pupil and follower is bound to be of inestimable value. First of all, the volume will serve to introduce the works of the philosopher himself and furnish clews to the obscurer parts of his system. More than this, for the reader who may not afford the time for the thorough study of Eucken, it will serve as a manual on a type of thought that is coming into increasing prominence. The general healthfulness of Eucken's philosophy as a reaction against the materialistic and monistic views prevalent a generation ago should give this interpretation of his system a wide currency. The volume appears in the "Crown Theological Library." [G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. $1.50 net.

An Unorthodox Conception of Being, by William Ellsworth Hermance. This is a bold effort at a revolt against existing conceptions in philosophy by one whose right to speak as a philosopher must depend altogether on the value of what he says; for he does not seem to occupy an official position as a teacher or student of philosophy. He describes his theory as a synthesis of idealism, materialism, dualism and monism. To explain how he justifies this characterization would require much more space than is at our command. The layman will scarcely be able to follow Mr. Hermance in his often intricate reasonings and speculations. However, he will find many very pertinent criticisms of existing scientific and philosophical systems and he may have some problems illumined by the author's suggestion. [G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. $2.50 net.

New Books for Young People

The What-Shall-I-Do-Girl, by Isabel Woodman Waitt. Here is a good book for the hundreds and thousands of young girls who are coming out of the public schools neither rich enough nor poor enough to know how to cope with the workaday world. Lacking initiative and experience, they know not where to turn for helpful guidance. To many such these suggestions and hints, entertainingly put forth in the form of letters to a novice, may prove to be a godsend. Joy Kent, the heroine, had never been trained to earn her daily bread, and she was in critical need of the sound advice she receives in these pages from former schoolmates—a milliner, a stenographer, a teacher, a newspaper reporter, an actress, a librarian, a salesgirl, a nurse and girls in various vocations. And in the end she does what the majority of young women do when the right young man does his duty. [L. C. Page and Company, Boston. $1.25 net.

Alma's Sophomore Year, by Louise M. Breitenback, is an effective sequel to "Alma at Hadley Hall." The new story tells of Alma's wholesome and interesting experiences in her second year at boarding school. She tries to help a spoiled, wealthy and unpopular young girl from a small Western town. Remembering her own loneliness in freshman year, Alma endeavors to be a friend, and after many rebuffs succeeds in winning Harriet through the latter's love for music. There are Bubble and Trouble, the jolliest of twins, and the dear little Latin teacher and her love story—which ends just the way young girls like stories to end. [L. C. Page and Company, Boston. $1.50.

Nancy Porter's Opportunity, by Marion Ames Taggart. The many girls who have enjoyed "The Doctor's Little Girl" series will hail this new story with delight. Nancy has reached that traditionally charming age, "sweet 16," when her opportunity comes to help, and beautifully she does it, in a way to win one's heart. The home life of the Porters is one of the charms of the book. There is the sweet and gentle mother; the doctor who, even though blind, proves that he is still a leader among men; and "Cordie," the little orphan, funny and jolly. [L. C. Page and Company, Boston. $1.50.

Bible Studies

Old Testament Characters, by Frank Nelson Palmer. In this little book the director of Winona Summer Bible School places before the Bible students sets of questions on fifteen notable Old Testament personalities. The work does not pretend to be exhaustive; but it is well fitted to serve as a guide for those who are beginning the study of the Bible and need simple guidance in elementary matters. [Frank N. Palmer, Winona Lake, Ind.

God's Plan with Men, by T. T. Martin, evangelist. Devoted largely to the exposition of Scripture passages treating of salvation, this book moves on very conservative lines. It will give broad foundation for many who feel the need of taking up this great theme at this time. It abounds in Scripture references and is illustrated from the experiences of evangelists and from history. [Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. $1 net.

One Hundred Brief Bible Studies, by J. B. Shearer, is the seventh of like volumes put out by the well-known Bible teacher in Davidson College, North Carolina. It is admirably adapted for the study of adult Bible classes, for prayer meeting talks and similar informal services. While strictly conservative, few readers will fail to enjoy it or profit by its perusal. [Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia.

The Apostles' Creed, by Henry Wheeler. Dr. Wheeler aims to furnish for the average layman an intelligent basis for the use of the creed. His language is simple and his allusions to historical sources, though adequate, are not burdensome or pedantic. [Eaton and Mains, New York. 75 cents net.

The Book of Judges, by Edward Lewis Curtis, is a new volume in the Bible for Home and School series, edited by Shailer Mathews. Professor Curtis died in the summer of 1911, but it appears that he had completed the manuscript of the work through the eighteenth chapter. To this manuscript were added the comments on chapters 19-21 by Dr. Albert A. Madsen, who also revised and edited the whole work. The volume conforms strictly to the model of the series and includes an introduction dealing with the questions of textual and higher criticism, a bibliography and a commentary, all of which seem to have been prepared in a thorough and scholarly way. [Macmillan Company, New York. 75 cents net.

Pears'

Soap, like books, should be chosen with discretion. Both are capable of infinite harm.

The selection of Pears' is a perfect choice and a safeguard against soap evils.

Matchless for the complexion.

Books Received

Surf Lines: That Mark Where Waves of Thought Formed Crest and Broke Upon the Shore of a Wayfarer's Mind. Knickerbocker Press, New York. $1.25 net.

Tudor Shakespeare. New volumes: Hamlet, The Sonnets. Macmillan Company, New York. Each 35 cents net.

The Roadside Fire, by Amelia Josephine Burr. George H. Doran Company, New York. $1 net.

Health Education Series. Twenty-three volumes. Health Education League, Boston.

FERRY HALL
(For girls and young women)
ATTRACTS:

College Preparatory Students
—because its work has been tested and approved by Smith, Vassar, Wellesley, Mount Holyoke, and Western Universities.

High School Graduates
—because the two years' Junior-College Course offers advanced work leading to a diploma.

Special Students
—because superior courses in art, music, expression, cookery and sewing are conducted.

Parents
—because the home life is wholesome, happy and Christian.

A Senior House, Young Women's Christian Association, Athletic Association, school paper and annual, and democratic school spirit contribute to the happiness of the household. Swimming Pool.

For catalogue, book of views and other information, address

MISS FRANCES L. HUGHES,
Principal
Box 123 LAKE FOREST, ILLINOIS

The Open Hearth

To Work Is Vital

I give you the message of work. Too much emphasis on reflection, the perfecting of the inner life, spiritual growth, leaves the life negative—ineffectual. Or rather, perfecting of the character can and should come through vigorous, persistent, practical work. A double result in thus gained—actual good to the world and yourself. We put the stress on making the church and its "service" attractive—we try to entice men by sugar coating, beautifying religion. We educate our ministers and workers to the highest degree and make our ritual, churches, music the finest, and, I am afraid, forget the actual need of the poor, the sick, the ignorant and the vicious. System, beauty, efficiency should have a higher use than to attract—it should actually alleviate, heal, strengthen where it is most needed.

We should have the tools—churches, choirs, talent, money, everything—brought up to keen-edged efficiency, and then use them where they will do the most good. Our ministers should have before them the great example of Jesus. "He set his face steadfastly to go to Jerusalem." "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me." No personal triumphs, big place, high honors—except such as might come through perfect self-submerging into work that could be called truly "labors of love." This is the doctrine; not that the church should grow but that it should work. Not to be "ministered unto but to minister." F. G. WESTPHAL.

A Home Mission Problem

A new problem confronts the church, especially in the older synods, today. It originated in changed conditions from those of thirty years ago. At that time it was decided by some eastern synods, with the approval of General Assembly and its Board of Home Missions, to assume the administration and support of home mission work within their bounds. Such action was gratifying to the aid-receiving fields of the East and it was felt by the church at large that it would enable the Home Board to devote all its resources and energies to the newer synods, and to the rapidly developing frontier and Alaska.

This action, limited at first to a few synods, was soon adopted by a number of others; the plans varying somewhat, some synods being wholly, and others only partly, independent of Home Board administration and aid. Under the arrangement the work progressed for some years very satisfactorily. There would be no disposition on the part of anyone to change it, except for the fact that new work has opened up in some of these older synods, necessitating larger funds. Foreign immigration has called for missionary work on a larger scale in eastern synods. How may funds in sufficient amount be obtained for carrying it on? The churches of these synods continue to contribute about as usual to the Home Board, but fail to increase their contributions to the work of the synod. As a result the board has a full treasury, while the synods are lacking in funds.

There are those who say, Ask the board's help, draw from its treasury. In other words, ask the Home Board to come into the field of the synod as a partner, and commission certain men for certain work, and appropriate funds from its treasury for their support. This is the only way the Home Board says it can help. By such a course, however, two home mission agencies will be found operating on the same field and dividing the administration of the work between them, which has almost, if not always, produced friction and trouble.

There are those who would solve the problem in a different way. Certain synods, and a number of presbyteries, have adopted it with success, and in so doing have had the approval of the Board of Home Missions. Seeing that the work of home missions, however carried on, East or West, is equally important, they consolidate the funds given for its different departments in a common treasury and distribute them according to the proportionate needs of each. They thus save "robbing Peter to pay Paul." Instead of sending most of the funds to the New York treasury and asking for the return of a portion, as proposed by the other plan, they save postage and bookkeeping by appropriating first the needful amounts for pressing foreign and sustentation and church extension work of the synod and presbytery and sending to New York only the proportionate share for the wider and more extended work of the Home Board.

In this way disarrangement of a well established and satisfactory administration of the work is avoided and its unity and harmony are also preserved. It is a positive advantage also to the synod and presbytery to bear the direct responsibility of their own mission work. W. P. WHITE.

Woman's Board Atlanta Meeting

Important Phraes of Home Mission Work Considered at Largely Attended Meetings

The Woman's Board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian Church U. S. A. held its annual meeting at Atlanta in Central Congregational church May 14-20, inclusive, convening, as usual, at the same time and city as the General Assembly. It was one of the largest, most satisfactory and deeply spiritual meetings ever held. There were 307 women from all parts of the United States registered. Attendance was largely augmented by visitors and wives of commissioners to the four Assemblies. Ten synodical presidents, two synodical secretaries and forty-six accredited delegates represented the interests of over 4,000 local societies.

The most important items were the adoption of a "plan of work" and "articles and by-laws" of government which have been under consideration for two years. By reason of the resignations of the president, Mrs. Frederick S. Bennett, and the secretary, Miss Julia Fraser, those offices were declared vacant, and no nominations were made by the nominating committee, but probably they will be filled in the near future. The choice for the remaining offices was as follows: First vice-president, Mrs. D. Everett Waid, New York; second vice-president, Mrs. Augustus S. Crane, New Jersey; associate secretary, Mrs. M. J. Gildersleeve; young people's secretary, Miss M. Josephine Petrie; secretary for student work, Mrs. Dwight E. Potter; recording secretary, Mrs. Augustine Sackett; treasurer, Miss Dora M. Fish; editor Home Mission Monthly, Miss Theodora Finks; superintendent of schools, Marshall C. Allaben; secretary of freedmen's department, Mrs. Susan L. Storer. In addition to these was the approved list of eighty advisory vice-presidents, six vice-presidents at large, and the field secretaries—Miss Abby Upham, Miss E. I. Cameron and Mrs. J. A. Aldrich.

On Thursday annual reports of officers were read and received with much satisfaction; in these were included those of Mrs. Susan L. Storer for the freedmen's department, Miss Theodora Finks for The Home Mission Monthly and Miss Catherine Birdsall for Over Sea and Land. "The Story of the Feld" for the year was presented by Mrs. A. C. Aldrich for the Indians, Miss Edna Tait for the Mexicans and Rev. E. A. Odell of San Juan for Porto Rico. The latter made an earnest plea for the rebuilding of the Presbyterian hospital on the island where 20,000 patients were treated last year. Friday's meetings included addresses on the Mormon situation by Mrs. D. F. Deifenderfer, Alaska by W. B. Adams and mountaineers by Miss M. E. Griffith of Bell Institute, North Carolina.

Saturday brought the unusual program of fellowship and greetings from the women of the Southern Presbyterian Church, voiced by Mrs. W. C. Winsborough; from the Tennessee Synodical Society by Mrs. I. E. Steele, from the Atlanta Presbyterial Society by Mrs. Archibald Davis of Atlanta, from the United Presbyterian women by Mrs. E. V. Brown and from the women of the Canadian Presbyterian Church by Dr. J. A. Macdonald of The Toronto Globe. These expressions of hospitality, good will and fellowship brought rare pleasure to everyone who was privileged to hear them.

A committee was appointed by the chairman,

Shall We Muzzle the Ox
WHEN HE TREADETH OUT THE CORN?

The Bible explicitly says, "No!" (Deut. 25:4, I. Cor. 9:9, I. Tim. 5:18). It also declares that the laborer is worthy of his hire. It pleads the cause of the widow and the fatherless. It approves the ministering to the wants of the saints.

The Church theoretically says, "No!" (Form of Government, Chapter XV., Sections VI. and XIII.). Every minister who is duly installed over a Presbyterian Church and congregation is promised "a competent worldly maintenance" in order that "he may be free from worldly cares and avocations." The word "theoretically" is deliberately used because there is a grim humor in the words of the Form of Government just quoted when the average "competent worldly maintenance" is a third less than a mechanic's wage.

The industrial and commercial world practically says, "No!" It is interweaving the Cooperative Pension Plan with its very life fibers. The pension is only a wage, earned during productive years, and whose payment is wisely deferred until the years of nonproduction and disability.

If the Bible is the standard, which is more nearly living up to it—the Church or the World?

If you want to help your church to square its practice with its profession, then take the "muzzle from the ox, when he treadeth out the corn," by helping to provide a pension for the disabled minister and for the widow and orphan of the deceased minister.

If you are interested communicate with

Ministerial Relief and Sustentation
WILLIAM HIRAM FOULKES, General Secretary
507 Witherspoon Building - - - Philadelphia, Pa.

Mrs. Waid, whose duty should be to use every means to deepen the spiritual life of the board and to suggest means to increase its membership and gifts.

From the pre-Assembly business meeting on Wednesday, the 14th, to the installation of officers by Mrs. A. G. Beebe of Illinois, on the following Tuesday, there was a delightful spirit of harmony and spiritual fellowship among all attending and this was supplemented by the hospitality extended by the people of Atlanta.

MINERVA L. CRANE.

School and College

The twenty-fourth annual commencement of Converse College, Spartanburg, S. C., was held May 31—June 2.

Professor Theodore G. Soares of the University of Chicago delivered the address at the graduation of the College of Engineering of Armour Institute May 29.

Kentucky Military Institute, Lyndon, Ky., and Eau Gallie, Fla., dedicated its new Edison science building and a new chapel at Lyndon in connection with its commencement. Dr. T. M. Hawes delivered the baccalaureate sermon.

The first graduation of the standardized college department of Dubuque German College and Seminary was held May 28 at Westminster church, Dubuque, Iowa. Seven young men graduated, including one from Mexico and another from Monaco. Orations were given by four of the graduates as part of the exercises.

Friday, May 24, was observed by the students of Whitman College as Campus Day. Recitations were given up and the forenoon devoted to putting the campus in perfect order for the conference track meet May 31 and for commencement season. At noon the women of the college served luncheon on the lawn. This was followed by addresses concerning the history and development of the campus.

Albemarle Normal and Industrial Institute, Albemarle, N. C., has closed the most successful year in its history—due to the efforts of its president, Rev. George H. Atkinson, and helpers. Commencement was preceded by an exhibit of the industrial and culinary work of the pupils. It takes but $86 to support a girl the entire school year, each pupil being charged but $3 per month for board—10 cents a day! The pupils do the entire work in the school, dormitories and premises. The president has begun a systematic campaign for increased endowment.

Principal F. W. McClusky of Union Academy, Anna, Ill., has been elected dean of men at Blackburn College and professor of English and history. Mr. and Mrs. McClusky are both graduates of a self-help college and are thoroughly familiar with the self-help plan. They will live on the first floor of the dormitory annex and Mrs. McClusky will act as house mother to the young women. Two other new teachers have been chosen for next year—professor Carl Calvin of Bloomington, a graduate of Illinois University, to teach agriculture and Miss Emma Sparks of Normal University to teach domestic science.

The eighteenth annual session of the Atlanta conference for the study of negro problems was held at Atlanta University, Atlanta, Ga., Monday, May 26. Dr. W. E. B. Du Bois of New York City, director of the conference, presided. The subject of study was "Morality and Religion Among Negro Americans." For the past five years the work of the conference has been carried on under the patronage of the trustees of the John F. Slater Fund. Professor L. H. Williams, Macon, Ga.; Mrs. Samuel F. Harris, Athens, Ga.; Dr. Loring B. Palmer, Atlanta, and Miss Lucy C. Laney, Augusta, Ga., were among the speakers.

The prospectus of the summer schools of the theological seminary at Auburn, N. Y., presents an attractive array of professors and subjects. The faculty of the school of theology consists of President Stewart, Professors Riggs, Hoyt, Dulles, Hinke, Creelman of the seminary faculty, and Doctors Warren H. Wilson, George Cross, Washington Gladden and William T. Elsing. The curriculum embraces a wide variety of courses of lectures. This school will be in session July 7 to 19 inclusive. The school for Christian workers will follow the school of theology, beginning Monday, July 21, and continuing to Aug. 2. Its faculty is even larger than that of the preceding school and there is a larger variety of courses.

Senator Webb of Tennessee was the commencement speaker at the graduation exercises June 2 of Tusculum College, Greeneville, Tenn. Dr. I. Y. Fair of Richmond, Va., preached the baccalaureate sermon on the preceding Sunday.

Has This Church the Best Record?

The U. P. church of Johnstown, N. Y., with a membership of 206, gave to missions last year $2,710, or an average of $13.15 a member. This is an increase of $1.94 per member over last year's report. Dr. James A. Williamson is the pastor, and a layman who saw the opportunity to press the mission question worked by his side.

Total Per Capita Offering $40.77

The report of First church, Troy, N. Y., taking into consideration the gifts for congregational expenses as well as missions, shows that $40.77 was the per capita offering of the year for the 500 members. The average for missions alone was $8.98. These figures do not take into consideration pledges for $4,600 for the Board of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation. The fact that the pastor, Rev. A. P. Higley, has a large number of active and energetic societies of various sorts in the church organization is readily surmised.

Clergy and Laity

Rev. W. J. Johnson, field representative of the Board of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation, on his way to Atlanta stopped at Cumberland Gap, Ky., and delivered before the literary societies of Lincoln Memorial University his lecture on "Abraham Lincoln, the Christian."

Samuel Charles Black, D. D., of Collingwood Avenue church, Toledo, Ohio, with Mrs. Black, spent the month of May in California. Dr. Black supplied Immanuel church, Los Angeles, May 4 and 11 and Hollywood church May 18. On the return journey they stopped at San Francisco, Denver and Boulder, Colo., where Dr. Black had a successful pastorate before going to Toledo.

Winona Assembly, now under reorganization, was indorsed by Assembly as a distinctive and reorganized Presbyterian institution.

Do You Know that Heinz Peanut Butter is Good for Children?

Children like it because it tastes so good. And wise parents encourage them to eat it. Food scientists will tell you that

Heinz Peanut Butter

peculiarly supplies the solid nutriment that makes thin legs grow plump—that builds firm flesh—gives rosy color. Use it, not as an occasional treat, but as an every day diet. Everyone likes it. Selected fresh peanuts ground and prepared with the care that is given all the famous

57 Varieties

In thousands of households it is considered a necessity—and more than replaces high priced creamery butter.

Try This Recipe for Heinz Peanut Butter Fudge

2 cups confectioner's Sugar
1-2 cup sweet milk
2 heaping tablespoons of Heinz Peanut Butter.

Boil five (5) minutes exactly; remove from fire and stir until it thickens; pour into buttered platter and cut into required squares.

Heinz Spaghetti

Something New and Extra Good

Real Italian Style Spaghetti—a "masterpiece" in fine blending of choice materials. Words can't describe its zest and richness—its delicacy of flavor. Ready to serve. Pure, appetizing, nourishing. Spaghetti at its best. Just the thing to vary the household fare.

Other Heinz Food Products are: Apple Butter, India Relish, Preserves, Vinegar; Soups—Tomato, Pea, Celery; Olive Oil, Ketchup, Baked Beans, Olives, etc.

H. J. Heinz Company

Over 50,000 Visitors inspect the Heinz Pure Food Kitchen every year.

HEINZ
PEANUT BUTTER
6½ OZ NET WEIGHT AVD.
HEINZ
57

News Notes from Various Fields

New York

Madison Avenue church, Albany, recently conducted a three days' celebration in honor of its twenty-fifth anniversary. The pastor is Rev. Charles F. Shaw.

May 14 Rev. Stanley U. Mock was installed pastor of Batavia church. Henry Ward, D. D., of Buffalo, Rev. George S. Swezey of Ripley and George D. Miller, D. D., of Warsaw took part.

May 18 Rev. J. VanKirk Wells was installed at North Bergen. Rev. John R. Kay of Bergen, Rev. William V. LeWinkel of Perry and Rev. Theodore T. Hays of Byron conducted the service.

For the first time in the history of First church, Seneca Falls, women have representation on the pulpit supply committee. Three of the nine members of the committee who will hunt a successor to Rev. W. P. Schell are women.

Rev. Joseph W. Babbitt, the new pastor of Calvary church, Newburg, has announced that he has adopted the recent requirement concerning a health certificate from each principal in a wedding ceremony.

Except for one year when a large amount of money was left to the church by a will, First church, Utica, last year raised the largest amount of money reported during the pastorate of Dr. Ralph W. Brokaw. The present membership is 917.

Evangelistic services for two weeks recently proved very successful in a country church of Stephentown near Garfield, where Rev. W. A. Wagar is pastor. Rev. Thomas Houston, known as the blind evangelist of Belvidere, N. J., assisted in the meetings. Although the church members are widely scattered, the attendance was good and neighboring churches were benefited.

First church of Baldwinsville, which has been organized 100 years, celebrated the anniversary the past week with special exercises which began Sunday with an historical sermon by the pastor, Rev. Frederick W. Fuess. Neighboring churches joined in the Sunday evening service. Monday there were greetings from the Presbytery of Syracuse and a reception Tuesday. Rev. E. A. McMaster of Saratoga Springs spoke Wednesday night.

The annual meeting of the trustees of the New York Anti-Saloon League was held in the Y. M. C. A. building in Syracuse May 20. Reports by the state and district officers were among the best and most encouraging the league has ever known. The following were elected national trustees: Dr. Robert Bagnell, New York; W. R. Heath, Buffalo, and Rev. F. W. Palmer, Auburn. It was determined to introduce the two bills of last year asking for local option for cities of the third class and for residence district local option. Dr. James Albert Patterson, after four years' service as state superintendent, has gone to the pastorate of First church, Franklin, Pa., and Dr. Robert Bagnell, president of the board of directors, was selected to direct the work of the state for the year. Dr. H. H. Barstow, who was superintendent of the Albany district, has gone to the pastorate of Westminster church, Rochester.

Illinois

Efforts are being made by Dr. C. M. Brown, pastor of First church, Joliet, to have established a zone of quiet for churches and hospitals. Open exhausts of automobiles climbing a hill near the church often interfere with services.

Oneida church celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the church recently. Many letters from former pastors were read. One elder of other days sent a check for $10 for the offering on Children's Day. Next month closes the fourth year of Rev. C. F. Wilson's pastorate there.

Rev. C. A. King, pastor at Divernon, is solving the foreign problem in the vicinity of the church in a hopeful manner. Many of the Hungarians come to him to baptize their children and through Easter cards sent to these twenty-five children have been attracted to Sunday school. Tracts and the gospels in their own language have surprised and pleased the adults. The foreign children will assist in the program for Children's Day and many of the parents are expected to be present.

Park church, Streator, of which Rev. W. C. Miles is pastor, has had a good year. A fine property has been secured for a manse and many names have been added to the roll. The present membership is 610. Two members—Misses Florence E. Murray and Alice O. Ensign—have consecrated their lives to the work of foreign missions, and have been assigned to East Persia.

Michigan

With the Detroit Churches

Fort Street church, one of the finest pieces of Gothic architecture in the country, had its beautiful steeple badly wrecked in a recent storm. It was feared at first that this landmark of the city as well as of Presbyterianism would have to be pulled down. It will be repaired.

Calvary church is making a hard fight to exclude a saloon from its neighborhood. The law forbids the location of a new saloon within 400 feet of a church building; but this is claimed to be not a new saloon but a transfer of license.

Dr. J. M. Barkley, who, while on a short trip in the South following the death of Mrs. Barkley, was taken very sick at Cincinnati, has fully recovered and has returned to his pulpit duties.

Highland Park church had a triple celebration May 25, it being the second anniversary of the dedication of the new building, the tenth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. James Davis MacDonald and the eighth anniversary of the organization of Highland Park as an independent church, it having been previously dependent upon First church. The pastor of First church, Dr. Joseph A. Vance, preached the anniversary sermon. The celebration lasted for several days.

Rev. Andrew Doremus was installed pastor of Immanuel church, Saginaw, May 18. Rev. C. W. Hastings and Rev. H. R. Stark took part.

Hugh Jennings, manager of the Detroit ball team, recently spoke at a dinner of the Defenders of the Fort of Fort Street church, Detroit.

Rev. William Sidebotham was installed pastor of Munger church May 13. Rev. T. S. Anderson, Rev. C. W. Hastings and Rev. H. R. Stark assisted in the services.

Minnesota

A debt of $3,000 on the Mankato church is being raised following a discussion at the annual meeting.

Minneapolis Presbyterian clergymen are inclined to favor a trial in Minnesota of the system in use in North Dakota whereby high school credit is given for work in Bible study.

Efforts are being made for a big attendance at the state Christian Endeavor convention at Glenwood June 19-22. Among the speakers will be Dr. John T. Bergen, Minneapolis, Dr. Henry C. Swearingen, St. Paul.

South Dakota

The statistical report of Sioux Falls Presbytery for the year just ended shows encouraging growth in church and Sunday school membership and advance in missions and home expenses, but a falling off in contributions to the other boards of the church. Salem church, with thirty-seven members on confession, shows more than twice as many as any other church in presbytery. The church of Canistota came next with sixteen. Salem's minister, Rev. Edward Loew, is serving his first year and Canistota's, Rev. A. C. McCauley, is serving his twenty-eighth year.

North Dakota

First church, Fargo, is growing rapidly. The net increase of membership during the present pastorate, less than two years, is 234 in spite of a loss of over seventy by death, letter and otherwise. The men have organized a Church Betterment Association, dividing the congregation into twenty-five companies, each with a chairman and assistant. Their first effort was to provide for the deficit that had accumulated in recent years. The results not only provide for local expenses but also for a benevolent budget of $1,000 and a substantial reduction of the debt on the building erected six years ago. Rev. Frederick G. Behner, pastor, went to Fargo from Covington, Ohio.

Texas

At the meeting of presbytery J. N. Coker was ordained to the gospel ministry and a letter granted to Amarillo Presbytery.

The installation service of Rev. George S. Fulcher as pastor of Exposition Park church, Dallas, took place Thursday evening, May 22. The sermon was preached by J. Frank Smith, D. D. Reverends Frank Sneed of Oak Cliff church, David K. Ferguson and R. W. Benge also took part in the service.

Kansas

A revival of interest in Bible study and family worship has developed among the people of First church, Highland, recently under the direction of the pastor, Rev. Louis C. Stumpf. Monthly song services are drawing large crowds and there is a class studying the new intermediate catechism.

Utah

Rev. D. L. Edwards of Grand Junction, Colo., who recently preached in First church, Salt Lake City, has decided that the condition of his health makes it inadvisable for him to consider a call to Salt Lake City.

Colorado

The fight against the fly has been taken up by Central church, Denver. Recently a moving-picture film showing the rapid development of flies and the way in which they carry disease was shown in that church.

Idaho

Fargo is a country community on the north side of the Snake river, thirteen miles west of Caldwell. A preaching point has been main-

MEMORY IMPROVED
Since Leaving Off Coffee

Many persons suffer from poor memory who never suspect coffee has anything to do with it.

The drug—caffeine—in coffee acts injuriously on the nerves and heart, causing imperfect circulation, too much blood in the brain at one time, too little in another part. This often causes a dullness which makes a good memory nearly impossible.

"I am nearly 70 years old and did not know that coffee was the cause of the stomach and heart trouble I suffered from for many years, until about four years ago," writes a Kansas woman.

"A kind neighbor induced me to quit coffee and try Postum. I had been suffering severely and was greatly reduced in flesh. After using Postum a little while I found myself improving. My heart beats became regular and now I seldom ever notice any symptoms of my old stomach trouble at all. My nerves are steady and my memory decidedly better than while I was using coffee.

"I like the taste of Postum fully as well as coffee."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for booklet, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum comes in two forms.

Regular (must be boiled).

Instant Postum doesn't require boiling, but is prepared instantly by stirring a level teaspoonful in an ordinary cup of hot water, which makes it right for most persons.

A big cup requires more, and some people who like strong things put in a heaping spoonful and temper it with a large supply of cream.

Experiment until you know the amount that pleases your palate and have it served that way in the future.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

tained there for four or five years. It has been supplied mostly by the professors in the College of Idaho. Rev. W. I. Hill took charge April 15. On May 12 a church was organized. Professor H. H. Hayman preached in the forenoon. A basket lunch was served, after which the organization was effected. This was followed by a program of short addresses on appropriate topics, interspersed with music. This is a new settlement in a region that is just being brought under irrigation. The former religious affiliations of the people include several denominations. They have practically all united in the new organization, which will aim to be in a true sense a community church. The methods of the country life department of the Home Board will be largely employed.

Iowa

Signs of Progress in Council Bluffs

Second church, which this year is second in size in Council Bluffs Presbytery, was a home mission church five years ago. It led all churches in members received the past year. Dr. George A. Ray is pastor.

First church has recently purchased a manse for the pastor, Dr. M. P. McClure.

Bethany church, Rev. J. E. Cummings pastor, has recently established a Sunday school and preaching station at Island Park, near the summer resort, Lake Manawa. It is hoped that a church may be developed there.

The appointment of Rev. Mr. Leeper as supply at Hardin and Glendale, it is hoped, means the beginning of a systematic step toward supplying rural communities of the entire presbytery.

Dr. J. H. Carpenter of Lincoln, Neb., will supply Adair church during the absence of the regular supply, Samson Cocks.

Unity church under the care of Rev. William H. Sinclair has reopened. Clarksville church, grouped with it, has recently made splendid progress.

It is expected that the new church at Albion, Rev. S. C. Wadding pastor, will be ready for occupancy by fall. It will cost nearly $10,000 and will seat 300.

As a result of union meetings conducted recently by John S. Hamilton of Cleveland, Ohio, and party there were nearly 700 decisions for Christ at Oelwein, and a large number of them were men.

Pennsylvania

Plans were proposed at a recent meeting of the men's association of First church, Wilkes-Barre, for the amalgamation of all church clubs to swing the balance of political power in the city.

Oil-soaked Bibles and hymnals were found at the back steps of First church, Benton, which was recently burned with a loss of $22,000. There is sufficient insurance to cover the indebtedness of $12,000. State authorities are hoping the incendiaries will be arrested.

Published reports that Rev. Robert T. Lynd of Claysville has received a call to Joliet, Ill., prove to be erroneous.

California

Ministers Try to Block Delay

Every Protestant minister in San Francisco was booked for exchange of pulpit on the first Sunday in June to make protest before the Christian congregations against the attempt now being made to tie up the operation of the new red light abatement and injunction law till the next general election through a petition for its referendum to the people.

Rev. Paul R. Dickey of Virginia City, Nev., preached his first sermon last Sunday as the new pastor of Grace church, San Francisco.

Rev. Arthur Fruhling, after one month at Memorial church, has begun a new pastorate at Vacaville, while Rev. A. Ainslie of Oxnard is supplying Memorial in his place.

W. G. Clark-Duff, a second year man at Yale Divinity School, has taken charge of the Ocean Shore group of churches for the summer. He will finish his theological course at San Francisco Seminary.

Rev. W. Kirk Guthrie of First church has gone to the Pan-Presbyterian Assembly at Aberdeen, Scotland.

Rev. William Nat. Friend of Howard church was chaplain at the fiftieth commencement of the University of California last week, when 750 students received diplomas.

Washington

The new home of First church, Bellingham, was dedicated April 27 amid the rejoicings of the congregation and the congratulations of the community. The main auditorium seats 1,000 and the Sunday school auditorium seats 500. There are besides nineteen separate rooms, including clubrooms for the men's and women's organizations and complete kitchen and dining arrangements. The building cost $42,000. Among those taking part in the services were Dr. S. D. Gordon, Dr. Mark A. Matthews, Rev. E. L. McCartney, brother of the pastor of the church, Rev. A. H. Barnhisel of Tacoma, Rev. D. B. McLaughlin and Rev. B. K. McElmon, founder and first pastor of the church. One window is a memorial of the late Rev. James Thomson, who lost his life in a snowslide and who was at the time pastor at large of Bellingham Presbytery. Another memorial window was given by Rev. W. A. Sunday in memory of his revival campaign here two years ago. Dr. Gordon remained during the week and gave an address every day.

Women Trustees for Twenty Years

For more than twenty years Mendenhall Memorial church, East Grand Forks, Minn., has had women on the trustee board. Of the board of six two at least are women. They represent that part of the congregation with whom they are most in contact, and many things men would fail to do or to reckon with are bravely undertaken by the women trustees. "Some friends here contend that the churches will need to come to the Northwest to see the advantages of progressive church work and methods," says the pastor, Dr. C. E. Coles.

PRESBYTERIAN TRAINING SCHOOL

of Chicago

for Christian Workers

Organized in 1908 by the Board of Church Extension of the Presbytery of Chicago

There have been three periods in the history of the modern Church, which, however, overlap.

First, the period of witness to the truth, a time of statement, declaration, defense. This was the time of the great creeds, especially the middle of the seventeenth century, when the Westminster Confession was formed. For this period the Church produced great thinkers.

Second, the period of the propagation of the truth. The truth having taken its form, there grew a spirit which demanded its extension. That extension took two forms—worldwide missions, beginning with Carey, and evangelism, which is only missions at home. For this period the Church added to her force great evangelistic preachers and missionary heroes.

Third, the present era of the application of the truth, when the test of the gospel is not whether it will satisfy the intellectual needs of men, as in the first period, and not whether it will save all kinds of men individually, as in the second, but whether it will save everything that pertains to men, whether it will work everywhere and bring salvation to every human need and relation.

For this era the Church needs further to supplement her leadership with a trained lay force not "set" for the defense or propagation of the faith so much as for its application. This is one of the tasks for which the Presbyterian Training School was established. If you are now, or are willing to be, interested in these tasks write for our "Herald."

Address H. B. McAFEE, Director

210 East 50th Street
Chicago, Ill.

An Unduplicated Opportunity. A Quick Paying Investment

for the far-seeing man or woman interested in present-day industrial and social problems. There is a national awakening to the necessity for vocational training. Highland Park College gives such training in a measure that so far has not been duplicated elsewhere in the United States. (This statement challenges your most careful investigation.) It is an accredited Presbyterian school. It is the greatest technical school in America under Church supervision and gives

A Practical Education for Immediate Application in Life

The school is run on a business basis without deficit or necessity of appealing for operating expenses. At this time, however, it needs outside help to build dormitories and provide enlarged equipment for those who otherwise must be turned from its doors.

We appeal to Presbyterians who believe in providing college, technical or trade education for those debarred from our State and other institutions which require high school credits for entrance. Highland Park College is for the 90 or 95 per cent of our youth who do not go beyond the seventh or eighth grade of public school—for ambitious men and women with limited time and money. The College offers Liberal Arts, Classical, Scientific Courses, etc.; also, Machinist, Engineering, Manual Training and Domestic Science Courses, with opportunities for practical work while learning. Students can enter any time. Extremely low expenses. Student aid granted.

The immediate necessity is $25,000 to complete a new $45,000 fire-proof dormitory for women now in course of construction. This building must be completed by Sept. 1. The opening of this building will mean an immediate increased income of approximately $7,000 per annum. We also need another young men's dormitory and a new enlarged gymnasium.

Every dollar given will help equip young men and women who otherwise would be compelled to meet life's battle untrained. Every gift or endowment will pay an immediate dividend in the lives of the students received and sent forth every week in the year. A small gift promptly given for this enlargement and development at the present time will do more good than large gifts in years to come. For photographs and further information address

REV. GEORGE P. MAGILL, D.D., President, - - - DES MOINES, IOWA

Believes Ministry Orthodox

Dr. Lee Decries Misrepresentation of Faith of Young Pastors—J. A. Henry Memorial Church Is Dedicated.

PHILADELPHIA—Dr. J. Beveridge Lee on the next Sunday morning after his return from General Assembly gave to his St. Paul congregation some impressions thereof. We are living, he feels, in an age of misrepresentation. Contrary to the representations of the daily and some portion of the religious press, he believes that the ministry of the church, as a whole, holds firmly to a belief in the deity of Christ and all essential doctrines of the word, as do also the young men entering the ministry of the Presbyterian Church. He spoke with approval of the election of a moderator as a triumph over the tendency to surrender authority in the church to little groups of self-constituted leaders, and called attention to the vindication of the Board of Home Missions and the increased number of accessions to the church during the year, exceeding that of any preceding year.

New Dean of Training School

Dr. W. B. Jennings of First church, Germantown, has become dean of the faculty of the training school for Christian workers of the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches, succeeding Dr. J. Beveridge Lee. The president of the board of managers, Mrs. John R. McLean, is a member of Dr. Jennings's congregation.

More than 100 persons attended the recent Social Union dinner of the U. P. church at Hotel Walton. Dr. J. Alvin Orr of Norris Square church presided and Benjamin T. Welch of Oak Park church was toastmaster.

J. Addison Henry Memorial church, Rev. Henry E. Jones pastor, which has had remarkable growth since it was started in a private house twelve years ago, dedicated the past week a fine stone edifice. Sunday morning Rev. H. Alford Boggs, pastor of Princeton church, preached and in the evening Dr. Herrick Johnson. Services were continued during the week. The presbytery met with the church one day.

Bethany church held an exceptionally fine communion service on a recent Sunday evening. The evangelist, Mr. Lawmaster, has been secured as secretary for the brotherhood and its new house has been opened for business. The pastor is Dr. Jarvis.

Dr. W. B. Greenway of Gaston church has declined a call, twice repeated, to Second Reformed church of Somerville, N. J., one of the largest and most influential of the body.

More Publicity for Churches

Another Philadelphia daily, The Press, has joined the movement for greater publicity for religious news and has established a department in its Saturday's issue which it announces as "a true people's pulpit and a preachers' forum." In it Dr. David M. Steele, a prominent Episcopal rector, will contribute interpretations of religious affairs.

James L. Wilson, an elder of MacDowell church who has just returned from a three months' visit to Egypt and the Holy Land, is superintendent of the Sunday school of Richmond church and by it was given an enthusiastic welcome home.

Dr. John Grant Newman, pastor of Chambers-Wylie church, addressed the annual meeting of the south branch of the Philadelphia Christian Endeavor Union in Evangel church on "Success and How to Get It."

Rev. Phineas B. Kennedy, who, with Mrs Kennedy, has recently been expelled from Kortcha, southern Albania, by Greeks, was previous to going as a missionary a Presbyterian pastor in this city.

M. H. Reaser, Ph. D., president of Beechwood Institute at Jenkintown, preached the baccalaureate sermon in Grace church on the occasion of the first commencement.

W. P. White.

Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, Mrs. Chapman and Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Alexander landed last week at Vancouver, B. C., returning home from nearly two years of evangelistic work which they have conducted in Australia and New Zealand. They spent last Sabbath at Winona Lake, and Dr. Chapman and Mr. Alexander conducted the service in the Presbyterian church at Warsaw.

BETTER HEAT FOR YOUR HOME AT LESS FUEL COST

You don't have to use more fuel to get more heat. It's how it's burned that counts. You can cut down the amount of fuel you use one-third and still get more and better heat with

XXTH CENTURY FURNACES

They are equipped with an exclusive, patented air chamber and fire pot that burns the fuel from the side toward the center and gives perfect and complete combustion. Burns all kinds of fuel effectively, even cheap grades of soft coal, slack, etc. It consumes its own gases and smoke and does not throw off any dirt or soot. In short XXTH CENTURY FURNACES give you clean, healthful heat at a lower cost than any other furnace.

An Efficient, Money-Saving Furnace Sold on an Honest Guarantee

More than 40,000 XXTH CENTURY FURNACES have been sold on our common sense guarantee. Our scientific installation service insures satisfaction to you.

Write us, giving plan or sketch of home, stating size and number of rooms to be heated, and our Engineering Department will tell you the size and kind of furnace you need. Ask for FREE booklet 42 when writing.

The XXth Century Heating & Ventilating Co.,
AKRON, OHIO.

Olivet Camp

REV. NORMAN B. BARR, :: Superintendent

A Presbyterian outing center. Beautifully situated on famous Lake Geneva. Tents and cottages for boarding and Housekeeping. Send for booklet to

J. M. HESTENES, Camp Manager
WILLIAMS BAY, :: WISCONSIN

East Northfield
Massachusetts
THE NORTHFIELD
OPEN ALL THE YEAR

At the seat of the Northfield Conferences and Summer Schools. Desirable place for a spring or summer vacation. A comfortable Family Hotel with Sun Parlor. Sun parlor, steam heat, electric lights, private baths, livery and fireproof garage. Illustrated booklet free.

A. G. MOODY, Manager
H. S. STONE, Ass't. Man.

WEDDING INVITATIONS
ANNOUNCEMENTS
CALLING CARDS
FINE STATIONERY
Send for Samples
S. D. CHILDS & CO., 200 CLARK ST., CHICAGO

FREE FREE FREE
OPEN AIR
Exhibition

STEREOPTICONS
A Great Soul-Winning Campaign for the Summer Months. Indoors or outdoors.
The Christian Lantern Slide & Lecture Bureau
30 W. LAKE ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

RICHELIEU & ONTARI
NAVIGATION CO.

NIAGARA TO THE SEA
VIA THE THOUSAND ISLANDS

The grandest trip in America for health and pleasure. It includes the famous Thousand Islands, the exciting descent of the marvelous Rapids, the historic associations of old Montreal, Quebec and the famed Saguenay River, with its stupendous Capes, "Trinity" and "Eternity"

HOTELS

"Manoir Richelieu" Murray Bay, P. Q.
"Hotel Tadousac" Tadousac, P. Q.

Immunity from Hay Fever and Malaria

Send 6c postage for Illustrated Guide

H. FOSTER CHAFFEE, Pass. Traf. Mgr.
Department 15 Montreal, Canada

NIAGARA FALLS
CAPE TRINI

Luncheon to Moderator Stone

Newly Elected General Assembly Head Honored by His Home Presbytery—Crowds at World in Chicago Pageant.

CHICAGO—A complimentary luncheon under the auspices of the Presbyterian Training school, the ministers' association joining to make the occasion a tribute to Moderator Stone of General Assembly, brought together a remarkable representation of Chicago Presbyterianism on Monday last. Dr. William C. Covert presided as toastmaster and a number of addresses were made expressing the high honor in which Dr. Stone is held in Chicago. Before the presbytery meeting which preceded, and after the luncheon, the visitors were given an opportunity to observe the excellent conditions under which the training school, led by Director Howard B. McAfee, is now conducting its work. Presbytery gave up most of its session to reports from commissioners at Atlanta Assembly, Dr. Stone being received with enthusiastic applause.

Emerald Avenue church has closed the year with all obligations met and to spare. Rev. J. N. Boyd is pastor.

Daily vacation Bible schools will be held this summer at West Division street mission, the Bohemian settlement and at Olivet Institute.

The new committee of the national brotherhood appointed by General Assembly will meet in this city June 11.

Rev. Robert O. Thomas of Roseland church has been granted two months' leave of absence. He will travel in England.

CHICAGO HONORING DR. SHAW

Chicago Presbyterians are showing abundant evidence of their realization of the loss they will sustain in the departure of Dr. John Balcom Shaw. A reception at Second church last Tuesday evening drew visitors from all parts of the city. Thursday evening, June 19, under the auspices of the Church Extension Board a banquet for both ladies and gentlemen will be tendered Dr. Shaw at the La Salle hotel, to which all his friends will be welcomed. Dr. Shaw has been chairman of the board ever since its creation, and its members realize perhaps better than any others how valuable has been his service to the broad, practical Presbyterianism of Chicago. Tickets ($1.50) may be had at Church Extension headquarters, 509 South Wabash avenue.

Plans are under way for the establishing of a united Protestant work among the Poles of Chicago, of whom there are about 250,000. Fourteen Catholic churches provide for their religious welfare, one church claiming 30,000 members. So far no Protestant work has been projected on a sufficiently large scale to reach the people. Greater cooperation in religious work was discussed at a recent meeting of the members of the missionary boards whose representatives form the Cooperative Council of City Missions.

Except for an hour at noon all day last Saturday a line of nearly 100 persons stood waiting to buy tickets to the pageant of "The World in Chicago." Similar crowds were in front of the Auditorium box office Monday. This religious opera is without doubt far more popular than anything running in Chicago theaters. As in other cities, the crowd has increased greatly as the end of the stated series of performances next Saturday approaches. Special events have crowded fast at the Coliseum during the past week. One day all of the stewards in uniform paraded from the Coliseum down Michigan avenue to the tune of hymns. Over 800 men and women were in line and their strange costumes from a dozen foreign lands attracted attention from crowds all along the line of march. On Masonic day the Knights Templar in full regalia, nearly 1,000 strong, marched from the Coliseum to the Auditorium to view the pageant.

As a result of the presentation of the possibilities of Y. M. C. A. work in foreign lands by Secretaries Eddy and Brockman at a recent luncheon in this city arrangements have been made to send out ten Y. M. C. A. secretaries for foreign work as representatives of Chicago. This is one-third of the full number of additional foreign secretaries asked for. Chicago already supports two foreign secretaries. Probably a majority of the ten new ones will be sent to China. They will go out this fall and will all be college men, some being already selected.

Accessions to Second church June 1 made exactly 1,200 members received during the nine years of Dr. Shaw's pastorate in this city.

$100,000 for Highland Park College

At a banquet held in the interest of Highland Park College of Des Moines, Iowa, on May 27 a gift of $100,000 was announced as the beginning of a financial campaign that is to be launched at once. The donation is in the form of real estate and securities already accepted by the former owners of the college to retire $100,000 worth of the indebtedness incurred by the Presbytery of Des Moines when the institution was purchased. The name of the donor is to be withheld for the present. By means of this gift and others that are in sight the outlook of the college is very bright. The donor is a friend of George P. Magill, D. D., elected to the presidency of the college upon the resignation of O. H. Longwell, Ph. D., who retired from active service on account of ill health about one year ago. His resignation was accepted May 26 and Dr. Magill was elected president by a unanimous vote. Dr. Magill, former pastor of Central church, Des Moines, had been serving as associate president for over a year and this large donation came through his special efforts.

The gross receipts of this institution are now near $175,000 a year, the yearly attendance aggregates almost 2,500, coming from thirty-eight states and eleven foreign countries, and a few gifts like this will enable the college to carry on a work that no other institution has undertaken in the state.

Until the Presbyterians took charge of the institution no special effort was made to give the Bible a place in the curriculum nor to hold up Christ before this student body. Dr. Magill has led in introducing Christian influences through his short chapel talks, the introduction of Bible study and the promotion of the Christian associations.

J. W. COUNTERMINE.

Church for Growing Chicago Suburb

Following a canvass of Wilmette and Kenilworth by the Church Extension Board and with the approval of the Cooperative Council of City Missions a Presbyterian church was started in Wilmette April 30, 1911, and organized in October with 101 members. The church was begun last July and dedicated two weeks ago. It will seat 350 and is so arranged that it can be used as a Sunday school building in other years if the growth of the congregation demands a larger building. One of the families of the church donated the lot and another friend gave a pipe organ. Dedication services closed last Sunday with communion service and reception of a large number of members. Dr. J. M. Wilson has been pastor of the church from the first.

Wilmette (Ill.) Church, Recently Dedicated

6% Farm Mortgages 6%

No. 3771, $1200, 6%. Due Dec. 1, 1919. Secured by 160 acres in Ward County, N. D., 3 miles from good market town. All of the land tillable. Borrower owns adjoining land, and this is part of his home place; is a Norwegian, 40 years of age, and is well equipped with stock and machinery. Value $3000.

No 3822. $700, 6%. Due Jan. 1, 1919. Secured by a tract of land containing 160 acres; all tillable except 20 acres. Worth between $1500 and $2000. The borrower works this land himself in connection with an adjoining quarter, which he also owns, and where he lives.

No 3828. $4500, 6%. Due Jan. 1, 1919. Secured by a half section in Pierce County, N. D., 5 miles from good town, situated in a highly improved and well settled community, 230 acres under plow. Good improvements worth $2000, covered by insurance. Land is worth $9000, making a total valuation of $11,000. The borrower rents the land out to a first class tenant.

No. 3869, $1000, 6%. Due Feb. 1, 1919. The security is 160 acres in Ward County, N. D., 12 miles from market. All the land, except possibly 10 acres, tillable. 120 acres under plow. The soil is a heavy black loam over clay. Valuation $3000. The borrower with his family lives on adjoining land, which he owns and works in connection with this place.

No. 3903, $2000, 6%. Due Jan. 1, 1919. Secured by 160 acres in Ward County, N. D., 6 miles from Minot, the County Seat. The soil is a heavy black loam over clay. Borrower with his family lives on adjoining land which he owns and which he works in connection with this place. Small improvements worth about $500. Value of land without buildings $4000.

No. 3904, $800, 6%. Due April 1, 1919. 160 acres in Sheridan County, Mont., situated 6 miles from good market, as security. Every acre tillable, with 40 acres under plow. Small set of buildings. Land, without buildings, worth $2500. The borrower is a Dane, lives on this land and works it himself.

No. 3906, $1500, 6%. Due Dec. 1, 1919. 160 acres in Ward County, N. D., within two miles of good market and banking town, as security. Every acre good tillable land. The borrower is a Dane and farms this land himself. He owns 10 or 12 work horses; also a full set of machinery worth to exceed $5000, and in addition to this tract owns two other quarter sections. We value the land securing this loan at $3500.

No. 3907, $2500, 6%. Due March 1, 1918. Secured by 200 acres in Aitkin County, Minn., situated 2 miles from good market. All of the land tillable, with 140 acres under plow. Entire tract fenced. Improvements consist of a small set of buildings worth from $1000 to $1500, and covered by insurance. We value the land, without buildings, at $6000.

No. 3915, $1000, 6%. Due Dec. 1, 1919. The security for this loan is a quarter section in Itasca County, Minn. All except a few acres first class tillable land. The soil is a black loam over clay. Small set of buildings worth $900. Land, without buildings, valued at $3000. The borrower is a Swede, lives with his family on this land and works it himself.

Acceptance can be made by wire at our expense, if desired, with the understanding that ample time for investigation be allowed. We will also send papers for inspection to your bank if you wish. These are only a few of our offerings. Other offerings with descriptive pamphlet "C" will be forwarded if you will fill in blank below and send us. Since this house was established, 30 years ago, no investor in our mortgages has ever lost a dollar, principal or interest, by reason of such investment. Highest references furnished.

CAPITAL AND SURPLUS OVER $350,000.00

E. J. LANDER & CO., Grand Forks, N.D.

I am interested in safe investments and shall be glad to receive your descriptive pamphlet "C" explaining about Farm Mortgages.

Name..

Address..

Memo..
(State what amount you might be interested in and when)

....

....

Solve Suspended Roll Problem

New York Brotherhood Urges Pastors to Co-operate—Dine the Outgoing Missionaries—Would Endow Work for Immigrants.

NEW YORK—At a meeting of the board of delegates of the brotherhood of the Presbytery of New York last week cheering reports were made regarding the work of the strangers' bureau. The chairman, George H. Richards, who has given much time to the launching of this conservation agency, feels that the organization is destined to solve the problem of the "suspended roll," which was considered with much seriousness at the Atlanta Assembly. Assistant F. A. Wallis urges pastors throughout the church to give Mr. Richards their cooperation in fowarding names and prospective addresses of Presbyterians who have come to reside in New York.

At the complimentary dinner given by the Presbyterian Social Union of New York last Monday at Hotel Savoy more than a hundred newly commissioned missionaries and missionaries on furlough under direction of the Foreign Board of the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches were present.

Will Answer Dr. Fox

At the meeting of the Presbytery of New York in Old First church next Monday afternoon two of the principal items of business will be the consideration of the answer to the protest filed by Dr. John Fox against the ordination of the young men who were examined at the last meeting of presbytery and the application for the ordination of Bayard Dodge, a son of Cleveland H. Dodge, who graduated from Union Seminary three weeks ago and who is under appointment to the teaching staff of the Syrian Protestant College at Beirut, Syria. Dr. Henry S. Coffin will read the answer to the protest of Dr. Fox.

The Methodists of Brooklyn are facing the problem which confronts their church in its efforts to deal with the immigrant population of that borough, for which they feel themselves responsible. Dr. George C. Fort of Hanson Place M. E. church, in speaking before the annual meeting of the Brooklyn and Long Island Church Society last week, said that the concern of the Methodists should be aroused to the point where they will be willing not only to see that their immediate organization should hold its own but to push forward into those sections of the city where so many of the older churches were being forced to evacuate. He further urged that an endowment sufficient to cope with this new situation is an imperative.

William P. Merrill, D. D., of Brick church will deliver the commencement address to the graduating class of Bloomfield Seminary June 9.

Over 200 members and friends of the Tremont church of New York City assembled May 22 in Bronx Masonic temple to celebrate the fifth anniversary of Rev. J. Henry Hartman's pastorate. Congratulatory resolutions were presented on behalf of the officers of the church and the pastor was presented with a purse by the ladies' aid society.

Send Out Many Missionaries

At the annual conference of newly commissioned missionaries under the direction of the Board of Foreign Missions, now in session in the board's assembly hall, it has been announced that fifty-nine regularly appointed missionaries were added to the force on the field during the year ending May 1, with eleven deaths and fifteen resignations. Fifteen short term workers were also sent out. It was also announced that ninety-four candidates are under appointment and will sail during this fiscal year.

The annual sermon to missionaries under appointment by the Foreign Board was delivered by Dr. Jowett at his afternoon service last Sunday. Specially reserved seats were assigned to the missionaries. This was the last service Dr. Jowett will conduct before he sails for his vacation abroad.

The preachers who will occupy Dr. Jowett's pulpit in his absence and the dates assigned to each are: Hugh Black, D. D., June 8; Robert Speer, D. D., June 15 and 22; J. Wilbur Chapman, D. D., June 29; Charles R. Erdman, D. D., July 6; Rev. John M. MacInnis of Halifax, N. S., July 13; John Thomas, D. D., of Liverpool, July 20 and 27; John Daniel Jones, D. D., of Bournemouth, Aug. 3 and 10; Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, Aug. 17; Len G. Broughton, D. D., of London, Aug. 24 and 31, and Rev. James Mursell of Brisbane, Sept. 7.

Central church, Brooklyn, has granted its pastor, John F. Carson, D. D., an additional month's leave of absence. He is remaining at his home for the time being and hopes to find his former good vigor returning to him during these days of absolute quiet and rest.

Alumni Help to Raise $100,000

Washington and Jefferson College Carrying on Energetic Campaign—Wilkinsburg Church Will Remember Anniversary.

PITTSBURG—The alumni of Washington and Jefferson College have been conducting a whirlwind money raising campaign in Pittsburg during the past few days. It was hoped by the association to get $100,000. Up to date about $75,000 has been reported. At the special dinner Tuesday, May 27, addresses were made by Chancellor S. B. McCormick of the University of Pittsburg, Dr. W. E. Slemmens of Washington, Pa.; Professor Wilbur J. McKay and Dr. J. D. Moffatt, president of the institution. Dr. Moffatt made an eloquent appeal for volunteers to continue the canvass until June 30 in the hope that the full amount would be obtained.

Calvary church, Wilkinsburg, is preparing to observe the tenth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. F. Dean Miller with a week of services beginning June 22. The anniversary sermon will be preached Wednesday evening, June 25, by Dr. W. L. McEwan, who preached the sermon at the installation service ten years ago. Dr. W. A. Jones, who also took part in the installation services, will address the young people on Friday evening. Mr. Miller went from the seminary to the pastorate of Calvary church when it was a mission. Large additions have been received from year to year, until there is a membership of about 500. A commodious church building was erected seven years ago and is already too small for the growing congregation and Sabbath school.

Second church, Wilkinsburg, Rev. C. G. Jordan pastor, is holding all services in the Sunday school room while an effort is being made to improve the acoustic properties of the new auditorium.

New Covenant mission, the only Christian mission for Jews in Pittsburg, is in the midst of a campaign to awaken greater interest in its work. Six special meetings have been arranged in as many different sections of the city. The meeting in the Homewood section was held May 25-26 in St. James Episcopal church.

A temperance tea was given at temperance headquarters, Conestoga building, Tuesday afternoon, June 3, in honor of Miss Marie Brehm, secretary of the temperance committee, and Mrs. Ellen M. Watson. P. W. Snyder.

Will Aid Temperance Fight

Rev. Daniel A. Poling, who has been prominent in Christian Endeavor work for a number of years, has been made superintendent of the national temperance and citizenship department of the United Society of Christian Endeavor. Three friends have assured his salary for three years and he will assist in a nationwide temperance and civic campaign. Last Fall Mr. Poling polled a large vote as Prohibition candidate for governor of Ohio.

Preaches for Glendale College

Rev. Edward Mack of Lane Seminary will preach the baccalaureate sermon of Glendale College at Glendale (Ohio) church June 8. At the commencement on the following Tuesday Miss Emilie McVea, dean of women at the University of Cincinnati, will deliver an address.

THIS CHEST MADE OF FRAGRANT TENNESSEE RED CEDAR

At Factory Prices
Direct to You.
Freight Paid.

You will admire this practical, beautiful and exquisitely finished Solid Red Cedar Chest. Moth and dust proof, massive, durable, convenient; a safe place for your furs, woolens, etc. Appropriate for gifts on all occasions. Will last for generations and become an heirloom in the family. Sold under absolute guarantee. Local agents wanted. Write for interesting Booklet at once.

CEDAR PRODUCTS COMPANY. South Bend, Ind.

PIPE ORGANS
of TWO MANUALS or Larger

Every phase of organ building given the most careful consideration.

W. W. KIMBALL CO.
Established 1857 CHICAGO

7% FARM MORTGAGES 8%

Title guaranteed. On choice farms in Panhandle and fertile valleys of Eastern New Mexico. No loan made for more than thirty per cent of value, nor closed until examined and approved by our experienced examiner who is an officer of Company. We collect and remit interest free. Larger loans drawn to net investors 7 per cent; small ones, 8 per cent. Write for sample application, references, etc.

The Union Mortgage Company, Clovis, New Mexico

5½% and 6% Interest

The most careful investor always selects a choice farm mortgage when placing funds. Ask for detailed information, references and list of offerings.

G. W. HART, Pres. The Merchants Bank
BRYANT SOUTH DAKOTA

6% NET GUARANTEED AS WELL AS BACKED BY 20 YEARS OF SUCCESS

Farm Mortgages sold by us net six per cent, and we guarantee their payment. Interest remitted the day due. Write today for booklet and references and ask your local banker to investigate us.

BROAD & BOMAR, Bankers, Ft. Worth, Tex.

REAL ESTATE LOANS

6% Safest, Most Promising and Profitable Investment on the Market Today 6%

During the Past 30 Years no Client has Lost a Dollar.

BEVERLY H. BONFOEY
Send for Booklet B UNIONVILLE, MO.

6%

GILT EDGE SMALL MORTGAGES

Amount	Security
$2 000	$7.500
1,400	5,175
1,100	5,975
1,000	6,200
700	4,425

We have been supplying mortgage investments like these to Continent readers for many years, and would like to tell you more about them. Address a postal inquiry to

ASSOCIATED MORTGAGE INVESTORS
KINGMAN N. ROBINS, Treasurer, Granite Bldg., Rochester, N.Y.

The safest investments from the viewpoints of
INCOME and SECURITY
are carefully selected
REAL ESTATE MORTGAGES

When made and guaranteed by experienced and financially responsible persons and corporations there is nothing better. For years we have made such loans in one of the best agricultural districts in America. Full information on request

THE JEFFERSON TRUST COMPANY
McAlester, Okholama

CHARACTER AND EFFICIENCY ARE DEVELOPED IN THE BLACKBURN COLLEGE COMMUNITY, where young men and young women do manual work three hours a day under university trained teachers. Practical courses in agriculture and domestic science. Full classical course. For information write, Blackburn—A Self Help College—Carlinville, Ill

6% SECURITY, RATE AND SERVICE 6%

Is what we offer YOU in our FIRST LIEN REAL ESTATE MORTGAGES. They are placed only on income bearing property on a basis of 40 per cent actual value.

INTEREST and PRINCIPAL remitted on due date by NEW YORK check.

EIGHT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES attest the soundness of these mortgages by purchasing in increasing volume.

Write for list, information and references to

REYNOLDS MORTGAGE CO.
R. B. BISHOP, Vice-Pres.
FORT WORTH TEXAS

SAFETY AND 7%

IDAHO offers today a splendid field for safe and profitable investments. Carefully selected first mortgages on improved CITY AND FARM property are securities which will give you no worry, but will return regularly and promptly an excellent interest return, ranging from 6 per cent to 7 per cent, and occasionally even higher. The city of Boise has trebled its population in ten years, and the agricultural districts in which the IDAHO TITLE AND TRUST COMPANY and THE NATIONAL TRUST AND SAVINGS COMPANY operate are among the most productive in this prosperous state.

CHARLES B. COXE
President
BOISE :: IDAHO

COLONIAL TRUST AND SAVINGS BANK

La Salle Street, N. E. Corner Adams
CHICAGO

Resources over $8,000,000.00

Those in search of reliable investment at 5% and 6% should communicate with our Bond Department.

3% interest on Savings.
2% interest on Checking Accounts.

$25,000,000 Loaned; not one dollar lost for an investor. J. L. Pettyjohn & Co., of Olathe, Kans., will invest your funds in absolutely safe First Farm Mortgages to net you excellent interest return. Write them for particulars and references.

6 and 7 % Sure

When you purchase from us a mortgage on Improved Georgia City or Farm Property you take as little chance as is humanly possible. You receive from 6 to 7 per cent and you can be sure of receiving it regularly. Our property appraisals are the work of successful experts. We are extremely careful in our estimates of the moral hazárds. We protect your principal with ample security. Let us send you our list of loans and interesting literature. Address "Dept. F."

Sessions Loan & Trust Co., Marietta, Ga.

FIRST MORTGAGE FARM LOANS

6% We offer only select first mortgages on improved Northeastern Oklahoma farms at 40% value of farm. Interest collected semi-annually and remitted investor without charge. 6%

SEND FOR BOOKLET.

PARKER-WISE INVESTMENT CO.
VINITA, OKLAHOMA

Financial Situation

Two Railways Thrown Into Hands of Receivers—High Money Rates Blamed—Currency Legislation Is Subject of Study.

A graphic example of the results of high rates for money, together with the increase in operating expenses of railroads and rise in wages, was presented last week when receivers were asked for two railroads, the St. Louis and San Francisco—the "Frisco" road—and the Chicago and Eastern Illinois. The latter road is declared to be solvent, but the receivership was asked by creditors on account of close financial relations between the two lines. It is said that the immediate cause of the receivership of the Frisco road was failure to make arrangements to meet $2,250,000 short time notes due last Monday. Officers of both roads charge state and federal government restrictions as responsible in part for their present plight.

This trouble by roads in the central South, in the estimation of many students of railway problems, is but the result of the pressure of restricted rates on one side and of increasing wages on the other. The financial reports of all roads of the country for March show a falling off in net earnings of 5.4 per cent compared with the same month a year ago. The prospect for April income, with all the cost of floods and delayed shipments chargeable to that month, is not very promising, although figures are not yet compiled. There is room for both optimism and pessimism in the fact that the gross income for all the roads in March increased 5.6 per cent over last year, at the same time during which the net earnings decreased. This means that operating expenses were higher this year than a year ago, but as the net earnings constitute the basis of dividends, the increase in gross means little to the holders of stock.

Gain for First Quarter of Year

In spite of the general decrease in net earnings the roads of the Northwest show a strong gain in both gross and net, and for the first three months of the year all the roads show a gain in net earnings over the same months the previous year of 10.9 per cent. The Pennsylvania road west of Pittsburg, however, showed a decrease of $1,500,000 in net earnings and the Baltimore and Ohio nearly as large an amount for the same period.

Formation of the currency bill which congress is expected to tackle as soon as the tariff measure is out of the way is attracting considerable attention from legislators and bankers. It is said that the bill will contain provisions whereby the secretary of the treasury will be relieved from the pressure to put government deposits in certain banks or chain of banks and to leave the money there in times of stress when, if influenced solely by the needs of the government, it might be withdrawn.

Mortgage Companies Perform Service

Questions sometimes arise in the minds of investors in farm mortgages as to the need of a company to handle the simple operation of loaning money to a farmer who needs to buy more stock or add to his equipment. The answer is readily found in the detailed care with which the modern farm mortgage company investigates each risk when a farmer applies for a loan. The owner's estimate of the value of his land and improvements is not taken. Experts appraise his property and the loan is based on this report. Such work cannot be done by individuals at a distance; in fact the nature of the farm loan business makes it a mail order proposition. There need be not the slightest fear of loss when the company is picked with care.

Brief Bits of Business News

—The English portion of the Chinese loan was oversubscribed ten times. Berlin investors also seemed anxious to get a portion of this issue of bonds.

—The International Harvester Company in 1912 expended nearly half a million dollars for welfare features affecting the working conditions, comfort, life and health of its employees. Of this amount $32,000 was paid out as pensions to disabled employees. This company has abolished night work for women in all its plants and has established a minimum wage of $8 a week.

6% Principal and Interest Assured by the Trust Mortgage feature, the one thing that makes this Company's 6 per cent Gold Mortgage Bonds different from the other realty bonds that you have known.

One of the most attractive, and at the same time one of the safest, investments offered to conservative investors.

Write today for new illustrated Booklet 25.

NEW YORK REAL ESTATE SECURITY CO.

Assets over $17,000,000

42 BROADWAY NEW YORK

Selected FARM LOANS

I offer only First Mortgage Farm Loans made by thoroughly reliable firms who have stood the Test of Time. I diversify as to climate, rate and crop yield. Interest and principal collected free.

Ask for Circular No. 101

G·F·CARSON
717 JEFFERSON BUILDING, PEORIA, ILLINOIS.

NORTH DAKOTA
FARM MORTGAGES
THE IDEAL INVESTMENT

30 years Residence and Business activities in Banking and making Farm Mortgages. Write for my Booklet, Investment Facts, and List .075

WALTER L. WILLIAMSON, LISBON NORTH DAKOTA

SEASONED
North Dakota Farm Loans
and
FARM LAND BONDS
Netting 6%

Write for particulars regarding our investment service.
Highest references.

R. C. KITTEL & CO., CASSELTON NORTH DAKOTA

FARM MORTGAGES bearing 6% interest, first liens on improved farms. Original papers held by the investor. Principal and interest GUARANTEED; interest payable at the Hanover National Bank, New York. Thousands of satisfied customers for references. We've been doing the same thing for TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS

The W. C. Belcher Land Mortgage Co.
Capital $320,000.00.
Worth. - - Texas.

6 1/2% Net First Mortgages

on improved OKLAHOMA FARMS from $200 up are safe investments. I have sold them for years to ultra conservative investors with entire satisfaction. Write today for list and interesting BOOKLET "E." Refer to Dun or Bradstreet.

GEO. R. FISH, Investment Banker, Ardmore, Okla.

High Grade Farm Loans
Oklahoma Farm Mortgage Co., Oklahoma City U. S. A.

Work for Sabbath Observance

Tacoma Mayor Supports Move of Churches—Whitworth College Shows Increase in College Students.

TACOMA—A Sabbath observance campaign is on in the city of Tacoma. Practically all of the leaders in religious work are enlisted in it. Though the campaign has only begun, the friends of the European Sunday are showing marked signs of nervousness. The mayor and many of the leading business and professional men are supporting the movement heartily.

Congregationalism suffers a great loss in the resignation of Dr. Edward T. Ford from First church. In his going to the East Whitworth College loses a valuable trustee.

Dr. Murdoch McLeod of First church, a delegate to the Pan-Presbyterian Council in Aberdeen, was given sixty days' leave of absence, with the privilege of extending it if he so desires. On the eve of his departure with Mrs. McLeod the church gave them a large reception and presented them with an envelope, in which provision was made for the expenses of the journey.

Whitworth College has just closed another successful year, graduating eight students from the collegiate department. While the academic department has not been neglected, there has been an increase of more than 50 per cent in those taking collegiate work. The baccalaureate sermon was preached June 8 in First church by Dr. Frank M. Silsley of Westminster church, Seattle. The commencement address was given by Professor E. S. Meany of the University of Washington.

Rev. Robert H. Milligan of Immanuel church used the North Pacific Board's slides on Korea. His lecture was so profitable and interesting that he was asked to repeat it in Bethany church.

Richard M. Hayes, D. D., the retired pastor of Olympia First church, has been critically ill, but is now believed to be well on the way to recovery.

Rev. James A. Longbottom has left Elbe and Mineral and take up the work at Johnson. Wash.
O. T. M.

Editors Fill Pulpits of Omaha

Tell What Papers Are Doing for Morals of the State—Evangelistic Association Is Preparing for Sunday Meetings.

OMAHA—Congregations in this city were given the unusual experience June 1 of being addressed by editors. Thirty-five newspaper men, in attendance at the Nebraska Editorial Association meeting, occupied city pulpits, speaking on the theme, "What the Press of Nebraska Is Doing to Raise the Standard of Morals in the State."

The Presbyterian Ministers' Association has elected as officers Rev. C. C. Meek, Castellar Street, president; Rev. William A. Pollock, First U. P. church, South Omaha, vice-president, and Rev. A. E. Lehmann, Parkvale, secretary-treasurer.

A committee of five has made a personal visit to Rev. W. A. Sunday to renew Omaha's invitation for a series of meetings. Practically all the Protestant religious forces are united in the invitation, as well as several civic organizations. The guaranty fund has been pledged. The Omaha Evangelistic Association has been incorporated, which proposes prosecuting plans for the meetings despite the evangelist's inability to give Omaha a definite answer.

Many Sunday school workers of the city have expressed themselves as pleased with the action of the Assembly on graded lessons, particularly that action permitting the purchase of lessons from the board after next September. In Omaha these lessons have been a success. Schools were contemplating their use, even though they must needs purchase them from publishing houses other than our own.

Much interest is developing in this year's sessions of the Summer School of Missions to be held in the city June 23-30.

A banquet at Third church May 27 was given by its Sunday school officers and teachers to all new scholars in attendance three Sundays or more and for those who had procured these fifty-two new pupils. About 100 attended.

The eighth anniversary of the pastorate of Melvin V. Higbee, D. D., at North church was celebrated by the congregation tendering him and Mrs. Higbee a reception May 27.

RALPH H. HOUSEMAN.

Getting a Village to Church

"Pilgrim Sunday" and its almost marvelous success in Wyoming, a village of 1,450 persons near Cincinnati, has been made known through the Associated Press reports. There are evidences that the idea will spread over the country, and the plan of operation as explained by Rev. A. L. Wilson of Wyoming church will be useful to other communities. Early in the winter, following a meeting of men in the Presbyterian church to hear a speaker from China, the Wyoming Welfare Association was formed of men of the village, irrespective of religious faith. This association had committees on entertainment, village improvement, social and moral uplift. The latter committee recently reported that the churches as upbuilders of the community were not recognized as they should be and recommended that May 25 be named when everyone in town should go to some church.

Circular letters with pledge cards were sent to each home and committees appointed to collect and check up cards. The mayor, a Presbyterian elder, issued a proclamation calling upon everyone to attend church. Committees of men not largely interested in church were put in charge of small districts to visit all those who had not promised to attend and to meet their excuses. The boarding house keeper who complained that her boarders wanted a hot meal promised to attend church when the committeeman persuaded the boarders that a cold lunch was highly acceptable that day.

It is said that twenty shut-ins and the policemen were the only people in the village who were not in church. The Episcopal church brought in chairs from neighboring houses, and there were 100 more people in the Presbyterian church than ever before. The Baptist and Catholic churches were also crowded.

Regular services were held and there was nothing but the extra friendliness of the members toward the visitors to indicate that an effort had been made to reach everyone in town.

Cincinnati to Do Likewise

"Pilgrim Sunday" in Cincinnati on June 15 is to be an echo of the remarkable occurrence at Wyoming on the last Sabbath in May. The response to the appeal was so marvelous that Cincinnati seconded the initiative move made by Rev. G. R. Robbins, and every denomination has fallen into line to make June 15 the greatest churchgoing day in Cincinnati's history.

REN MULFORD, JR.

Smith Granite
MONUMENTS
Crosses, Statuary, Mausoleums are built from exclusive designs, by expert workmen, in the world's best granite—WESTERLY. They are always and ever ALL a monument should be. They merit YOUR serious consideration before purchasing a monument. Write for booklets.
THE SMITH GRANITE CO., Westerly, R I.
Representatives in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Syracuse.

Professors, Teachers and Others
(Both Men and Women)
Join Archaeological and Geological Exploration Expedition on Horseback under the distinguished Geologist, Professor James Perrin Smith of Stanford University, from the Cliff-dwellings in S. W. Colorado by Great Natural Bridges in S. E. Utah, thence down Colorado River and through Grand Canyon, Arizona—the expedition covering the region of the World's Greatest Natural Wonders, July 9 to August 23. For particulars and Reservations address R. R. Smith, Cortez, Colorado.

The Great Natural Bridges
in UTAH—the greatest in the world—OPEN TO VISITORS, men and women, in JULY and AUGUST. Travel by team. Complete arrangements for comfort and pleasure. Address W. R. LEWIS, Lewis, Colorado.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

PULPITS, Platform Chairs, Sunday School Seats, Collection Plates, Church Pews, School Desks, Opera Chairs, Lodge and Bank Furniture, Office Desks.
Ask for Catalog by number only
C105 Church Furnit're | School Desks S105
L105 Lodge Furniture | Opera Chairs O105
B106 Bank Furniture | Office Desks D105
E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO., CHICAGO

We Will Pay You $120.00
to distribute religious literature in your community. Sixty days work. Experience not required. Man or woman. Opportunity for promotion. Spare time may be used. International Bible Press, 410 Winston Bldg., Philadelphia.

Church Organs
BUILT BY
Hutchings Organ Co., 18 Tremont Street BOSTON, MASS

1500 MÖLLER PIPE ORGANS
Now in use. For Catalogues, Address
M. P. MÖLLER, HAGERSTOWN, MD.

HARRY W. JONES
Church Architect :: MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA

18,000 CHURCHES USE THE THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
Noiseless, dust-proof, self-collecting, saves ¼ cost other services. Uses shallow glass—no tipping of head. Our SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER makes purchase easy. Outfits on trial—state number of communicants.
Thomas Communion Service Co., Box I, Lima, Ohio.

—MONEY—
Do you need it in your Church work? The International Banks will help you raise it. Write us.
The International Church Supply Co.
3 Clinton Bldg., Columbus, O.

ILLUSTRATE YOUR SERMONS
Pastors! Write for Our Special Stereopticon Offer.
Detroit Stereopticon Supply Co., Detroit, Mich.

PEWS-PULPITS-S-S-SEATING
Write Today for Our "Catalog B 1"
Authoritative Guide on Church Seating; valuable suggestions on designs, finishes, seating plans, etc. Send Floor Plan and state fully your requirements
Blackboards, School Supplies, Catalog B1
School Desks, Catalog B2
American Seating Company 218 S. WABASH AV. CHICAGO NEW YORK, BOSTON, PHILADELPHIA

HALLOWED HYMNS NEW and OLD
$25 per 100, not prepaid. 35 cents per copy by mail.
Returnable samples mailed to prospective purchasers.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York or Chicago

CHURCH PEWS
AND PULPIT FURNITURE
Globe Furniture Co., Ltd., 10 Park Place, Northville, Mich.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 28
THE C. S. BELL Co. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

MENEELY BELL CO
TROY, N.Y. AND 177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY.
BELLS

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL
Sweet Tone Far Sounding Durable
Catalogue Free.
AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

Church Chime Peal BELLS
Memorial Bells a Specialty.
McShane Bell Foundry Co., Baltimore, Md., U.S.A.

CHURCH SEATING
HANEY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.

Ministerial Obituary

Rev. Samuel Ward

Rev. Samuel Ward died in St. Mary's hospital, Emporia, Kan., May 10. He had been taken to the hospital for an operation. Mr. Ward was born in Reading, Berkshire county, England, May 3, 1825. He came to this country with his parents at the age of 6 years and lived with them in Zanesville, Ohio, for many years. He was educated in Marietta College and Lane Theological Seminary and was ordained in the Presbyterian ministry by Alton Presbytery Sept. 30, 1855. He was married April 10, 1856, to Mary Jane Purdy in Vergennes, Ill. They went to Kansas in 1882 and lived at Delphos and Walton before going to Emporia twenty-five years ago. Mr. Ward had held pastorates in Indiana, Illinois and Kansas.

Mrs. Ward survives her husband, and their five children are Dr. W. D. Ward of Los Angeles, Cal., for many years identified with the College of Emporia; Rev. S. I. Ward of Smith Center, Kan.; Rev. C. E. B. Ward of New York City; Mrs. G. W. Hutton of Fayette, Idaho, and Mrs. J. D. McGill of Enid, Okla. A brother, W. D. Ward, of Albuquerque, N. M., and a sister, Mrs. Sarah Perkins of Grand Rapids, Mich., also survive.

The funeral services were held May 12 in Arundel Avenue church, conducted by the pastor, Rev. S. H. Maxwell.

Rev. John M. McDonald

Rev. John McCluskey McDonald was killed by a railroad train near his home in Lincoln, Neb., May 15. Mr. McDonald was born in West Alexander, Pa., in 1833, graduated from McCormick Seminary in 1866 and was ordained the same year by the Presbytery of Winnebago. He was pastor at Winneconne, Wis., from 1866 until 1869 and at Algona, Iowa, from 1869 until 1873. He moved to Nebraska in 1874 and successfully ministered to a number of churches until 1893, when he moved to Lincoln for the purpose of educating his sons. In the meantime he supplied vacant churches. He married in 1871 Janette Piercy and the widow and four sons are left. One son, George, is engaged in business in California. Gilmour is a professor at Ames College, Rosmond is preaching the gospel in Crosby, N. D., and Kenneth is a missionary in Nueva Caceres, Philippine islands.

Some General Assembly Echoes

—One of the significant incidents of the Southern Presbyterian Church's Atlanta sessions was the size of the vote by which it was determined that the church should stay in the Federal Council of Churches. As told in The Continent last week, it was anticipated that strong opposition would develop to the council and its work under a somewhat prevalent impression that the organization was tending exclusively to "social" Christianity. But after illuminating consideration and discussion the opposition to the resolution to remain in the council was routed, 138 ayes and 37 noes.

—For the committee on freedmen of the Northern Church Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston, chairman, reported that the Board of Home Missions and the Board of Freedmen are already conferring over plans to meet the recognized need for more churches among the colored people in northern cities. This was stated as an answer to several overtures begging the Assembly to do something under this head. The colored commissioners seemed more concerned about this than any other matter.

—Mrs. McLean, chairman of the directors of the Philadelphia Deaconess School, took with her to Atlanta four of the young women under training in the institution, believing this living exhibit would be the school's most effective plea. In spite of this the U. S. A. Assembly again failed to recognize deaconesses as a part of the Presbyterian system.

—Dr. William Henry Roberts, the best known Presbyterian in America, with this U. S. A. Assembly just passed came to the thirtieth anniversary of his service as stated clerk. The Assembly recognized the occasion with congratulatory and laudatory resolutions.

—The following members were added to the U. S. A. Executive Commission: Moderator Stone, Dr. E. H. Pence of Detroit, H. P. Crowell of Chicago, John L. Severance of Cleveland and B. F. Edwards of St. Louis.

Good Things in This Issue

The observance of the Sabbath is one of the fundamentals for which the American people must stand, but the increasing demand that people shall be permitted to enjoy athletic contests and other diversions on that day, specially in summer, is in many places undermining the resistance of the church forces. In this issue of The Continent are two articles and two incidents which may bring strength to those who are fighting for a better Sabbath observance. Priscilla Leonard has an article on Sunday railway travel, page 789, and on page 787 is a "human interest" story of the effect of Sunday work in the big steel mills upon a small church in South Chicago. On page 796 is an incident of a recently converted Indian who refused to do Sunday work during threshing time. Tacoma is in the throes of a campaign for Sabbath observance, page 806.

Suggestions on page 790 of a sane Fourth of July will be found helpful. Next week William T. Ellis will have an article about a man who helped to start the "sane Fourth" idea, Henry B. F. Macfarland, whose important achievements make a long list.

The issue next week will be Vacation Number, with a host of hints of splendid ways to spend the summer. Moderator John Timothy Stone will have a devotional article in the same number.

Calendar and Record

Presbytery Meetings

Nebraska City—Lincoln First, June 17, 1:30.
Redstone—Uniontown, June 9, 10:30 a. m.

Ordinations

Dallas—J. N. Coker.

Resignations

Minnesota—Delhi: M. R. Myers.
New York—East Palmyra Jasper: Edwin C. Hull.
Ohio—Wickliffe: Francis I. Woollett; Ashtabula Prospect Street: A. E. Stockham.

Calls

Colorado—Pueblo Mesa: F. A. Hatch, Denver.
Idaho—Buhl: O. Jones Roberts; Twin Falls: J. F. Shepherd, Toledo, Ohio.
Illinois—Springfield First: D. C. MacLeod, Washington, D. C.; Decatur First: C. E. Jenny, St. Louis.
Indiana—Brookston: James T. Mordy.
Iowa—Nodaway: A. E. Kiser, Creston; Greene: John W. Chase, Culbertson, Mont.
Manitoba—Cartwright: W. J. McIvar, Towner, N. D.
New York—Cortland First: Leon S. Lacy, Sodus Center.
Ohio—Hicksville: A. E. Stockham, Ashtabula; Barberton: F. I. Woollett.

Installations

Illinois—Lincoln First: Melvin R. Laird, May 14.
Michigan—Flint First: H. D. Borley, May 22.
New York—Holley: Louis Lawrence, May 20.
Ohio—Hanoverton: A. S. Wilson, May 26; Augusta Still Fork: A. S. Wilson, May 27.
South Dakota—Flandreau Second: Kersey J. Cardy.

Supplies Arranged

South Dakota—Goldenrod and Mayflower: William Mason; White: John McMillan; White Lake: Marvin Meyer.
Nebraska—Walthill: R. H. Weinland.

Vacant Pulpits

New York—Elba.

Accessions

Idaho—Bellevue, 4, May 25, J. H. Barton, temporary supply.
Illinois—Willmette, 27, June 1, J. M. Wilson.
Iowa—Oelwein, 46, May 25, F. J. Nichols.
New Jersey—Williamstown, 20, May 25, H. S. McCool.
New York—Garfield Stephentown, 15, May 25, W. A. Wagar.
North Dakota—Fargo First, 21, May 25, F. G. Behner.
Ohio—Lakewood, 25, June 1, Alfred J. Wright; Cleveland Windermere, 10, May 25, L. F. Ruf.
Pennsylvania—Forty Fort, 138, April 27, Joseph L. Weisley.

HISTORIC PHOTOGRAPHS
of the
GENERAL ASSEMBLIES
Held in Atlanta Ga., May 15-23, 1913

An epoch-making event, the greatest Presbyterian gathering in the history of the world.

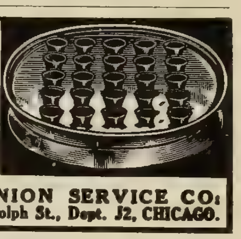
Every church should secure these splendid portraits for permanent framing, as they will have an ever increasing interest and value.

Portrait group, A. R. P. Synod, 11x14—$1.
Panorama, Southern Assembly, 10x30—$2.
Panorama, Northern Assembly, 12x36—$2.
Panorama, U. P. Assembly, 10x30—$2.
Order covering all the above only $6.
Group, three moderators, 5x8 —$1.
Group, seven ex-moderators, 10x12—$1.

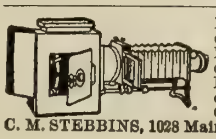
Remit by Money Order or N. Y. Exchange and address all orders to

S. A. DUNCAN, 754 Piedmont Av., Atlanta, Ga.

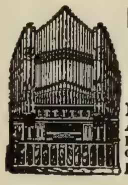
LARGE ATTENDANCE SUNDAY EVENING
Your Sunday Evening problem will be solved if you will make it a song service and use
GREAT REVIVAL HYMNS
Try it during the summer months, you will be surprised. Prepare now by sending for a copy of this popular book. It can be used in all Church work and will arouse new interest on the part of your members.
THE RODEHEAVER COMPANY
Publishers of Songs for Men, Chorus Collection, Solos, Duets, etc.
12-14 W. Washington St., : : : Chicago



INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
"Noiseless" Cushioned Trays with a new Short Glass. Trays interlock. All glasses well spaced. Outfits sent on trial.
DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
20 East Randolph St., Dept. J2, CHICAGO.



Illustrated Sermons They draw—the impression lasts. Good Lantern with Electric Rheostat or Acetylene Generator, $29.00 Large stock of Slides, Stereopticons and Educational Apparatus Get our latest catalog and terms
C. M. STEBBINS, 1028 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.



PIPE AND REED ORGANS AND PIANOS
Pure, sweet tone. Superior quality. Attractive styles. We sell direct at factory prices. Write, stating which catalog is desired.
HINNERS ORGAN CO., PEKIN, ILL.

DON'T THROW AWAY YOUR DISCARDED Furniture, Clothing, Magazines, Papers, etc. YOU can do great good by sending them to the Chicago Christian Industrial League, helping the church to find work for the idle, to shelter the homeless, to feed the hungry and to preach the gospel to the men of the down town streets. Over 1,000 men helped annually. Every little counts. Send a card to GEORGE A. KILBEY, 12 East 12th Street, Chicago, Ill.

Attractive Sunday Evenings
With McIntosh illustrated sermons. Write for catalog.
McIntosh Stereopticon Co.
37 Randolph Street :: Chicago, Illinois

SLIDE RENTING. STEREOPTICONS. NEW METHOD & SUBJECTS. CHURCHES REDUCED RATES.
MOORE-HUBBELL & CO. 713 MASONIC TEMPLE.

WANTS AND HELPS

Rates for classified advertising, Three Cents a Word, including the address. If desired a "box" address may be used, responses being sent to THE CONTINENT and forwarded to advertiser.

CASH MUST ACCOMPANY ORDER

MISCELLANEOUS

TEN MINUTES AND LESS THAN FOUR CENTS WILL bring good returns if you invest them in a letter giving the names and addresses of men and boys who have come to Chicago to live. The Presbyterian Brotherhood will be the connecting link between them and the nearest church. Write to Dr. Francis M. Fox, 509 S. Wabash ave., Chicago.

PRESBYTERIAN ASSEMBLY OF THE SOUTHWEST, Young People's conference, Hollister, Mo. Conference July 29, Aug. 5, 1913; assembly, Aug. 6-17, 1913. Write the secretary for information. E. E. Stringfield, secretary, 3614 E. 59th St., Kansas City, Mo.

SUCCESSFUL CITY PASTOR, YOUNG MAN, WOULD like to change to town or village work. Address "V," Continent.

REV. F. HARVEY OF REDMOND, ORE., WILL SUPPLY information to church-attending Presbyterians respecting climate of Central Oregon; irrigating advantages; 300 sunny days; no cyclones.

WANTED — A GOOD PRESBYTERIAN PHYSICIAN. Splendid opening. Address Rev. Fred J. Hart, Okanogan, Wash.

PAUL J. GILBERT, WHO IS NOW WITH THE SMITH-Robins Men and Religion Party in their world tour, would like to correspond at once with a pastor desiring the services of an assistant. Address 124 E. 28th st., New York.

SCIENCE, after giving the manufacturer electricity, steam and machinery with which to make things, contributed just one factor to help sell them—

Advertising Art

Illustrations and engravings that picture his wares in a life-like manner, introduce them to the public and create sales and profits for the advertiser.

Barnes-Crosby Company makes illustrations, designs, commercial photographs, zinc etchings, wood cuts, electrotypes, photogravures and color plates in two or more colors, all of the highest quality, charged with selling power and persuasiveness.

Day and Night Service

Barnes-Crosby Company
E. W. HOUSER, President

Artists :: Engravers :: Catalog Plate Makers

Manufacturing Engraving Plants:
Madison and Franklin Streets, Chicago
Eleventh and Locust Streets, St. Louis
Branch Offices in Fifteen Principal Cities

If you ever published a catalog, booklet or folder or if you intend to do so some day, send for our free folder, entitled "Cover Designs." It throws an entirely new light on a troublesome subject.

Old Colony Sugar Shell

The Old Colony Pattern

A Colonial Design of True Simplicity

This pattern combines the dignity of the older craftsmanship with the beauty that is the result of modern skill and improved methods. The pierced handles and the gray finish, with bowls, tines and bevel edges of the handles bright, are distinctive features.

1847 ROGERS BROS.

"Silver Plate that Wears" is the only brand of silver plate with an unqualified guarantee that is backed by an actual test of over 65 years. Sold by leading dealers. Send for illustrated catalogue "F-80."

INTERNATIONAL SILVER CO., MERIDEN, CONN.
Successor to Meriden Britannia Co.
NEW YORK CHICAGO SAN FRANCISCO HAMILTON, CANADA
The World's Largest Makers of Sterling Silver and Plate.

We wish to give $5 to each of four students

The Continent wants help in presenting educational problems of today. It will print and pay for the best letter on "Why I chose my school" from a representative of each of th[illegible]wing classes. The letters must be based [illegible] experience of

Spar's Marion E f jan14
1205 Springfield av

A young man in college,
A young woman in college,
A boy in a military school, or
A boy in a non-military school.

In addition to these letters from students we will pay for the best letters in four other classes. We want a business or professional woman to tell "What college did for me." We want a married woman to do the same. We will pay $10 for the best letters of 800 words in these classes. From a parent we want to print a letter on "Why I sent my son to boarding school" and also on "Why I sent my daughter to boarding school." We will buy the best letter in these classes for $5 each.

Letters should not exceed 600 words except on "What college did for me." We want plain, factful letters, not literary productions. Write as though talking with a friend. The competition is open to anyone included in the classes named. Letters must reach us by June 15. Address The Continent, 509 South Wabash Ave., Chicago, or 156 Fifth Ave., New York.

An American Flag

FREE to

CONTINENT READERS

YOU WILL want a flag for Memorial Day and Fourth of July, and all other patriotic occasions. In no more favorable manner can your love of country be expressed than by unfurling our silent but impressive emblem of patriotism, "OLD GLORY," from your home, church, club or business house.

SHOW YOUR COLORS

In sympathy with the effort for quiet and profitable patriotism THE CONTINENT has arranged a plan with the American Flag Company whereby a 4 by 6 fast color American flag may be sent CONTINENT readers without cost. All that is necessary is for any present subscriber either to pay for the paper for a new subscriber for one year at the regular price of $2.50, or secure from some friend who is not a subscriber $2.50 for a full year's subscription. The flag will be sent postpaid at once to either the old subscriber or the new subscriber.

If for any reason you do not care to pay for a new subscription yourself, and are unable to secure one from among your Presbyterian associates, we will mail the flag to you postpaid upon receipt of $1. Send us your order at once.

Address THE CONTINENT

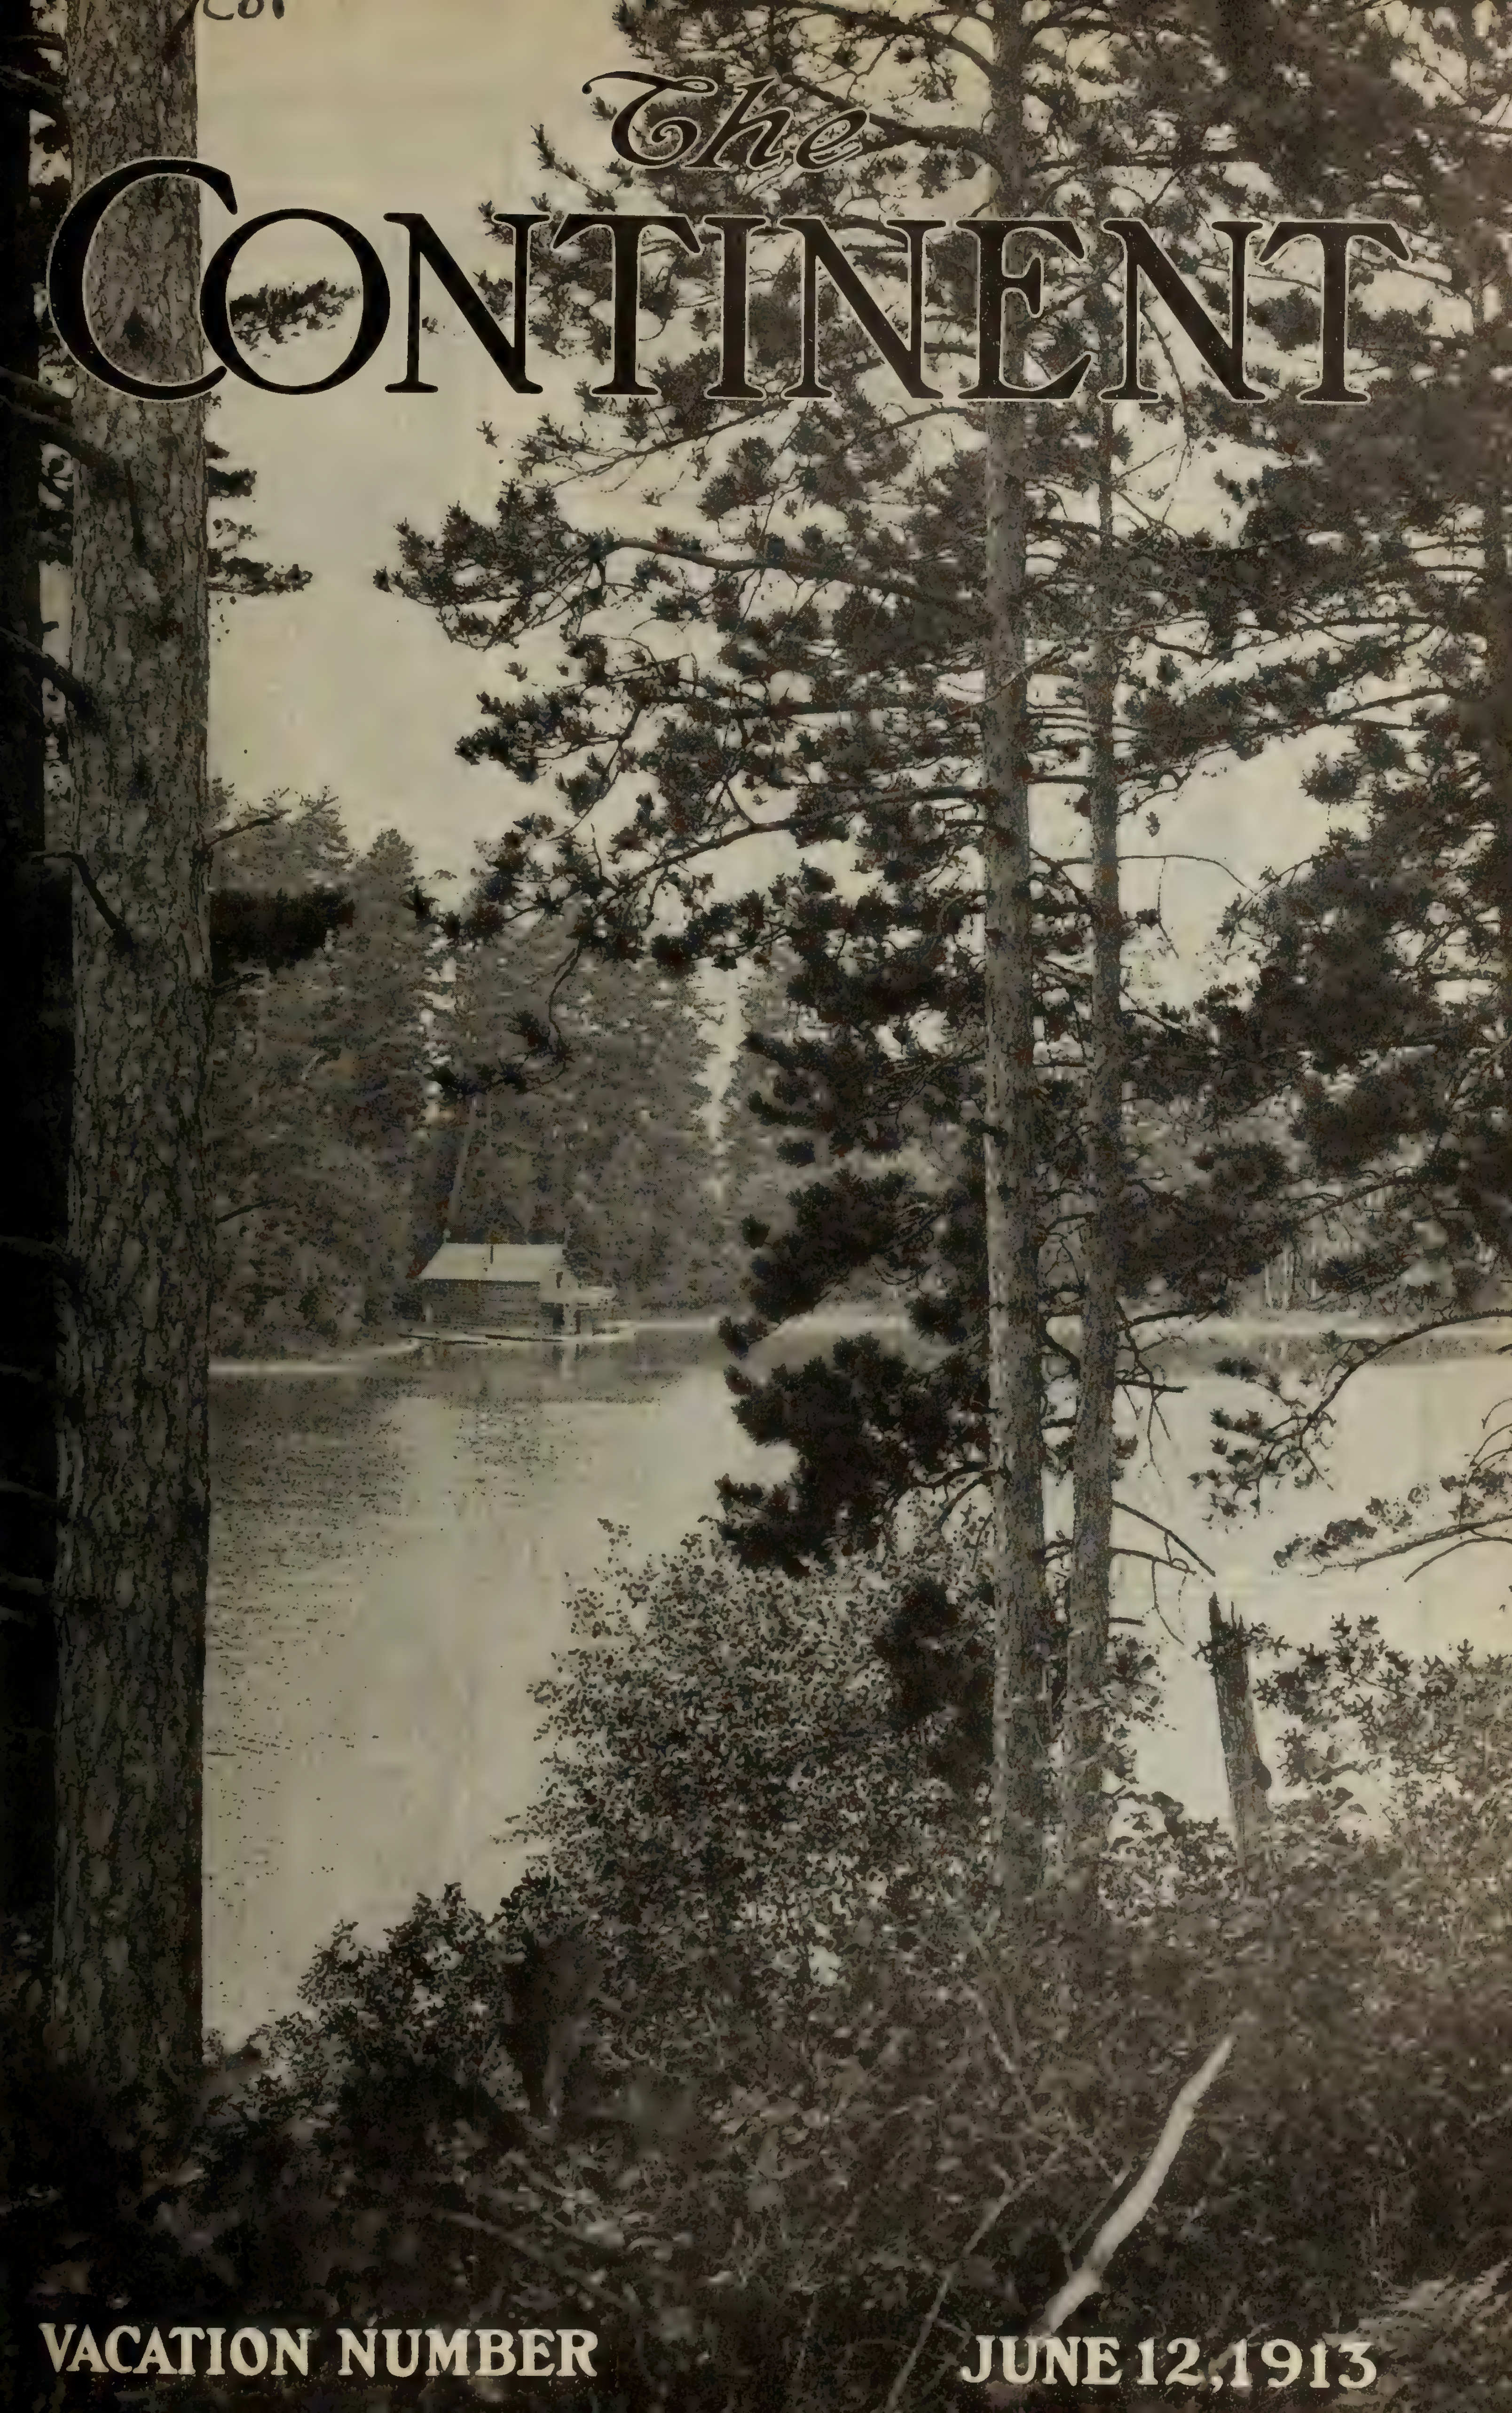
156 5th Ave., New York 509 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago

Col

The CONTINENT



VACATION NUMBER

JUNE 12, 1913

The Selection of a School

is a subject which requires the fullest consideration. The Continent's Educational Bureau has on file information regarding all the principal institutions of the country and will gladly cooperate with parents and students in making a choice. This service is entirely free to readers of The Continent. Begin your investigation in time to permit a thorough inquiry. Address

THE CONTINENT EDUCATIONAL BUREAU
509 Wabash Avenue - - - CHICAGO

Illinois

The School That Makes For Manly, Self-Reliant Men

BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY

The Headmaster and Instructors are all men of wide experience in the "Boy Problem"—all University Graduates. BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY is ideally located in a town of 1500, 35 miles from St. Louis. Healthful environment, Christian influence. Prepares young men for business or college; Graduate Courses in Academic, Normal, Commercial, Instrumental and Vocal Music. Also has special Department for young boys. The Military Department conducted by competent military officers. Fine military band. The ideal school for YOUR boy. For information, write HEADMASTER, BUNKER HILL, ILL.

Frances Shimer School and Junior College for Girls and Young Women

(of the University of Chicago)

A Home School for Girls and Young Women. College Department. Two years' course with diploma. Advanced standing at leading colleges. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music, Art, Domestic Science with diploma, Expression, Vocational Courses. Rate, $400. Academy certificate admits to best colleges. Golf, tennis. Gymnasium. Beautiful grounds, 35 acres. 61st year opens Sept. 10th. Eight beautiful, modern brick buildings. 127 miles from Chicago. Pupils from 16 states. For catalogue address

Rev. WILLIAM P. McKEE, Dean, Box 602, Mt. Carroll, Ill. Chicago Office, Fine Arts Building, August.

Georgia

AGNES SCOTT COLLEGE

DECATUR (6 Miles From Atlanta) GEORGIA

Letters—Philosophy—Science—Home Economics

B. A. Graduates, from this college, are admitted, without examination, as candidates for the M. A. degree in the leading universities of the North and East

No Preparatory Department Dormitory Capacity Limited to 300

For Catalog and Bulletin of Views, address the President

F. H. GAINES, D. D. LL. D.

South Carolina

Converse College

Spartanburg, S. C.
A Standard College for Women.
No Preparatory Department.
Confers degrees of A. B., A. M., B. Mus.
Near Blue Ridge Mountains.
Ideal winter climate. No malaria.
ROBERT P. PELL, Litt. D., President.

Wisconsin

Racine College School

"The School for manly boys."—Chief Justice Winslow. Character building is the serious work of this school. Individuality is recognized and encouraged by personal care. Modified military system. Location convenient to Chicago and other cities. Modernized system of dormitories; each boy has his individual room. Special provision for younger boys. Athletics under personal supervision of a physical director. Large gymnasium. Swimming pool. Diploma accepted by all institutions listed by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, Universities of Chicago, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Ohio, etc., Cornell and other eastern institutions. The College Entrance Examination Board of New York permits examinations to be taken at the school, which admit to Harvard, Yale, Columbia, etc. Write for our new catalogue.

Address Rev. WILLIAM FRANCIS SHERO, A. M., Ph. D., Warden and Headmaster, Racine, Wis.

Indiana

WABASH COLLEGE

CRAWFORDSVILLE, INDIANA—80th YEAR

Opening Day September 16th. A college of liberal culture for young men. Modern equipment. Strong teaching force. Moderate expenses. For particulars address GEORGE L. MACKINTOSH, Pres.

EDUCATIONAL

Missouri

Lindenwood Junior College for Women

St. Charles, Mo. Est. 1831. A strong, up-to-date institution with high standards. Fully accredited by the University of Missouri. Two years college work equal to the first two years at any University. Music and Art.

Domestic Science—A regular study without extra charge. Thorough instruction. Diploma granted.

Excellent Preparatory Department. 50 minutes from St. Louis. Delightful climate the year round; 30 acres woodlands; modern buildings. Terms $350. Catalog. Address

George Frederic Ayres, Ph.D., Pres., Box 297

Missouri Valley College

MARSHALL, MISSOURI

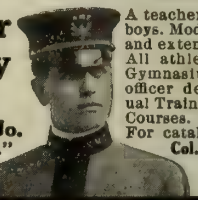
College, Music Conservatory, Academy

Co-educational; four modern buildings; modern laboratories; library; museum; beautiful athletic grounds; forty acres in campus; all buildings heated from one heating plant; lighted by electricity; standards high; location ideal; Marshall and Saline County are "dry"; most beautiful and prosperous city. Opens September 8, 1913. Write for catalog.

WILLIAM HENRY BLACK, President,
405 College Street, Marshall, Missouri.

Kemper Military School

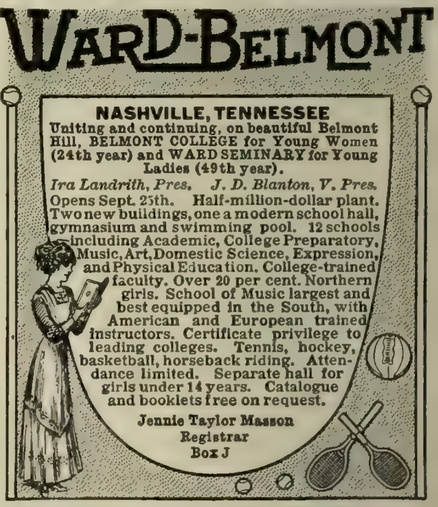
Boonville, Mo.
Rated Class "A" by War Dept.



A teacher to every ten boys. Modern buildings and extensive grounds. All athletics. Fine Gymnasium. Army officer detailed. Manual Training. Business Courses. 70th year. For catalogue address

Col. T. A. Johnston
Supt.
726 Third St.

Tennessee



WARD-BELMONT

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE

Uniting and continuing, on beautiful Belmont Hill, BELMONT COLLEGE for Young Women (24th year) and WARD SEMINARY for Young Ladies (49th year).

Ira Landrith, Pres. J. D. Blanton, V. Pres.

Opens Sept. 25th. Half-million-dollar plant. Two new buildings, one a modern school hall, gymnasium and swimming pool. 12 schools—including Academic, College Preparatory, Music, Art, Domestic Science, Expression, and Physical Education. College-trained faculty. Over 20 per cent. Northern girls. School of Music largest and best equipped in the South, with American and European trained instructors. Certificate privilege to leading colleges. Tennis, hockey, basketball, horseback riding. Attendance limited. Separate hall for girls under 14 years. Catalogue and booklets free on request.

Jennie Taylor Masson
Registrar
Box J

CUMBERLAND UNIVERSITY

Four Years' College Course.
Write the President, LEBANON, TENN.

Kansas

Oswego College
Oswego, Kansas

Vocational-Cultural for young women

Ohio

The WESTERN COLLEGE for WOMEN

OXFORD, OHIO
FOUNDED 1853

Ranked with Leading Eastern Colleges

A center of stimulating life for thoughtful students. Comprehensive curriculum; definite religious influence. 350 beautiful acres; campus, farm, garden. Music and Art Departments of special brilliance. Domestic Science. Outdoor Athletics; Gymnasium. Illustrated literature on request.

Mary A. Sawyer, A. M., Lit. D., Dean.

Wisconsin

RIPON COLLEGE

RIPON :: :: WISCONSIN

Subscription Terms—The subscription price of The Continent is $2.50 per year payable in advance.

Postage is prepaid on all subscriptions in the United States, Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, Guam, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, Cuba and Mexico.

Foreign Postage—For Canada, 50 cents should be added for postage, and for all other countries in the Postal Union $1.10 should be added for postage.

Remittances should be sent by draft on Chicago or New York, Express or P. O. money orders payable to The Continent. If personal check is sent, 10 cents must be added for collection.

THE CONTINENT

Continuing The Interior (Established 1870) and The Westminster (Established 1904)
PUBLISHED WEEKLY

THE McCORMICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, Proprietors
Oliver R. Williamson, Publisher

CHICAGO
509 South Wabash Avenue

NEW YORK CITY
Presbyterian Building, 156 5th Avenue

PHILADELPHIA
Witherspoon Building

Entered as second-class matter October 6, 1910, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Copyright, 1913, by the McCormick Publishing Company.

Acknowledgments—Within two weeks the date following name on "yellow label" will show to the first of what month subscription has been paid. No other receipt is given unless stamp is sent.

Change of Address—Kindly send us both old and new address a week previous to the date of the desired change.

Discontinuances—No subscription is dropped without a definite request from the subscriber; otherwise it is assumed that he wishes to continue.

Manuscripts—The Continent does not accept responsibility for damage or loss of manuscripts sent to it for consideration.

Advertising rates on application.

IN THIS ISSUE:

THURSDAY, JUNE 12, 1913

A Commencement Address.................. 813
Editorial—
  Better Union Progress than Planned.. 818
  Temporary Alliance Leads Happily to Merger 818
  Vast Event That Makes but Little Stir.. 818
The World.......................... 814
Religious World...................... 816
The Canadian Presbyterian Congress.. 817
A Turn Aside from the Highway ....John Timothy Stone 820
A Cosmopolite: His Service and His Religion (with Portrait)..W. T. Ellis 821
On the Top of the Canadian Divide (with Illustrations).................... 823
Vacations with The Continent's Family (with Illustrations)—Camp Life of a Commuter, William F. Gibbons; A Honeymoon Vacation, Maurice W. Moe; 1,800 Miles by Motor, John Henry Russell; Blue Ridge Trails, Gertrude C. Hanson; Seven Girls in Camp, K. Frances Scott; Back to the Farm, Helen Ratcliffe Moore; Routed on the Trail, Fred S. DeGalan; Summer in Southwest California, Emma V. Berger.................... 824
The Home Council—The Test That Tamed Dick...............Lee McCrae 829
Young America—Cap'n Job's Surprise ....Rebecca D. Moore 830
The Sunday School ....J. L. Scott, H. D. Jenkins 831
Devotional Service.......E. A. Wicher 832
Young People's Service......W. T. Ellis 832
Missionary Work....................... 833
New Books........................... 834
More Light on the Mormon Question.. 836
News from Religious Field—Beginning 838
Financial Situation.................. 845

Around the Shop

One of the best-edited papers of the South is The Charleston News and Courier. The Around-the-Shop Man seldom fails to find on its editorial page something worth pondering. Here is an expression he commends to the attention of the heads of Continent families who are careful as to the reading in their homes:

"Not long ago a writer sent a story to one of the most popular weekly magazines in this country. The editor returned it saying that he thought the manuscript was a trifle too suggestive in one place, or perhaps the whole story was. The author then sent it to one of the popular monthly publications. The editor wrote back to say that he liked the story immensely, but thought two or three of the scenes could be made much more suggestive without being actually indecent. If the changes were made he would be glad to pay so many hundred dollars for the manuscript. The author, to his praise be it said, refused to make the changes, although, being an author, he needed the money.

"The incident illustrates a phase through which current literature is now passing. The licentious story seems to be very greatly in demand. Those periodicals which are sticking to decency in fiction are losing customers, while those which cater to a Boccaccio-loving public are swelling their lists of subscribers.

"It is unfortunate that it should be so. . . . The demand for a return to the normal becomes acute. We can almost detect signs of the retrogression.

"It might be worth while for the post office department to read some of the stories that some of the magazines are publishing and see some of the pictures they are reproducing. People are not prudes just because they insist on a limit, and the limit has about been reached."

Is it not time for Christians everywhere to preach a positive gospel of good literature—in their own households at least?

EDUCATIONAL

Illinois

The
JAMES MILLIKIN UNIVERSITY
A Christian College offering full classical and technical courses

The Decatur College and Industrial School offers courses in the Liberal Arts, Engineering, Domestic Economy, Manual Training, Pedagogy, Library Management, Commerce and Finance, Music, etc.; full preparatory courses in the Academy admitting to the above and apprenticeship courses in the mechanical trades. Seven large and beautiful buildings. Fine equipment and superior faculty. Over a thousand students each year.
For Pictorial Bulletin or Catalog, address
A. R. TAYLOR, President
Decatur - - - - Illinois

NORTHWESTERN
MILITARY AND NAVAL ACADEMY
Highland Park, Ill., & Lake Geneva, Wis.
A select school with a high standard of Academic work. Physical, moral and social benefits of a Military and Naval life. Limited enrollment. Catalogue. Address Col. R. P. Davidson, Supt., Lake Geneva, Wis. Chicago Office Room 305, N. Y. Life Bldg. 'Phone Randolph 1537

MONTICELLO SEMINARY

76th year opens Sept. 18th. A home school for young women and girls. Preparatory and Junior College Courses. Domestic Science, Music, Art. Certificate privileges. Well-equipped laboratories. Gymnasium. Tennis courts, archery range, basketball and hockey fields. Rates moderate. Music and Art extra. Send for catalog. Miss Martina C. Erickson, Principal, Godfrey, Ill.

TODD SEMINARY FOR BOYS
An ideal school for young boys near Chicago. No serious sickness in 50 years. We educate the whole boy. Send for prospectus. NOBLE HILL, Woodstock, Ill.

EDUCATIONAL

Illinois

ILLINOIS WOMAN'S COLLEGE
A Standard College
One of the best.
Full College and Preparatory Courses. Exceptional advantages in Music, Domestic Science, Art, and Expression. Expenses reasonable. Surroundings healthful. Home life ideal. Location central in Middle West. Very convenient to every part of the Mississippi Valley. Students from more than 26 States. Catalog free. Address President Harker, Box 31, Jacksonville, Ill.

NURSES are given a thorough and practical three years training at PASSAVANT Memorial Hospital Training School.
They also have the advantages of a monthly cash allowance, a separate Nurses' Home, and affiliation with the Illinois Training School for Nurses. For further information, address
MISS E. C. GLENN, R. N.,
149-151 West Superior Street. - - Chicago, Illinois.

Minnesota

SHATTUCK SCHOOL
1867 MILITARY 1913
27 per cent enrolled are related to Alumni.
Write for Catalogue and Athletic Book.
Boys 8 to 12 in separate school.
Rev. James Dobbin, D.D., Rector.
Rev. Edward T. Mathison, Associate Rector.
FARIBAULT :: MINNESOTA

Macalester College
ST. PAUL, :: MINN.
Leading coeducational college in the Northwest.
Write for catalog.

EDUCATIONAL

Pennsylvania

The Montrose Bible Conference Association
Rev. R. A. TORREY, D.D., Director
AUGUST 1st TO 10th, 1913
A Summer School for Ministers, Students and Christian Workers
Rev. R. A. Torrey, Los Angeles; Rev. A. C. Dixon, London, Eng.; Rev. Prof. W. N. Griffith Thomas, Toronto, Can.: Rev. John McInnis, Halifax, N. S.; Rev. R. V. Miller, Henderson, N. C.; Rev. Geo. G. Mahy, Philadelphia, Pa.; John R Clements, Binghamton, N. Y.; and others. Write for announcement.
WM. C. GAMBLE, Executive Secretary,
28 Maple Street, Montrose, Pa

BEECHWOOD A Cultural and Practical School
FOR YOUNG WOMEN, AT JENKINTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA.
College Preparatory, College Departments—Conservatory of Music, Arts, Arts and Crafts, Domestic Arts and Sciences.
M. H. Reaser, Ph.D., :: :: :: President

Kiskiminetas Springs School
FOR BOYS
Each boy studied and his work adapted to his needs. Character developed along positive lines. Known and indorsed by every American University. Broad business course for boys not going to college. Beautiful new dormitory and 136 acres of land have just been added to equipment. Opens 26th year, under same management, Sept. 23, 1913. Write for catalogue.
Kiskiminetas Springs School, Dept. 12, Saltsburg, Pa.

Indiana

Before Deciding Where to Attend School
Send for catalog of Valparaiso University, Valparaiso, Indiana. This is one of the largest institutions of learning in the United States.
Thorough Instruction at Lowest Expense.
Catalog mailed free. Address
H. B. BROWN, President.
O. P. KINSEY, Vice-President.

PRESBYTERIAN MINISTERS CAN EDUCATE THEIR SONS AND DAUGHTERS AT BLACKBURN COLLEGE. Helps students to help themselves. The Brebner fund of twenty-three thousand dollars is available for young men studying for the Presbyterian ministry. Don't give up college on account of expense. Write President Hudson, Carlinville, Ill.

An American Flag

FREE to

CONTINENT READERS

YOU WILL want a flag for Memorial Day and Fourth of July, and all other patriotic occasions. In no more favorable manner can your love of country be expressed than by unfurling our silent but impressive emblem of patriotism, "OLD GLORY," from your home, church, club or business house.

SHOW YOUR COLORS

In sympathy with the effort for quiet and profitable patriotism THE CONTINENT has arranged a plan with the American Flag Company whereby a 4 by 6 fast color American flag may be sent CONTINENT readers without cost. All that is necessary is for any present subscriber either to pay for the paper for a new subscriber for one year at the regular price of $2.50, or secure from some friend who is not a subscriber $2.50 for a full year's subscription. The flag will be sent postpaid at once to either the old subscriber or the new subscriber.

If for any reason you do not care to pay for a new subscription yourself, and are unable to secure one from among your Presbyterian associates, we will mail the flag to you postpaid upon receipt of $1. Send us your order at once.

Address THE CONTINENT

156 5th Ave., New York 509 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago

Registered Trade Mark Established Half a Century

Dr. Deimel (LINEN-MESH) Underwear

Various makes of mesh Underwear are gaining favor by reason of their comfort in hot weather.

Most of these are made of cotton, whereas the correct fabric for underclothing is linen.

Linen is the most highly absorbent of all textiles and the quickest to dry. That is why your handkerchiefs and your towels are made of linen.

Get both linen and mesh—the ideal fabric in the ideal form—by adopting Dr. Deimel Linen-Mesh Underwear.

Mail orders receive our prompt attention.

James McCutcheon & Co

5th Ave., 33d & 34th Sts., New York

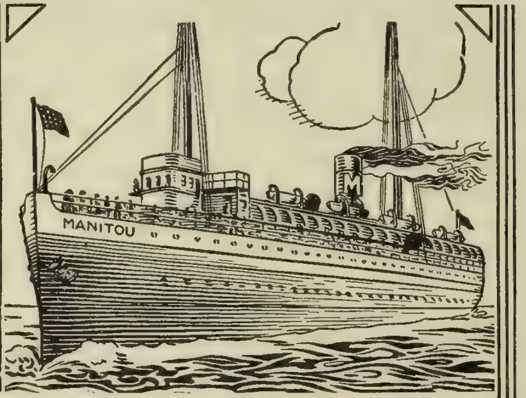
7 Day Lake Trips

Spend your vacation on the water. Cruise for a week to

Georgian Bay

with its 30,000 Islands

—The Switzerland of America



Northern Michigan Line

The Elegant Steel Steamships

"MANITOU" — "MISSOURI" — "ILLINOIS" — "MANISTEE"

offer unrivalled service between Chicago, Charlevoix, Petoskey, Mackinac Island, Ludington, Manistee, Onekama, Frankfort, Glen Haven, Leland & Traverse Bay Ports, connecting with all lines for Lake Superior and Eastern Points.

SPECIAL SEVEN DAY CRUISES

The Steel Steamship "MISSOURI" to

COLLINGWOOD, ONT., and return

via Mackinac, "Soo," North Channel and 30,000 Islands of Georgian Bay—including meals and berth $40.00

The Popular Steamship "MANISTEE" to

SAULT STE. MARIE, and return via Mackinac—returning via a portion of Georgian Bay and the Scenic Grand Traverse Bay—including meals and berth . $27.50

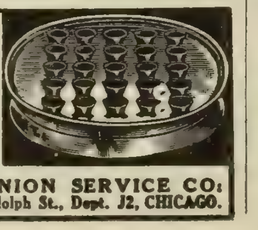
You can have the many comforts that a large, elegantly equipped steamer affords. You will eat well and sleep well. Peaceful quiet and exhilarating breezes will rest and strengthen you. In sight of land most of the way, you can view some of the most magnificent scenery in the world. For illustrated folder and book of tours address

J. C. CONLEY, Gen. Pass. Agt.—Offices and Docks, North End Rush St. Bridge, Chicago

Attractive Sunday Evenings

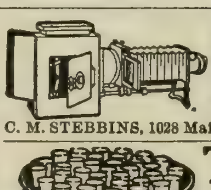
With McIntosh illustrated sermons. Write for catalog.
McIntosh Stereopticon Co.
37 Randolph Street :: Chicago, Illinois



INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

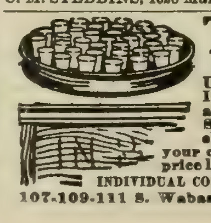
"Noiseless" Cushioned Trays with a new Short Glass. Trays interlock. All glasses well spaced. Outfits sent on trial.

DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO:
20 East Randolph St., Dept. J2, CHICAGO.



Illustrated Sermons. They draw—the impression lasts. Good Lantern with Electric Rheostat or Acetylene Generator, $29.00 Large stock of Slides, Stereopticons and Educational Apparatus Get our latest catalog and terms

C. M. STEBBINS, 1028 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.



The Best Way

The use of the INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE has increased the attendance at the Lord's Supper in thousands of churches. It will do so for your church. Send for illustrated price list.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
107-109-111 S. Wabash Ave. Chicago

Supremis Floor Finish

was the first Floor Varnish offered to the public (1883). Its surpassing beauty, rapid drying and great durability have put it in the forefront of floor preservatives. The manufacturers also produce an unequaled line of Varnishes, Stains, Enamels and kindred goods for Automobiles, Carriages, Yachts, Railways, Fine Furniture and similar lines.

CHICAGO VARNISH CO.

CHICAGO Established 1865 NEW YORK

EDUCATIONAL

Iowa

Oskaloosa College

Correspondence courses to usual degrees in liberal arts, divinity, normal, and graduate. Courses and methods standard. Tuition reasonable. Especially interesting to clergymen unable to attend in residence. Send for catalogue Oskaloosa College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

PARSONS COLLEGE

OFFERS

To youth of both sexes superior advantages in securing an education.

IDEAL LOCATION.
STRONG FACULTY.
MODERN EQUIPMENT.

38 years of service to the church and country.
W. E. PARSONS, President. Fairfield, Iowa

Highland Park College Machinist, Automobile Machinist, Traction Engine, Manual Training, Engineering, College Courses. Most complete school machine shops in the country. Equal to best Eastern schools. Send for catalog. Address Geo. P. Magill, D. D., President, Des Moines, Iowa.

Virginia

Mary Baldwin Seminary

For Young Ladies. STAUTON, VIRGINIA.

Term begins Sept. 11th, 1913. Located in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia. Unsurpassed climate. Modern equipment. Students from 34 States. Terms moderate. Send for catalogue. Miss E. C. WEIMAR, Principal.

THE CONTINENT

CONTINUING THE INTERIOR (ESTABLISHED 1870) AND THE WESTMINSTER (ESTABLISHED 1904)

VOLUME 44, NO. 24 JUNE 12, 1913 WHOLE NO. 2246

Nolan R. Best, Editor—156 Fifth Avenue, New York. Oliver R. Williamson, Publisher—509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago. William T. Ellis, Editor Afield—Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia. The McCormick Publishing Company, Proprietors

A Commencement Address

IF AT THIS alluring season of baccalaureates, graduations and much diploma-conferring this journal should be privileged to join the distinguished company of those who deliver "commencement addresses," it would be, however wanting in further materials of discourse, at least in no difficulty for a theme. And although in ordinary case The Continent might expect no trouble in divesting itself of the suspicion of conservatism, its promptly chosen commencement topic would be frankly and even aggressively laden with conservative suggestion:

"THE OLD-FASHIONED IDEA OF CULTURE."

For The Continent believes that American education, somewhere along its late path of progress, has lost something of vast social and individual value by forfeiting sight of its once familiar picture of the cultivated man, held forth as a pattern for its own purposes and the purposes of its students.

* * *

Of differences alleged to exist between this generation and its immediate predecessors some are traced very dubiously, but this can hardly be denied to be a real difference—the disappearance of the man of culture.

This is not saying by any means that the man of learning is gone. But abundance of knowledge can never make culture. The man of culture is something more and other than the man who knows.

The extinction of the man of culture, however, is so complete that it is difficult to make the present generation understand what culture signifies. Allusion to the subject is more apt to conjure up some ridiculous caricature than an ideal appealing to emulation.

The common notion of a man of culture bespeaks an intellectual fop, dipping idly into one and another strange spring of pedantic knowledge and flaunting his dilettante attainments in the face of people busy with the world's work. No wonder the red-blooded student doesn't feel attracted to the likeness.

But the true thought of culture is the farthest possible from anything partaking of pretense and vanity, and does not in the least suggest indolent detachment from the busy world. Instead culture is the very quintessence of gentleness and humaneness and reality, and is saturated with zest for life.

* * *

There are three tokens that stamp and certify a man of culture.

The man of culture is the man grown big enough to focus his interests beyond himself.

The education of America is failing of culture-production mainly because it is deficient right at this point. It is training young men and women to center their minds on their own successes. Even the note of service, as preached to the students of this country today, is in great degree an appeal to their ambition to distinguish themselves.

But no man who thinks primarily of himself can be a man of culture. The requisite condition of culture is an unaffected joy in the deeds and thoughts of others, so comprehensive and persistent that it continually overleaps self-interest and eagerly delights itself in whatever is human.

This is the spirit that searches history and explores science and ranges through every accessible phase of passing human life in order to know mankind—in order to measure human thought and feeling on every plane within one mind's reach.

Of course, it is a spirit at war with that scientific specialism which is the pride of the modern scholastic world—that specialism which plumes itself on training men who care each for one thing alone. Culture may need, in the practical affairs of life, to pay tribute to specialism for the sake of efficiency, but the man of culture will never be in bondage to it. He will never suffer his livelihood to set bounds to his intelligence.

* * *

The man of culture is the man grown mellow enough to sympathize with human life not of his like and understand human thought not of his temper.

Present-day education comes short on this count also, because it produces so prevalently not men of general sympathies and diverse understanding but men wrapped up in the pride of their exclusive distinction as college graduates—class men still, just as in school.

But culture eliminates lines of classification among men and argues for a solidified humanity. Culture looks deep enough to find the essential human elements in mankind everywhere, even in degraded and distorted mankind—and respects, wherever found, every sign of the common human factor.

Experienced in the chain of moral cause and effect, the man of culture knows very surely that there is difference between right and wrong and between truth and falsehood. And he knows that the difference matters. But tolerance learned from insight into human hearts will not let him despise even those who believe the worst of lies or hate those who do the worst of evils.

Culture's vision into the depths of other men's prejudices and into the darkness of other men's temptations casts a torchlight of sympathy across the abyss of utterest wickedness and untruth.

The man of culture is the man grown wise enough to perceive that the world prospers not as it gets more rich but as it gets more thoughtful and sincere and reverent.

The schools are deficient here because they forever stress the things that men can do by aid of knowledge, and so commonly forget to stress the things that men may be by aid of reflection and resolve and the hearty quest of character.

The man of culture more and more withdraws his aspirations from achievements that men might behold in the open arena of the world, and more and more devotes his hopes to the measurelessly nobler enterprise of becoming in the kingdom of mind and spirit the finest personality he is capable of.

No materialist can ever be a man of culture. Culture is impossible until a man has come actually to believe that "the things which are unseen are eternal"—and of incalculably greater value.

* * *

The thing to be looked at especially in this analysis is the fact that these marks of culture are also marks of religion.

Christianity too stands for all these things—unselfishness, broad human sympathy, supreme emphasis on the immaterial. The surest agent of culture therefore is religion.

This is the secret really of the affinity of the church for education—the underlying reason also why the church tends to promote the liberal education in preference to the technical, or more material.

But whether technical or liberal, no college is imparting what is fairly to be called Christian education if it is not aiming at culture.

The World

Woman Sacrifices Life to Advance Suffrage Cause

The first victim or martyr in the British war for votes for women has fallen—Miss Emily Davison, who died Sunday as the result of injuries received last week in an effort to break up the Epsom Derby. As the field of fifteen horses thundered around the turn she rushed out upon the racetrack and flung herself at the head of the horse entered by the king. Horse and jockey and feminine assailant went down together; the man was seriously hurt and the woman was so badly injured that she died a few days after being removed to the hospital. King George and Queen Mary were among the thousands who witnessed the ghastly incident, which has naturally caused excitement and voluminous comment. It has more than once been said that when some woman lost her life women would be given the ballot and not before, but whether this premeditated self-destruction will have this result appears to be a matter of strong doubt.

The occurrence is being widely cited as convincing proof that militant suffragists are insane. Miss Davison was possessed of means and highly educated, having studied with honors at London University and at Oxford. She had a long record as a peace disturber for "the cause." One of her acts was an assault with a whip upon a Baptist minister whom she mistook for Chancellor Lloyd George. In the last four years she had been in jail eight times, usually starting a hunger strike, and once she threw herself down a jail stairway. Her "martyrdom" was not meant as a protest against the established British institution of horse racing but was an effort to help bring "votes for women" on the theory that spectacular heroics may succeed where mere destruction of property had failed. The queen of England had declined to allow militant sympathizers in the royal household to wear badges, and the attack on the king's horse was supposed to be in the nature of revenge or protest, as well as to get the eye of royalty in a conspicuous and striking manner.

A Statement by the Leader of the Militants

Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the recognized leader of the physical force suffragists in England, is now alternately in and out of Holloway jail, London. Under her sentence of imprisonment she is first arrested, then she starves herself to the danger point, is released and allowed to recuperate, and again arrested. A few days ago she made a statement to a correspondent of The Chicago Daily News which is interesting and illuminating from both a political and a psychological standpoint.

"What happens to me," said Mrs. Pankhurst, "matters little—the cause is everything. The government cannot conquer me. . . . I understand that some question our sanity. I understand that millions, male and female, fail to grasp the inner nature of this movement. To all such I would say that the movement is the crystallization of a spontaneous yearning to be free. We want the subservience of women to be abolished both in theory and in fact. The stigma implied by the laws and customs of our country we want washed away.

"The king's horse, falling before the eyes of the world at Epsom, carrying a woman to probable death, lights up the chapter of history now running its course. Comparatively few of us can read sense into the fiery characters of this historical chapter, but future observers will have no difficulty. They will spell out the words easily enough and it will be written that the women of England wrought a resplendent epoch in human advancement, while conventional men and women were deaf and blind and while a debased government plied its abominable brutalities in vain. The women's movement has grown from a cry in the wilderness to a commanding power in modern life."

Rifles for Anti-Home-Rulers Seized in England

Besides its troubles in England with the suffrage militants, the Liberal government has just had added to its burdens a promise of armed warfare in Ireland. According to press dispatches 1,000 rifles with bayonets arrived in Belfast one day last week in cases marked "electrical supplies." They were promptly seized by government detectives. An order had been issued by the Belfast customs officials to search all vessels coming into port from Manchester and Liverpool for munitions of war which Orangemen are alleged to have ordered from Germany. Five hundred rifles and bayonets were seized in Dublin last Friday. The consignment was addressed to Baron Farnham, an Irish peer of the County Cavan. Baron Farnham is described as 33 years old, formerly an army officer and one of the leading Unionists of Ulster and a noted opponent of home rule.

It is rumored in Belfast that the government is very late in taking action, as an enormous number of weapons has already been distributed to resolute men who will not hesitate to use them should occasion arise to resist what the Orangemen grimly refer to as the tyranny of the Romanists. On the other hand, the home rule advocates try to belittle the affair as either theatricalism or political advertisement.

No Big Battleships to Be Built by Canada

Canada has refused to vote $35,000,000, or any other sum, for the construction of dreadnaughts for the British navy. The Canadian house of commons ratified Premier Borden's lately heralded plan, and Australia and New Zealand hastened to anticipate the dominion's action by buying battleships, but when it finally came the turn of the senate, that body flatly turned down the proposition. To be sure, the Canadian senators said the bill should first be referred to a vote of the people, but no popular referendum is expected because the Conservative government leaders are believed to feel certain of defeat on the issue. The many American farmers who have gone into western Canada, and the Russian and other European immigrants, would vote against a costly naval program, as would most of the Liberal opposition, so it is unlikely that there will be any appeal to the country, though the senate has been coming in for considerable Conservative criticism.

Gospel of World Peace Again Preached in London

Not in a long time has there been so much thoughtful discussion of the subject of world peace as at the present moment, when the war in the Balkans is ending and war between America and Japan is talked of, when Germany and France are increasing their armaments and conditions in Europe have been anything but placid. Eventually words may speak louder than actions and the pacifist creed be translated into deeds. Preparations for celebrating the century of peace between the United States and Great Britain are going on apace, and in London last Friday the new American ambassador, Walter H. Page, was given a cordial reception and made and heard earnest pleas for peace. Ambassador Page, at the banquet of the Pilgrims' Society, said the time was long past for make-believes or makeshifts in Anglo-American relations, and referred to "the great English-speaking democracy" which everywhere has the same large aims to keep men free and preserve peace.

Earl Grey, the British foreign minister, whose position is becoming more and more commanding, declared that if the American ambassador came with proposals of making more remote any appeal to blind force, "he will find in this country and in the British government a ready response." Earl Grey amplified this by adding that the United States is most fortunately placed in taking such an initiative. Peace proposals from such a quarter, he asserted, come free from suspicion of being inspired by any feeling of pusillanimity or any national necessity.

Price Collier, the author, who is especially well informed on German affairs, in his address elicited tremendous applause by a reference to Emperor William as a great and strong man, who is the friend of England. Field Marshal Lord Roberts presided.

Senate May Prove a Bar to World Peace

The United States senate last Friday refused to ratify a renewal of the arbitration treaties with Great Britain, Italy and Spain recently expired, and according to Associated Press reports the principle of compulsory arbitration which has been written into twenty-four international compacts during the last five years is in danger of being discarded. These conventions provide that questions relating to treaty interpretation, excepting those of vital interest to national honor or independence, shall be submitted to The Hague. A similar treaty with France was recently renewed. Panama canal tolls was the main issue on which the debate turned, the contention being that the United States should not be forced to submit the matter to The Hague. In reply to this Senator Borah of Idaho took the ground that if the United States was wrong in its attitude on this question it should openly take the manly stand and acknowledge its mistake. Incidentally the debate developed a discussion of the Japanese situation and some evident disinclination against its possible arbitration.

Ratification of treaties requires a two-thirds vote of the senate, not merely a majority, and there is said to be considerable doubt as to whether this can be secured unless there is a change of sentiment on the part of several senators.

Rejection of arbitration by the senate comes just at the time when other nations are expressing their approval of Secretary of State Bryan's world peace plan. Favorable responses were received in the order named from Italy, Great Britain, France, Brazil, Sweden, Norway, Peru, Russia, Austria-Hungary and finally Japan, which announced its acceptance of the plan in principle. In substance the proposals are that the United States is prepared to enter into an agreement with each and every country severally, providing for the investigation of all disputes of every character by an international commission, the contracting parties agreeing not to declare war until such investigation and report are made. The report is to be submitted within a given time, and the parties reserve the right to act independently after the report is made. It is obvious that the negotiations of such treaties would be futile if there is any doubt of their ratification by the upper house of Congress.

* *

Second Note from Japan on Alien Land Laws

Japan's second note in the California alien land law controversy was received last week and was the object of study by President Wilson and his cabinet. In this rejoinder to the United States' reply to her first note of protest Japan continues to insist that the Webb act discriminates against the Japanese and is in derogation of the equality of treatment prescribed by international law and the treaty of 1911. The contents of the document were not fully disclosed, but it is known that at least one interesting new point was raised, namely, that the legislation violates the fourteenth amendment of the constitution of the United States, which forbids a state to deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, or to deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. The violation claimed is that the new law will force Japanese land owners to sell or abandon their California holdings. Other new contentions also require reply, but present indications are that the dispute will remain a matter for argument and amicable adjustment in spite of "jingoistic" public opinion in Japan.

Ambassador Chinda has conferred with Secretary Bryan, and last week had a special audience with the President at the ambassador's request. This somewhat unusual proceeding is taken to indicate that the Tokyo government desires to press the issue to an early conclusion, possibly before the California statute goes into effect in August. No legal steps can be taken by any public or private agency to test the measure before that time. It is understood that the Japanese government desires the federal government to institute or instigate court proceedings with a view to invalidating the law. Secretary Bryan's hint that this be done by Japan is reported to have met an unfavorable response.

* *

Inquiry Into Mystery of Frisco Railway Failure

Why a railway system whose gross earnings have been increasing, and with millions of cash received from the sale of bonds, should be plunged into a receivership is a question which the interstate commerce commission will look into at the direction of Congress. Representative Hinebaugh of Illinois introduced the resolution, which instructs the commission to investigate the facts concerning the receivership and the management of the St. Louis and San Francisco railroad system. The alleged juggling of securities in connection with the financing of the system rather than lack of legitimate business is now said to be why the road was wrecked.

The Frisco system consists of a congeries of roads stretching south and southwest from Chicago to Texas. Its name is misleading, as it does not get within a thousand miles of San Francisco. At one time it belonged to the Santa Fe, and later to the Rock Island system. Threats of prosecution by the government under the anti-trust law forced its separation from the Rock Island. These various shifts are said to have made it the prey of promoters. While capitalized at only $50,000,000, it is burdened with several times that amount of interest bearing debts. During the last few years $72,000,000 worth of securities has been sold to the public, including $3,000,000 worth only a few weeks before the receivership. Yet in the bill filed in court it was claimed that the line was unable to pay two and a quarter million dollars of notes due June 1.

Worst of all the questionable phases of the receivership is the fact that some $26,000,000 worth of Frisco bonds were sold in France, most of them in $100 denominations, to about 250,000 persons of small means scattered all over France. The transaction is bound to result in great loss to legitimate American securities abroad. A flood of "selling orders" from Europe reached the New York stock exchange one day last week, and was charged in part to the Frisco fiasco. A French newspaper, L'Information, caustically remarked that the transaction testified once more to "the difference between American and French mentalities." At the same time French bankers were condemned for indorsing the bonds without informing themselves of the actual conditions.

* *

Sane Fourth of July Celebrations Are Planned

Fourth of July celebrations without firecrackers or explosives bid fair to be more numerous than ever this year. In New York City the board of estimate and apportionment has approved a transfer of $25,000 from the funds of the street cleaning department for the purpose of a sane Fourth of July observance. The appropriation is small, but with the cooperation of a citizens' committee Independence Day will be redeemed from its association with toy pistols, cannon crackers, aimless noise and serious or fatal accidents. In place of the usual fireworks display it is planned to make New York the brightest city in America on the night of Independence Day.

The Fourth of July, says The New York Tribune editor, should be as orderly, attractive and inspiring a holiday as is Memorial Day.

The Sane Fourth of July Association of Chicago is actively cooperating with the organization having in charge a great athletic meet to extend from June 26 to July 6. On the Fourth there is to be an all-day series of events, including athletic exhibitions and contests for both men and women.

* *

Congressional Lobby Investigation Stirs the Capital

Quite the liveliest thing in Washington just now is the investigation of the so-called lobby and its ramifications by a subcommittee of the senate. The inquiry was incited by President Wilson's assertion that extreme, if not improper, efforts were being put forth to defeat or modify important provisions of the Underwood tariff bill. The investigation was apparently undertaken in a skeptical spirit by the senate; but though no political corruption has been discovered, several of the senators have seemingly had their toes stepped on. More than a third of them have a personal interest in products which the pending changes in the tariff will affect, their investments being in cotton, wool, lumber and steel products, coal, oil, lead and zinc. But there is no assumption that pecuniary interest will outweigh the public welfare when the final roll calls are reached.

Senator Overman of South Carolina, chairman of the investigating committee, stated that the existence of a tariff lobby of large proportions had been disclosed. Senator Kenyon said the senate was beset by a "social lobby," the practice being to flatter senators by inviting them to dinner, to the theater and on automobile rides with distinguished guests, and bestowing similar social attentions. Senator LaFollette explained that lobbying was more refined than it used to be, and that "the interests" sometimes elected men to look out for them from the inside. He would put legislators in the same attitude as a judge on the bench, and make it an offense for anyone to confer with a congressman or senator about public business in private. Other senators held that it was the right of anyone to seek to influence legislation, provided it was not done in secret nor by devious ways.

Not persuasion but threats were encountered by Senator Sherman, one of the new representatives of Illinois. "The only improper influence that I know of," he said, "has come from representatives of labor unions, who threatened to exterminate me if I did not vote their way. . . . Others were more charitable and accorded me the right to vote my convictions." Commenting on this statement The Chicago Inter Ocean asks if an appeal to fear is not as bad as an appeal to greed, when the end and aim is alike that of inducing a legislator to do what he honestly believes he ought not to do.

It remained for Senator Townsend of Michigan and Senator Weeks of Massachusetts to try to turn the tables on President Wilson by openly accusing him of influencing legislation by the use of patronage and the use of the party caucus. Neither of the senators would mention names of colleagues alleged to have been thus swayed or intimidated.

* *

—Congressman Hobson has introduced a bill providing for "the parental court of the United States," to have jurisdiction of children 16 years old or younger in all matters relating to violation of federal statutes. Such a court would provide special parental care and protection for children and would generally do some of the same work which is done by local juvenile courts. The present district judges would exercise this jurisdiction except in Washington, where a parental judge would be appointed.

Religious World

Young People from Whole World in Mohonk

The Mountain house on the shores of Lake Mohonk in the Catskills has for many years been famous as the scene of conferences on international peace and the welfare of dependent races, which have drawn thither twice a year groups of exceptional cosmopolitan distinction. But it has never before seen a gathering so widely diversified as the globe-belting conference of the World's Student Christian Federation, which was held there last week. This assemblage represented forty nations, from which there were in attendance altogether 320 delegates.

The dominant figure of the entire gathering was, of course, Dr. John R. Mott, who from the forming of the organization has been its secretary. The president, Dr. Karl Fries of Norway, was hindered by illness from coming to America, and Dr. H. C. Rutgers of Amsterdam, Holland, presided in his stead. Baron Paul Nicolay of Russia, Dr. Kajinosuke Ibuka, president of the Meiji Gakuin in Tokyo; Hon. T. T. Wong of Shanghai, Professor Hans Haberl of Vienna; Rev. Tissington Tatlow, general secretary of the British Students' Movement; Dr. Karl Paul Marx of Switzerland and J. R. Isaac of Madras were other eminent foreigners in the company. But the majority of the delegates from abroad and from the United States were young men and women just recently graduated from college and university, and ready to devote their lives to the educational and missionary purposes of the federation.

In this particular above all else was the conference significant, because it comprised a quite measureless aggregate of the highest class human resource consecrated to an international fellowship in behalf of an evangelical and propagating gospel.

The program of the conference was simple and informal. The set addresses were few and principally of a devotional nature. Robert E. Speer of New York and Professor D. S. Cairns of Edinburgh were twice heard on inspirational topics. Apart from this the meetings were devoted to intercession and to discussion in open parliament of such topics as the special adaptation of the gospel to students, respectively in non-Christian countries, in Protestant countries and other Christian countries; the interest of students in the social problem, work for schoolboys and schoolgirls, responsibility of college graduates and the presentation of the missionary call to young people choosing life vocations. On Sabbath, June 8, church service was conducted in the hotel parlors by Bishop Charles H. Brent of the Philippines.

Mr. Mott has said, in relation to this gathering of students, that he regarded it as the culmination of his round-the-world missionary tour, which in the past few months has exercised such profound effect in the mission fields of Asia. He started on that tour immediately after the sessions of the Edinburgh continuation committee in the same place last September, and Mohonk has therefore been to Mr. Mott both point of departure and point of destination. All comment on his journey he has expressly reserved until the character and prospective influence of this wonderful gathering of Christian young people can be included in the perspective of his general view.

✠ ✠

Missionary Back from Livingstone's Country

An altogether exceptional zest of interest has been shown by the British public this spring in a remarkable lay missionary just returned from Africa—Dan Crawford. Crawford was commissioned twenty-three years ago by the London Missionary Society for service in those regions of Africa opened up by the explorations of David Livingstone. From that time Mr. Crawford has not been back in England until this visit. In fact, he is inclined to scorn some missionaries who regard themselves entitled to a furlough at home every four or five years. So completely has Mr. Crawford during these two decades concentrated himself on his work, and so thoroughly has he identified himself with the people to whom he has ministered, that for his book detailing his experiences he found an appropriate title in the striking phrase, "Thinking Black."

It was the publication of this book which first revealed to the British churches what an extraordinary man had come home to them from Africa, for Crawford's self-effacement had practically obliterated all recollection or impression of him from the minds even of the members of his supporting society. But the volume was an instantaneous success with the reading public and is being talked of everywhere. The piquant vivacity of its literary style has made a genuine sensation, and the freshness of its viewpoint—especially the wonderful interpretation of poetic emotion in the minds of untutored natives of the African jungle—has been equally a surprise and delight to all readers.

The success of the book naturally awakened curious interest concerning the personality of the author, and he has since been sought and feted in a fashion comparable to the reception given to Livingstone on his first return from Africa. Mr. Crawford's addresses are even more startling in originality than his writings, and quite as scintillant with surprising turns of expression. The foremost men of Britain have listened to his stories from the "long grass" with entranced attention, and particular interest in this Livingstone centenary year has attached to Mr. Crawford's report of the reminiscences of Livingstone that still are current among the African natives. The name under which Livingstone is commonly recalled in Africa means "the dew-drier," an epithet conferred on him because, in his restless travels, he rose early in the mornings and led the way through grass and bush ahead of his men, brushing the dewdrops from the rank tropical vegetation as he broke new trails through the jungle.

The best compliment which English public opinion can think to confer on Mr. Crawford is that, despite his long absence in Africa, and the training of his mind to "think black," he still retains all of the manners and temper of the English gentleman. He well nigh shocked London out of its complacency, however, by boldly telling a London audience that their city is more pagan than Africa. Mr. Crawford is coming to America and will be at Northfield in August.

✠ ✠

Endeavorers Concentrating on Los Angeles

For the twenty-sixth international convention of Christian Endeavor societies the entertaining city of Los Angeles does not have available permanent auditoriums of sufficient size to accommodate the vast mass meetings of young people certain to assemble on that occasion. The local committee, therefore, has met the problem in a uniquely enterprising way. It has leased Fiesta park, an amusement resort covering a complete city square, and is roofing over and partitioning the space with canvas in such fashion as to make two audience rooms each seating 10,000 hearers. In these the great inspirational meetings of the afternoons and evenings will be held, while for the sectional conferences and simultaneous special interest meetings the delegates will be guided to the churches of Los Angeles, which are on an average perhaps more spacious than those of any other city in the country.

"Father Endeavor" Clark, as always in Christian Endeavor conventions, will be the principal figure of this meeting in Los Angeles. He has just returned from a seven months' campaign promoting Christian Endeavor on the continent of Europe, and his leadership will be vivified not alone by the encouraging experiences of this tour but by his complete restoration to strength from a period of invalidism. Besides the founder and his colleague, Secretary Shaw, the program for all the varied meetings covering the six days of the convention includes nearly 100 famous names representing not less than twenty-five denominations. From a casual glance it would appear that the Presbyterians predominate. Among the whole number Secretary of State William Jennings Bryan is expected to stand foremost, although his acceptance of the invitation to speak has been qualified by the doubt whether public affairs will permit him to leave Washington.

Other Presbyterians whose acceptance is absolute are J. A. Macdonald, Robert F. Coyle, John Willis Baer, Ira Landrith, John Balcom Shaw, Murdoch McLeod, Hugh K. Walker and A. L. Phillips. To this list should also be added Dr. William Patterson of Ireland. Dr. Shaw is to conduct daily Bible study hours aiming at personal growth and personal work, and Dr. Phillips is to hold conferences on missions. Dr. Charles M. Sheldon of Topeka will be the leader of daily conferences of pastors, taking for his comprehensive topic "The Old Gospel at Work in a New World."

The dates of this great assemblage, which will undoubtedly further accentuate the remarkable revival of a society which a few years ago was termed a "spent force," will be July 9 to 14. Special excursion trains will leave eastern cities at the first of the month. Information concerning these can be obtained from the United Society's treasurer, H. N. Lathrop, at headquarters in Tremont temple, Boston. Great interest at Los Angeles will center in the competition of St. Louis, Washington, Toronto and Winnipeg for the honor of entertaining the convention of 1915. Special announcement will likewise be made there of arrangements for the world's Christian Endeavor convention to be held in Sydney, Australia, in March, 1914. For this the American delegation will sail from San Francisco January 22, and their trip will include a tour of the leading cities of New Zealand and Australia.

Canadian Presbyterians in Congress

BY J. B. FRASER

THE congress of representatives from the whole of Canada and Newfoundland met in Toronto on the afternoon of May 31. It was composed of three representatives from each pastoral charge—the minister, his wife and a layman chosen by the congregation. The object was mainly social, educational and inspirational. To Dr. A. S. Grant, general superintendent of home mission work, is due the credit of the conception and a large share of the success of the congress. It was his thought that it would be a great encouragement to many in isolated fields who perhaps had never been able to get to a meeting of General Assembly to renew friendships and fellowships of other days, to realize the oneness of the great body of Presbyterianism, to get some fairer conceptions of the magnitude and seriousness of the problems of the church and consult together as to the best solutions practicable and to encourage each other in the work.

It was Dr. Grant who secured the funds from a few generous men of wealth to provide free transportation for all the delegates. It was the Presbytery of Toronto that undertook to provide free accommodation and meals. The city street car service, with unique generosity for a corporation, gave free passes to all delegates during congress and Assembly good for twelve days, which added immensely to the enjoyment and convenience of the delegates and saved them in the aggregate probably $10,000.

The program was not printed, so that interest was sustained to the very close of the fourth day, which was a dramatic climax of really thrilling interest. Campbell White, who spoke at the last session, said he had never attended a congress of more interest and perhaps none of larger possibilities of influence for good.

The services of praise were a revelation and an inspiration. They were led by A. T. Cringan of Toronto, with the assistance of a cornetist and an organist—and such singing! It was wonderful, especially when the more familiar psalms or hymns were sung. The prayers were without exception brief, simple, direct, fervent, and one could not help feeling were really spirit-breathed and effectual. The first address by Dr. McQueen of Edmonton, the retiring moderator, the opening words of which were, "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord," gave the keynote for the whole congress.

Audiences at All Sessions Overcrowd Large Hall

Meetings were held in Massey hall, seated for 4,500. Admission was by badge up to the hour of meeting, and the vast hall was filled to its capacity at all the sessions long before the hour of meeting. On Sabbath, the second day of the congress, the services were specially impressive and inspiring. Principal Gandier of Toronto spoke in the forenoon of sin and the necessity for confession and complete renunciation of it as conditions of receiving the promised power of God. Sabbath evening Rev. John McNeill of Cooke's church, Toronto, dealt in his own unique way with the lessons from the healing of the paralytic borne of four—a mingling of deep pathos with flashes of homely Scottish humor and more emphatic statement of forceful truth, all with an inimitable Scottish accent.

Dr. R. P. Mackay of Toronto was chairman at all the sessions, and an almost perfect chairman he proved—always saying the right thing, and saying it well. A brief devotional address was given at the beginning of every morning session by Dr. Hanson of Montreal. They were really masterpieces of simple, spiritual and powerful presentation of the risen Christ and the risen Christ meeting his people in their needs and discouragements.

On Monday, June 2, addresses were delivered by Dr. Herridge of Ottawa, Dr. G. B. Wilson of Winnipeg, Professor Law of Knox College, Toronto; Dr. R. Bruce Taylor of Montreal, Dr. Alexander MacGillivray of Toronto, President Falconer of Toronto University and Dr. R. Douglass Fraser, Toronto, editor of Presbyterian publications. At the evening session under the subject of "The Church Opportunity" Dr. Charles W. Gordon ("Ralph Connor") of Winnipeg dealt with the present-day Canadian situation in a way that showed him to be a man of vision as well as of imagination and literary gifts.

On the Frontier in Canada and China

Mr. Wright of Fort George, a mission station 350 miles from a railway, dealt in a fearless way with the situation on the frontier where the town is "wide open" and vice flaunts itself without shame in the face of decency and scoffs at religion. Dr. Murdoch Mackenzie of Honan, China, since elected moderator of Assembly, spoke of the church's special opportunity in the China of today. He is a veteran who has twenty-five years of devoted and successful service to his credit in China. The whole land, he said, was literally leavened with the gospel, and he appealed with deepest pathos and with most urgent entreaty that the church should not fail to measure up to its responsibility in a time of such special opportunity.

Consideration of the church's opportunity was continued on Tuesday, June 3, Dr. W. D. Reid of Montreal speaking on the problem of the non-Anglo-Saxons of Canada—the problem of the foreign immigrants coming to us at the rate of over 1,000 a day. At this stage the chairman reminded the congress that it was the king's

(Continued on page 844)

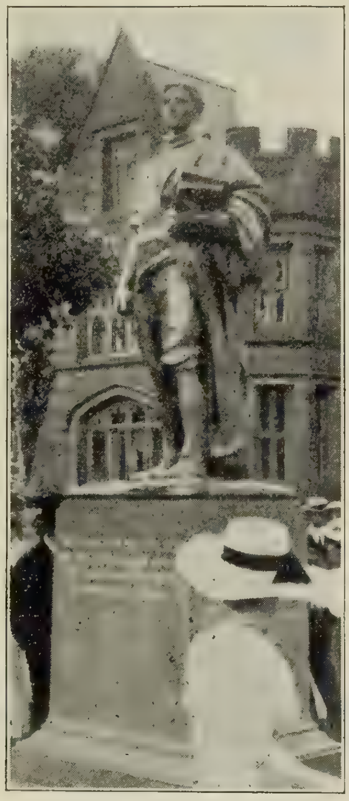
"The Ideal Student" at Princeton

The statue placed upon the campus of Princeton University to commemorate the organization there of the Intercollegiate Young Men's Christian Association—as described in last week's Continent—stands upon a marble base which on opposite fronts bears two impressive inscriptions, one historical, the other expressing the ideal for which the memorial stands. The first of these inscriptions reads:



Intercollegiate Y. M. C. A. Monument

"1876—Near by, in old East College, some words of William E. Dodge, Junior, led a little group of students to form the Intercollegiate Young Men's Christian Association, from which the Student Volunteer Movement and the World's Student Christian Federation have grown."

The inscription on the opposite face was composed by Dr. Henry van Dyke, and reads:

"For a nobler, stronger manhood in body, soul and spirit; for the better service of mankind and the coming of God's kingdom, the Christian students of the world are united in brotherhood in the name of Christ."

Mr. Mott, speaking at the dedication of the statue, related how the Princeton students who conceived this fellowship of Christian college men sent out their comrade, Luther Wishard, to appeal to the religious leaders of other schools to join them, and thus secured a representation of thirty colleges in the first convention where the college branch of the Young Men's Christian Association was organized. As now extended through the World's Christian Student Federation, the organization today includes 156,000 students and professors in 2,300 colleges and universities on all continents.

The sculptor, Mr. French, intends his heroic figure to stand for all the qualities combined in a student fulfilling the highest Christian ideal. These Dr. Mott defined as especially including "manliness, reality, vision and purpose." The figure is clad in football costume, but the books carried in the bend of the left arm and the academic gown just falling from the shoulder betoken the combination of intellectual with athletic interests in student life. The noble poise of the uplifted head and the openness and strength of the finely chiseled countenance convey the note of aspiring spirituality which the sculptor designs to be the dominant impression of his work for the hosts of young men who will pass it annually on the Princeton campus.

The site chosen for the monument is just south of the university library, and coincides as nearly as can now be determined with the location of rooms occupied by the Dodge brothers, Earl and Cleveland, in a building now demolished, when they were in attendance at Princeton as members of the class of '79.

Editorial

Unbearable Troubles

IS THERE any such thing as an unbearable trouble? Carl Hilty says there is: "One can bear all troubles but two—worry and sin." Now, it is well to realize that those two unbearable troubles are unnecessary. Neither worry nor sin has to be continued. Both can be ended by the large draft on the sovereign goodness of God which he is always ready to honor. As for other troubles, no one of them is unbearable. We are always surprised to see how much we can bear.

Most of us who seek to be wise would not look ahead ten years if we could. It would be impossible to bear the revelation of what will come to us in a decade. That would be putting the load of ten years on us in one day. In God's plan our experiences come to us gradually. Very few troubles come like lightning out of a clear sky. There are always clouds, and before the bolt falls there are flashes enough to prepare us somewhat for the shock. The cross is not laid upon our shoulders full weight at once. Rather, it comes down so slowly that those who must carry it can accommodate themselves to the load. God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb, but he sets out at once to protect the lamb, so that it can stand the next wind. A shorn lamb never stays shorn. The vital forces begin at once to prepare it for the cold of the next winter. It is in part this gradualness of God's dealing with us that makes trouble bearable.

There is much help also in settling down quietly to the assurance that we are never to be broken by our troubles. There is no way of escaping them. It is not meant that we should be untroubled in this sense of the word. But it is assured that the wise hand that lets trouble come to us is also a strengthening hand that sustains us in trouble. It will bear saying over and over, that there is no promise to keep us from passing through the waters. The only promise is that they shall not overflow us. We are not told that we shall not pass through the flames, but only that they shall not kindle upon us. When we are told to cast our burden upon the Lord, it is not said that he will take the burden away, but only that he will sustain us. We may go our way bearing the burden, but we shall not fall under it while we count it his burden given to us.

There is then no unbearable trouble which cannot be avoided. There are troubles that strain us to the utmost, and that we would say beforehand could not be borne. They do not fall on us unawares, however. If we have not expected them, we have a right to realize that God knew they were coming. God is never taken unawares. If he was the only one who could foresee them, then we have especial right to expect him to brace us to bear them. We could not be ready, therefore he must help us, unready. Most of us remember in driving through the country that a hill always looks steeper from across the valley than it proves to be when we come to its base and begin the ascent. Most of our troubles look far more serious to us ahead than they prove to be when we come to them. Sometimes we do not come to them at all; our road turns aside before we come to the steep hill. Sometimes we come to them just as we expected, but we always take them inch by inch, and we go our way through them in a strength which proves sufficient.

As our days our strength proves. We do not have strength for a decade today, but by the end of the decade a decade's strength has been doled out to us. There is nothing to fear in the future. There is not water there deep enough to drown us, and no fire hot enough to burn us, and no burden heavy enough to crush us, because as we go into the future, Christ will be by us and bring us safely through. We could not bear the troubles, but he and we can bear them all.

Better Union Progress than Anybody Planned

The letter printed elsewhere in this issue of The Continent from President Thornton Whaling of Columbia Seminary, South Carolina—graciously setting right an error which The Continent incurred in the difficult task of keeping track of three Assemblies at one time—can hardly fail to impress the reader who reads in faith that a providential guidance took care of the question of church union in the triangular pan-Presbyterian situation at Atlanta. Everything came out beautifully from a situation full of possibilities of misunderstanding. The proprieties were fully observed on all hands and yet the union idea made progress.

The U. S. A. Assembly, though full of union spirit, successfully avoided any breach of the tacit promise made in its behalf that it would not initiate projects of union while enjoying southern hospitality. Not the most sensitive of those who feared a unionist coup can allege that anybody took strategic advantage of the brotherly feeling which pervaded Atlanta. And no distracting suggestion of other and more comprehensive combinations was allowed to get in the way of the happily progressing movement to join Southern and United Presbyterians. Yet with all this, and by the fortunate conjunction of a series of circumstances which no set of men would have dared to plan out—which looked in fact to making for trouble instead of good will—the thought and hope of hands joined in union round the whole Presbyterian circle did appear in all the Assemblies in a fashion which everybody welcomed. Wisely enough, no action was had on the subject, but it was put on the docket for next year in such a place that it cannot be ignored. The whole prospect is for favorable consideration then. Ground has been gained very decidedly. Truly these things are managed better from overhead than they can be planned out on the level of human ingenuity.

Temporary Alliance Leads Happily to Merger

There is more than one happy augury in the final signing and sealing of the compact that consolidates the Seminary of the South with Lane Seminary at Cincinnati. As is needless to tell those familiar with the history of the case, the Seminary of the South represented by inheritance Lebanon Seminary in Tennessee, which was the theological training school of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church prior to reunion with the mother body of Presbyterianism. When, however, the unfortunate outcome of unfortunate antiunion litigation in Tennessee made it impossible to continue the Lebanon school at its original location, a provisional alliance with Lane strengthened the Cincinnati faculty with two experienced teachers from Lebanon—Professors Stephens and Farr.

What has just now happened is the transformation of that provisional alliance into organic consolidation, expressed by the inauguration of Dr. Stephens in the church history chair and Dr. Farr in the New Testament chair of Lane. This formal act of merger indeed changes nothing from the practical conditions of the last three years, but it is a happy certificate of the success attending an experiment in cooperation between one of the oldest American institutions of Calvinistic theology and the teaching spirit of what once was rated to be an anti-Calvinistic Church. The perfect growing into one of these two forces at Cincinnati is a tangible parable of the complete and seamless reunion achieved in the church at large between Presbyterianism and Cumberland Presbyterianism. There is no difference left in any remotest corner of consciousness save in those reverently closed halls which memory dedicates to history.

The Lane Seminary of today is by reason of this merger and of the new life which has entered its veins from other sources under the progressive presidency of Dr. William McKibbin a greater and more serviceable school than the Lane of any other day has been. Its students in the past year have exceeded the numbers enrolled in any previous year of its history—about seventy in all. The constituency in the South opened up by the alliance with Lebanon is enlisted with unfeigned sympathy by the unfeigned attention which Lane gives to the problems and needs of that territory. Yet this specialty in Lane's adaptations is not hindering it from influence to the northward, and it draws increasing numbers of students from the northern regions of the church. In possibilities of service in both directions Lane's location on Ohio hills that look over into Kentucky is strategic. All in all, the revival of the institution from an ebb of vitality in which many ecclesiastical physicians foretold its early demise is providential fortune on which all Presbyterians may congratulate it and themselves.

A Vast Event That Makes But Little Stir

When an ancient and apparently impregnable evil finally collapses before the progress of righteousness in the world, men expect the moral revolution to be dramatized by some tremendous earth-startling crash. But the significance of the moral triumph is no less epoch-making when the great wrong fades quietly into a blessed oblivion. It is thus with the opium curse of China—one of the most shameful wickednesses of history, because it has for a century involved the enforcement of vice upon a heathen nation by a Christian power. But to the honor of Britain that terrible policy which has sought India's prosperity at the cost of Chinese degradation is finally dead—smitten silently by an unheralded action of the British cabinet in London.

The outcome is indeed less to Britain's credit than it would have been if the opium treaty had been forced to cancellation by a revolt of British sentiment instead of by the revolt of moral aspirations in long degraded China. But howsoever it has come, it is done now, and the world has the word of the British government that the export of opium from India to China is now to cease. It is true that there attaches to this adjustment an ugly condition requiring China to buy in 20,000 chests of British opium now stored in the warehouses of Chinese ports, but there is hope that this will not be consumed by smokers. China would undoubtedly be glad to destroy it all unvended, and public opinion in England itself should yet compel its own government to shoulder this cost. London could very well meet the situation by remitting from the Chinese indemnity still being collected for Boxer outrages a sum sufficient to cover the cost of this stored opium on the stipulation that China should buy it in and destroy it. If Britain will do that there will be no minor chord mingling in the thanksgiving of the Christian world for the end of this hoary shame.

But in any case a great thing has quietly happened in the world, and 1913 will always be memorable in the moral annals of mankind for what The London Times calls the "final flicker of the opium traffic."

Another One of Russell's Beloved Disguises

The Continent has waited until it could be absolutely certain before answering the inquiries which have reached us concerning the literature of the "Bible Study Club," whose supposed secretary, "V. Noble," has written to multitudes from the Metropolitan building in New York City offering to supply Bible study quarterlies free of cost. As The Continent suspected from the first, but is only now able to say with positiveness, this is simply another trick of "Pastor" Russell to insinuate his doctrines into the churches under an anonymous and virtually false guise. The office to which Mr. Noble invited correspondents to write is occupied by a business concern of an entirely different character, which reports that "Mr. Noble" simply receives mail at that address. This firm disclaims all connection with him. On a corner of the glass in the door is the revealing line, "Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau."

Of course "Pastor" Russell has the right to disseminate his writings as far and as liberally as the gifts of his followers enable him, and a certain measure of respect would be due his industry if he always stood out and out for what he is. But a man who so characteristically loves and uses masks, disguises and misleading evasions is obviously governed by a spirit not at all in harmony with that sort of character which Jesus applauded—the character which comes to the light that its deeds may be revealed.

Experience the Best Expositor of Doctrine

The uncompromising directness with which Dr. Henry van Dyke, preaching at the ordination of his son Tertius, espoused the cause of the young man against those who have questioned the soundness of his faith, will endear Dr. van Dyke more than ever to a church which has long admired the forthright fashion in which he always speaks either in sermons or in books, in poetry or in prose. But the dramatic intensity of his defense of his son—which was what the daily press caught mainly from the sermon—should not shut out from attention the sober words of more permanent application which in the same discourse he uttered in praise of the better way of propagating the truth as it is in Christ Jesus and defending the doctrine that God has intrusted to the church. The marrow of what he had to say in this connection is contained in the following simple but singularly cogent sentences:

"Bring all the beauty, all the reason, all the force, that you can into your presentation of the truth. But remember that one spark of the Spirit counts for more than all else. It is the coming of the light that drives out darkness. It is the presence of life that overcomes death. The world is hungry for a simpler, straighter, more vital Christianity—a gospel that children can understand and strong men can live. Real orthodoxy is not to be measured by definitions but by the spirit that is in a man. Religion is best served and promoted by those who express it simply, commend it warmly and practice it daily. I have heard of a young man—a plain, rough, earnest fellow—who desired to be a Christian minister. He was brought before a presbytery to be examined, and the questioner asked him for a condensed statement of textual and philosophical arguments for the consubstantial deity of Christ. The young candidate was confused and bewildered by the question and sat silent with downcast face. Then an old preacher in the back of the room called out, 'Brother, how do you know that Jesus is the Son of God?' The boy sprang up, his face aglow, the tears in his eyes. 'How do I know?' he cried. 'Why, God bless you, he saved my soul!' I tell you that this man went down to his house justified and approved by the Master."

—The American Sunday School Union is solving in a most generous and statesmanlike fashion the problem of its relation to denominational agencies which also do Sunday school extension work. That any overlapping in such work is intolerable the union accepts as an axiom; and it has found a very simple principle for division of labor which automatically keeps its missionaries out of the way of the denominational missionaries. The denominations naturally have an eye mainly to new towns where there is prospect of establishing churches and send their workers to such places. So the union looks in another direction—toward remote and stagnant communities, backward rural settlements and isolated mining camps, where there is no present strength to maintain a church and small encouragement to hope for future growth. For such neighborhoods the union missioners organize Sunday schools and so supply a source of religious influence where preaching and the usual forms of church activity are unknown. Doing this sort of service the American Sunday School Union confirms itself as even more indispensable than at any earlier period of its long history. Last year it formed 1,723 new schools and established 402 young people's societies in connection with them.

—This is the season of statistics for the Nonconformists of Great Britain, and as usual a general feeling of depression results from the publication of the annual census of the Free Churches. The decline in membership which has been going on for so many years among Baptists, Methodists and Congregationalists still continues, and the Presbyterian Synod of England, which has managed heretofore to escape actual loss, though making very small gains, is now drawn into the ebb tide and has to confess a shortage as compared with last year. Moreover, the Church of Scotland for the first time in all its centuries of history reports a loss in membership. It has in 1913 a thousand fewer members than it had a year ago. The Scotch, however, insist that this unprecedented turn of affairs with them is due to the tremendous drain of emigration from their country. The young people are going out of Scotland these days at an astonishing rate.

—Of all the church brotherhoods in the country the Baptist brotherhood of Cleveland seems to be more efficient in civic matters than any other. It has set out to enforce the Sunday closing law in Cleveland, and it keeps plugging away at the job not simply by months but by years at a time. And though it has not won out yet, its final victory is as sure as fate, simply provided its driving force does not leak out. This is the kind of thing that The Continent some weeks ago was urging on the Christian citizens of every city—an unrelenting determination to enforce the Sunday laws in preference to spasmodic protests at perilous intervals against the repeal of them.

—In the present Congress there are 162 members chosen for the first time last autumn. Inquiry which Secretary Cooper of the Washington Young Men's Christian Association has made in the home towns of all of them indicates that seventy out of this number have been known to their neighbors as active church men. One among the number, Congressman H. W. Temple of Washington, Pennsylvania, is a minister in the United Presbyterian Church. For some years past he has been a professor in the faculty of the Washington and Jefferson College.

—The thirty-eighth Canadian Presbyterian Assembly met in Toronto on the evening of the 4th of June and will probably sit for ten days. Dr. Murdoch MacKenzie of Honan, China, was unanimously chosen moderator. The attendance of commissioners is a record, as almost all the ministers of the church and their wives are in the city. Rev. J. B. Fraser, M. D., of Annan, Ontario, clerk of Owen Sound Presbytery, will write for The Continent a special report of the meetings.

—"A man must be something of a mystic in order to develop much of a prayer life," is a common comment of men whose religion runs more to the practical type. But not so. It is the practical man who has most need and indeed the best opportunity for the prayer life. Prayer is not mainly an instrument of the soul's joy but of the soul's efficiency. The practical man is the very one who can best measure and appreciate the increase of effectiveness which persistent practice of prayer brings.

—The Continent apologizes for a blunder in these columns last week which inadvertently substituted the name of Dr. W. W. White where Dr. W. W. Moore of Richmond was meant. It was Dr. Moore who, like Moderator Stone, was put in the chair of General Assembly the first time he ever attended a General Assembly session.

—Self-righteousness is a form of worship with all the prayers left out.

A Turn Aside from the Highway

BY JOHN TIMOTHY STONE

WE HAD PASSED by the old house at the top of the hill many times during the years that are gone, and had always enjoyed the quaint, old-fashioned garden, with its drummond phlox, its brilliant poppies, its tall row of delicate sweet peas, its graceful, slender hollyhocks, its proud, massive sunflowers and its portulaca, mignonette, candytuft, sweet williams, geraniums and pansies.

* * * * *

There was a stretch of beautiful lawn, too, such as is seldom seen in this farming country; a lawn as rich and even as velvet, and always kept fresh and bright. Just beyond the flower garden and lawn lay the well kept vegetable garden, its products not so varied as in a milder climate, but the corn a little higher than that of neighboring fields, and the potato plants greener and farther advanced. There were no weeds in the onion beds, and the passer-by was tempted to stop and uproot a turnip or a radish from the neat "patch" that reached to the fence.

The house itself took one into "merry England" in imagination. Although it was not thatch-covered, it still had the general appearance of many a typical rustic home across the sea, all was so neat and simple. But there was an oddity here and there. Over beyond the garden, just as it sloped down the hill, one was likely to see a small negro boy, with a long apple switch in his hand, driving a pig right across the garden. A little farther over, near a rock, a young fawn might be gazing upward, and one caught sight of a mountain scene painted on the face of a rock. Across the road appeared one or two signs—"The Way to the Rocky Dell"; "This Way to the Glen."

It is possible for one to pass a home such as this year after year on his journey to and from the camp in the woods without giving more than a passing thought to its beauty and novelty, but on one afternoon it was not so. Quite a large party of us were returning from a long drive, and the suggestion was made, "Why not go through the dell?" and "Why not see this glen?"

The thought was encouraged by the sight of a kindly man, somewhat past middle life, who was working on the other side of the fence by the roadside. He seemed to be improving the property, rather than doing the work of the ordinary farmer. We stopped our four horses and asked a question or two. His genial face and words of kindly appreciation, with his cordial invitation to stop, settled all hesitancy. Quickly we were walking with him down into the glen.

* * * * *

The spot was truly a beautiful one. The little stream, somewhat overfull from frequent recent rains, rushed and rippled and gurgled from rapid to pool and from pool to waterfall, making countless hiding places for the trout that love this clear cold water and its mossy banks and rocky bottom. And such moss! As we descended nearer and nearer to the sparkling stream we looked above us to see the high cliffs, with their perpendicular sides, balsam and spruce, with here and there a tiny cedar, clinging to the sloping terrace and in the crevices of the rocks.

As we looked up at the picture above us we saw our new friend with his white locks, flowing beard and kindly, ruddy face. Behind him, on the dark rocks, moss had gathered abundantly. He picked a bit and asked if we had seen this variety. It was a great black patch of gossamerlike texture; and toward the center of its back, clinging to the rock with its root of delicate tracery, it seemed like a bit of crumpled rubber that one had failed to pull back into shape again. This variety is seldom seen, and our friend took great pride in its abundance and novelty.

Soon we were back to the road again and about to take our seats, when our host asked us to step to the other side. We walked through the lovely garden and beyond it to a little hillside stretching out into the pasture below. A half mile away lay the little village, with its half dozen cottages centering about a store, post office and church. Suddenly it seemed as if we were within a room. On the plain face of a rock near by was a beautiful painting of an ocean scene. Wild waves dashed their spray almost upon us, and as the eye turned in another direction we saw a splendid great black bear approaching—but he, too, was of paint and stone. A mother hen with a dozen little chickens seemed to be coming toward us. Near by a beehive rested on an old stump. From this point we gained another view of the little cottage.

"What a glorious place to take children!" was the exclamation. "What a wonderful spot this would be for a 3-year-old!" The word was no sooner uttered than an invitation was extended. "Please bring the children. We love children at this home, although we seldom see them."

* * * * *

As we drove away our thoughts were filled with memories set in beautiful flowers. The old man had touched our hearts and had unconsciously added a benediction to a very happy day. It was not strange that a few days later, when leaving that invigorating mountain country, we found time to stop and see our new friend again. The same cordial welcome awaited us, reenforced this time by the quiet courtesy of his invalid wife. Little bouquets of flowers had been gathered and tied to accompany us on our way, and when we left our friend said: "Next year when you come this way won't you come down and have meeting with us at the house? We will get in all the neighbors. We don't have meetings here very often, for we don't often have preachers. My wife is a Methodist and I am, too. We just wish you would come and we will get them all in, whether they are Methodists or not."

Somehow as in memory one looks back upon this old man and his quaint New England hillside, his flowers, and his love of nature, his quiet spirit and cordial welcome, life seems brighter, purer, sweeter, and the heart thanks God for the unknown souls so near him, who from time to time come into the realm of our friendship to bless our lives.

Fundamentals of Social Service

Rev. Charles Stelzle of the department of labor, recently enlarged into the bureau of social service of the Home Board, in a recent bulletin says:

"At a conference of social workers recently held in New York the church was sneeringly alluded to by the chief speaker when he mentioned a certain piece of social work. He remarked that 'it was well done, in spite of the fact that the church had done the job,' which comment was liberally applauded by his audience. It was interesting to note that the speaker had received his original inspiration as a social worker in the church, that most of his listeners were church members and that the organization which had made the very occasion at which he spoke possible was heavily endowed by a well known Presbyterian elder.

"A somewhat extensive and, in a measure, a rather critical study of the methods and the spirit of Christian workers among the so-called masses has led me to the conclusion that more effective work is being done today in behalf of the multitude by the men and women in the churches who have not been 'scientifically trained' than is the case with those who have the ability glibly to quote a few pedantic phrases with reference to sociological teaching, but who have never had a real love for their fellows. Scientific training plus human love is the ideal equipment for the social worker. The latter is more important than the former.

"All this is said with full appreciation of the splendid work being done by trained students and teachers of sociology, but the church possesses the spirit and teaches the principles which are fundamental in such study and service."

Blacksmith Who Became a Bishop

Speaking of the widely varying sources from which a denomination draws its ministers, Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts says in The Youth's Companion: "These men come from widely different homes and surroundings. There is the presiding bishop of the Episcopal Church, a fine old man, hale and hearty; his father was a blacksmith; he himself wielded the hammer as a boy; he went to college and the theological school, took a parish, and then was sent out into the great unknown West, with thousands on thousands of miles to roam over on foot, on horseback and by stage. He and his cat lived happily together in a hut, and he became a power in that country—a physical as well as a spiritual power; for the story is told that in his early days he knocked a man out of the stage coach for discourtesy to a woman."

—The milkman who supplied his customers from a chariot would naturally attract attention, but his reputation must finally rest upon the quality of the thing delivered. The same fact applies to preaching. No delivery, however excellent, ever quite made up for the absence of ideas.

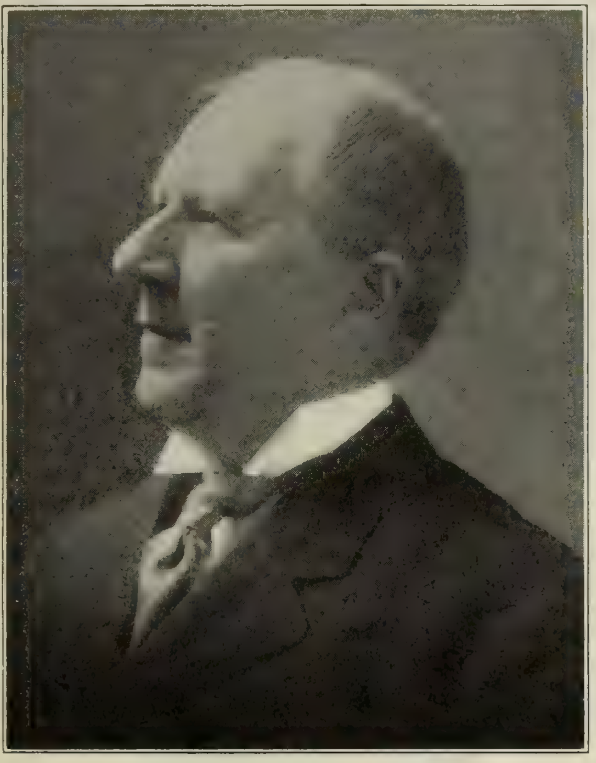
A Cosmopolite: His Service and His Religion

A Study of Henry B. F. Macfarland, a National Layman

BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS, Editor Afield of The Continent

WE COMMONLY picture everybody we know in some characteristic attitude or aspect or incident. The name of the person recalls the particular picture. Thus, Henry B. F. Macfarland, the eminent Presbyterian layman and publicist of Washington, presents himself to my mind always in an incident of fifteen years ago. It was during the heyday of muckraking, when members of Congress, according to one mot, responded to the roll call with "guilty" or "not guilty." We were leaning over the front rail of the press gallery of the house of representatives in Washington, and Mr. Macfarland, who as correspondent of The Boston Herald and The Philadelphia Record was one of the foremost newspaper men in Washington, was chatting concerning representatives in particular and the situation in general. "These men are real representatives—they are like the rest of us, no better and no worse. They fairly stand for the country, its mind and its morals." That generous, kindly view, with its breadth and its spirit of justice, has remained with me as the characteristic of Mr. Macfarland. He had been trained to see things in the large and apart from what is momentary and incidental. He could appraise men tolerantly and dispassionately. Because he did not join the public clamor and railing, he proved himself a man of independence and strength.

Not that Mr. Macfarland had no convictions. As we talked I noticed in the lapel of his coat the little red ribbon badge of the Salvation Army auxiliary, and I knew that this busy newspaper correspondent was also a Sunday school superintendent and a devoted church man. To one who is accustomed to put each man off into his own little labeled box, it may seem incongruous that Mr. Macfarland was at once superintendent of a Sunday school and president of the Gridiron Club, that brilliant galaxy of Washington journalists whose meetings even the Presidents are glad to attend. But many-sided men of the Macfarland sort are more numerous than most of us suspect, and their influence is out of all proportion to their number.



Henry B. F. Macfarland

Before this article is ended it may call the roll of some of the interests and activities of this one layman to show how abundantly and richly one life can minister to its time. At the moment, the significance to be stressed is that, amid the engrossments of labor and beguilements of personal prosperity and comfort, this man has stood steadfastly for the best things. No matter where he was seen, or what he was doing, he showed forth his Christian religion and service. A brilliant journalist and magazine writer, the familiar of Presidents and statesmen, the executive head of the nation's capital city, the leader in a multitude of forward-looking causes, Mr. Macfarland has been first of all a Christian. Clearly, his faith has been the dynamic of all his activity. He had probably never said so publicly, for the truth needs no parading, but the reason why this many-sided minister to mankind has spent himself so lavishly is found in the word of Paul, "The love of Christ constraineth us."

Broad Vision Not Always Gained by Travel

A Christian cosmopolite—that term perhaps best describes Henry B. F. Macfarland. Not because he has traveled; he has been too busy at home for that luxury. And travel does not necessarily make a cosmopolite; I have met dozens of persons journeying around the world whom the world in its bigness has never touched. They remain provincial to the end of their days. Cosmopolitanism is a state of mind, a capacity for the universal, a wide horizon, a hospitable heart. These qualities have made Mr. Macfarland, who has long been the associate of the official representatives of all lands, like Kipling's Kim, a "friend of all the world." Half a dozen international organizations count him among their moving spirits. Good patriotism is world citizenship. There is no more loyal or passionate son of the flag than Mr. Macfarland. Yet it was as inevitable that he should be in the forefront of the Laymen's Missionary Movement as that he should stand sponsor for children's playgrounds in the city of Washington.

A "Parenthesis" That Lasted Twenty Years

Born to journalism, young Macfarland was destined for the law. He has fulfilled both missions, for now he is a practicing attorney in Washington, although a large part of his life was given to active newspaper work. The son of a journalist, born in Philadelphia in 1861, trained in a Scotch Presbyterian home, equipped in Washington schools for Princeton College, young Macfarland found himself, by his father's death, obliged to surrender his plans for a college career, and in 1880 he began to read law in a Washington office. A year later he became assistant correspondent of The Boston Herald. That parenthesis lasted for twenty years. During that period Henry B. F. Macfarland became a national figure in the field which he had not regarded as his life work. Tens of thousands of persons grew accustomed to seeing the life of the national government through his eyes, and of taking his news and views as sound and fearless. The Washington correspondent of a great newspaper is a factor of first influence in the life of America; and with growing honor Mr. Macfarland filled the post until President McKinley unexpectedly called him to the head of the government of the city of Washington.

Journalism is a unique school for the training of public servants. It gives a man a wide range of interests. It acquaints him with men and with man. It drills him in the habit of swift, discriminating judgments. It gives him confidence in his own opinion. It makes him practical and efficient. It takes the rough edges off his character, and if his ideals are good he is equipped to go high in public service. No man stands more squarely on his own feet than the journalist of the first class. In this school Mr. Macfarland had been a star pupil. A founder of the Gridiron Club, and three years its president, he had won that most precious prize, the indorsement and honor of his fellow craftsmen. He had attended every national convention of both political parties from 1884 to 1896. His signed articles were those of a statesman.

In 1900 began the decade of Mr. Macfarland's greatest work. For then it was, in answer to the call of duty, that he accepted the appointment of President McKinley to the presidency of the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia—a position analogous to that of mayor in other cities. When urging him to take this work, the President had said that it need be only for a few years, and that Mr. Macfarland's newspaper duties could be carried on at the same time. It was quickly found that all of a strong man's time and energies would be consumed in the great task of leading Washington into its larger destiny. The ten years of Henry Macfarland's service at the head of the municipal government are bound up with the history of the transformation of the nation's capital, and with the beginning of the new movement throughout America for municipal beautification and betterment. No city could have been a finer laboratory for these great experiments. The executive powers were vested in a small group of men—three commissioners to be appointed by the President, two of them civilians and residents of Washington. The expense of the maintenance of the city government was divided half and half between the United States and the taxpayers of the District of Columbia. This was but fair, as the first use of the city was for the government's purposes, and it could not be asked of a comparatively small group of local residents that they bear this national burden. The third radical departure in the government of Washington was the abolition of suffrage. The citizens do not vote. This frees the men in authority from a great deal of the political pressure felt in other municipalities. It also closes a common door to graft.

The comprehensive Burnham park commission plan for the city was adopted by Washington, and Mr. Macfarland went up and down the land preaching the gospel of the city beautiful. Fifty municipalities have adopted, in part at least, the Burnham plan that had its rise in Washington. The city is now developing symmetrically, and so ardent is Mr. Macfarland's devotion to it that he raises the question whether it is not really the most beautiful city in all the world. When challenged with this comparison, a traveler has to admit that there are only two or three possible competitors for this unique distinction. The people of America are appreciating the national capital and its treasures and beauties more and more, and the tide of travel thither is steadily rising.

The City Beautiful and the City Useful

A city must be more than beautiful, and during the period when Mr. Macfarland was the chairman of the board of commissioners and the chief administrative officer of the District of Columbia, a system of playgrounds was installed, filtration and sewage plans were worked out and altogether $125,000,000 was spent in maintenance and improvement.

The first "safe and sane" Fourth of July of the country was inaugurated by Commissioner Macfarland in Washington in 1908, and what was in effect the first juvenile court was established by him.

A fortunate circumstance aided in concentrating attention upon the city of Washington, for in 1900 the centennial of the city's founding was observed. An elaborate celebration was held, with addresses in the east room of the White House, Mr. Macfarland, of course, making one. This District of Columbia centennial was of very great service in centering the country's attention upon the idea of a beautiful city. In the decade of Mr. Macfarland's administration came also the building of the great Washington railway terminal, then the most beautiful in the world, although today the two great terminals in New York City are challenging its preeminence. This beautiful building—and it is really a great work of art, as well as the last word in efficiency—incarnates the American spirit of utility and beauty. The traveler to Washington who passes through the station without a backward look at its facade misses one of the great things of the city.

One who has not had to do with the administration of a great city can scarcely understand what is involved in such an office as that held by Mr. Macfarland. Day after day there were people by the dozens or hundreds to meet, each with his own particular plea to the government. This commission had the legislative as well as the administrative functions to fulfill, and everything from a new lamp post to a city park was brought to the chairman of the board of commissioners. In all these years of office holding, during which multitudes of persons had to be denied their requests and still others had to be actively opposed, Mr. Macfarland steadily won the increasing good will of his fellow citizens. His reputation became nationwide. With it all, he was the same simple, unaffected Christian, busy about the same tasks of the church as ever. Throughout the decade there rested on his office desk the motto, "Except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain." That reveals Mr. Macfarland's mind, the animating spirit of all his work.

Religious Leader as Well as Municipal Chief

What a man does outside of his regular duties is often his real work. For every man throughout America who knows of Mr. Macfarland as the chief executive of the nation's capital there are two who think of him first as a leader in religious activity. Thus his work has had a cumulative value. The speeches he has made are so many that doubtless he himself has no conception of the total. It would be an interesting mathematical diversion to estimate the number of hours in the aggregate that a man of Mr. Macfarland's age and activities has devoted to public speech. Imagine, if all the speeches were one speech, what a long speech it would be, doubtless stretching over weeks or months! Yet, tested at any point, that combined utterance would be found to ring true to the standards of religion, patriotism and brotherhood.

Great conventions in all parts of the land, national assemblies, college chapels and lecture halls, churches and social gatherings have listened to Mr. Macfarland's wise and witty words. The sum total of his use to society has been greater than the aggregate of his speeches, however. His life itself has been his message. For twenty-five years he has been a superintendent of a Sunday school. That takes time. It is easy to appear occasionally before the eyes of the crowd, but there is nobody to applaud the man who, week after week, in season or out, whether it is convenient or inconvenient, stands at the helm of a city Sunday school. It is not on record that the Sunday schools themselves are wont to flatter their superintendents to death. I wish some such skilled pen as Mr. Macfarland's would write an essay on "The Glory of the Grind."

An elder in the Presbyterian Church of the Covenant, a vice-president of the Washington Young Men's Christian Association, a treasurer of the interstate Young Men's Christian Association, a member of the Men and Religion national committee of ninety-seven, a member of the national committee of the Laymen's Movement, member of the national committee of the Boy Scouts of America—these are tokens of Mr. Macfarland's far-ramifying religious interests. To recite in detail a list of his official relationships to the organizations and forces that make for better citizenship and human service requires a long catalogue. He is chairman of the District of Columbia Council of the National Civic Federation, chairman of the committee which raised the District of Columbia Red Cross endowment, American delegate to the international conference of the Red Cross last year, one of the organizers and first vice-president of the National Playground Association, active in the National Civil Service Reform League, National Municipal League, National Conference of Charities and Corrections, the National Civic Federation, the National Child Saving Congress, member of the Lake Mohonk international arbitration conference, member of the executive committee of the Society for the Judicial Settlement of International Disputes, member of the Washington board of trade, of the chamber of commerce and of the Associated Charities—but why add to a list that sufficiently reveals the many-sidedness and the hospitality of this life devoted to service? In these reaches few of us can follow so diligent a man as Mr. Macfarland.

Studying Law in His Veteran Manhood

To get back to his more personal relationships and activities, one finds stimulus in the fact that the ancient American genius for surmounting difficulties can be found in places high as well as low During the last three years of his administration of the city of Washington, when his days were as crowded as this article has intimated, Mr. Macfarland yet made time for the prosecution of a course in law, carrying out his boyhood ambition and the purpose of his father. For three years he was at once the highest official of his city and a student in the George Washington Law University. It was the old American way of making good. Samuel Smiles seems commonplace alongside of such an incident as this. This journalist and publicist passed examinations and was admitted to practice in the supreme court of the United States and in other courts at the end of 1908. In January of 1910 Mr. Macfarland resigned his office as commissioner of the District of Columbia and joined the law firm of Kenyon, Tucker and Macfarland.

It is a tribute to his activities as a public man and a Christian worker that there still remain a host of persons who continue to apply to him for the free service for which lawyers are highly paid. They cannot think of Henry B. F. Macfarland as other than the public man with no private interests, free to do their errands, be it escorting a friend around the sights of the city or securing interviews with the President or other public men. I suspect that there is considerable embarrassment in Mr. Macfarland's office, although he laughs over it, because so large a proportion of the public does not realize that he is a practicing lawyer. Already he is in the thick of his profession, with a number of notable cases to his credit. He tells his intimates, with gusto, of how a certain national firm of brewers offered themselves as his first clients, with an annual retaining fee as great as the salary of the president of the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia. When he refused this business the men were frankly nonplused. They could not understand why a man's religious scruples should interfere with his private business.

Mrs. Macfarland shares her husband's public mind. She comes rightly by the spirit of public service, for her father, Hon. John W. Douglass, had been a commissioner of the District of Columbia and had held an important government service under President Grant.

The work, the life, the personality of this polished man of the world, whose courtly and gracious ways adorn the gospel, whose aptness of witty speech, whose knightly character and devout allegiance to his Master, Jesus Christ, are a stimulus to service in behalf of one's country and of one's Christ. He is more than a self-made and efficient American; he is the type of world citizen whose patriotism is none the less efficient at home because it comprehends the whole fellowship of mankind.

ON THE TOP OF THE CANADIAN DIVIDE

IN THE SCENIC as well as the political sense "All America" is not below the imaginary line that stretches across the continent from the mouth of the St. Croix to the Strait of Juan de Fuca. Every year thousands of travelers from "the States" are discovering new and peculiar beauties in the wonderful Western Canadian mountains, part of the continental divide, some of whose characteristic features are presented in this section of The Continent's "All Around America" series.

At the top is famous Lake Louise, a marvelously beautiful body of water that holds every visitor forever in its spell. The bottom picture on the left suggests solitudes where the smell of the firs and the music of the waters make civilization's unwholesome dust and rude roar seem infinitely distant. The photograph was taken below Bennington Falls, near Nelson, British Columbia.

At the lower right hand we get a glimpse in the morning sun of the great glittering Selkirk glacier. Have you ever seen a glacier? Well, you must see or you cannot realize its impressiveness. And to see is comparatively easy. All these scenes, for example, are within reach or directly on the line of one railway—the Canadian Pacific, which has kindly loaned these photographs. There are hundreds of spots equally beautiful that never have been pictured.

The little Swiss chalets such as the one shown in the center picture furnish homes for the Swiss guides who have come from their motherland to the Canada mountains. There are numerous comfortable hotels at convenient distances.

Every American owes it to himself to see as much as possible of the United States and of that country to the north with which we are one in the progressive spirit of the new world. He cannot make such a trip as this without being profoundly impressed with the wonderfulness of the heritage God has given to the people of the republic and the dominion. There is spiritual and physical exaltation in this near association with some of nature's most striking manifestations of her versatility and power.

Vacations with The Continent's Family

A Good Place to "Loaf and Invite Your Soul"
See "Camp Life of a Commuter"

Camp Life of a Commuter

CAMPING is a subject that does not awaken the enthusiasm in most people that it does in our family. Usually a camping party means the gathering together of a group of more or less congenial persons, who go far off into the wilderness to fish, hunt or loaf, contracting in the meantime sunburn on the lake, lumbago from the humpy beds, mosquito bites, cholera morbus and such utter physical weariness that by the end of a week the camp breaks up in a general "grouch."

In contrast with such camping experiences, I propose to tell how an average family may spend a considerable part of each summer or autumn in the open air with very great profit and pleasure, the grown-ups luxuriating in roughing it and the children taking to such a return to nature like little pheasants to the forest. To growing children a love for the birds, the fields, the woods and all they stand for is a most valuable feature of their education.

It is not necessary to go very far from home to find a suitable place to camp. In the neighborhood of almost any city you may find a beautiful view, or an attractive sheet of water, or a cool, clean forest, or a sandy beach where you may pitch your camp in comfort. What is set down here is the experience of a city family that has for years found the greatest joy in living out of doors for a prolonged season, gaining health and vigor, finding out some of the secrets of the birds and the wild creatures of the woods, and drinking deep of the pure joy of living.

After fifteen years of camping out in Pennsylvania, which has lasted from three weeks to six months, distributed over the calendar from March to November, the family has become pretty thoroughly fixed in its habit and asks no better fun than to wear its old clothes and blacken old saucepans at the annual camp.

If your camp is to be a real joy to you don't hire a guide or a cook. Simplify your housekeeping by going into the nearer wilderness, where there are farmhouses close at hand. There are thousands of camp sites within walking distance of the trolley, where the majority of the family could spend the summer out of doors, while the members that must go to the city or town could pass delightful nights and mornings under canvas or by the campfire. In such a camp a cook or a guide would be an impertinence. Think of the fun you would miss if you hired a guide to build your bunk! To induce sound sleep there is nothing like a bed of spruce or hemlock boughs. Build this yourself, laying the foundations of springy limbs; then spread on small branches to give body to the bed, making the last layer of twigs, so arranged as to leave the feathery ends all pointing in the same direction, covering the rows of stiff butts with the soft needles, leaving the whole surface resilient, redolent and sleep-inviting.

Can you turn a flapjack big enough to cover the bottom of a sheet-iron spider, without any other appliance than a supple wrist? If not, here's your chance to learn to outdo the most skilled restaurant cooks. Hot cakes cooked over a fire of pine knots and eaten in the open are a sovereign cure for dyspepsia, especially when the patient pries the knots out of a crumbling log and carries them half a mile from the swamp.

Part of the fun of camping comes from preparing for it beforehand. That means more than gathering out old clothes, varnishing fishing rods, making ready cameras, and the like. It means that the whole equipment of the camp, as far as may be, has been prepared by the family. When we first went camping we even prepared and manufactured our own tents. Flies and awnings can be made at home of unbleached muslin sheeting. Every tent should have a fly stretched over it, both to insure against driving rains and to keep the interior of the tent cool. Part of our first tenting outfit, made of 13 cent unbleached sheeting, is still in commission as a fly after fifteen years of service. It has been two or three times subjected to a water-proofing process, which consisted of a saturate solution of lime water and alum, applied in the family bathtub in the city.

Not only are the clothes, footgear, leggings, tents, tools, cooking utensils, bedding and writing materials to be provided beforehand by the family, but you must also think of reading matter, games for wet days and a hundred little conveniences for comfort and general happiness. This will give delightful occupation during the winter, in anticipation of the coming camp.

For instance, the prospective physician or trained nurse of the family should be expected to provide a compact medicine kit, containing adhesive plaster, cold cream, witch hazel, peroxide, antiseptic tablets and the favorite family remedies for minor ills. The teacher or naturalist should see that botanies, bird books, butterfly nets and all the appliances for preserving specimens are not forgotten. The musical member of the family will see that waterproof bags are provided for musical instruments, music and songbooks. The housekeeper will note that it is not enough to provide mackintoshes and ponchos. There must be gum boots or sound rubbers for every member of the family, hot water bags, extra warm and extra cool clothing, mosquito netting and, in general, provision against any local conditions that would cause discomfort. Mosquitoes can be banished from the tents with a smudge, made by placing hot coals and green leaves in an old pan and passing it under the beds and to the back wall of the tent. The pests will leave the tent ahead of the smoke and can be kept out by dropping a curtain of net across the open flaps.

A family camp lasting for several weeks is more easily maintained if a farmhouse can be found as a base of supplies. If this is not possible any empty building may be used as a storehouse and place of refuge. This is particularly recommended to the novice at camping and those who have insufficient space in their tents for storage of supplies. The farmhouse may also prove particularly grateful when the rainy day comes.

An experienced camper will learn to provide against some possibilities, but even the veteran is sometimes caught off guard. Here are some of the things which the family camper learns to do:

To pitch his tent as firmly as possible in a sheltered spot, so that it will not be carried away by the first thunder storm.

To choose a dry camp site, adjacent to water and partly in the sun. Unless near to a pure stream or spring the task of providing water for drinking, bathing and cooking is likely to prove an arduous one. If the site chosen is on low ground or in thick woods, the dampness will be dangerous to health.

To keep a good reserve supply of kindling,

At the beginning of the vacation season The Continent presents an interesting and helpful series of stories from real life—actual outing experiences of readers in various parts of the country. There are a good many valuable hints tucked away in every one of these articles, and they are full of the sane and wholesome spirit of the Creator's great free out-of-doors.

The Continent renews its offer to purchase for publication next year articles descriptive of genuine vacation happenings, and you are each and all invited to contribute. Remember to put in the practical suggestions that may aid the inexperienced, as well as the picturesque incidents. Good, original photographs are desirable. Please send pictures and manuscripts so as to reach us by Dec. 1.

Lodging and Breakfast at the Rock House
See "Blue Ridge Trails"

The Chief Cook Evolving Culinary Wonders
See "Seven Girls in Camp"

matches, coal oil, underwear, blankets and waterproof clothing. Some of these things will be stored in trunks or boxes and some, perhaps, under beds or camp bunks.

To trench around his tent, unless his tent is provided with a board floor or platform. The platform is recommended, especially if the camp is to be maintained for any considerable time. Of course it adds to the expense, but it is worth all it costs, and can be used year after year.

To dispose of all offal at a distance from the tents, thereby providing against a plague of flies, bugs and skunks. The flies are especially dangerous, because it is difficult to keep food in camp. Skunks and like "varmints" are a nuisance, but the squirrels, chipmunks, wood mice, bluejays and such other friendly wood folk as may come to share your supplies will be a joy rather than an annoyance, and many soon become very tame.

To be careful about cutting down trees, bushes, vines and the natural decorations of the woods. Neither will he defile the landscape with waste paper, tin cans, egg shells or broken crockery.

To be wary about fires. He will never leave a campfire in such a condition that the sparks or embers might be scattered by the wind or fanned into a flame. In a dry time he will never kindle a fire upon ordinary woods earth, containing dead roots and inflammable humus, but upon a solid rock or clean sand. On the subject of fires let me say that the little friendship fire, described by that inimitable camper and nature lover, Dr. van Dyke, is far more satisfactory than the roaring blaze kindled for the ordinary camping party by the average guide. It was an Indian who said: "White man make 'um big fire. Too big—he no can get near to get warm. Indian's fire keep 'um warm all night."

To be careful of the rights of those whose property he occupies for the time being. Growing crops, hay or grain fields should never be invaded; fruit should never be picked nor berries gathered that the owner wishes to reserve; fencing material or fire wood should not be disturbed. Of course hunting or fishing on private grounds will not be thought of. If fields are entered, bars or gates should always be carefully closed.

Glacier on Mount Rainier, with Government Road in Foreground

See "1800 Miles by Motor"

All that has been said so far has to do with the labor of preparing for the camp and the pitching and maintaining of the tent. To some it may seem that there is little fun to be obtained in such activities. Then listen to some of the humble joys of the camp after the labors are over: Think of the flicker of the firelight on the white canvas; the spell of the stars seen from your cot in the tent door; the call of the whippoorwill in the dewy, scented dusk; the shadows etched by the first sunbeam that struggles through the leaves in the crisp dawn; the perfume of the wild grape that tangles the brookside which you cross to bring the cream from the farmhouse; the spray that cools your face when you cross the lake on the way home from the station returning from the city; the droning bees in the tops of the lindens or in the scented buckwheat field across the lichen-covered wall; the glow of the sunset; the riffle on the face of the lake in the freshening wind; the roar of the coming shower on the west side of the woods, warning you to slacken tent ropes and lace tight the flaps. These and a thousand other memories will come back to you when the shackles of civilization bind you again next winter.

The cost of living in a family camp will be just about what you choose to make it, but it need not be large. If you can establish relations with some enterprising farmer, you will be able to obtain vegetables, butter, fresh eggs, milk, fruit and fowls far below the prices in the city markets. This is best accomplished by arranging with the farmer in the early spring, so he can increase the size of his garden patch. Many kinds of berries can be picked from wild vines, but permission should always be asked, if the field is privately owned.

It will pay in every way to maintain friendly relations with the residents of the community. We have found the people among whom we camped both kind-hearted and well informed. One of the greatest compliments we ever received came from a stub-toed boy whom we afterwards learned to call Obed, when he delivered a dressed fowl at the door of the tent on the first Saturday night of our camping.

"Ain't you the folks that camped over Elk Hill ways two seasons ago?"

Of course he knew that we were, but when we asked why he wanted to know he blurted out: "Oh, nothin'! Only ma said she guessed if you was the same folks, she'd only charge you 2 shillings for this chicken, 'cause your wife was just a nice common kind o' woman—not stuck up nor nothin'. If you was stuck up like some city fellers she'd charge three."

Our food supply has always been ample but simple—such as would suggest itself to any housekeeper accustomed to providing for a lusty family. Our stove was bought for us by the farmer who sold us milk. It was purchased in the early spring at a country vendue. Although it only cost $1.25 it was worth its weight in diamonds for cooking and baking.

The factors that enter into the fun of camping may be represented as follows:

	Per Cent
Suitable camp site	10
Proximity to pure water	10
Good, wholesome food	25
Comfortable beds	50
Good nature	99

That must total a full hundred if added correctly. WILLIAM FUTHEY GIBBONS.

Clarks Summit, Pa.

A Honeymoon Vacation

IF THERE is anything that beats a summer vacation it is a honeymoon; but take the two and mix them together and you have a combination fit for the gods—that is, if the gods ever take vacations.

The aforesaid deities were were certainly propitious, for the day we chose for our wedding was one of those rare June ones that made Lowell ask his famous question. After a quiet home ceremony we were whisked out through thirty miles of delightful Wisconsin scenery to a little cottage all ready and waiting for us at Cedar lake.

We thought we had kept our coming a secret, but as we neared the lake large signs began to appear at the side of the road, remarking, "Oh, So Happy!" "No, We Won't Call Today," "Oh, You Bridey!" and "Honeymoon Trail This Way"; and when we drew up at the cottage a "Lohengrin" chorus, hastily organized by the cottagers, was waiting to greet us. We were not in the least chagrined, however, for there was none of the equine humor so often lurking in wedding jokes; indeed, when we marched up a triumphal lane of muslin streamers and found a dainty meal on the table and the kettle on the stove singing away to welcome us, we voted that charivaris were not such horrible affairs after all.

In the days which followed we came to know the true meaning of rest such as neither of us had known for years—a complete relaxation from the nervous strain of the schoolroom and the cares of the household, with oceans of fresh air, water and vegetables to make us over as good as new. But rest did not mean laziness, for we were neither of us born to be lazy. The cottage always looked as slick as a pin, and my little housekeeper even tackled the surrounding forest with her broom and established a halo of cleanliness around the house.

And there was work for me to do as well, for the first hard shower showed the roof to be as full of holes as a porous plaster. Did you ever try to lay tar paper on a 45 degree roof on a 95 degree day, with your new wife down below offering suggestions? If not, you have missed one of the joys of rustic life. The paper soon became "tanglefooty" in the hot sun, and I had to flit lightly over it to avoid being transfixed. But finally the deed was done, and the next rain that came left us as dry and cozy beneath as two bugs in a rug.

Another labor of Hercules soon beckoned me. "Old Glory," our cottage, stood on the crest of a steep slope, and the trip down to the lake and back was somewhat hard on anyone not a seasoned mountaineer. The friends who toiled puffing up to visit the newlyweds demanded an elevator or a moving staircase, but I compromised on a set of dirt steps. Borrowing tools, I picked, chopped and shoveled, until there was a first-class flight of steps up the side of that hill. During the operation I got near to nature in the matter of clothing and finished with several coats of tan and the muscles of an athlete.

But life is not just one hard task after another. There were rows to be taken in the calm, cool twilight when the lake was a veritable Glimmerglass and nature seemed holding her breath awaiting the night breeze; there were berries to be picked along alluring country roads; there were "hops" in some of the little embowered pavilions around the lake nearly every evening in the week; and finally, there were countless delightful nooks in the vicinity to be explored on fine summer days.

One halcyon day we decided on a picnic to Gilbert's lake—isn't it funny that although a vacation is one long picnic, you don't feel satisfied without getting out in the open for a "regular" picnic? Packing our lunch, we rowed up to the north end of Cedar searching for the well hidden passage to the other lake. A romantic little passage it was, when we found it, meandering between floating masses of reeds and sedge which had to be shoved aside in many places before the boat could be poled along. Gilbert's lake itself is a most desolate little body of water, which one would never care to visit if it were not for this charmingly mysterious little channel in which you never know what the next turn will bring forth. The sedgy banks at first sight offered no landing place, but finally we discovered a narrow bayou running up into the land. Disembarking, we climbed a steep knoll and dipped into a sun-flooded little hollow so still and secluded that it seemed to hold the summer in its lap. Here we got out our sandwiches, olives and root beer, and then ran a race with the ants to see which should get the lion's share.

Such was our idyllic life for nearly three months. Can you doubt that when school called us back to the city we returned with complexions well colored by the sun and fresh air and with bodies vibrant with the electricity of all outdoors? If you do doubt it, I can only bid you spend your own honeymoon at Cedar lake and be convinced.

Appleton, Wis. MAURICE W. MOE.

1800 Miles by Motor

THE MOST enjoyable summer trip that I ever took was during July of last year, when we motored through northern California, Oregon and Washington to about a hundred miles north of Vancouver in British Columbia.

I was one of a party of five. We left San Francisco the evening of the first day of July with two machines and a chauffeur, fully equipped and prepared for any emergency, and started north, bound for no place in particular, but intending to journey where and when our fancy led.

"But with the morning cool reflections came"
See "Seven Girls in Camp"

We crossed San Francisco bay to Vallejo, where we stopped for the night. The next morning was really the beginning of our trip. We were on our way by 5:15. That day we made 188 miles over good roads and 112 the next, which brought us to Sissons at the foot of beautiful Mount Shasta.

The following day was the Fourth. What a glorious Fourth of July morning that was for us, riding through those timbered lands, with grand old Shasta ever shining in the sun before us! That afternoon we met a man and his wife in an old two cylinder truck which was loaded with all their earthly possessions. He said he came from Portland, Ore., and was going to Florida. All through our trip we met families who were moving from one part of the country to another, generally living in big wagons and often driving their stock along with them.

While crossing the southern half of Oregon we encountered the worst roads of the entire trip. It was here that gasoline came as high as 40 cents a gallon. After many trials, such as broken springs, rough roads and blown-out casings, we arrived in Portland on the fifth night from Vallejo. The following evening, during one of those wonderful northern twilights, we drove twelve miles down the right bank of the Columbia river to Kelso. No one can possibly imagine how beautiful the scenery is along that most wonderful of rivers until he has seen it for himself.

Next day's journey brought us to Tacoma, the city of hills. From here we took a 140 mile trip up Mount Rainier as far as the glacier and return. The glacier has an area of several hundred acres and is the source of a number of rivers. The part of the glacier we saw was unimposing. Instead of a beautiful, glistening, snow-white affair, we saw a decidedly unattractive dirt-covered mound.

From Tacoma we motored forty miles to Seattle, where we left the machines and took a boat up Puget sound, visiting Sol Duck hot springs and Lake Crescent. We then took one of our cars over to Victoria, on Vancouver island.

We found Victoria most interesting. It is called "Little England," is is so thoroughly English. The shops open late and close early, and people take life easy. The first thing that impressed me in British Columbia was that traffic keeps to the left.

From Victoria we motored up the island to Campbell river, one of the greatest salmon fishing grounds in the world. During the season salmon weighing fifty, sixty and even seventy pounds are caught here. Campbell river was the destination and the turning point of our trip.

The scenery on the straits is magnificent. The land is heavily timbered and dotted with beautiful clear lakes and broad rivers teeming with trout and salmon. All the scenery in those northern wilds is on such a grand scale that the vastness and immensity of it almost overwhelms one.

From Campbell river we motored back to Nanaimo and crossed the straits to Vancouver. Vancouver is quite an Americanized town and is growing rapidly. People in this vicinity seem to be quite prosperous. The farmers live in good houses and have immense barns, which they manage to keep painted, a sure sign of prosperity.

Homesteaders are making farms and building towns. We went over miles of recently built roads opening up new territory. We found the cost of living in British Columbia as high as in the States, and in some cases higher. But the motorist never escapes, anywhere, with paying less than the highest market price. That, I presume, is a part of the luxury that is supposed to go with motoring.

We spent one night in Vancouver and then took two days to traverse the 180 miles to Seattle. From Seattle we took the steamship President to San Francisco, arriving there July 28. During the four week we had toured 1,800 miles and had seen a wonderful country under the very best of conditions and during the most delightful time of the year.

JOHN HENRY RUSSELL.
Culver, Ind.

Blue Ridge Trails

MY elderly neighbor stood looking over the line fence, all agog with that innocent curiosity which comes with deafness and its attending isolation.

"I wish you'd tell me what all that stuff on the line is for."

"Certainly," I answered with alacrity, for I am always ready to talk about vacation; "there's my husband's khaki trousers and flannel shirt, and my flannel shirt and short skirt and sweater. You see, we're going down to the mountains for vacation. We shall spend our time in tramping, and those two blankets over there are for an occasional night in the open."

Here she interrupted me. "Not just the two of you?" she asked.

"Yes, we always do it that way."

"But does he enjoy it, just with you all that time and no men folk or anybody?"

"Why, I suppose so," I answered; "at least, he always plans it."

"Well," she said doubtfully as she turned away, "well, that ain't Doc!"

With a sigh of thankfulness for my blessings I gathered up the "stuff" and went in to pack for the vacation at Montreat, beloved of Southern Presbyterians and at least two Northern ones.

We had carefully selected our boarding place, for we knew how much of our good time depended upon that. The ideal landlady—for confirmed trampers at least—is the one who will tolerate wet, sand-laden garments drying behind her immaculate kitchen range; who can hand out luncheon for an all-day trip on a moment's notice, and who winks at tardiness at supper. All these specifications the landlady of our choice met, not with enthusiasm—perhaps that would be asking too much—but with cheerfulness and a gentle tolerance for our vagaries.

Our boarding house was just outside the town, with nothing to break the perfect view from the windows of our room. I shall never forget the evenings spent at our little dormer windows high up on the third floor.

Every morning we started out armed with luncheon, camera, tree book and pedometer. Sometimes we followed a long, beautiful mountain road for miles, reveling in the beauty of the trees and flowers by the way. Here and there we came upon solitary chimneys—ghostly reminders of some domestic tragedy. Sometimes a tiny cabin nestling in a veritable Happy Valley tempted us to pause for a drink and a chat.

Sometimes we fell in with an ox team—an unaccustomed sight to our northern eyes—and occasionally we overtook a group of colored laundresses chatting gayly as they "toted home de wash."

At noon we halted, kindled a fire and cooked our primitive meal, and incidentally proved again how few things are really necessary after all. A soldier's frying pan, with the lid to serve as a plate later on, and a fork or even a sharp stick, have been known to produce three excellent courses. After dinner came a long rest, while we looked up new trees in our book or just sat and enjoyed the quiet. Then a swift, steady "trek" home, that we might not try our landlady's patience too far, a bath and change into Sunday clothes, and we were ready for supper and a visit with our neighbors.

There was a Sunday when it rained all day long—a Sunday with nothing to do but read, talk about things that had been waiting just for this chance to be talked about, or just lie and watch the clouds against Black mountain. With no telephone, no doorbell, no Sunday dinner and no one to feel responsible for, I wonder if anyone but a busy housewife will understand why I linger so fondly over this memory.

But best of all was the day when with blankets and plenty of provisions we started out for a two days' jaunt up Greybeard to see the sunset and the moonrise. We took the trail along the ridge, with the dark and mysterious Craggies to our left all the way, and so beautiful was the trail that it was evening when we reached the top of Greybeard. We made a hasty meal that we might lose none of the sunset, which promised to be glorious. Away off in the distance loomed Mount Mitchell, easily recognized by its length and by the notch in the top; between Greybeard and Mitchell stretched the long trail over Pinnacle, Potato Top and Clingman's Dome, only six miles as the crow flies, but by the trail and in this treacherous August weather liker to twenty-five.

"Totin' home de wash"
See "Blue Ridge Trails"

By and by it began to look squally and we made our way to the rock house, a natural rock formation on the side of the mountain. As we drew near, the bats flew out, squeaking indignantly, and I shuddered. The old Montreat guide and oracle had half contemptuously mentioned possible "groundhogs and mebbe a few wildcat," but had said nothing of bats. I cheerfully helped collect wood for a great watch fire and then we went to rest (?) on the floor of the rock house.

I forbear to dwell on the miseries of that night. The bed was hard and none too smooth; the smoke from the fire and the coffee at supper contributed to keep me awake, and when at last I fell asleep it was to dream of rattlers and catamounts.

When I awoke the moon was going down and in the opposite sky the sun was just rising, a great red ball; the birds were singing madly into the clean, fresh morning air, and from far away in the distance came the soft tinkle of a cowbell. It was as sweet and fresh and quiet as the garden of Eden in the cool of the day after the many hours of tramping and climbing.

"Was it worth while?" he asked as we stood on the top of Pinnacle and looked out over the morning. But I could not answer.

"Only two weeks' vacation!" We said it half regretfully as we turned homeward; but we were already looking ahead to long winter evenings when with diary and kodak views and reminiscences we should live it all over again by our own cozy fireside. Indeed, it was worth while. GERTRUDE CLARK HANSON.

Indianapolis, Ind.

"There were berries to be picked along alluring country roads"

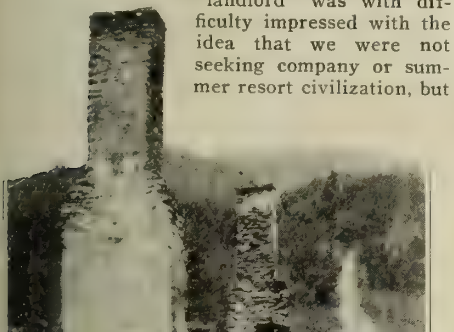
See "A Honeymoon Vacation"

Seven Girls in Camp

Oh, where is life so gay and free?
A camper's life's the life for me.
In sylvan shades we're jolly blades—
A camper's life's the life for me.
—With apologies to Robin Hood.

SEVEN COLLEGE GIRLS, a tent, a trunkful of provisions and ten days ahead with nothing to do but camp made the magic combination that produced a jolly good time for us. The whirl of commencement week over, we started to carry out a plan that had been carefully cherished all year, and one hot June day the train left us at a small town in northeastern Ohio. Soon we were jogging along over the sandy roads toward the lakes, four miles away. We did not look at all like newly made alumnæ or serious seniors as we sat on our luggage in the wagon bed and talked of anything but sensible matters. Even our financial manager displayed a carefree countenance, although in her purse reposed the sum of our individual half dozen dollars which was to pay all expenses of the trip.

Arrived at Turkeyfoot lake, we proceeded to bargain for a spot to pitch our tent. Our "landlord" was with difficulty impressed with the idea that we were not seeking company or summer resort civilization, but at last we turned our backs on Turkeyfoot and its civilized life and followed him around the point to Rex lake. There we saw the "jewel of a lake" that was to be our exclusive property. Fringed with rushes and lilies, except where the water forced its way to the sandy shore of a bathing beach, circled by low hills, darker where the woods reached to the shore, there lay the little lake, the headwaters of a long chain of lakes and rivers. And for the paltry sum of $2 this was to be ours for ten days.



"Ghostly reminders of some domestic tragedy"

See "Blue Ridge Trails"

We lost no time in pitching our tent under some chestnut trees, and a few minutes later a rowboat, large enough for the whole family, was tied in our little harbor. A bale of straw, scattered over the tent floor, made a good bed upon which to spread our blankets, while some bricks, arranged in an open square, with two iron rods laid across the top, made our fireplace. When mealtime came we ate from tin plate and cups, and spoons were the only artificial implements allowed. A frying pan, coffee pot and a few kettles were enough to prepare the most elaborate meals.

One never failing object of interest from the very first was the provision trunk, from which our chief cook evolved wonders in the way of meals. Bacon and potatoes were always on hand, with pancakes and sirup a close second, while canned soups and beans, coffee, cocoa, rice and fruit helped along. A half-mile walk to a farmhouse was all that was necessary to secure milk and eggs. Around the point was a store which kept bread and other staples, and a two-mile row across Turkeyfoot would get us meat.

We had made no plans to keep us busy, yet time never dragged in camp. With a boat and a swimming pool at hand, part of the day was always accounted for. Books and letters, walks and a constant search for firewood made time pass, while the kodak fiend helped it along. Fishing had allurements, but although we spent hours feeding the fish bait to make them tame we did not have our fish dinner.

But even camp had some drawbacks. Of course it rained, and even now we carry a vivid remembrance of one stormy night when we had literally to sit on the tent corners to hold it down. More than once our sense of humor was tested when we had to hold umbrellas over the fire in order to cook a meal.

Then one day we struck camp and rode regretfully away. The common purse was just barely empty and with our $6 we had purchased many things. Coats of tan, hearty appetites and camp nicknames, while the most apparent results, were not the most prized possessions. The memory of the evenings on the lake when the sun turned the water into a flaming ruby or a huge opal, flashing fire, and the spirit of good fellowship that had drawn us close were the things that even yet make our hearts glow as we think of those ten days in camp.

Marengo, Ill. K. FRANCES SCOTT.

Back to the Farm

AFTER AN ABSENCE of over thirty years I one day found myself back in the vicinity of the old farm home—not the house where I was born, but the then far western home in Iowa to which we moved in an early day from Virginia. Many times had I been back for a short while, but this vacation, having plenty of time and a quiet, gentle horse at my disposal, I started out for the fifteen-mile drive with a light heart, taking with me a young girl companion.

The ride was delightful. Our road along the "Hog's Back" gave us a view of the fine farms along the valleys on either side, with their fields of corn in silk and their yellow harvest of small grain. At last, after descending the long hill, we came to the bridge over the beautiful Oneota, from which is a fine view of the old farm, Mount Hope (named by my mother at a time of great discouragement), looming up at the right, the tableland in the rear, the church on a rising slope at the left, the schoolhouse nestling at the foot of Mount Hope and the old home gleaming white among the great evergreens and maples which we children had helped to plant. The old home, which before I left had taken the place of the original log cabin, is much the same, with its spacious rooms, its fireplace and its pleasant kitchen, save for the modern improvements. Where we had used tallow candles made by our own hands and later the to us wonderful kerosene lamps, acetylene gas now adds much to the comfort and convenience of the household. The milk, put through a separator, hardly comes near the house; whereas taking care of the milk pans and crocks and skimming and churning the cream constituted a large part of the labor in the old days. I did long for a sight of a good old-fashioned crock of milk, with its thick creamy surface.

Lots of Fun for the Youngsters

See "Camp Life of a Commuter"

We visited the harvest field and watched the modern machine cut, bind with twine and throw off in groups of six the sheaves, recalling the early days when we children tramped the harvest fields all day long (cruelly scratching our bare feet and ankles, for shoes and stockings were a luxury beyond our means excepting for winter and on special occasions), gathering the sheaves into groups, weary, but happy if we could but keep ahead of the shockers, and always fearful lest night and a sudden shower might catch some grain unshocked. I can smell still the odor of the mint always in blossom among the wheat stubble.

But the hens seemed to lay in the same old way, occasionally hiding their nests in hay and straw stack—and any secluded quiet place—though one would have modern incubators to reckon with in the spring.

We climbed Mount Hope and again beheld the wonderful beauty of hill and valley along the banks of the Oneota; for this is called the Switzerland of Iowa. The spring fires in the early days had kept these bluffs almost bare of timber, but now they are becoming thickly wooded with birch, juniper and a variety of timber; for with the grazing of the sheep, cattle and horses there is no more long, thick wild grass to burn.

Many others of the old haunts we visited—the Indian footprint in the solid rock on the side of Mount Hope, the "side saddle" on a tree near by, which, however, has so increased in size that a grown person could better ride where we children once had the monopoly.

We called on the old neighbors. Many were gone, but the kindly old Irish couple were still on the next farm, where they had lived contentedly for fifty years. We could not resist their pleadings to "lay off your things and stay all day." Here we visited the old spring two rods from the house, where as children we came with a wooden pail for water for the log schoolhouse half a mile away, taking turns, two by two, each day. The water was just as icy cold as of yore.

Not far from here is one of the natural curiosities of the state—a cave where in summer the walls of smooth rock are covered sometimes to the depth of a foot with solid ice, but never in the winter, and a large spring rushing from a crevice near is also ice cold.

We attended services in the old church, whose every board and nail, could they but testify, would have a tale to tell of smiles and tears, joys and sorrows.

When we turned our faces once more toward the old farm a couple of miles brought us to the long hill, and as we slowly ascended I noted how little it had changed in the more than fifty years since first I saw it—the same deep wood on either side, the immense brakes and ferns in the deep places, the decaying trees, the odor of the moist earth, the birds flitting from tree to tree, and I looked for the blue-fringed gentians along the roadside, which never failed us in the old days, and the blackberry bushes from which many a pail of berries had been gathered. The bushes are faithful still, hanging full of fruit, and I folded a newspaper and filled it.

As I picked memory took me back to one day when with a younger sister (our ages then being 10 and 12) I came to this place to gather berries. We discovered that our trusty dog Carlo had failed to come with us. He always watched for snakes, which were abundant here; but it was too far to return, so we concluded to risk it and fell to work.

We were standing very close to a clump of bushes and reaching as far as possible, when suddenly at my feet I heard a long smothered "r-r-r-r-r!" I had never heard a rattlesnake and supposed the noise would be louder, so I rather deliberately put my hand down and pushed back my dress to see what this peculiar sound might be. As I did so I discovered that my foot was resting on the head of a large rattler, six or eight inches of its body showing between the toe of my shoe (this was one of the occasions when I had on my shoes), and the bushes, which were so close together there was no room for it to coil and strike. I gave one bound and scream and we ran to a safe distance, where I burst into tears, trembling and shaking as if in an ague fit, my sister asking over and over, "Oh, did it bite you?" At last I had breath enough to gasp, "I felt no sting." I soon calmed myself.

I have always felt that I owed that snake something for giving me such a fright, so now I took the precaution to take a stick in my hand, but failed to find him or his descendants.

HELEN RATCLIFFE MOORE.

Marshalltown, Iowa.

Routed on the Trail

TO ANYONE who as a boy has hung breathless over the tales of Cooper, in which redskins and white hunters follow the trails and streams of the wilderness, a vacation spent similarly employed in a first-rate imitation of Cooper's scenery would seem fraught with delightful possibilities. Anyway, that's the way it appeared to me when a fellow student proposed a canoe trip down the Au Sable river, a stream which winds a devious way for perhaps 200 miles, beginning in the center of the lower Michigan peninsula and emptying into Lake Huron.

We rented a canoe and shipped it to Grayling. Jim agreed to arrange for the camping equipment. This I thought very decent of him. But when the hour of departure came and Jim caught the train on the run, sans tent, sans blankets, sans everything but twelve yards of fly netting, I revised my opinion. "I forgot," was his explanation, and we let it go at that, since it is not written that a good scout was ever discouraged.

Three o'clock in the afternoon found us in the little town of Grayling and busy laying in supplies. Without much knowledge of Daniel Boone's camping menu, we were obliged to guess at a suitable substitute. The result of our efforts was a canoe full of cookies, crackers, canned beans, condensed milk and cheese. With extraordinary presence of mind we also bought a frying pan.

So equipped, and with a trusty 22 caliber rifle at our side, we pushed off from Grayling amid a chorus of good-bys from a grand assembly of the small boys of the town. In a moment we were swallowed up by a forest as silent and dense and wild as any that Boone ever trod. The stream wound swift and clear over sandbars and rocks and sunken logs. The branches of the forest growth which lined the banks, meeting overhead, cast the stream into a semidusk through which, almost without effort on our part, our canoe sped on. Along the sharp bends we had to paddle for dear life to avoid being swept onto the shore, while fast work at times was necessary to prevent us from sliding up on sunken timber that projected from the water at a toboggan-slide angle. A constant lookout for submerged rocks saved us many a ducking.

Where the Autoist Literally Feels His Way

See '1800 Miles by Motor'

The twilight coming on, we looked for a spot to camp and soon hauled out where a ruined bridge reared forlorn and ghostly piles in the soft dusk. After supper we sat on the bank and talked. It was beautiful and solemn and still. The trees soughed in the gentle breeze, their tops golden with the departing sun, their bases purple and dark with mysterious shadows. About the piles the stream gurgled and whispered, now loud, now soft, while strange birds raised their voices in the depths of the woods. Something of the peace and quiet imparted itself to our spirit, and we spoke of "Thanatopsis" and those mighty woods "where rolls the Oregon"; and of Huck Finn and his companion drifting on the raft under the stars.

By and by we slipped off our clothes and sat on the stony bed of the stream, with the water rushing about us to our necks. When a crane came along and landed on a limb across from us, we climbed out and got our gun. We fired about a hundred shots at his skinny form without attracting the slightest notice from him.

When it grew dark we turned our canoe upside down and crawled under to sleep. The wind picked up. The woods began to complain. Flickerings of lightning played above the trees. The thunder grew from rumors to crashing volleys, and the storm was upon us. It was a fine, thoroughgoing one, too. It ceased at 2 in the morning. Then a perfect bore of a mosquito came, and with him many friends. Good breeding dictated that we remain up to entertain callers, so we arose, and stayed up till dawn.

Night No. 1. No sleep.

That day we paddled from 4 a. m. till 7 p. m. and estimated the distance covered at eighty miles by the river, or twenty as the crow flies. It was hot on the river, with the breeze shut off by high banks, so the cool of evening was welcome. But alas! The mosquito brigade met us as we landed and in spite of smudge and smoke stuck with us till the morning light. There was not a dull moment all night.

Night No. 2. No sleep.

The rising sun drove away the chill mists hanging over the stream and thawed out our frozen marrow. We fled the place. At 9 o'clock we came to the little village of Mio, half way down the river. Here we unanimously pulled up, shot our frying pan full of holes and cast our bread (also our cheese, crackers, etc.) upon the waters. Later we loaded our canoe on the stage wagon and started for home a la terra firma, so to speak.

If this tale is to teach any moral at all to vacationists seeking the wilds, it must be this: Don't forget your tent.

Detroit, Mich. FRED S. DEGALAN.

Summer in Southwest California

AS WE ARE a family triangle and our names all begin with the same letter, we designate our respective selves as E1, E2, E3, according to the length of each in feet and also in years.

When E1 threatened to spoil the symmetry of our beloved triangle by breaking down it became necessary to leave our Ohio home for a long vacation. The doctor advised us to seek a spot where a cool summer might, if necessary, carry us into a mild winter. This spot we found in southern California.

We have blessed that doctor ever since the May day when, leaving San Diego in the distance, we reached La Mesa Heights and sighted "our ranch," crowned like a veritable queen of the May with a glorious snowy hedge of Cherokee roses. "Our ranch" is a ten-acre grove of lemon trees. It is ours only in the sense that all is ours that we enjoy, for we rent merely the bungalow, nestled in the heart of the grove, and draped with the soft, thick foliage of the vine that bears the rare red passion flower. The house happened to be vacant because the owner, an Englishman, had found an American bride on a neighboring ranch and had decided to rear his sons as John Bulls. So he left his ranch in the care of an overseer and carried away his branch of new world stock to graft upon his ancestral tree.

We were delighted to be the tenants of this Englishman, for we found there just what we sought—an ideal spot in which to rest, enjoy nature and live the simple life. Our house was composed principally of doors and windows and porches, so we lived in the open air, sleeping on a screened porch, and most of the summer serving our meals outside. This outdoor life was greatly facilitated by the long dry season of California, during which rain is a very rare occurrence. At the same time we were troubled little with dust, as we were separated from the highway by many trees, and the orchard was irrigated every month.

The breeze from the Pacific ocean, nine miles distant, was almost constant. The hot days were very few, the nights always cool, often cold. One learns there why the gay Indian blankets are so thick and heavy. When you pitch your tent near the coast of southern California take with you plenty of warm bedding. E3, our 12-year-old, insisted a couple of nights in August on sleeping with the hot water bottle.

We were among the hills. To east and north we had fine views of the mountains. Two of the peaks—Mount Helix and Gross mountain—we climbed, with the help of Bronch, the pony to whom we owe much of our pleasure in learning to know the beauty of this land. As we wound up the treeless side of Gross mountain we passed a new house built in among the huge rocks like the nest of some mountain bird. This rocky aerie is owned by Mme. Schumann-Heink. Later E1 and E3 met Hans Schumann-Heink, son of the famous singer, who is himself a singer. He was living in a cabin at the foot of the mountain, and, as a recreation, running a chicken ranch of pure bred white leghorns. He was intensely inter-

(Continued on page 846)

THE HOME COUNCIL

The Test That Tamed Dick

By Lee McCrae

Because a boy is unruly it by no means follows that he is possessed of a spirit of evil. Sometimes it simply means his restless energy has not been given proper direction. This little story tells how one youthful yeast cake, the despair of his Sunday school teachers, superintendent included, was brought at last to turn into a useful channel his talent for stirring things up.

WHEN Richard Armes Randolph, aged 3½ years, was promoted from the cradle roll to the beginners' department, the teacher smiled. He was such a bright, keen-eyed baby it would be a pleasure to teach him!

But the next Sunday her smile had a bit of perplexity in it, for Baby Dick had no notion of sitting in a little red chair, or of doing what the other children were doing, or, in fact, of doing any one thing for two consecutive minutes. All the wiles and arts and firmness of a trained kindergartner were brought to bear upon the wee Richard—and all to no purpose.

Sunday after Sunday for more than two years he kept the room in a turmoil, defying every inducement and punishment to keep him in order; yet at the end of those two years he could say every small memory text and sing as well as any of the little folks. So, of course, when promotion day came he was passed on to the primary room. The beginners' teacher heaved a sigh of relief, and her department took on new life. They could do things now that Baby Dick had literally and finally "tumbled out" of the room.

Youngster Demoralizes Primary Department

The primary department also at once "took on new life," but, alas! not the kind of life wanted there. In just two Sundays Dick had turned that decorous little company into a sort of Sunday school babel, despite the best efforts of the leader and her assistants.

His restlessness had now grown into definite mischief-making—not of the mean sort, but he never could resist anything that had any fun about it. And not the least of his fun was the confusion and evident helplessness of the primary superintendent, who merely pleaded with him in hysterical fashion to "be good." Various teachers came to her assistance, each with the idea that the boy was to be held down in some way, and even the superintendent of the main school took a hand. The boy was not a sneak; he bravely faced every consequence of his bad behavior, but clung consistently to his "evil spirits."

Reputation Follows "Awful Boy"

One, two, three years passed and promotion day again came for Dick. By this time his reputation had reached the juniors, who with one accord bewailed the coming of "that awful boy." So he received anything but a gracious welcome, and promptly began to fight his way through the four years' course. Teacher after teacher gave him up. But as his parents were prominent, influential people in the church he was never dealt with as his obstreperousness really deserved.

His badness had become a matter of habit, however. A mental change, through brain development and education, was going on beneath the outward conduct, but none of his teachers saw it. Many of his Sunday school mates were also his classmates in the public school, and these formed a growing respect for his smartness in his studies and his manliness on the playgrounds. It was not simply his "funny badness" that attracted them, as the Sunday school teachers assumed.

Just before promotion day when Richard and his chums were to step up to the intermediate grade, the teachers of that department met in solemn conclave. Something had to be planned against the coming storm. What should it be?

Said one wise woman: "Suppose we throw the whole responsibility on these big boys and girls themselves, having them organize not as a department but in two sections—the boys in one, the girls in the other. We will teach them, of course, but each section, having its own self-elected officers, shall govern itself, having order or disorder as they choose. You see these pupils are too old for us to make them do things; they can govern themselves if they will to do it."

"All right," agreed the other teachers—probably because they saw no other way out of it.

"And if they choose to expel Richard Randolph the first Sunday, we won't be to blame," added an outspoken one, voicing the quiet thought of all.

Imagine their amazement therefore when the intermediates, delighted with the new order of things, immediately elected Richard Randolph as first vice-president of the boys' section!

The Unruly Becomes Good Ruler

The new president gracefully accepted his honors. Then, in response to cries of "Speech! Speech!" the "dreadful Dick" stepped to the front, threw back his handsome head with the defiant air so familiar to them all, and said brusquely:

"He's to be high monkey-monk and give orders," nodding toward the new president, "but I'm elected first vice—and I'm going to stand right behind him with a big stick and see to it that you fellows do exactly what he says! Hear me?"

They heard; and what is more, it turned out exactly that way.

Now if you should visit that department of that Sunday school—for it is a real place and Dick is a real boy—you will find a fine class with some extremely active officers.

Note to teachers: Don't always look for leaders among the best behaved.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE PRECEDENT

In an article in The Saturday Evening Post, in which he proves very conclusively that Woodrow Wilson is first "a human being," then President, Samuel G. Blythe, after referring to Mr. Wilson's deep devotion to chicken and charlotte russe, goes on to show he is "just folks," like the rest of us.

As one illustration of this humanness of the President, Mr. Blythe tells of his first visit to the capitol, when he went informally to talk with the Democratic senators about the pending tariff legislation—a radical departure from precedent. There wasn't a man in the place who was not embarrassed, says Mr. Blythe—save the President.

"He went in smiling, bowed, and walked to the center of the room. Nobody said anything beyond murmuring 'Mr. President!' And he stood there looking pleasantly at them for a moment.

"'You are not going to treat me as company, I hope,' he said."

Then somebody asked him to sit down. He shook hands all round, took a chair and fell to talking of the tariff in a matter of fact way that put everybody at his ease.

"After the discussion was over Senator Stone of Missouri, taking a glass of mineral water, made a toast, apostrophizing water—a toast that told of the manifold virtues of water; and he concluded with regret that it isn't a sin to drink it—for if it were, everybody would drink it and great good would result to the race.

"The President laughed and said he had heard a toast a few days before that pleased him. He gave it. 'Here's to the ladies—the young ladies—the good young ladies—but not too good, for the good die young, and nobody wants a dead one; and here's to the ladies—the dear old ladies—but not too old, for nobody wants a dyed one.'

BITS BY THE WAY

"Then he took his machine and went back to the White House. . . . He is amused at the precedents that surround him. He said recently that every time he does a natural thing he finds he has broken a precedent. But he intends to keep on being natural just the same."

"GOD NOT WANT ME"

In two dingy back rooms of a tenement in Chicago's crowded Italian quarter there is a little woman who at 30 has been the mother of ten children; has seen them taken one by one by death till only two are left; has suffered grievous physical ills, and has still, because of the brave spirit within her, kept her head above water and made a home, such as it is, for her two little girls.

The clouds that cover the sunshine,
 They cannot banish the sun,
And the earth shines out the brighter
 When the weary rain is done.
We must stand in the deepest shadow
 To see the clearest light;
And often through wrong's own darkness
 Comes the welcome strength of light.

But one day despair settled black upon her. When one scrubs for a dollar a day one can by no means afford to lose twelve whole days and dollars because of illness. Rent must be paid, little feet must have shoes, little bodies clothes, little mouths food. Things looked hopeless to this Italian mother, who must be father, too. When the tears blotted out the cheer she usually made her own she turned on the gas and waited, with the children, for release from life, which could be such a cruel, cruel thing.

But a neighbor smelled the gas and rushed to the near-by settlement house and help came before it was too late.

"God not want me!" murmured the weary mother to the worker who tenderly nursed them back to health.

"Oh, but we want you!" flashed the quick word—a dear word, that meant that someone, somewhere, cared whether they lived or died.

The mother looked at her helper unbelievingly a moment, and then, reading assurance in the steady eyes, smiled her own sunny Italian smile and fell asleep comforted, convinced that there was, after all, somebody to whom they really counted. It was worth the effort to get well when someone cared.

The settlement worker told friends the pitiful story of the little woman whom God did not want, and these friends told it to other friends, and now there is work better paid and less grinding for her, and machinery has been set in motion to obtain a mother's pension for her. So life goes on happily in those dingy back rooms—for who could continue discouraged and unhappy with so many kind folk caring so very much!

But better still is the new spirit of love and fellowship born out of the woe of those dingy rooms, in the hearts of the folk themselves. Good folk, they are, with perhaps more than average kindness of heart and benevolence of purpose; but it had never come in their way to realize just what life might mean to the "other half." They never knew they were standing aloof from their neighbor's need till the story of the little woman whom God did not want shocked them into realization. Thus does he use the least of us for his wise purposes.

And the little woman? "Everybody gotta do de bes' he can," she says, simply, as she works at her "new job." "God knows." S. C. R.

YOUNG AMERICA

Cap'n Job's Surprise

BY REBECCA DEMING MOORE

"I WISH WE COULD think of a good joke to play on someone," Tom sighed. "We've been trying hard all day to have fun, but none of our jokes seemed so very funny, after all."

Tom, Walter and Raymond, three school friends, and Mrya, Walter's sister, were walking home together one pleasant afternoon.

"Look!" called Walter. "Isn't that that surly old Job skulking along in those bushes?"

"Is he really surly?" inquired Myra. "You never spoke to him, did you?"

"No. I never was very close to him, but anyone who lives alone like that must be disagreeable."

"He must be odd, anyway," Raymond argued, "or he wouldn't live in such a queer bright green house."

"Wouldn't it be fun to play a trick on Job?" Tom suggested suddenly. "He walks so slowly we could put across lots and get to his house in time to mix up his furniture or something. I don't mean any harm, of course," as Myra prepared to disapprove of the plan—"just something funny. He'd wonder how it happened."

"Perhaps he isn't so bad, after all," said Myra. "Maybe he lives alone because he hasn't any relatives left to live with. I don't think——"

"Oh, now, Myra, we're not going to do a mite of harm. It'll just give the old man something to think of."

They were drawing near the rough little dwelling which was the home of the solitary old man with whom the villagers had not found time to make friends. Perhaps the oddness of the little house had helped to keep them away. It was hardly more than a dry goods box with a crooked stovepipe for a chimney, a tiny "L" built on behind and a scrap of a porch in front, the whole painted the most vivid, extraordinary shade of bright green.

"Did you ever see anything quite so green in your life?" exclaimed Myra. "But really, the place looks very tidy and shipshape from outside. And see, Old Job has his washing out on the line. He must be a neat old fellow."

"Boys," exclaimed Walter, "I have it! Let's do something to his washing—tie knots in everything. That won't be any harm, but it'll make him wonder. Come on!" And he ran toward the clothesline and began to twist the sleeves of Job's blue gingham shirt into a knot.

"Hurry now," he urged, "or he'll catch us. Myra, if you don't want to be in this, you can keep watch and when you see the top of Job's head over the hill we'll run and hide behind the bushes, where we can see how surprised he'll be."

"Stupid thing! Can't tie a sailor's knot!" came in a high, shrill tone from the direction of the house.

The boys dropped their work and stared, too much astonished even to run.

"Stupid thing! Can't tie a sailor's knot!" the voice repeated.

"What shall we do?" they whispered. "It's too late to get away, now that we've been seen."

"But I was sure Old Job lived alone," Walter declared under his breath.

"We are jolly sailor laddies, yo-ho, yo-ho," issued from the little green house.

"It sounds as if there were half a dozen in there," Myra whispered.

"Ho, my hearties!"

The startled children turned to see Old Job standing beside them. In the excitement over the mysterious shrill voice Myra had forgotten to keep watch.

"Helping an old man to take in his washing, I see," he went on. "That's good. It's quite a voyage down to port and my old joints are stiff."

The children found their fingers pulling off the clothespins and throwing the clean garments over their shoulders.

"Come right in, youngsters," Old Job invited, opening the door of the green house, "and make the acquaintance of my messmate."

Myra ahead, the others sheepishly following, they crowded into the tiny house.

"Now, I don't know all your names," their host continued genially, "but I'm Cap'n Job and this is my running mate, Cap'n Peter Pepper."

"Pleased to meet you, pleased to meet you. Stupid! Can't tie a sailor's knot!" Cap'n Peter Pepper, a brilliant green parrot, greeted them from his cage hung high by the window.

"You see," Cap'n Job explained, "I had to paint my house green to match Peter Pepper. He's very particular. In warm weather his cage hangs out on the porch and he likes everything to match up, nice and shipshape. But come, come, I'm forgetting how to treat visitors in my cabin, it's so long since I've had any. Sit down. You may have this, miss," pulling out a cane-seated revolving chair for Myra, "and you boys can make yourselves comfortable on my bunk," indicating a sort of a shelf built to one wall of the room.

"But——" Myra began, guiltily conscious of the original purpose of their visit.

"Now, miss," Cap'n Job interrupted, "your mother won't be expecting you home just yet. It's only eight bells," pointing to a big silver watch hanging on a peg. "Since you've come all this way to help me, you must stop and have mess." And Cap'n Job began rattling at the round stove that stood in one corner.

Soon they were sipping hot chocolate, munching hardtack and tasting of some delicious candied fruits that Cap'n Job told them he had brought himself from China. They were discovering at the same time that every inch of the queer little room was crammed with interest. Over the watch hung a round object like a clock that the captain explained was a ship barometer, and he showed them just how to recognize the approach of a storm. On a bracket shelf in one corner stood a model of a Chinese junk carved in ivory, complete to every rope and spar and equipped with a full crew of little manikins.

Whatever wall space was not filled with other trophies of the sea was covered with pictures of a brig with all sails set. Some were oil paintings, others pen and ink drawings and some mere pencil sketches, but all represented the same craft gayly speeding through the ocean under full sail, flaunting the name of Amanda P. Jenkins on her pennant.

"The finest brig that ever rounded Cape Horn," Captain Job explained proudly. "Wasn't she?" appealing to Cap'n Peter Pepper.

"Finest brig that ever rounded Cape Horn," Cap'n Peter Pepper agreed shrilly. And when the children had learned of her swiftness, her seaworthiness and the remarkable voyages she had made they were ready to share the opinion of the two captains.

The boys tried to discover the secret of a Chinese puzzle. Myra was delighted with the wonderful embroidery on silk and grass cloth that the captain took from the drawers of a little lacquered cabinet to show her. There was a walrus tusk carved by sailors in their odd moments and there were wonderful pearly pink shells, a curious book make of sheets of parchment, pressed sea weeds and, better still, a story to go with everything.

"See this coat?" Captain Job said, lifting out of a wooden chest a garment which looked as if it had never been worn, although it was patched at both elbows. "Once when the Amanda P. Jenkins was making an extra long stop at Hongkong I thought I'd try a Chinese tailor. I knew that a Chinaman could copy anything, so I gave Ching Ming for a pattern an old coat that had come to patching, one specially long voyage. He copied it and this was the result."

They were laughing over the patches that Ching Ming had painstakingly added to the new coat, when Myra, glancing at the watch, exclaimed that they must be going.

"Only three bells," Captain Job assured them. "That'll give you half an hour to get home for supper. I've enjoyed your call amazing. Since my old stiff joints ordered me ashore for keeps and won't let me even stay on the coast where I can catch a glimpse of sailing craft, I have to make my quarters as much like shipboard as possible, and my green cabin seems to sort of scare off visitors, so Cap'n Peter Pepper and I have had to be contented with each other's society. It's cheered us up wonderful to have you young folks come in and I hope you'll come often."

"Thank you, Cap'n Job. We certainly will come again," Walter answered heartily for the rest, "and we're very s——"

"Yes, I'm sorry you can't stay longer this time," Captain Job broke in, "but your folks'll want you home for supper. Come again soon."

"Did he know?" asked Walter, when they were outside. "And did you ever feel so uncomfortable in your life?"

"Anyway, it turned out better than our other jokes," said Tom. "If we only had been really helping, though! I guess that's where the most fun comes in."

Dinkie—A Manse Pussy

Dinkie belonged to a Presbyterian minister's family, and is well entitled to a place on the Young America page, though this snapshot of her does her very scant justice. Dinkie was also a much-traveled pussy. Not many Angoras can boast of a trip across the Atlantic on a White Star steamship, or of a ride up the Hudson, or of moving from Vermont away out to North Dakota, or of living through a tornado.

If Dinkie could write her own story she would tell you all about her home in Wales, and how sad she felt at leaving it when the minister and his wife with whom she lived decided to bring her to America with them. She might tell you, if she were not too modest, what a pet she was among the passengers on the Teutonic, and what a good sailor she proved to be. And then she would perhaps tell you of a thrilling experience on the Hudson, when the steamer Adirondacks ran down the steamer Saratoga, and the City of Troy, on which she was traveling, did the rescue work.

Her nine years in North Dakota were less eventful, till the tornado swept the country where she was living. Dinkie was out in the violent storm which accompanied it and took a severe cold, from which she never recovered.

Dinkie had many cunning tricks, one of which was to stand on her hind legs and present her right paw to be shaken when told, "Be a lady, Dinkie." And instead of being called in the usual way, she was always summoned by a little bell, to whose tinkle she promptly responded. Perhaps it was partly because she had traveled over 10,000 miles that Dinkie was such a rarely wise little cat.

New Use for "Happiness"

"Now," said the teacher to her class, "I am going to give you three buttons. Here they are. You must think of the first as representing life, the second liberty and the third happiness. In three days I want you to produce these buttons and tell me what they represent."

On the appointed day the teacher asked one of the youngest pupils for the buttons.

"I ain't got them all," he sobbed. "Here's life and here's liberty, but mother went and sewed happiness on my trousers."

Vacation Story Contest

DEAR YOUNG AMERICA: We will have this summer our usual vacation story contest, with prizes, of course. Announcement of conditions and prizes will be made in your page next week.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

June 22, 1913—The Blinding Effect of Sin—(Temperance Lesson)

Everyday View of the Lesson

By J. L. Scott

Lesson Text, Amos 6:1-8. Golden Text, Amos 5:14: Seek good, and not evil, that ye may live.

Amos was one of the minor prophets. They were twelve in number, and called minor because their manuscripts were small as compared with Ezekiel's or Isaiah's. The designation implies no inferiority either in origin or worth. Peter at pentecost found his text in Joel. Stephen quoted from Amos before the council, and James based his decision at the first Christian assembly upon the authority of the same prophet. God never calls a small man to do a great thing. Amos was the peer of those who had served in the prophetic office and did a work of equal importance.

To know such a man one must have knowledge of when he wrote and when he lived. The prophets had their own individuality. Their surroundings shaped and colored all they did. Amos was a peasant. His time was divided between caring for sheep and gathering sycamore fruit or wild figs. The gathering of this fruit would suggest that Amos tended herds not his own, for sycamore fruit was eaten only by the poorest of the people. It must be punctured before it would ripen, and the puncturing was possibly the prophet's occupation. That he was country bred is evident from his writings. It is said that of all the prophets he most excels in the rough, rugged poetry of nature. And yet this man was no rustic. Though he disclaims knowledge or culture, with the exception of Isaiah no writer ever climbed to greater heights or possessed a keener appreciation of the world about him.

To Prophet, Judah and Israel Are Branches of Same Tree

But to know Amos one must read him entire. This lesson by itself will fail even to suggest him. He lived at Tekoa, a place not far from Jerusalem in the south kingdom of Judah. Just north was the kingdom of Israel with its ecclesiastical center at Bethel. This kingdom under its present ruler had achieved great success, much of its old territory had been regained and a restoration to its former power seemed not far away. To the prophet the line of separation between the rival kingdoms was purely political. They were two branches of the same tree and his heart went out to each alike. But the people at the north needed him the more. The inhabitants, drunk with success, had forgotten God and were living lives of indulgence and sin. The country was typical of one who, blinded by the god of this world, is being driven on to his death. The prophet felt impelled to leave the quiet of his upland country and with torch in hand go up and down the streets of Bethel crying, "Hear this word that Jehovah hath spoken against you, O children of Israel." It was Jonah at Nineveh, John the Baptist in the desert.

The people listened, as they always do to the unusual. Some no doubt thought Amos insane—a wild rhapsodist, whose brain had been touched by an evil spirit. But his message was no harangue, intended to excite without a purpose. It was as logical as a written sermon. The introduction to his address lies in the first chapters. He begins with Damascus, then follow the sins of the kingdoms bordering upon Israel. These were the approaches that led on to his mission.

Israel, Forgetful of Benefits, Follows the Way of Strange Gods

So long as the storm hung around their borders the people gave little heed. But Israel must not escape. Her laws were oppressive. The poor were sold for a pair of shoes and in the house of idolatry they drank the wine of the condemned. The people had forgotten God. He had led them through the desert and given them the land of the Amorite for a possession. Among all the families of the earth them alone had he known, but they had turned against him and followed the way of strange gods. Sin is cumulative and ingratitude is its final stroke. One descends the ladder round by round until he reaches ingratitude; below this he cannot go. Such was the condition of Israel when Amos arrived.

But there was a Zion in Jerusalem and a Bethel in Samaria where men ate and drank, uncaring for the great suffering world outside, and among these was Amaziah the priest, who was chaplain to the king. The presence of the prophet was to him a personal annoyance, so he bore a false report to the king and asked that Amos be expelled from the country. But the king appears to have treated the matter with silence.

But the priest represented the state church. He officiated at the king's chapel, while Amos was only a dissenter. The prophet claimed to be in no orders. He was neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but God had said, "Go prophesy unto my people Israel." This he had done, and seemingly without effect. The golden calf still remained at Bethel in place of God. This was the radical sin against which Amos had been sent. Jehovah was God, but the rulers had thrust him aside.

Only Hope of People Lay in Return to God

The rulers had oppressed the poor. They had substituted ceremony for service. Wine and licentiousness had followed in their train. As they had abandoned God, so God had left them to themselves. Two could not walk together except they were agreed. And to walk again in fellowship with God was the only hope of rulers and people. Go to Calneh and witness his judgments. Retribution is universal. Your neighbor drank and fell; are you better than he? Temperance to be a virtue must spring out of our relations to God. The prophet was not an agitator, neither was he a socialist; he was a preacher of righteousness. Eliminate the first commandment and the other nine will soon follow. The best temperance lesson is to teach faith in God. Faith puts a staff in one's hand and makes him stronger than himself. Man lives his ideas of God. Make that idea the true one, and Samaria has heard the voice of the prophet.

The Lesson Verse by Verse

By Hermon D. Jenkins

ANALYSIS—The prophet Amos was one of the great characters in Bible history, distinguished by a foresight which could foretell disaster even under cloudless skies, and with courage to utter warnings of coming disaster when his hearers scorned his message and threatened violence to his person.

Although in a self-satisfied age to call a man "a pessimist" is to arouse his indignation, the wise man is he who foresees the evil "and hideth himself" (Prov. 22:3).

The prophet Amos was what we would call a "herder," such a herder as one finds among the high moors of Scotland—one inured to hardship, accustomed to isolation and given to meditation upon religious themes (ch. 1:1). It is often among such lonely men that life's problems are most profoundly studied. If you have read John Muir's "My First Summer in the Sierra," written when he had charge of a flock of sheep in the Sierras, you will understand how the shepherd's employment is not inconsistent with great thoughts on lofty themes.

Outwardly the condition of Judah and Israel was prosperous. Judah was under the famous Uzziah, and Israel had for her king the first truly great ruler since Solomon's day, Jeroboam II. The people were increased in wealth, but not inspired by high ideals. They gave themselves, as the prosperous are likely to do (Prov. 30:8-9), to self-indulgence; and this led to dissipation and that to physical as well as moral degeneracy. More than one great warrior has gained a crown to lose a character. The lesson for today is a temperance lesson because Amos traced the decay of the people to their indulgence in intoxicants (v. 6) and its long train of idle, vain and dissolute habits.

Strength of a State Is in the Character of Its Citizens

Verse 1—One of our foremost statesmen left Americans the warning that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." But Amos taught, millenniums before, that such vigilance is the price of virtue and honor. Old gamblers who would pluck a novitiate always let him win the first stakes. The speculator who will die poor is the one who makes $10,000 on his first "flyer." It takes a steady head to be at once successful and cautious.

Zion—that is Judah, the southern kingdom—was confident and self-indulgent; while Samaria, the northern kingdom, was boastful and drunken. Both were prosperous. The notable men of both nations, as the revised version gives it, were at ease because they thought themselves impregnable. Judah and Samaria felt perfectly able to "whip" all the states around them and it cost both crowns. But Amos said that their vanity was caused by drink.

Verse 2—Amos calls upon them to view what Volney calls "the ruins of empires." The strength of Calneh, of Hamath or of Gath did not save these cities from attack. "The walls of Sparta are her citizens," said the proud native of that little state. Amos would have Jerusalem and Samaria know that it was not in the power of walls or wealth to save a corrupt people.

"Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and men decay."

Strong Drink a Source of Weakness Because Ruinous to Character

Verse 3—The hardest drinker is often the biggest braggart. "When the wine is in the wit is out." The tendency to boasting which the sober man controls the drunkard lets fly. Nor did it take long for surrounding nations to discover that the two braggart nations were going to the dogs and would fall easy victims in war. Inch by inch the prophet saw their old-time enemies draw near and prepare for the deadly assault and inevitable overthrow.

Verse 4—A hardy climber among the moorland ranges of Tekoa, accustomed to sleep wherever night overtook him and making his bed among the rocks, Amos had little admiration for men who spent enormous sums upon a single couch. Anxious for the increase of his few sheep and cattle, he foresaw starvation certain in the time of war should the rich diminish their herds by butchering the yearly increase.

Verse 5—They loved a parlor concert better than they loved the rude music of the camp, and they handled a harp with David's skill, but could not break a bow of steel as he could, or climb the heights which he scaled when the city of the Jebusites fell before him (Ps. 18:33-34).

Verse 6—All this effeminacy sprang from wine. In his autobiography a leader of New York's aristocratic set tells us with what care he carried in his own hands, seated in a rubber-tired carriage, the two bottles of wine he wished to present to a distinguished guest. His one distracting fear was that some sudden jolt might disturb the perfect transparency of the wine. It was with such men as rulers that Amos was called to expostulate.

Wealth Made Nations Easy Prey Because of Luxury It Fostered

Verse 7—As a matter of fact, the stronger of the two nations fell first. Samaria, the beautiful new city built to be a greater Jerusalem, fell only sixty-seven years after the prophecy of Amos was uttered, and Jerusalem itself somewhat later. The wealth which made both a temptation to surrounding powers and an easy prey because of the habits of luxury it fostered, never returned. Their sumptuous banquets were gone forever. Even Herod could not restore them as they had been known. The "idle rich" easily became the dissolute rich, and then the end drew near.

Verse 8—It is the folly of each nation to rely upon the honored names of its founders. Two men have recently been sentenced to the federal penitentiary who thought their illustrious fathers would save them from disgrace. But the son who does not honor his father by a life worthy of his sire can hardly use that name as an armor against just punishment for crime. Jacob was a name to conjure with among the Jews, but it would not stay the arrows of divine justice. No boy can trust only to the piety of his mother or the honorable career of his father. A nation cannot be saved by those in its cemeteries. That the father is buried in Westminster will not forbid that the son be buried in the potter's field. Each generation must stand by its own sobriety, its own courage and its own piety.

DEVOTIONAL SERVICE

BY EDWARD ARTHUR WICHER

Week Beginning June 15, 1913

TOPIC—The ten virgins. Matthew 25:1-13.

In the parable of the ten virgins the watching to which our Lord urges his followers is more narrowly defined. It consists in an habitual inner preparedness. It is symbolized by the reserve supply of oil in the vessels of the wise virgins. Whoever rightly waits for the coming of his Lord must have enough oil to keep his lamp burning throughout the night.

—

The background of the marriage customs of the Semites can be quickly filled in. The marriage takes place in the night; hence the constant reference to the carrying of lamps and torches which occurs in all mention of the marriage feast in the Bible. The bridegroom, accompanied by his friends, "the sons of the bride chamber," sets out from his house to the house of the bride, in order to bring her thence. In the return procession the bride is accompanied from her father's house by the companions of her youth (Ps. 45:15). With pomp and gladness the procession moves backward to the house of the bridegroom. On the return journey other friends of the bride join the procession and, with their singing, swell the joy. Among these are the virgins of the parable. They wait in the night in the place where they have assembled themselves, until they hear the shouting which announces the coming of the bridegroom. Then they start from their place and join the procession to the bridegroom's house, which all enter together. After they have passed inside, the door is shut and there is feasting and gladness.

—

But all who participate in the procession must carry lighted lamps, the symbol of hymeneal rejoicing, to omit which would be to come to the wedding feast in mourning. Without their lamps they could not be considered as belonging to the wedding party, nor could they be admitted to the festal room.

—

The central idea is that for an event so decisive as the coming of the Son of man, some have made an adequate preparation in their inner life and others an inadequate preparation. The former will be received into the eternal blessedness of the kingdom and the latter rejected therefrom.

—

But during the interval of time that elapses before the bridegroom's coming there is drawn no distinction between the wise and the unwise virgins. All are gathered alike in one place. All have lamps, and the lamps of all are burning. All slumber while waiting for the signal in the street.

Thus it is with all who are gathered together into the visible church of our Lord. They are in one communion; they make the same confession; they observe the same forms of devotion. They are all alike occupied with the ordinary activities of life; not giving their thought exclusively to the coming of their Lord; but being satisfied that the preparedness has been adequate, they are properly occupied with whatever task calls them, and await their summons with calm confidence.

—

But in the case of five of the virgins confidence was unfounded because their preparation was not adequate. They had lamps, but no surplus supply of oil from which to replenish them. "What difference does it make?" they thought. "We understand that he is certain to come early in the night. In that case we shall not need a reserve supply. Our lamps will burn long enough." —

But the bridegroom unexpectedly tarried, and while the virgins slept the hours passed swiftly by. Then in the street there came a sudden rushing, and the crier at the head of the processon lifting up his voice: "Behold, the bridegroom! Come ye forth to meet him." Then all the ten virgins trimmed their lamps. The five wise poured in a fresh supply of oil; the five foolish found to their dismay that their lamps were exhausted.

—

It is a simple statement of a profound lesson. We ourselves lack the reserve supply. We are so much disposed to make the most of a small capital that we grow impatient of acquiring stores that are not to be put immediately to use. —

In the things of the soul discipline is the only path to life. It may be, it usually is, a path of suffering. But out of suffering we derive the reserves of spiritual strength for the sudden hour of trial. The strongest force is the force that is longest in motion. Our strength of soul manifests itself in an unvarying, unwearying endurance. Thus we must fill the lamps of our confession of faith in Jesus Christ with the oil of the convictions of our souls. We must fill the lamps of our adoring worship with the oil of the joy of our salvation. We must fill the lamps of our systems of Christian ethics with the oil of the holiness of our hearts. We must fill the lamps of our reading of the Bible and our listening to sermons with the oil of a profound, mystical fellowship with the ascended, living Saviour. We must fill the lamps of the good deeds done to our fellow men with the oil of our love to God, and to his Son Jesus Christ. Only thus can we be confident that our lamps will continue to burn until the hour when our Lord himself shall come to take us with him. For the oil in the lamps is the Spirit of the living God (Heb. 1:9). —

This oil is something that cannot be transferred from one person to another. It must be provided by everyone for himself. Every man must live by his own conviction, his own loyalty, his own self-sacrifice. The oil he burns must be purchased by his own pains and toils. It is a substance of which no man has more than he needs for himself, or of which he can spare anything to supply the need of another.

—

It is a perilous thing for men to desire to possess just as little religion as possible, so long as they may be numbered with the friends of Christ. They want to enter the kingdom, but they also want to make the most of this world. Christ does not desire such friends. He claims an undivided heart. Those who are ready will enter with him into the marriage feast; those who are not ready will be shut out. These latter he does not even know, for the reason that they have never truly known him. And in the hour of mirth and gladness no alien, no self-calculating eye shall be permitted to chill the rapture and the song.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE

COMMENTS IN BRIEF BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

June 22, 1913

TRAVELING WITH THE MISSIONARY

TOPIC—Mission work at home and abroad. VI. Missionary tours. Acts 15:36-41; 16:1-5.

One of the great travel experiences which will be impossible twenty years hence is to go over the route of the apostle Paul in Asia Minor. Many of the usages of Paul's day, and the same old Roman highway through the beautiful Cilician gates which he used, still persist; but the new Bagdad railway is rapidly introducing the ways of the West, and the reminders of Paul will soon become extinct. This experience makes vivid the itinerant work of the missionary apostle. His feet were tireless in service. His tours covered most of the known world of his day. He sowed "beside all waters," an example which his successors today are following. The missionary spirit, throughout the centuries, has been a restless, outreaching one, animated by Paul's ambition to preach the gospel where Christ was not already named.

—

A few weeks ago a veteran Presbyterian missionary in Japan, Dr. J. B. Hail, celebrated the thirty-fifth anniversary of his service in that land. The Japanese feted and honored him on this occasion, and he narrated early experiences. In one region all foreigners were for a time called "Hail," because the people supposed that his name was descriptive of non-Japanese. For more than a generation this man has been touring rural Japan, and thus has established for his message a cordial hearing and a wide discipleship which naught can shake.

—

The one way to become truly acquainted with a foreign land is to travel in its rural parts. The itinerating missionaries have many advantages over those who fill a fixed post. They understand the native life best. Their personal contact with individuals is closest. The people they meet are not commonly in contact with foreigners, and so are readier to listen to a new message. Evangelistic itineration is the most interesting and most directly profitable form of mission work.

—

To the comfortable stay-at-home this touring in mission lands may sound picturesque and romantic. But its prosaic side is uppermost with the person who experiences it. Thus, to ride on a Chinese wheelbarrow sounds like good fun; but "let him jest at scars who never felt a wound." A native Chinese inn provides material for the writer; but its cold and filth and vermin and discomfort do not suggest literature to the one who is experiencing them. A Chinese houseboat looks well in photographs, but the sore bones of one who knows the hardness of its wooden sleeping shelves, and the discomfort of the opium fumes from the compartments of one's neighbors, is not soothed by photographs. The missionary on tour takes without grumbling and as part of his day's work experiences which people in Christian lands know nothing about.

—

Sailing about among the innumerable islands of the beautiful Inland sea of Japan is the Fukein Maru, or Good Tidings, the Baptist mission ship of which Captain Luke Bickel is at once navigator and missionary. This is a novel method of touring. Little villages which no other foreigner has ever visited are reached by the gospel ship. The people, mostly simple fisherfolk, thus associate Christianity and foreigners. This mariner messenger also "sows beside all waters," a true pioneer of Christianity. —

We admire the great heroisms of the apostle Paul in his missionary tours; but we forget all about the vermin, the poor khans, the noontide heat, the dust, the delays, the petty extortions and the other minor difficulties which he endured without comment.

—

When Miss Gaines of the Hiroshima Girls' School in Japan (the scene of "The Lady of the Decoration") was visiting among the villages back in the interior not long ago she ran across a household of Christians who were conducting a Sunday school. Inquiry developed that the wife and mother had been converted thirty years ago by the sermon of an itinerant missionary, who happened upon that remote village. She had prayed and labored for more than a score of years for the conversion of her family. Now she has the happiness of maintaining a Christian home, and doing Christian work, in a village where there is no church and where no missionary visits regularly. —

The Pauline principle of taking the message where the people are has ever been sound Some English cathedrals—and one church on Broadway in New York City follows this example—have pulpits outside the walls for open air preaching to those who will not enter Market place preaching has many modern form —summer tent work, street meetings, newspaper advertising, hotel meetings, etc. The wayside ministry is never beneath the dignit of the gospel that was first preached in th fields and highways. —

As Paul visited the mission churches, s today it is increasingly the usage for superintendence to be given the mission field. Mos of the nonepiscopal denominations are establishing overseers, who go about strengthenin and counseling the native churches and keepin them in living touch with the entire brotherhood of believers.

MISSIONARY WORK

Nearly 100 Prospective Missionaries

The list of new missionaries appointed this season by the Presbyterian Board in New York is a long one, numbering ninety-four names. Practically all of these were in New York last week in attendance on the sixteenth annual conference held by the board for outgoing missionaries. There were also present six young men and women under appointment by the Reformed Church in America, who as a matter of interdenominational fraternity were invited to be guests of the Presbyterians. A large number of missionaries about to return from furlough and a few reappointed, including Dr. and Mrs. C. A. R. Janvier, were likewise members of the company. The roster of the new appointees, arranged by missions to which they are going out, is as follows:

Central Brazil—Miss Carrie L. Jayne.

Central China—Miss Lulu A. Francis, Rev. and Mrs. Paul W. Gauss, Ralph M. White, Miss Blanche Howard.

Hainan—Mr. and Mrs. Samuel R. Braden, Miss Mae Chapin, Rev. Howell P. Lair, Rev. and Mrs. John F. Steiner.

Hunan—Rev. and Mrs. Edward D. Chapin, Philip H. Dowling, Rev. William W. Highberger, Miss Mary Preston.

Kiangan—Rev. Frank S. Niles, Mrs. J. Lawrence Thurston.

North China—Miss Mary I. Craig, Rev. Lindsay S. B. Hadley, Miss Mary W. Humphrey, Rev. and Mrs. John R. Lyons, Miss Emily E. Patterson, Miss Anna G. Reed.

Shantung—Rev. George F. Browne, Paul C. Cassat, Miss Helen E. Christman, Rev. Delbert E. Coleman, Miss Irene E. Cowen, Miss Anna H. B. Elterich, Rev. Reuben A. Torrey, Jr., Miss Janet S. Mallary, Miss Maria M. Wagner, Miss Marie E. Woodward.

South China—Miss Harriet M. Allyn, Dr. Martha Hackett, Miss Margaret V. Jones, Miss Edna F. Lowe, Rev. Alonzo A. Pratt, Dr. and Mrs. Paul W. Van Metre.

Guatemala—Miss Henrietta S. York.

North India—Miss Esther V. Hessel, Miss Louisa Lee, Miss Sarah L. McRobbie, Rev. and Mrs. Walter G. Pitkin.

Punjab—Miss Ada D. Ayers, Miss Mary E. Compton, Rev. and Mrs. William A. Horn, Miss Mary E. Paisley, Miss Lucy F. Bittinger.

Western India—Miss Maud Steele, Miss Kathryn F. Stewart, Rev. Milton W. Strahler, Miss Harriet N. Brittan.

Japan—Miss Bertha L. Harris, Miss Ethel N Todd.

Korea—Miss Elizabeth E. Sanders, Mrs. Belle S. Luckett.

Laos—Miss Iva N. Manning, Dr. Charles E. Park.

Mexico—Miss Jessie Ruth Bergens, Mrs. Mary M. Burckett, Rev. and Mrs. David R. Edwards.

East Persia—Miss Emma L. Campbell, Miss Alice O. Ensign, Rev. Burt S. Gifford, Miss Florence E. Murray.

West Persia—Miss Helen M. Shaw.

Philippines—Dr. Warren J. Miller, Miss Grace M. Withee.

Siam—Rev. Paul Eakin, Dr. Leroy F. Heimburger.

Syria—Rev. and Mrs. Arthur B. Fowler, Miss Amy G. March, Rev. and Mrs. George H. Scherer.

Not Yet Assigned—Miss Edna M. Brack, Miss Beatrice Pawsey, Miss Emily L. Peterson, Dr. Mary H. Robinson, Miss Elizabeth A. Cooley, Rev. and Mrs. Ezra H. Guinther, Miss Lydia L. Hess, Miss Blanche Klebo, Miss Adelaide Primrose, Rev. Courtland C. Van Dusen.

Reappointed—Rev. and Mrs. T. M. MacNair, Dr. and Mrs. C. A. R. Janvier, Mrs. Amanda Goheen, Rev. and Mrs. R. O. Franklin.

—

Another Women's Convention in China

Mrs. T. N. Thompson of Tsining, Shantung, writes of a recent convention of women. "The districts represented were parts of four counties, Christians coming as far as sixty miles in some cases, on barrows and afoot. The leaders were Chinese. Women spoke from the platform without hesitancy, speaking with eloquence and spirit, putting us Americans in the background as speakers. Miss Ho, a woman in the early twenties, addressed the audience of women and men on the subject, 'Duty of Women in the New Republic.' The subject of foot binding was introduced by a Chinese woman of influence of the Methodist mission. Some eighty women promised willingly to unbind, or influence others to unbind. This subject is just beginning to take hold of the women in our district. The subject of family prayers showed a fairly representative number present as already observing this duty. The subjects were all especially applicable to the Chinese women—such as 'Equal Authority of Husband and Wife,' 'Partiality Between Sons and Daughters,' 'The Duty of Sending Girls to School,' 'The Duty and Power of Women in Prayer,' 'Wearing Apparel,' 'Cleanliness and Order of the Home,' as taught in our mission schools; 'Dedication of Children to the Lord,' 'Guarding of Speech Against Gossip and Tattling.' The subject of 'Marriage Engagements' was most thoroughly canvassed by the leader and caused many women to laugh at their old heathen custom of engaging their children in babyhood. It is safe to say that the next generation of Christians in this district will not countenance any such heathen practices."

—

Indians Becoming Independent

Dr. Clarence H. Ellis, stationed at Salt River, Ariz., writes that the Pima Indians, feeling it is time they should take some care of themselves, have planned to ask nothing from the Indian Board this year for their interpreters, but take the financial responsibility upon their own shoulders. Dr. Ellis thinks this is the first Pima church to entirely relieve the white man of this burden and carry it unaided.

At Lehi, among the Maricopas, the work is not so encouraging. The "medicine men" have been very active in this tribe and recently some white preachers came among them—of what denomination the missionary does not know—and gathered together a number of the Indians who were opposed to progress. They told the Indians they would have a "good meeting," but all that could be learned from the Indians afterwards was, according to their idea, "that Christianity consists in believing God, not giving anything and having a happy time any way one wishes, even to the old heathen dance with its revolting customs." "With such an easy doctrine," continues Dr. Ellis, "they found adherents, and the Indians immediately proceeded to put into practice its precepts." He then adds that these white people will soon go off and leave the poor Indians in worse condition than ever.

—

Good Crops "in His Forehead"

Bethany missionary farm at Allahabad, India, of which Sam Higginbottom is the superintendent, suffered along with the rest of the country from the lack of rain last year. But in November an unexpected shower came—a thing that had not happened for twenty-five years. The farm's crops were nearly all gone, so wherever the state of the land warranted Mr. Higginbottom planted new seed, in spite of the lateness of the season. The neighbors came from all around to look and laugh at the "crazy sahib," as they called him. They told him it was a waste of time and good seed, and that their experience had taught them he would have his labor for nothing. But the laugh was on them when the crops, thanks to deep plowing and careful cultivation, reached the harvest time in abundance. One of the workers on the farm, a Mohammedan, in telling the villagers about it said: "If it was written in the sahib's forehead that good crops should come, it was bound to happen." Mr. Higginbottom says it is the common belief in this part of India that the sutures of the skull are the writing of the fate of the person by God, and nothing can change it. "What is written is written," they say.

A threshing outfit is sadly needed at the Bethany farm. The present method of harvesting and threshing is most primitive. Men and women harvest the grain with sickles; each one cuts and binds as much as he can carry in a bundle, then takes it on his head to the threshing floor. This is a piece of smooth, hard ground. Oxen are employed to tread out the grain in the same manner which Mr. Higginbottom supposes the natives have employed since the time of Noah. He goes on to say: "After the straw has been tramped on for three or four days, each takes a little fan basket in his hands, fills it with the broken straw and grain, holds the basket up as high as he can, tilts it and shakes it so that the contents fall out. The grain drops straight down, the chaff and straw are carried away by the wind to one side. Thus India harvests over 8,000,000 tons of wheat a year and almost equal amounts of pulse, peas, rice and barley. It is very expensive, costing from two to three times as much as an American threshing outfit would charge. Then, too, the grain is dirty. The filth of the floor, bits of clay and little stones all go in with the grain and cause it to bring less money than its quality really calls for in the markets of the world."

One thing, it is estimated, has had a great influence on the country roundabout this year. The crops of the mission farm were two and three times as much as those the natives raised, and the people have been coming from all sides for the select seed furnished by Mr. Higginbottom. He feels they are beginning to realize that good seed pays for itself, and they are much more friendly and willing to receive the good seed of the gospel into their hearts.

—

Two Marriages in India Mission

On the morning of April 23 in the Katra mission church Miss Louise Keach, a member of the staff of the Mary Wanamaker Girls' School, Allahabad, was married to Rev. Alfred W. Moore of the North India mission, whose station is Etah. The bride's home is in Temple, Texas; the groom is from Middletown, Ohio, and a graduate of Wooster in 1907. In the evening in the Jumna mission church Sarah Ellis Swezey, M. D., who has charge of the Sara Seward hospital at Allahabad, was married to Harry Thompson Avey of the technical department of Ewing Christian College. Mrs. Avey is a graduate of the medical departments of Cornell and Denver Universities, and her home is in Bayside, L. I. Professor Avey spent five years in Allahabad College after his graduation from Iowa State College in 1905 and returned last summer from graduate work in engineering in Cornell University. His home is Blockton, Iowa.

—

—In Luisiana, in the Luguna province, Philippine islands, the Protestant chapel burned last year. Immediately after the owners of a cockpit erected their building less than ten feet from the chapel site. The new chapel is now being built and the church members went to the town president for an order to do away with this cockpit. He said he could give no relief, so they took their appeal to the provincial governor, having no doubt as to who would win out if it came to a contest in lung power between the devotees of the game and the chapel preacher. The governor at once promised to have the structure removed and passed an ordinance prohibiting the placing of any "chicken house within less than 100 meters of a house of worship."

—

Board Notes and Announcements

—The Friday morning meeting of the Board of the Northwest, Chicago, was made glad by the home-coming of Mrs. D. J. Fleming from India, and by the presence of Mrs. Harvie of Fort Street church, Detroit, an aunt of our secretary for India, Mrs. George L. Robinson; also by that of representatives of two synodical societies, Mrs. McElroy and Miss Welles of Wisconsin and Mrs. Sidwell of Indiana. Miss Cole of Bangkok gave us her parting word. The president of Second church auxiliary, who had spent the winter in Arizona, told of the ideal relationship between the church in Phœnix and their own missionary, Miss Blount of Bangkok. Among the wonderful stories told during that hour was that of the Purdah Club of Lahore.

—The Northwest Board is offering its auxiliary societies a very complete program for an evening entertainment in honor of new China. There are invitations printed on red paper and inclosed in a red envelope, a printed program on veritable Chinese paper, pictures for tableaux and pantomime, patterns and full directions for costumes, scenery and acting, and a chapter of readings to make the foreign doings intelligible to a United States audience. It is a mimic "World in Chicago."

NEW BOOKS

There is no ennui, no heavy time to kill, when all around us secrets of nature invite to revealment.—Katherine Dooris Sharp.

Cement Pavements—or Green Fields?

The Bend in the Road, by Truman A. DeWeese. The purpose of this book, which it well achieves, is to show the city toiler of moderate means the way to health and contentment through the acquirement of a small country place where he may live at least a large part of the year. Mr. DeWeese was formerly a Chicago editorial writer, later engaging in advertising work. He writes for those who after years of city life come to the conclusion that only the man who makes things grow and who gets onto the soil has solved the real secret of happiness. Riding into the country in an automobile will not meet the difficulty with the man in whom the germ of the real out-of-doors longing has awakened—the longing for close communion with growing things.

In addition to the love of nature which is drawing men back to the fields, the author also notes the important economic movement among farmers' sons who in the past few years have been flocking to the schools of agriculture to study scentific farming in its various branches. Nor has the movement toward specialized agriculture been confined by any means to farmers' boys; it has reached mechanics, clerks, school teachers and professional men.

Mr. DeWeese found an abandoned farm in New York state and fortunately for family harmony his wife liked it, as she did the country in general. As for his boy—well, there is a splendid chapter about "A Boy and His Father" that every male parent should read. The author believes a boy should have two advantages—one, that of being born on a farm, and the other, a father who will be his chum. This boy was born in Chicago, but he has developed and expanded on "Hilltop farm." He carries a camera instead of a gun, and his father pays him money for doing regular work with his hands and with tools. When it comes to directing a boy's energies into proper channels a farm's the thing. And it gives the owner the sense of being a producer and not a parasite. The parasitical feeling came to the farmer-author on his return to "Hilltop" after spending a "season of silliness" at an expensive and idle summer resort.

The book is full of invitations and hints for the city man who grows tired of brick walls and cement pavements, and it breathes the charm of the country in summer and springtime. There are seven illustrations. [Harper and Brothers, New York. $1 net.

Utilizing the Great Outdoors

This is the time of the earth's greenness; the time that impelled Walt Whitman to "loaf and invite his soul"; and, surely, for us, the time to forget our petty problems and attempt to become part of a cosmic thing which we've had the audacity to give a slang name—the simple life. Art leads us to nature; and books, which Wordsworth called "a substantial world," constitute an art that takes us quickly out of ourselves into eager appreciation of a wonderful universe. The following group of nature books will help to point the way.

Arthur Christopher Benson, in his new volume of essays entitled Along the Road (G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. $1.50 net), believes that, though we may delve deeply into one or two subjects which hold special interest for us, we know little of the wonderful world around us. The wholesome sights of nature, the endless ingenuities and activities of men we take as a matter of course in a dull, careless way. In the hope, therefore, quickening an interest in common, ordinary things "along the road," the author wrote these brief essays. All of which are based on simple experiences of life and hold some underlying revelation of the mighty purposes of God.

Three Farms, by John Matter, is one of the most delightful combinations of farming and philosophy that the present reviewer has ever met with. It is all so charmingly informal, so instinct with those feelings nearest all our hearts, so all round understandable, that no one whose remote ancestors ever came in touch with the soil can resist it. The first farm is in France, and is one that is always sought for with most whimsical persistency, but is never attained for the simple reason that the funds give out too soon. The second is on a claim up in Canada, and the spirit of the new country where one goes forty miles to town thrills vividly over the reader. Last and best of all is the old home farm in Indiana, where the author finds much to amuse himself and joyously passes it on to the reader. Among other things, he finds "contentment," and he gives most unmistakable directions for seeking that valuable possession from the farm. It is a mighty good little book that will blow away many a mental cobweb. [Henry Holt and Company, Boston. $1.20 net.

Anyone who has enjoyed the enduring satisfaction of Clarence M. Weed's "Our Trees: How to Know Them" will welcome this less formal book, Seeing Nature First (J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia. $2 net). Mr. Weed has the enviable knack of imparting exact information in a "clever" way, and this volume will help its readers to discover that they need not travel from their own homes—wherever they may be—to study some of nature's most entertaining phases. Whether it be a dragon fly or a cowlily, a spiderweb, a caterpillar, a walking fern or a butterfly, Mr. Weed's subject is presented so interestingly that the average person is made ashamed of his own lack of observation and stimulated to "see things" for himself. The illustrations by Mr. Beecroft and the photographic reproductions are numerous and well executed.

What more vital way for a girl to spend her summer vacation than in camping—in assimilating the mighty spirit of the woods and the waters? In her Vacation Camping for Girls (D. Appleton and Company, New York. $1 net) Jeanette Marks offers a complete handbook for this girl, telling her what to wear, what provisions to take, how to build fires—giving, in fact, all the practical information that one could ask about camping equipment and possibilities. Simple drawings help the author in illustrating her points.

The age of the essayists is supposed to have passed; yet here and there are studious souls who consider that merely to read without conversation or writing is futile as a source of mental culture. Solitude Letters, by Mary Taylor Blauvelt (Sherman, French and Company, Boston. $1.30 net), are dated June 15 to Oct. 4, 1912, and their author is supposed to be a school teacher on her summer vacation. They are suggested by nature, the newspapers, school books, the Bible, neighbors and speculations of philosophy, beginning with the Westminster catechism and coming down to Maeterlinck. If one woman wrote these letters in a single summer's vacation she shows in them a good mind, constructively at work through a profitable playtime, and her reflections are good for many readers besides her correspondent.

Success in Gardening, by Jessie Peabody (Duffield and Company, New York), and The Guild of the Garden Lovers (E. P. Dutton and Company, New York), by Constance O'Brien, are two delightful books with different motives. The first instructs in the art of gardening; the second may be said to instruct in the art of enjoying a garden. Each being complete in its special function, it may be seen that the two may be used admirably in conjunction. Each $1.25 net.

For the Naturalist

The Feet of the Furtive, by Charles G. D. Roberts. Mr. Roberts, for all that he has been a professor of English literature and an editor, is essentially a man of the woods and wilds. That poetic sense, joined to experience and observation, makes him at one with the backwoodsmen, the hunters and the furtive beasts who are hunted by human hunters and by each other. These animal stories have had publication in various magazines, but they make a splendid series, interesting alike to young and old, and far removed from the danger line of nature faking or the wishy-washy. The tales are located, for the most part, in the Canadian wilderness, which Mr. Roberts well knows and loves, and deal with bears, wolves, lynxes, moose, chipmunks and other fauna. He follows the whistling swans from the Everglades to the northwest shores of Hudson bay, and details the Robinson Crusoe life of a sailor stranded for two days, naked as Adam, on an island off Sumatra. And there is a stirring recital of a man and a bear who fought wolves—verily, the author's range is varied. [Macmillan Company, New York. $1.35 net.

In Beaver World, by Enos A. Mills. Though the beaver has an honest title to citizenship because of his economic value in frontier days, his world has become a very narrow one, which threatens extinction unless measures are taken to conserve this busy little American, who is himself a persistent practicer of conservation. To the beaver, as well as to the ant, one can turn for wisdom. He is practical, peaceful, industrious, doing things at the opportune time and in the easiest way, without waste of energy. He maintains a nice balance between work and play, is persistent and not easily discouraged. Mr. Mills has for twenty-seven years studied intimately beaver life and beaver characteristics. Therefore it is but natural that his book should be not only authoritative but in many ways a revelation of the little brown brother that makes him a picturesque and human companion. [Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston. $1.75.

In Summer in a Bog, by Katherine Dooris Sharp. Mrs. Sharp has jotted down her botanical adventures in most readable fashion. She confesses that her interest in the science may in part be traced to her children: "As the sturdy lads tramped off into the woods and fishing places of the countryside it became evident that we must have some pursuit in common to hold us in sympathy." Many a parent may profit by this interesting volume. [Stewart and Kidd Company, Cincinnati. $1.25 net.

In the Two Americas

The Story of Panama, by Frank A. Gause and Charles Carl Carr. The authors who, in this profusely illustrated volume, tell American young people the history of the isthmus and the romance of the construction of the canal itself are teachers in the public schools of the canal zone. They write therefore in no hackneyed fashion, but with the enthusiasm of ardent witnesses of that which they describe and ardent investigators of the history which they tell. It is a book which no live boy will leave unread and from which father and mother may also glean an accurate idea of Panama conditions, past, present and to be. [Silver Burdette Company, Boston. $1.50.

Trails and Tramps in Alaska and Newfoundland, by William S. Thomas. The photographs which Mr. Thomas secured during his hunting and camping experiences in Alaska are of such unusual interest as to incite the utmost curiosity about his book. And one is well repaid for reading it, for its accounts of big and small game are stirring and convincing. [G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. $2.

Zone Policeman 88, by Harry A. Franck. Mr. Franck is the prince of good fellows of the road. When he goes adventuring he always gets out of the experience something that nobody else ever thought of; and when he writes about it he tells just the things one wants most to hear, in a way peculiarly his own. His most recent field of achievement is the Panama canal zone, where he became a government policeman and, in addition, was commissioned to work on the census. He heard. saw, smelled and tasted all the zone had to offer, while his dual occupation brought him into touch with human nature from all angles. The story of his five months in Panama, illustrated with his own photographs, is the most readable, informative and altogether delightful book thus far printed on what Mr. Franck calls "this great dirt-shoveling congress." [Century Company, New York. $2 net.

Field Days in California, by Bradford Torrey. This is doubtless the last publication bearing Mr. Torrey's name as author that we shall be privileged to possess, as Mr. Torrey died in California last October. A talented observer of birds, he possessed the knack of writing most charmingly of his rambles on highway, in field and through forest, and these sketches, ranging through various sections of the golden state and to the Grand Canyon, have much delight for the reader. A number of halftones and a photogravure portrait are included. [Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston. $1.50 net.

Hawaii, Past and Present, by William R. Castle, Jr. This book is satisfying because it is based upon knowledge. The author was born and reared in Honolulu, and has made a careful study of the Hawaiian islands, their people and history. His descriptions of places and scenery are painstaking without being tedious, of the people he speaks with sympathy and understanding, and his sketch of their history is interesting. The book as a whole makes the reader feel strongly the fascination that always attaches to these islands. [Dodd, Mead and Company, New York. $1.25 net.

California Coast Trails, by J. Smeaton Chase. A travel book of the highest type, relating the experiences of two horseback journeys along the California coast line. The classification of "highest type" is not lightly bestowed; it implies observation that is really keen, appreciation that is really hearty and narration that is really fresh and graceful. There are only a few photographs, but they are all good ones. [Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston. $2 net.

California: An Englishman's Impressions of the Golden State, by Arthur T. Johnson. A bulky book of impressions which justifies its bulk. Mr. Johnson has not invaded the historical, political or industrial fields, but has confined himself to observation of our western characteristics as they appeared to him in his informal journeyings through the state. The photographs are excellent. [Duffield and Company, New York.

In China and Japan

Three Men on a Chinese Houseboat, by W. Munn. In his preface Rev. W. Wharton Cassels, bishop in western China, expresses the hope that this book by his fellow worker will do a great deal to stir up more interest in Chinese mission work. One feels that it will do so, for it is an intensely interesting account of a river voyage up the Yangtze undertaken by an American and two Englishmen, with many sidelights on the all-important problem of making Christ known to a heathen people. It has been written in a style that will particularly appeal to young people. [Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. $1 net.

A Gentle Jehu in Japan, by Ethel L. McLean. The account of Miss McLean's trip from New York westward across the continent and the Pacific is given in a series of charming letters, and embodied in one of the most decorative travel books of the season. The illustrations are small tinted photographs mounted artistically on deckle-edged paper; and the binding, end papers and printing are in exquisite taste. [Dodd, Mead and Company, New York.

Old China and Young America, by Sarah Pike Conger. Anecdotes of China's history, religion, people and customs as contrasted with those of our younger nation, all told in a way to attract children, or to be of use to teachers and parents. Mrs. Conger is the well-known Christian Scientist, widow of the former American minister to China, who enjoyed the personal friendship of the empress dowager. [F. G. Browne and Company, Chicago. 75 cents net.

A Wayfarer in Japan, by Elizabeth Kendall. For a lone woman to assemble a caravan and start out in pursuit of strange impressions of strange peoples and strange lands in an out of the way corner of the world, simply for her own enjoyment, is not so extraordinary as it may seem. Miss Kendall had already fallen under the spell of the Orient in a previous solitary trip; besides, she has that fine zest for travel which draws the real wayfarer out of the beaten paths of conventional journeyings; and as a scholar—she is head of the history department of Wellesley—she could not be contented with just seeing; she must also feel. She determined to learn the real China, the China still untouched by western influence, and for this reason chose the provinces of Yunnan and Szechuan for her remarkable trip. Her story throws a new light on our Mongol brothers, our own impressions of whom are derived mostly from personal contact with the laundryman. The photographic illustrations are numerous and interesting. [Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston. $2.50 net.

The Flowery Republic, by Frederick McCormick. To call Mr. McCormick's book a history of the Chinese revolution would not describe it. It it rather a picture, or a series of pictures, of the sudden and amazing overturn of institutions millenniums old. Familiar as the story of these events may be to the readers of newspapers, their presentation in this more permanent form is most acceptable. Mr. McCormick's familiarity with things Chinese, gained by long service as a correspondent, qualifies him to tell this story effectively; and his work has doubtless gained in finish and readableness through the restraint which has delayed its publication for more than a year after the establishment of the republic. [D. Appleton and Company, New York. $2.50 net.

Our Neighbors: The Japanese. The first volume of what is to be known as "Our Neighbors" series, by Joseph King Goodrich, concerns Japan and its people. Professor Goodrich was at one time a member of the faculty of the Imperial College at Kyoto and is well informed on things Japanese. The book is topical rather than comprehensive, but it gives much interesting information in regard to the customs, manners and institutions of the country. [F. G. Browne and Company, Chicago. $1.25 net.

Fiction for Vacation Reading

Polly of Lady Gay Cottage, by Emma C. Dowd, continues the happy story of the little girl who first made the general public's acquaintance through "Polly of the Hospital Staff." In this book she lives with the nice doctor who has adopted her, goes to school, finds some "really" relations and has a great many happy experiences. The book concludes with the founding by a rich lady of a children's hospital, which Polly's Dr. Dudley is to manage. A pleasantly bright little story. [Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston. $1 net.

The Wings of Pride, by Louise Kennedy Mabie, is a novel of soberer interest, outstanding because of the quality of its story and the big charm of its characters. Its heroine is engaged to one man, when she discovers that she loves another; and the drama that follows is a noble one of renunciations and eventual happiness. [Harper and Brothers, New York. $1.30 net.

A Downland Corner, by Victor L. Whitechurch. A group of studies in story form of "folks" in a little English village. Mr. Whitechurch has already established an audience with his "The Canon in Residence" and other stories; and those admirers will find the same charm of characterization here. [Henry Holt and Company, New York. $1.30 net.

The Day of Days, by Louis Joseph Vance. One of Mr. Vance's most ingenious and entertaining stories, based upon the marvelous good fortunes that befall a poor but clever youth on his "day of days." It will divert the most jaded hammock reader. [Little, Brown and Company, Boston. $1.25 net.

The Maiden Manifest, by Della Campbell MacLeod. New York and a southern plantation furnish the background of a man's search for a tantalizing "dream girl" who becomes a delightful reality before the story closes. [Little, Brown and Company, Boston. $1.30.

The Mischief Maker, by E. Phillips Oppenheim. In the field of diplomatic intrigue Mr. Oppenheim is at his radiant best, and his new book carries one along through an absorbing series of dramatics, of which one never stops to question the plausibility. The charm of Mr. Oppenheim's personality is here in full force; and his characters—including a British cabinet member, a French dancer, a journalist of extraordinary resources and an unusual American woman—furnish more interest than his plot. [Little, Brown and Company, Boston. $1.25 net.

Mr. Pratt's Patients, by Joseph C. Lincoln, showers more of the deliciously wholesome, shrewd Cape Cod stories upon the public, with flavor unimpaired by much use. Mr. Pratt becomes connected, in this instance, with a sanitarium for "right livers," and a good deal of satisfaction and amusement does he get out of it. The situations, the characters and the talk are all as droll as possible, yet none of them beyond the pale of the possible. [D. Appleton and Company, New York. $1.30.

Wallingford in His Prime, by George Randolph Chester. To do justice to the financial wizard, J. Rufus Wallingford, one may do well to quote his publishers, who proclaim him as "the only original four-flush in the business game." Certain it is that in his prime Mr. Wallingford appears to make money much more quickly—and more crookedly—than ever before. [Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis. $1 net.

Finerty of the Sand-House, by Charles D. Stewart. Finerty is the Irish night keeper of the sand-house and the stories he tells are as side-splitting as any Irish comedy recently published. We recommend him unreservedly to the man or woman who wants a hearty laugh. [Century Company, New York. 75 cents net.

Peggy-in-the-Rain, by Ralph Henry Barbour. A love story that is worth reading. Its hero is a wealthly man, its heroine a girl who works for her living and spurns his suggestion of an unconventional union. In the end things develop to their great happiness. [D. Appleton and Company, New York. $1.25 net.

On Board the Beatic, by Anna Chapin Ray, is the eventful record of a sea voyage during which a rather spoiled American beauty meets her fate in the shape of a man who knows how to be "masterful." Delightful for a long, lazy summer afternoon. [Little, Brown and Company, Boston. $1.30 net.

Tommy Tregennis, by Mary E. Phillips. For a fresh, clean, idyllic story, with something of the Barrie spirit in it, "Tommy Tregennis" may be highly recommended. The scene is a Cornish fishing village. [Small, Maynard and Company, Boston. $1.20 net.

Everbreeze, by Sarah P. McLean Greene. A "homy" sort of story centering about some love affairs and a woman's development into real womanhood all taking place in a "down eastern" village. [D. Appleton and Company, New York. $1.30 net.

The Upper Crust, by Charles Sherman. The author of "He Comes Up Smiling" has written a new story dealing humorously and entertainingly with the love escapades of a young millionaire. [Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis. $1.25 net.

The Jumping-Off Place, by Ethel Shackelford. A beautiful society woman takes her "nerves" to the mountains and exchanges them for good health and happiness. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $1.25 net.

The Uphill Climb, by B. M. Bower. People with big souls and big struggles are the characters in this romance of Montana by the author of "Good Indian." [Little, Brown and Company, Boston. $1.25 net.

In Scribner's Magazine two noteworthy stories are running serially—John Galsworthy's "The Dark Flower: The Love Life of a Man," and Edith Wharton's "The Custom of the Country." The former, in our judgment, may not prove to be the biggest thing Mr. Galsworthy has done, but it is likely to prove the most beautiful; it is the poetry of prose writing, and the most poignant of human studies. Mrs. Wharton's story deals with the familiar theme of the spendthrift American wife in a way that is both delicate and masterly.

More Light on the Mormon Question

Giving a Mormon a "Deadly Thing"

The present interest in the Mormon question will be my excuse for calling your attention to another weak joint in the religious coat of mail of the Mormon Church.

The Utah Mormon Church as well as the nonpolygamous branch — "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints"—boast that the miracle-working power conferred on the apostles is theirs also. And for this reason, among others, they each claim to be the one only true church of Jesus Christ. I have had experiences with both churches sufficient to be able to speak from personal knowledge.

Last summer at Hobson, Mont., I decided to put one of the "reorganized" kind to a test. He was W. P. Bootman, an itinerant missionary. In his sermons he offered as a test of his church the allegation that all the signs enumerated in Mark 16:17, 18 accompanied the ministry of all regularly appointed ministers of the "reorganized" church. I am particular about this statement, as I want it clear that in no sense did I attempt to entangle him. I just took him at his word. And as to what follows I have ample proof as to the date, place, people and facts as well as witnesses.

To be brief, he challenged me to a ten days' debate as to which, his or my church, was the true one. I paid no attention to his challenge for a time. Then I accepted it on condition that he would agree to certain things first. The principal one was that he would sign a statement that he could do all the things recorded in Mark 16: 17, 18—which he did. In verse 18 it is recorded, "If they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them." My test was to hand him a "deadly poison," which if taken internally would kill. Needless to say he didn't drink the poison and there wasn't any debate. I have felt that this was too silly to publish. But this is one of their trump cards. I would urge those who can do this work much better than I to expose their lying pretensions. Let them "drink any deadly thing," and be careful to see that it is a "deadly thing." Joseph Gaston.

Some Statements for Dr. Sloan

As to the article by W. N. Sloan in April just an observation or two. Brother Sloan says: "Statistical statements in some cases are so far from the truth that they ought to be contradicted publicly." Agreed. According to the table submitted by him Idaho is credited with 32,425 Mormons, or 43.5 per cent of the membership of all the churches, if I understand the table rightly. I have before me the biennial report of the commissioner of immigration for the state of Idaho for 1909-1910. In that report the Mormon Church is shown to have in 1909 41,089 members, or 49.94 per cent of the membership of all the churches in the state. Pretty close to a "balance of power" if the decision were between the Mormons and the rest of the churches. "In spite of all that has been said of the wonderful progress of the Mormon Church its gains have been very slow in any of the states except Utah." If Brother Sloan's government statistics are accurate, the growth of Mormonism in the state of Idaho from 1906 to 1909 was 26.7 per cent. If that be "slow" what would he style the growth of my church, for instance, or possibly the growth of his own in the corresponding time?

Another observation. Considerable agitation has been made in this state (Idaho) within the past months concerning the "sinister influences" which have been so manifest in our last two elections. Incidentally the growth of Mormon influence has received a share of this agitation. It may or it may not have a bearing, but the fact is that the last biennial report of the immigration commissioner omits all reference to church statistics. The commissioner is a Mormon.

"Mormonism," says Brother Sloan, "either politically or religiously is not a factor to be reckoned with, so little is its influence." The people of Idaho know better than that. President Smith of Utah chose the present governor of Idaho. As to results: A friend of the writer had a certain bill introduced into the legislature lately closed. He feared that the bill would not meet with the approval of the governor even though he might succeed in getting it passed by the two branches of the legislature. He enlisted the assistance of the Mormon members in the two houses and the bill was passed. Then the question as to the governor's attitude came up. The Mormon committeeman replied, "If the governor sees my name on that bill he has got to sign it." And he did.

The last legislature of Idaho passed a law changing the date of the municipal elections, making them come two weeks later. Why? Because the Mormon senators in the legislature said that the present date conflicted with the dates of the Mormon Conference in Salt Lake. John W. Hannum.

The Menace of Mormonism

Dr. Sloan's recent article minimizing the Mormon population in western states does grave injustice to the integrity of the splendid book of Rev. Bruce Kinney on the Mormon problem entitled "The Islam of America." Quoting from the United States religious census of 1906, Dr. Sloan gives the total Mormon population as 204,926 in eleven states, whereas, in quoting the United States statistics of 1912, he gives the total membership of the Mormon Church in the United States (including the "Josephite" branch of the church) as 400,500; and that of the "Brighamites" (or polygamous Mormons) at 350,000. On the face of the figures, therefore, he shows that the Brighamite Mormons alone have increased nearly 75 per cent in the past six years, which accords with their own estimate of their percentage of growth in that time.

Mr. Kinney, however, is quoting figures with reference to "Mormon population," while Dr. Sloan is quoting figures with reference to "the actual membership" of the Mormon Church, which are admitted to be not above 50 per cent of the total number of all its members and adherents of the Mormon Church and faith, and yet they clearly prove a relative growth in members such as no other religious body in the United States has approached in the same period!

We do not hesitate to challenge refutation of the statement that in political, commercial and religious influence there is no religious organization in America that compares with the Mormon Church in the audacity, persistency and prevalence of its domination. No other religious organization in American history has ever so completely mortgaged, dominated and effectively silenced the secular press, the platform and the business men and politicians of the United States, or secured such humiliating obeisance from both our Presidents and our political parties. J. A. Livingston Smith.

A Rejoinder from Dr. Sloan

The Continent of May 1 contained a reply by Dr. Kinney to my criticism of his book on "Mormonism, the Islam of America." I was not calling in question his words so much as his figures. Quoting figures manifestly false, and affirming that "they might be [not that they were] large from a religious view, but they are perhaps not too large from a political standpoint," when reliable official figures could be secured, certainly is not manifest fairness. Dr. Kinney says in his reply that he "neither accepts nor indorses them as accurate." He should have known before quoting them that they were grossly inaccurate, and his indorsement of them from a political point of view carries with it at least a partial indorsement religiously.

His opinion is that every state whose senators voted for retaining Senator Smoot in the senate is under control of the Mormon Church. He certainly has a right to such a far-fetched conclusion, but the reader can judge for himself as to its logic. It is well known that senators trade their votes to secure other votes on personal measures through merely selfish ends. For example, the senators from Montana voted to sustain Senator Smoot, but to assert that they did so because under the political power of the Mormon Church is absurd in the extreme, when only one-half per cent of their constituency are Mormons.

It may be a surprise to many people in the face of "the estimated Mormon population in Montana," according to Dr. Kinney's figures, that there is not a living Mormon church in Montana today. There are some reorganized churches of the Latter Day Saints, but let it be remembered that the "reorganized" church repudiates polygamy and is as radically opposed to the Utah Mormon Church as are evangelical churches. They strenuously object to being classified with the Smoot type of Mormonism and as a whole are good and respected citizens. W. N. Sloan.

Some Ways of Working

The Continent desires to be of service to pastors and laymen who fear that the church services in summer lose much of their power by absence of minister and many members of the regular congregation on vacations. If your church has tried a plan of summer work successfully, others will be glad to hear of it. The Continent will gladly pass on the helpful suggestions. The first of a series of "Summer Ideas" is published this week.

Temporary Union for Church Services in Summer

Don't close your church in summer even while your minister and a few heads of departments and some families who can afford it are off to mountain or seashore. To plead the "absence of so many of our people that we had to close up" or that "our people prefer to close up in August" is an insult to a lot of good, substantial folks of limited means in every church who never take an away-from-home vacation; it is a clear cater to the devil, and it is usually a lie!

Here's what we did in Jersey Shore, Pa., last summer, and with signal success. Two pastors got together—a Presbyterian and a near-by Methodist. They talked it over and agreed upon a plan. Then the officers considered and heartily approved. When the plan was announced it was received enthusiastically. Here it is: The Methodist pastor took his vacation in July. The Presbyterian pastor took charge of all the pastoral work and the preaching for both congregations for the month. August came and the Presbyterian man took to the woods and left the Methodist dominie to "bishop" it over both flocks. On the first Sunday of July there was morning worship in the Presbyterian church and evening worship in the Methodist edifice. The order was simply reversed on the second Sunday. This alternating arrangement was continued to the close of August. The plan gave splendid congregations both morning and evening throughout the "trying" weather. The offering envelopes were presented every Sunday and separated by the respective treasurers at the close of every service. Loose collections were received by the church in which each service was held.

Among the advantages of the plan are (1) a practical demonstration of church unity; (2) the assurance to each minister of a month's needed rest; (3) an open church the year round, with large midsummer audiences; (4) a saving of the expense of feeing a traveling pulpit supply. In our little city of 5,000 or 6,000 the plan worked ideally last summer. The idea is not patented. The plan will work anywhere. Work it! Joseph Lyons Ewing.

A County Athletic League

Leagues of athletic teams between Presbyterian churches are not uncommon in towns and cities. It is unusual, however, for the Presbyterian churches of a county to join together for such purposes. The Jones County Presbyterian Athletic League is the name of an organization of Presbyterian young men in Iowa who will hold a regular schedule of athletic contests for the purpose of developing a spirit of clean athletics in the community. A cup has been offered to the winner of a series of baseball games. Other parts of the country could adopt the same plan profitably.

Death of Dr. Charles A. Briggs

Dr. Charles Augustus Briggs, who died on Sunday in his apartments in the Union Seminary building in New York City at the age of 72, was one of the greatest scholars that America ever produced, but his public fame chiefly rested on the fact that he was the center twenty years ago of a tremendous conflict between liberal and conservative theology in the Presbyterian Church.

Dr. Briggs was born in New York City and after graduation from Union Seminary became Presbyterian pastor at Roselle, N. J., in 1870. In 1874 he was elected to the seminary faculty as professor of Hebrew. In 1891 he was transferred to the chair of biblical theology. His inaugural address incurred criticism as unfavorable to faith in the inspired Scriptures. New York Presbytery once refused to try Dr. Briggs for heresy and afterwards acquitted him, but in both cases the General Assembly reversed the presbytery and in 1893 suspended Dr. Briggs from the Presbyterian ministry. Some years later he was again ordained, in the Episcopalian Church, in which he continued until his death. As Dr. Briggs grew older a conservative temper became more and more evident in his writings, and his latest books have been the bulwark of orthodox maintenance of the miraculous birth and life and atoning death of Jesus Christ.

The cause of Dr. Briggs's death was pneumonia, following a month's illness.

Moderator Stone Names Committees

Just before his departure for Europe Moderator John Timothy Stone announced the following appointments to committees authorized by General Assembly:

To Consider Relations with Union Seminary—Mark A. Matthews, D. D., Seattle; George Alexander, D. D., New York City; William Courtland Robinson, D. D., Philadelphia; Edgar W. Work, D. D., New York City; George V. Massey, Philadelphia; Rush Taggart, New York City; Frank J. Loesch, Chicago.

Prison Reform—W. Francis Irwin, D. D., Louisville; Chase F. Scott, Rev. R. Keene Ryan, Chicago.

Social Reform and Church Federation—W. S. Plumer Bryan, D. D., Chicago; Charles R. Erdman, D. D., Princeton, N. J.; J. Ross Stevenson, D. D., Baltimore; J. C. McCombs, Pittsburg; Seymour M. Ballard, New York.

White Slave Traffic—Rev. Paul R. Hickok, Washington, D. C.; John Balcom Shaw, D. D., Chicago; Rev. John Kennedy, Evansville, Ind.; Henry L. Smith, New York; Dr. Winfield S. Hall, Chicago.

Educational Policies—W. L. McEwan, D. D., Pittsburg; Cleland B. McAfee, D. D., Chicago; President John H. Finley, New York; President W. O. Thompson, D. D., Columbus, Ohio; President Ira Landrith, D. D., Nashville; Rev. William H. Boocock, Buffalo, N. Y.; Rev. Robert Clements, Erie, Pa.; President John Willis Baer, Los Angeles; Hon. W. P. Potter, Philadelphia.

School and College

Dr. J. G. K. McClure of McCormick Seminary preached to the graduating class of Culver Academy June 1.

A total of 564 degrees and certificates were awarded by the University of Chicago at the convocation June 10.

Dr. Selby F. Vance preached the baccalaureate sermon of Trinity University at Central church, Waxahachie, Texas, June 1.

Alexander G. Cockrane of St. Louis delivered the commencement address at Lindenwood Junior College, St. Charles, Mo., June 10.

Dr. Isaac Headland, professor of sciences in the University of Peking, China, and author of "China's New Day," recently addressed the students of Wilson College on "What Do You Do with Your Spare Time?"

The University of Wooster, Wooster, Ohio, closes June 19. The commencement program contains a statement in regard to the necessity of students for next fall applying for their rooms early.

The commencement address at Albany College, Albany, Ore., was delivered June 11 by Rev. Henry Marcotte. President H. M. Crooks delivered the baccalaureate sermon in First church June 8.

Commencement exercises of Highland College, Highland, Kan., closed June 12 with an address by Dr. A. C. Rogers of Kansas City. Union services of all the churches in the town marked baccalaureate Sunday.

The commencement exercises of Centre College were held June 8-11. The baccalaureate sermon was preached by President F. W. Hinitt. The commencement address was given by E. H. Pence, D. D., of Fort Street church, Detroit, Mich.

The recent decision of a local court has given to Lenox College, Hopkinton, Iowa, the 240 acre farm left the college by Archibald Livingston on condition that the college raise an endowment of $25,000. This was done through the energetic work of the president, Dr. E. E. Reed. An extension of the agricultural work of the college is to follow.

At the senior and junior reception of Forest Park University, St. Louis, young men were invited, it being one of the few occasions when men are admitted to university festivities. They were entertained with conversation rather than dancing, however, as for fifty-two years of the institution's history there has been no dancing. During this period the president, Anna Sneed Cairns, has been the guiding hand of the university and has accepted no salary.

Coe College is seeking to raise the $100,000 yet lacking in the fund of $650,000 which must be obtained by June 30 to secure the offer of the General Education Board. The president, Dr. J. A. Marquis, was taken sick following the completion of a portion of the endowment last fall. Congressman J. W. Good is chairman of the committee of the present campaign.

Davidson College in North Carolina, the principal church college of the Southern Presbyterian denomination, at its last commencement conferred the degree of doctor of laws upon William T. Ellis, editor afield The Continent. Mr. Ellis was one of the principal orators of Davidson commencement week.

Dr. A. W. Halsey Is Injured

An injury which will retire Dr. A. W. Halsey, secretary of the Foreign Board, from his duties for at least six weeks, and probably longer, was sustained in the wrenching loose of ligaments under his knee which necessitated an operation in the Presbyterian hospital Saturday. The accident occurred during the complimentary dinner given by the Presbyterian Social Union to the outgoing missionaries under appointment by the Foreign Board of the Reformed and Presbyterian Churches. Dr. Halsey, who was seated at the speakers' table, had left his seat to speak to someone in the dining room and in remounting the rostrum he caught his foot in the carpeting, which threw him in such a way as to result in this very painful and disabling injury. Dr. Halsey had given much of his thought and energy to the preparation for the conference of the newly appointed and furloughed missionaries, among whom he is deservedly popular, and his absence causes extreme regret.

All Dr. Halsey's speaking dates have been canceled for the rest of the summer. He must lie helpless at the hospital until the torn ligaments are knitted up once more.

Rev. G. H. Clymer is using the moving pictures of travel scenes as an attraction for his Sunday evening services at Plainsville, Kan.

The Glory of the Church, and Her Shame

"The glory of the Church is the self-sacrificing devotion of her servants; the shame of the church is the inadequate provision she makes for their old age and disability and for their dependent loved ones!"

Dr. Maitland Alexander in his address at the popular meeting of the recent General Assembly in the interest of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation.

If you want to help to remove the shame and to reveal the glory of the Church, consult your pastor or write

Ministerial Relief and Sustentation
WILLIAM HIRAM FOULKES, General Secretary
507 Witherspoon Building - - Philadelphia, Pa.

Seven Vacation Bible Schools

Milwaukee Increases Number of Summer Educational Centers—New Sunday Schools Organized—Elders Tell of Atlanta Meetings.

MILWAUKEE—Beginning July 7 there will be seven vacation Bible schools in operation during six weeks of the summer in this city. Rev. Robert S. Donaldson, chairman of synod's home mission committee, has been indefatigable in arranging for and establishing the centers. Rev. Arthur H. Limouze, pastor of Northminster church of New York City, who has had charge of the vacation Bible schools of the metropolis, by his addresses at presbytery and in the various churches aroused much interest in the movement. There will be schools at Calvary, Perseverance, Grace, North Milwaukee, Northminster, Berean and West Allis churches—two more than originally planned. Miss Florence Bullock of New York City, who had charge of the schools in Cleveland last summer, will be superintendent; Paul E. Hinkamp, a senior in McCormick Seminary, will be the Milwaukee director. The intention is to pursue the course followed in other cities, viz., a morning session in which the Bible is studied, and in which there is instruction in singing, dressmaking, basketmaking, hammock weaving and kindred lines of manual training.

Rev. J. P. Dysart, superintendent of the Children's Home Society of this city, on April 24 at New Florence, Pa., married Miss Leanora McDowell. Mrs. Dysart was for twenty years a missionary of the U. P. Church in Egypt, having charge of the girls' school in Alexandria and also supervision of the Bible women.

Paul E. Hinkamp, a member of Westminster church, has received notice that he has been awarded the $900 scholarship of the Presbyterian Board of Education. This will give him a year of study abroad after graduation from McCormick Seminary.

The Wycliffe Club was entertained May 26 at Perseverance church by Rev. Robert S. Donaldson. Preceding the dinner Dr. Daniel Protheroe, leader of the chorus choir at Dr. Gunsaulus's church in Chicago, gave a most interesting talk on "Church Music." After the dinner toasts were responded to by Rev. L. W. Ewing, Dr. James Oastler, Rev. C. E. Bovard, Dr. W. O. Carrier and Rev. H. C. Nott.

The portable chapel is being erected at West Milwaukee and a school under the care of Rev. S. P. Todd will soon be started.

Washington Park church, Rev. L. W. Ewing pastor, has cleared the lots of all indebtedness and will soon begin work on the new building.

Elders William M. Post and William H. Edwards, commissioners to the Atlanta Assembly, spoke in Perseverance church Sunday evening, June 1, on "Business Men's Views on the Presbyterian Church at Work." Mr. Edwards also spoke at Westminster church.

The June meeting of the woman's synodical missionary society was held in Immanuel church, the ladies of the church serving luncheon. Mrs. William E. Fitzgerald, one of the leaders in woman's work in Wisconsin, spoke of her recent trip abroad. Reports of the Atlanta meeting and of the meeting of the Board of the Northwest were also heard.

May 8 Rev. Archie I. Mann was installed as pastor of the churches of North Milwaukee and West Granville, Reverends W. W. Perry, S. P. Todd and E. H. Sheppley officiating.

As a result of the visit of Rev. Paul J. Gramness, Sabbath school missionary for the Presbyteries of Milwaukee and Winnebago, a new school has been organized at Tippecanoe and placed under the care of Grace church, Rev. Arthur M. Baker pastor. E. A. C.

PUT AWAY PICKLES

Mathematician Figures Out the Food Question

If anyone requires a clear head it is a teacher of mathematics. He must reason in the abstract as it were, and full concentration of mind is necessary if correct results are to be forthcoming.

An Ohio man writes:

"I am a teacher of mathematics and for fifteen years prior to four years ago I either took a lunch composed of cold sandwiches, pickles, etc., to school or hurried home and quickly ate a hot dinner.

"The result was that I went to my afternoon work feeling heavy, dull of brain and generally out of sorts. Finally I learned about Grape-Nuts food and began to use it for my noonday lunch.

"From the first I experienced a great change for the better. The heavy, unpleasant feeling and sour stomach caused by the former diet disappeared. The drowsy languor and disinclination to work soon gave way to a brightness and vim in my afternoon work, a feeling entirely new to me.

"My brain responds promptly to the requirements put upon it, and what is of more importance, the results have been lasting and more satisfactory the longer I have used Grape-Nuts as a food.

"My wife had been suffering from weak stomach, accompanied by sick headaches, nearly all her life. She is invariably relieved of these when she sticks to Grape-Nuts, either eaten dry or with milk. Her stomach has gradually grown stronger and her headaches less frequent since she began to eat Grape-Nuts." "There's a Reason." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the booklet, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true and full of human interest.

Children Tell of What They See

Cleveland Sunday School Pupils Do Practical Work—Quarter Century of Woman's College Will Be Observed.

CLEVELAND—The Presbyterian exhibit was recently placed in Windermere church and the children of the Sunday school entered heartily into an essay contest upon the theme, "What I Saw and Learned at the Presbyterian Exhibit." Summer school work is to be enlarged during the coming season. Last year schools were conducted at Woodland Avenue, Mayflower, North, Immanuel and Bethany churches. To this list will be added South, Old Stone, West Side Italian mission and perhaps Barberton.

The celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Woman's College, connected with Western Reserve University, will be one of the interesting features of the coming commencement. Dr. Hiram C. Haydn, who founded this institution for the higher education of women, has been spared to see the very successful development which the quarter of a century has produced. Commencement exercises will be held in Euclid Avenue church.

Lakewood church, Rev. Alfred J. Wright pastor, has enlarged its chapel, thus securing facilities for its growing congregation, until the construction of a church edifice is consummated.

Miles Park church has a number of $500 permanent funds, named after deceased members. The latest is to be known as the "Arthur L. Clermont Fund," the young man after whom it is named having died recently at Phœnix, Ariz. He not only left this fund, but also provided for the replenishing of a similar endowment, which had suffered by reason of a bank failure and which bore the name of his mother. ARTHUR C. LUDLOW.

This Week's Cover Picture

To thousands of The Continent's veteran readers the charming picture presented on our cover for this issue will have a special appeal.

The little boathouse and landing are the portal to the island retreat in which Dr. William C. Gray found the inspiration for his famous "Campfire Musings." On this island, a nature's castle protected by the broad moat of beautiful Island lake, the genial editor spent many seasons that were delightful to him—and productive of delight to his readers, for few men so well have known how to transfer to cold print the spell that is thrown upon the true nature lover by such surroundings as these.

The photograph here reproduced was secured last summer.

HAMBURG-AMERICAN
Largest SS.Co in the WORLD
Over 400 Ships 1,306,819 TONS
H·A·P·A·G

Imperator
Newest and largest steamship afloat.
50,000 Tons, 919 ft. long, 98 ft. beam,
OF THE
Hamburg-American Line
Now in Regular Transatlantic Service

In addition to the well-known features of modern ocean steamers there is a Ritz-Carlton a la carte Restaurant, Ball Room, Grill Room, Private Dining Rooms, Pompeiian Bath, a Swimming Pool and a Gymnasium.

VACATION CRUISES
Special Summer Rates now in effect
Cuba, Jamaica and the Panama Canal
Hayti, Colombia, Costa Rica, Nicaragua
WEEKLY SAILINGS

by the new, fast Twin-screw steamships Carl Schurz and Emil L. Boas and the well-known "Prinz" steamers of our

ATLAS SERVICE
11 to 18 days, - - - $ 75
25 Day Cruises, - - - 115
Cuba, Jamaica, Round Trip, 75
Panama Canal, Round Trip, 110

Delightful Summer Cruises to the Land of the Midnight Sun

by the large Cruising Steamers Victoria Luise, Furst Bismarck and Meteor. Leaving Hamburg during the months of June, July and August Visiting Iceland, Spitzbergen, North Cape, Norway, Orkney and Faroe Islands.

Duration 11 to 25 days.
Cost $56.25 and up.

Cruise Around the World and Through the Panama Canal
By Twin-screw S. S. Cleveland, leaving New York January 27th, 1915
135 days—$900 and up.
Register your engagements now. Good rooms will soon be taken.

Write for beautifully illustrated books, stating cruise.

Hamburg-American Line
41-45 Broadway, New York
Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Chicago, San Francisco, St. Louis
Trade Mark

THE BOOK OF HYMN BOOKS
GREAT REVIVAL HYMNS
Compiled by
Chas. Gabriel, Homer Rodeheaver and other leading song writers. 256 pages of the best songs with the old familiar hymns. Send for returnable copy.
Publishers of SONGS FOR MEN, Chorus Collection, Solos, Duets, Etc.
THE RODEHEAVER COMPANY
12-14 W. Washington St. Chicago

Readers will confer a favor on the publishers of Th Continent by mentioning this paper when answering ad vertisements.

150,000 Children in Big Parade

Sunday Schools of Brooklyn Have Annual Festival with 450 Organizations Represented—G. Campbell Morgan Called to New York.

NEW YORK—Anniversary Day, which is described by the daily papers as "the most distinctive and time-honored festival in Brooklyn," was celebrated in Brooklyn for the eighty-fourth time Thursday, June 5. As is customary, the public schools were dismissed in order that the children might take part in this Sunday school demonstration. There were 450 schools represented by the 150,000 children that participated. This vast host could not, of course, all be marshaled in a single line of march, and the parade was organized in twenty-three divisions, each of which had its own route through streets set aside for it. The main division, said to have numbered 20,000, marched through Prospect park, where John Wanamaker of Philadelphia, the guest of honor for the day, stood beside Mayor Gaynor and all the borough presidents in the reviewing stand. It was considered that this eighty-fourth anniversary was the most brilliant success in the history of the Brooklyn Sunday schools.

REFORMED CHURCH GETS BIG GIFT

The Reformed Church in America, which is so closely associated in New York City with the Presbyterians, has just been enriched with a gift of $1,000,000, coming to it under the will of Mrs. Mary B. Pell of Riverside drive. The money is apparently unrestricted and can be devoted to practically any use that the General Synod of the church determines. The same will included a million dollars for Rutgers College at New Brunswick, N. J., which is the principal educational institution of the Reformed Church, and also a third million for Columbia University.

Mrs. Alfred E. Marling, whose husband is the chairman of the international committee of Young Men's Christian Associations, a member of the Board of Foreign Missions and an elder in Brick church, has given to the Young Men's Christian Association thirty acres of woodland in the hills of New Jersey, which will be used as a summer camp for boys.

Dr. Orville Reed, who has been pastor of Trinity church of Montclair, N. J., for twenty-five years and who has recently accepted a secretaryship with the Board of Foreign Missions, was given a farewell testimonial reception by the members of his church and was presented with a purse containing $2,500.

Dr. Edgar W. Work, pastor of Fourth church and moderator of New York Presbytery, who has been indisposed for several weeks, has returned to the city reinvigorated and has assumed the active duties incident to his parish. The assistant pastor, Rev. Elwood Erickson, preached in his absence.

ASK DR. MORGAN TO AMERICA

It will be of interest to Presbyterians who have known that Madison Avenue Reformed and Central Presbyterian churches were considering uniting to know that these negotiations are at an end and that the former church has invited Dr. G. Campbell Morgan of England to become its pastor. If Dr. Morgan comes to America he will be a near neighbor to Dr. Jowett, his close friend through many years.

President-Elect W. L. Darby of Cumberland College, Clarksville, Ark., has been spending several days in New York. He occupied his former pulpit in Astoria Sunday morning, June 1, and preached for Rev. A. H. Limouze of Northminster church in the evening.

The total number of vacation Bible schools in this and other cities this summer is expected to reach 200, with an enrollment of 45,000 children. This association is headed by Robert E. Speer and aims to interest the children who would otherwise be on the streets during the vacation period.

Rev. Joseph W. Kemp of Edinburgh, pastor of the largest Baptist church in Scotland, this week addressed two of the outdoor evangelistic meetings held under the auspices of the National Bible Institute in Madison square and Battery park.

Clergy and Laity

Rev. John T. Faris, editor of Forward and associate editor of the other publications of the Board of Sabbath School Work at Philadelphia, has been honored with the degree of doctor of divinity, conferred by Jamestown College, the synodical Presbyterian institution of North Dakota.

Dr. S. Hall Young, the famous Alaskan missionary, is now visiting churches in Iowa, speaking for the Home Board's interests. From Iowa he will go to Seattle to join a party which is going on a hunting cruise under the direction of his son-in-law, Captain Kleinschmidt. The party will sail through Bering straits into the Arctic ocean, where the veteran but not venerable missionary anticipates great sport hunting polar bear and walrus.

Saloonkeepers Must Pay Damages

Citizens' League Doing Good Work—Y. M. C. A. for Negroes Dedicated—Tract Society Busy—Honor Dr. Morris.

CHICAGO — When Illinois saloonkeepers learn that they may be forced to pay relatives of drinkers large sums in damages for injuries resulting from neglect of families, they will tend to be more careful to whom they sell. The Citizens' League through the superintendent, Rev. Henry K. Grose, a member of Chicago Presbytery, has recently caused trouble to a number of whisky sellers under the dramshop act. This law authorizes damages for dependent members of a family, after preliminary warning, when the supporter of the family is incapitated through drink. A verdict of $5,000 against three saloonkeepers was recently obtained for a woman who had been permanently injured by her husband, a habitual drunkard. Following this victory by the league suits were filed for $70,000 in seven actions of the same sort.

Dr. E. P. Hill and Rev. W. J. Ohan were among the speakers at a Christian Endeavor rally at Association hall last Tuesday.

The new building for the colored department of the Y. M. C. A. will be dedicated at Wabash avenue and 38th street next Sunday by Booker T. Washington and Julius Rosenwald.

CAN ACT AGAINST SALOONS

The bill prohibiting saloons within four miles of the state university and the one designed to give residents of a block opportunity to vote on the question of excluding saloons passed the lower house at Springfield a week ago. The state senate has promised to pass whatever the house did, so the anti-saloon forces are rejoicing at the advance made toward giving the people an opportunity to speak against saloons. A number of ministers worked vigorously for these bills.

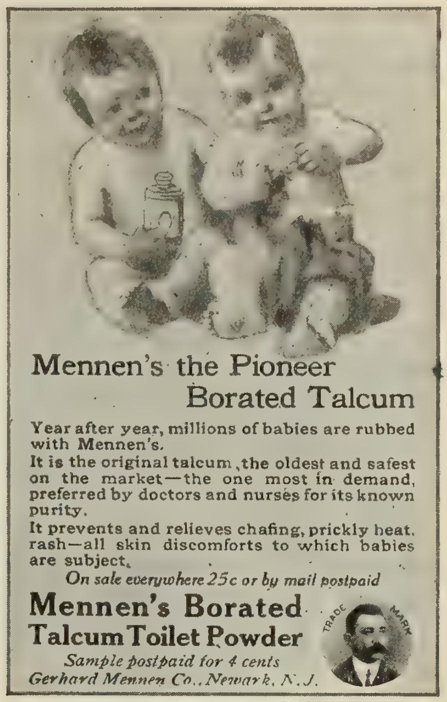
Responding to an invitation issued by W. A. Ilsley, the members of the official boards of First church, Evanston, met with several guests at a luncheon at the Union League Club last Saturday in honor of Dr. Robert Hugh Morris, their former pastor. Dr. Morris's Chicago friends have followed with great pleasure his successful career at Central-North Broad Street church, Philadelphia, whither he was called from Evanston. He occupied his former pulpit in First church Sunday morning and evening.

Street meetings in connection with the work at the Italian mission on West Superior street have begun for the summer.

A series of four noon meetings at Willard hall was held last week by representatives of four denominations under the auspices of the Church Federation Council. The general theme was evangelism. The speakers were President O. S. Davis of Chicago Seminary, Dr. C. B. Mitchell, St. James M. E. church; Dr. J. B. Shaw, Second church, and Dr. Johnston Myers of Immanuel Baptist church. P. P. Bilhorn led the singing.

The report of the Chicago Tract Society, just issued, contains many interesting accounts of the efforts of missionaries and colporteurs of the society who labor in the city and outside. There are thirty missionaries with the society. They frequently spend weeks with groups of foreigners who may be employed for the time on industrial enterprises in the Central West. Representatives of the society visited 72,770 homes and sold or gave away literature in thirty-seven languages last year. Dr. Jesse W. Brooks is secretary of the society.

Bethany church on a recent Sunday was asked for pledges for $1,500 for repairs to the church and the response totaled $2,000. Rev. W. T. Joyce is pastor.



Mennen's the Pioneer
Borated Talcum

Year after year, millions of babies are rubbed with Mennen's.
It is the original talcum, the oldest and safest on the market—the one most in demand, preferred by doctors and nurses for its known purity.
It prevents and relieves chafing, prickly heat, rash—all skin discomforts to which babies are subject.

On sale everywhere 25c or by mail postpaid

Mennen's Borated Talcum Toilet Powder

Sample postpaid for 4 cents
Gerhard Mennen Co., Newark, N. J.

TRADE MARK

PRESBYTERIAN TRAINING SCHOOL
of Chicago
for Christian Workers
Organized in 1908 by the Board of Church Extension of the Presbytery
of Chicago

There have been three periods in the history of the modern Church, which, however, overlap.

First, the period of witness to the truth, a time of statement, declaration, defense. This was the time of the great creeds, especially the middle of the seventeenth century, when the Westminster Confession was formed. For this period the Church produced great thinkers.

Second, the period of the propagation of the truth. The truth having taken its form, there grew a spirit which demanded its extension. That extension took two forms—worldwide missions, beginning with Carey, and evangelism, which is only missions at home. For this period the Church added to her force great evangelistic preachers and missionary heroes.

Third, the present era of the application of the truth, when the test of the gospel is not whether it will satisfy the intellectual needs of men, as in the first period, and not whether it will save all kinds of men individually, as in the second, but whether it will save everything that pertains to men, whether it will work everywhere and bring salvation to every human need and relation.

For this era the Church needs further to supplement her leadership with a trained lay force not "set" for the defense or propagation of the faith so much as for its application. This is one of the tasks for which the Presbyterian Training School was established. If you are now, or are willing to be, interested in these tasks write for our "Herald."

Address H. B. McAFEE, Director
210 East 50th Street
Chicago, Ill.

M. P. MÖLLER PIPE ORGANS

Builder of the large electric organs in Euclid Avenue Presbyterian Church, Cleveland, Ohio (2 organs); Russell Sage Memorial Presbyterian Church, Far Rockaway, N.Y., and Bedford Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.; the three-manual organs in Westminster Presbyterian Church, Detroit, Mich., Presbyterian Church, Mt. Vernon, Ohio, and instruments in almost 200 other Presbyterian Churches alone. Specifications and estimates on application. For catalogues and particulars,

Address, M. P. MÖLLER,
HAGERSTOWN, :: MARYLAND

Will Ask Council to Pittsburg

Pan-Presbyterian Body Will Have Invitation to Meet Next in This Country—Push Downtown Work in New Community House.

PITTSBURG—The Council of the Alliance of Reformed Churches throughout the world holding the Presbyterian system will be given an invitation at its meeting in Aberdeen, Scotland, this summer to meet in the city of Pittsburg in 1917. It was decided to extend this invitation at a meeting of representatives of Presbyterian and Reformed churches here June 4. Dr. W. I. Wishart of the U. P. body and Dr. David S. Schaff will make addresses before the council at Aberdeen this summer.

The Sunday school of Bellefield church celebrated its golden jubilee June 8. Addresses were made by the pastor, Dr. Campbell Coyle, and former pastors, Dr. W. J. Holland of the Carnegie Institute and Dr. Henry T. McClelland of Clarksburg, W. Va.

Rev. W. H. Holderby entered upon his work as pastor of South Side church June 8. A jubilee service in connection with Children's Day services was held at 3 o'clock, when addresses were made by the superintendent, W. H. Scheutte, the new pastor and representatives of Shady Side church. Plans for the work were announced, which include institutional and other features. A new community house is being erected on lots adjoining the church at a cost of $15,000. The money was provided by one of Pittsburg's prominent Presbyterians. Shady Side church, which has been sponsor to South Side church for a number of years, voted to give $5,000 a year to the work. This will make possible workers and helpers much needed in this downtown section.

The young people's branch of Pittsburg Presbytery met in the chapel of First church June 3. The principal address was made by Miss Mabel Furst of Lock Haven, Pa. The annual Christmas boxes for China and India were started on their long journey and a special appeal was sent out to all the Endeavor societies for funds to assist Rev. George Deck to erect a home at Kake, Alaska.

Churches of Sewickley have organized for their summer outdoor services, which will begin July 6. Special street meetings will be held Saturday evenings.

Rev. R. M. Patterson, a member of the 1913 class of Princeton Seminary, has been selected assistant to Dr. W. L. McEwan of Third church. P. W. SNYDER.

Help Pastors in Rural Problems

University of California Plans Special Course in Farm Problems—Preach Against Commercialized Vice-New Church Started.

LOS ANGELES—A conference of representative ministers from the Presbyterian, Congregational, Methodist, Episcopal, Baptist, Roman Catholic, Protestant Episcopal and Unitarian denominations assembled recently in the office of the president of the University of California to confer with the dean of the College of Agriculture and the dean of the farm school at Davis in regard to the problems of rural clergymen and the opportunity of the university for public service through the country churches of the state.

It was agreed that it was neither necessary nor desirable that the rural minister be an expert farmer, but that any minister would be more effective, both as a pastor and preacher, if he understood the problems of his parishioners. The university, at the suggestion of this conference, has undertaken a course of lectures on agriculture, including rural sociology, to which ministers of the various denominations will be invited. This special activity of the university will be called "ministers' week." The first meeting will be held at the farm school at Davis beginning Dec. 1.

Prominent ministers of the various denominations of the city have been preaching vigorously and effectively against commercialized vice. This subject was an important factor in the municipal campaign recently closed. The interests that have profited by traffic in vice were determined to have a "wide open" town. The Christian citizenship of the city had a great opportunity to demonstrate its courage and wisdom in meeting this emergency, but failed to have sufficient votes.

St. Paul church has broken ground for a new building. This congregation, which has worshiped for several months in a storeroom, has outgrown its quarters and looks forward to the time when it will realize the long-cherished hope of worshiping in a building of its own. Rev. William G. Mills, recently called to this field, has entered upon his work.

Frank J. Mundy, D. D., is supplying Hollywood.

An Old Professor Will Retire

Lincoln University Faculty Loses Veteran—Thirty-Four Graduates Receive Diplomas—Beacon Church Observes Anniversary.

PHILADELPHIA—At the meeting of the board of trustees of Lincoln University at the recent commencement Professor R. L. Stewart, one of the oldest and best known members of the faculty, resigned the chair of pastoral theology. He proposes making his home in California, where in his early years he was a pastor. His separation from the work of the university will be greatly regretted. The board of trustees conferred the degree of D. D. upon the following pastors: J. G. Walker, Greensboro, N. C.; William H. Thomas, Boston; Charles E. Tucker, Chattanooga, Tenn.; J. C. Alston, Winston-Salem, N. C.; A. B. McCoy, Americus, Ga., and C. G. O'Kelly, president of Kittrell College, North Carolina. Thirty-four young men were graduated. As a memorial to the late Dr. Isaac N. Rendall, for forty years president of the institution, a brass tablet was unveiled by the alumni and a fund of $1,600 toward a scholarship of $2,500 reported already in hand. Among the prizes awarded were those offered by the General Assembly's temperance committee for oratory. The first was divided between H. H. Cain and F. P. Stewart. The second was given to N. A. Holmes.

Beacon church observed recently the second anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. George P. Horst. Announcement was made that in addition to largely increasing its offerings to benevolence $2,000 had been spent on improvements and over $6,000 had been raised toward the liquidation of a mortgage on the church property. Two hundred and fifty members were added to the church.

GIVES MONEY FOR NEW CHURCH

A bequest of the late Henry B. Palethorp of this city to the General Assembly of $75,000 is to be used for the erection of a church on Palethorp street, Kensington, to be known as the Palethorp Memorial Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia. A bequest in the will of the late Mary R. Lawson, also of this city, adds $500 to the endowment fund of First church of Frankford, Dr. J. B. Laird pastor.

At the monthly meeting of the Woman's Home Missionary Societies of the Presbyteries of Philadelphia, Philadelphia North and Chester in the Witherspoon building the leaders were Mrs. R. E. Williams and Mrs. E. J. Cummings.

Mount Airy church, Dr. John Calhoun pastor, has closed a very prosperous year, in which its contributions for benevolence, $9,072, were very much larger than those for church support, $5,353. After all expenses were met a fair balance remained in the treasury.

Ground was recently broken for the new Inasmuch mission for saving and reforming fallen men at 1019 Locust street. For its erection Mrs. George Woodward, a daughter of the late H. H. Houston, has given $50,000 and will also provide for its maintenance. Bishop Rhinelander of the Episcopal Church presided and among the speakers was Dr. William Barnes Lower of Wyncote.

The Presbyterian ministers will hear on June 16 Professor J. A. Montgomery of the University of Pennsylvania on "Present Tendencies in Old Testament Criticism" and on June 23 Rev. Henry W. Bloch will speak on "Mormonism." W. P. WHITE.

Lincoln College commencement week, June 5 to 11, marked the close of one of the most successful years in the history of the institution. Eleven young men and women received degrees and eight others received diplomas. The baccalaureate address was given by President McMurray and the commencement address by President O. S. Davis of Chicago Theological Seminary.

Will Assist in Bible Training

Scandinavians to Put Up Building Near Minnesota University—Churches and Schools of Twin Cities Are Helped.

ST. PAUL-MINNEAPOLIS—The Scandinavians of the Northwest are building a house for Bible instruction near the campus of the state university. About $75,000 will be expended at once in the furtherance of the enterprise.

The Pan-Presbyterian Council at Aberdeen affords at least two Minneapolis churches opportunity to express appreciation of the faithful and efficient services of their pastors. Bethlehem church completely surprised Dr. Stanley B. Roberts by informing him that he and the mistress of the manse would be their representatives in Aberdeen. Dr. and Mrs. John E. Bushnell of Westminster church have also departed for Aberdeen.

The recent visit of Dr. Hugh Black of Union Theological Seminary of New York was received with real appreciation. He spoke a number of times before the students of Minnesota State University and to crowded houses. The Presbyterian ministers of Minneapolis tendered him a reception.

The work of the financial specialist of the Home Board, Rev. Moses Breeze, has commended itself to all who have had opportunity to observe its results. A number of the smaller churches have been given a new vision of duty and possibility. While the man is unique, his methods are simplicity itself.

Dr. Gerrit Verkuyl, educational secretary for Minnesota and Wisconsin, is making a brief tour of inspection and education of the Sabbath schools of the Twin Cities. His tour is being planned by the presbyterial evangelist, Dr. David S. McCaslin.

Secretary Hall of the young people's department of the Board of Publication and Sabbath School Work conducted the recent presbyterial institute in St. Paul very efficiently.

Macalester College had for its commencement orator this year President David Starr Jordan of Leland Stanford University. The exercises were held Wednesday, June 11, in Central church. G. E. D.

The corner stone of the new House of Hope church, St. Paul, which has been consolidated with First church, was laid June 1 by Dr. H. C. Swearingen, pastor. Several days previous the corner stone of the present House of Hope church was opened by W. B. Dean, the only survivor of those who officiated at the laying of that stone forty-five years ago.

A SAFE MILK
is of the utmost importance in the matter of Infant Feeding. To feel and know that milk is safe is a wonderful relief to a mother unable to nurse her infant. During fifty-six years Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk has been the salvation of thousands of infants.

Queen of the Catskills

Stamford, New York. Most beautiful Village in all this lovely region. The Men's Club of the Presbyterian Church invites guests to come to this charming place. When to the natural beauty are added the attractions of a well cared for village—ELECTRIC LIGHTING, PURE WATER, GOLF, CLUB HOUSE, SWIMMING PAVILION, TENNIS COURTS, FINE ROADS, SUPERB SCENERY and an attractive PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH—the whole forms an ideal summer resting place. Many fine hotels and boarding houses. All information supplied by Brotherhood Committee—W. C. Platner and Dr. H. P. Hubbell, or by the Pastor, Rev. Alfred J. Sadler, M. A., Stamford, N. Y.

WHY NOT HAVE Your Own Local Church Magazine?

Ready Made
Illustrated
Monthly
Inexpensive

Adaptable to Any Church
Write for Sample and Full Information
Revell's Church Magazine Service, : 158 5th Ave., N. Y.

Forest Park University

53d year. College and Preparatory. Certificate admits to Wellesley, Smith, Mt. Holyoke, Vassar and Co-educational universities. College of Music, E. R. KROEGER, Director; STOCKHOFF, WILLIAMS, Piano; NORDSTROM-CARTER, Voice; Public School Music. Violin, Expression, Art, Bible, Domestic Science. Year, $300.

President, ANNA S. CAIRNS, :: St. Louis, Mo.

Working for Family Worship

Brotherhood of St. Louis Follows Definite Plan —Active in Many Shop Meetings—News of Churches and Pastors.

ST. LOUIS—At the annual meeting of the Presbyterian brotherhood of St. Louis, held the last week in May in West church, Andrew M. Roblee was elected president. Reports from General Assembly were made by James J. Parks and George B. Cummings. The brotherhood is endeavoring to promote Bible study and reestablish family worship. It also does considerable evangelistic work in shops and factories, and is especially interested in work among boys and social service. The pastors' advisory board is Dr. F. W. Russell, Dr. D. M. Skilling, Rev. A. L. Odell, Rev. S. G. Huey and Dr. J. L. Mauze.

Dr. B. P. Fullerton, field secretary for the Home Board, delivered the commencement address at Missouri Valley College, Marshall, Mo., May 29, and preached the baccalaureate sermon for the graduating class of Kentucky College for Women at Danville the following Sunday.

Dr. S. J. Niccolls was assisted Sunday morning, June 1, in conducting a communion service at Second church by Dr. S. C. Palmer. Dr. Niccolls sailed from New York the first week in June for Aberdeen. During his absence Dr. Palmer will be pastor in charge.

That "Embarrassing Resolution"

How It Reached the Southern General Assembly at Last—The Whole Subject of Federation Now Pending.

The Continent will be interested in knowing that the action of the U. S. A. Assembly on closer union between the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches in the United States was presented to the U. S. Assembly on Thursday afternoon, May 22. The nexus of events so far as the Southern Assembly is concerned will prove illuminating.

1. The special committee to whom were referred overtures from a number of presbyteries seeking closer relations with the U. S. A. Assembly met on Friday evening, May 16, and after prolonged consideration were by a large majority in favor of a plan of closer relation through a federal congress. A subcommittee of Doctors Campbell and Whaling was appointed to draw up a paper expressing the views of the special committee.

2. Meantime on Saturday morning the U. S. Assembly unanimously adopted the plan of union with the U. P. Church, and the special committee, therefore, on Monday morning, May 19, recommended that "in view of negotiations now pending between the Assembly and the U. P. Church touching organic union of the two bodies, this Assembly deems this an inopportune time to raise the question of closer relations with other bodies." It seemed to the committee unwise to recommend two or more ecclesiastical courtships at the same time.

3. And now developments rapidly moved in two ways. First, it was learned by conference with representative U. P. ministers that union with them would not be jeopardized by appointing ad interim committees to consider the whole question of future relations of Presbyterian and Reformed Churches in the United States; and, second, it was reported that the U. S. A. Assembly had passed a resolution (the so-called embarrassing resolution) asking our Southern Assembly, among others, to appoint such ad interim committees. The special committee therefore on Thursday morning, May 22, decided to recommend—

(a) That an ad interim committee be appointed to confer with similar committees (if appointed) from other Reformed Churches holding the Presbyterian system in this country on closer relations among these churches.

(b) That the Assembly instruct its committee to propose to the conference a plan for closer relations through a federal congress of lower and upper houses; the churches of the federation to have representation in the lower house on the basis of the number of communicants, and to have equal representation in the upper house; the concurrence of the two houses to be necessary for authoritative action in such matters as may be referred to the Federal Council.

4. At this juncture it was reported that the Northern Assembly was holding back its resolution; but the moderator and stated clerk of that Assembly were informed of the status in the Southern Assembly, with the result that the famous resolution reached Stated Clerk Law Thursday afternoon, was promptly read and referred to the special committee, which reported at once the action already given. It is true that the moderator, Dr. Lyons, ruled this report out of order, but upon special motion both the resolution of the Northern Assembly and the report of the special committee of the Southern Assembly were referred to the Kansas City Assembly of 1914.

So that the whole subject of federation is now before the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches in the United States. The idea of a federal congress composed of two houses was conceived by Dr. R. F. Campbell, and it seems to many in all three Assemblies represented in Atlanta to be fertile in applications which may solve the difficulties in the way of really combining our Presbyterianism into some form of effective unity. THORNTON WHALING,
Chairman Committee on Foreign Correspondence.

Many at Close of "World"

End of a long line of persons waiting at midafternoon to buy tickets to the pageant of "The World in Chicago." For several days there was no end to applicants for admission.

Thousands of people saw "The World in Chicago" on the last day, June 7. During the last two weeks the attendance at the pageant at the Auditorium theater was very large. It is estimated that between 400,000 and 500,000 persons saw the exposition and pageant and upwards of 20,000 volunteer workers from Chicago churches took part.

The financial affairs cannot be closed for several weeks, as a considerable amount will be realized from assets which must be turned into cash. It is expected that the guarantors will be called upon for a portion of their pledge. Officers of the "world" are confident that the exposition accomplished its purpose in spreading information about missions.

The stewards, especially in the multiplicity of their demonstrations, are said to have surpassed similar workers in any other city where the exposition has been seen.

Lake Forest College issues a 40-page
Book of Views
showing the buildings, without and within, a little of the beautiful environment, and some phases of the student life.

Copies of this book will be sent on application to parents and others who are genuinely interested and who will mention The Continent.

Address: President's Office
LAKE FOREST. ILLINOIS

A concise comment

"The Continent is a Constant Comfort"

writes Miss Celestia B. Smith, Pittsburg, May 27, 1913

W. W. KIMBALL COMPANY Chicago

Pipe Organs

with Soloist, Solo Device, Most Wonderful Achievement in Player Devices. For Residence Pipe Organs the Kimball Soloist affords constant pleasure, being available at will, and in operation is simplicity itself.

BUY SMITH GRANITE MONUMENTS
because every piece is executed with a care to detail and finish that shall meet the heartiest approbation of every customer. You should have our free booklets. Write today.
THE SMITH GRANITE CO.. Westerly, R. I.

THE WORLD
IN YOUR TOWN

The World in Your Town

Are you going to take advantage of the National Advertising of the "World in Chicago" and other great cities for missions and evangelism in your own town? Now is the psychological time to realize the most of it.

There is no other way as good or as effective in reaching the whole town as our popular and evangelistic travelogs prepared for your service at a nominal cost. First class stereopticons are also furnished at nominal cost of rental or sale.

The "World in Chicago" is costing Chicago $200,000 and as a Missionary Educational Movement is considered a good investment. That being true. every church and community in the United States ought to have an echo of this great demonstration of the world's humanity and its relation to Jesus Christ.

If Chicago can afford $200,000 for the "World in Chicago" surely there is not a church in the country, even in the smallest town or country place, that cannot afford a stereopticon and one of these Christian Educational Soul Winning Lecture Courses.

In bringing the world to your own city or town in a course of our travelogs in mission fields, you are engaging in one of the most effective Christian Educational campaigns that could be had. In a course of these lectures the people look upon reproductions in natural colors from real life and they see with their own eyes the real effect of the real gospel upon real men and women in their real native haunts.

Patterned after the form of advertising used for the "World in Chicago" we have designed a beautiful pennant for local advertising with the name of your own town, place and date imprinted. These are not only used in public places but also find their way into the front windows of the homes; a very effective form of advertising. Engage your lectures while this subject is uppermost in the minds of the people. Try it in the open air or in the church as you can best arrange it.

Write for latest catalogs of Stereopticon and Accessories

The Christian Lantern Slide and Lecture Bureau

28 West Lake Street, - - - Chicago, Illinois

News Notes from Various Fields

New York

Rev. Charles McKenzie, who recently resigned from First church, Johnstown, to take up work under the synod, has been recalled to his pulpit and will stay with his church.

The Presbyterian Union of Binghamton at its recent annual meeting at First church listened to addresses on governmental, ecclesiastical and moral law. E. W. Lake is the new president.

Rev. Brandon Greenaway, who recently celebrated the third anniversary of his coming to East Rochester church, has doubled the membership. The Sunday school has grown from sixty to 200. A brotherhood has been in operation for over two years with 100 members.

The year book of Westminster church, Buffalo, is a volume of 200 pages, including comprehensive reports of the various societies of the church in addition to an account of the work of Westminster hospital at Urumia, Persia. The church has for years maintained a settlement in Buffalo, which last year had the volunteer assistance of 167 men and women. During the year there were enrolled in various classes in this settlement 1,320 persons from 865 families and the weekly attendance is 3,500. A start has been made toward endowment for the church. Dr. Samuel V. Holmes is pastor.

Ohio

Plans are maturing for the construction of the new edifice for Rosewood Avenue church, Toledo.

The membership of Second church, East Liverpool, has increased sevenfold during the two years' pastorate of Rev. H. E. Giles.

Great preparations are being made for a special meeting in Toledo June 9, when Rev. W. A. Sunday will visit the scene of his successful evangelistic campaign.

Piqua church recently entertained the Miami county Sunday school convention. Music was furnished by a choir of 125 voices and the attendance from all parts of the county was very large.

Lima Presbytery met with Olivet church, Lima, June 4. Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, who has returned to this country from Australia, addressed presbytery at 4 p. m. on "Evangelism." He preached the installation sermon of Rev. Columbus Polk Goodson that evening in Olivet church. Rev. W. F. Dickens-Lewis, Rev. Thomas Knox and Rev. E. M. Page assisted. Mr. Goodson began his work as pastor of Olivet church April 1.

Pennsylvania

Rev. J. K. MacGillivary of Twin Falls, Idaho, the missionary of the Sunday school of Market Square church, Harrisburg, was present at the children's exercises of the school June 1.

The benevolences of Clearfield church under the recently adopted budget system have increased 75 per cent. Union revival meetings conducted by Lincoln McConnell have greatly stimulated the churches of this town. Dr. E. C. Reeve has been pastor the past four years.

Charles Lee, D. D., of Carbondale, one of the delegates to the Pan-Presbyterian Council at Aberdeen, on his departure with Mrs. Lee received from the congregation many substantial gifts, including $200 in gold. It is only a few years since this church sent Dr. Lee on a trip to Palestine and Egypt, with all expenses paid. This year is the twenty-eighth of his pastorate in Carbondale and the membership is at its highest mark, although the church recently lost thirty families through a change in railroad headquarters. The offerings for benevolence are large.

New Jersey

The men of the three Protestant churches of Tenafly got together at a dinner at the Presbyterian church house May 24 to discuss the question of a social and religious survey of Tenafly, and to indorse the action of the ministers in deciding to demand medical certificates from all applicants for marriage. The following day a union service, the third of its kind, was held. It was decided to have union services once every month.

Rev. Richard H. Hughes, who has recently begun work at Hamburg, will not be installed until fall.

Twelve little girls took part in the saluting of the flag in connection with the recent patriotic services at Clayton church. Rev. Samuel A. Harker is pastor.

Rev. Frank Willcock, formerly minister of First church, Sackets Harbor, N. Y., has just been installed minister of First church, Mount Holly. The church has just purchased a beautiful and thoroughly modern home for its minister and has otherwise given splendid expression of high esteem. May 23 a public reception was held in the church parlors.

Minnesota

The corner stone of the addition to First church, Duluth, was laid recently. The building will be three stories high, will cost $37,000 and is said to be the best planned Sunday school building in the state. This is the beginning of the first institutional church in Duluth. Rev. Robert Yost is pastor.

The installation of Rev. Charles M. Ruland as pastor of Crosby and Deerwood churches took place in a joint service in Crosby church May 27. Rev. W. J. Lowrie of Brainerd, S. F. Sharpless, D. D., of Fergus Falls, and Rev. H. E. Easly of New London officiated. On the next day Mr. Ruland was united in marriage to Miss Myrtle May Matthews of Crosby.

Rev. E. T. Ferry was installed pastor of Claremont church May 27. Dr. Donald Morrison of Alden, Dr. Wallace of Macalester College, Rev. Robert Brown of Austin and Rev. W. Edward Williams of Kasson, the immediate predecessor of Mr. Ferry at Claremont, officiated. Mr. Ferry is a graduate of Macalester College and Princeton Seminary. Five years ago his father, Rev. John Ferry, now in western Canada, was minister at Claremont.

Illinois

Ground has been broken for a new church building which it is expected will be erected at Omaha this summer.

The fiftieth anniversary of the founding of Oneida church was celebrated June 1. The principal exercises were in charge of the pastor, Rev. C. L. Wilson.

The new building of First church, Joliet, will be erected several blocks farther from the business center than is the present structure. It is expected that work will begin on the new building as soon as the present is sold.

Rev. Otis G. Dale, formerly of La Junta, Colo., is filling the pulpit of Central church, Rock Island, instead of Davenport, as recently announced. Mr. Humphreys, the retiring pastor of the Rock Island church, is well known throughout the tri-cities.

Wisconsin

Extensive repairs are being made on the manse at Rice Lake.

A pipe organ will soon be installed in DePere church. An addition to the edifice is being constructed for this purpose.

Because of disturbance to services of First church, Marinette, by boys on roller skates about the building Sunday mornings the police have prohibited the use of roller skates in any part of the city on Sunday.

Iowa

The old church at Tabor is being torn down to make room for a new building.

Dr. J. A. Marquis, president of Coe College, was one of the speakers before the recent banquet of the "friendly men" of Marion church.

A conference of rural life workers will be held at Iowa State College, Ames, July 17-19. Forty or fifty country ministers from North

TWO UNIT CHURCH

See next issue for complete church.
HARRY W. JONES
Minneapolis, Church Architect Minnesota.

TRAVEL TO
THE C. E. CONVENTION
ON A SPECIAL TRAIN
Enjoy all the advantages of private cars, congenial companionship and freedom from responsibility at a
LOWER PRICE
than you must pay to travel with the crowds. Booklet with complete information from
THE REX TOURS, Marquette Building

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

ILLUSTRATE YOUR SERMONS
Pastors ! Write for Our Special Stereopticon Offer.
Detroit Stereopticon Supply Co., Detroit, Mich.

PEWS-PULPITS-S-S-SEATING
Write Today for Our "Catalog B 1"
Authoritative Guide on Church Seating; valuable suggestions on designs, finishes, seating plans, etc. Send Floor Plan and state fully your requirements
Blackboards, School Supplies, Catalog B1
School Desks, Catalog B2
American Seating Company
218 S. WABASH AV. CHICAGO NEW YORK, BOSTON, PHILADELPHIA

HALLOWED HYMNS NEW and OLD
$25 per 100, not prepaid. 35 cents per copy by mail.
Returnable samples mailed to prospective purchasers.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York or Chicago

CHURCH PEWS
AND PULPIT FURNITURE
Globe Furniture Co., Ltd., 10 Park Place, Northville, Mich.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 28
THE C. S. BELL Co. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

MENEELY BELL CO
TROY, N.Y. AND
177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY.
BELLS

BELLS, PEALS, CHIMES
Send for catalog. Our bells made only of the best selected Copper and East India Tin. Famous for full rich tones, volume and durability. Guaranteed.
E. W. VANDUZEN CO., Prop'r Buckeye Bell Foundry
(Established 1837). 559 E. Second St., CINCINNATI, O.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati. O

CHURCH SEATING
HANEY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO
GRAND RAPIDS. MICHIGAN.

PIPE AND REED ORGANS
AND PIANOS
Pure, sweet tone. Superior quality. Attractive styles. We sell direct at factory prices. Write, stating which catalog is desired.
HINNERS ORGAN CO., PEKIN, ILL.

The International
The most practical Communion Service made.
Write us.
The International Church Supply Co.
3 Clinton Bldg, Columbus, O.

The Trade Mark "1847 Rogers Bros."
on Spoons, Etc., Is the Stamp of Quality and South Dakota will be sent to the conference by the country life department of the Home Board.

Rev. E. Winslow Brown, pastor of Olivet church, Cedar Rapids, was recently taken sick at Chattanooga, Tenn., on his way home from a trip South and may be out of his pulpit for several weeks.

Michigan

Rev. U. L. Montgomery, pastor of North church, Kalamazoo, has been appointed chaplain of the local fire department.

Dr. C. A. Lippincott, former pastor, gave the charge to the people at the recent installation of Rev. Howard D. Borley, pastor of First church, Flint. Others taking part were Dr. E. H. Pence and Rev. William S. Jerome of Detroit.

The closing exercises of four Bible classes conducted by Rev. A. van der Meer at Harbor Springs were recently held. The classes were organized in November and attended by 110 boys and girls, including twenty-five high school pupils and fifteen children from 4 to 7 years of age. The attendance during the six and a half months was very regular. The meetings were held outside of the time of regular church services, one class gathering Saturday afternoon. At the public examination a thorough review was given by the pupils on all of their work. The Sunday school attendance during the last few months has doubled.

First church, Lapeer, Rev. S. G. Livingston pastor, does what few other churches do in publishing in a pamphlet, with the full annual reports of all departments, a list of contributors to the church and the amounts given. This list shows that $5,000 was given to the building fund and church expense and $166 to benevolences, and two women's societies each gave as much again to the latter cause. A building costing $39,000 was recently completed. The $166 was given by seventy-eight of the 170 contributing members, an average of $2.14 each. The church has 234 members. Work among boys of the church is growing and a gymnasium has been well patronized.

California

According to G. L. Tufts, superintendent of the Weekly Rest Day League, in charge of the attempt before the state legislature to obtain a Sunday rest law, two preachers of the Seventh Day Adventists were present to work against any Sunday legislation. Three bills which if passed would have given California a legal day of rest were steered by opponents to their death in committees.

Placentia church was dedicated May 25, and services continued each night to June 1. Among the speakers at the various meetings were Dr. William E. Sloane, pastor; Rev. J. A. Stevenson, Santa Ana; Rev. F. W. Mitchell, Anaheim; Dr. A. W. McConnell, Los Angeles; Rev. W. A. Jackson, Orange, and Dr. L. C. Kirkes, Los Angeles. One of the meetings during the week was evangelistic and another was devoted to the Y. M. C. A.

Oregon

Carl Rabenberg from Dubuque Seminary is engaged in summer student work in Wallowa county.

Rev. F. S. Shimian, recently graduated and ordained at San Anselmo Seminary, began his work at Wallowa May 18.

Montana

Pledges amounting to $3,660 were obtained by the pastor of Anaconda church, Dr. J. M. Ross, wiping out the debt of $3,000 and providing for improvements to the edifice. The pastor and his wife are abroad to attend the Sunday school convention at Zurich.

Idaho

Dr. John F. Shepherd, the new pastor at Twin Falls, delivered the address to the high school graduating class June 5.

Tennessee

The corner stone of Fourth church, Knoxville, was laid May 31. The building will be of brick and marble and it is expected that it will be ready to be dedicated the middle of September. Dr. Joseph P. Calhoun is pastor.

Among the recent encouraging signs of progress of Second church, Knoxville, has been the determination of fifty members of the congregation to subscribe to The Continent at the request of their pastor, Rev. Herbert B. Smith. During the year and a half of the present pastorate 247 members have been added to the roll and the church has been strengthened in many lines.

Indiana

Jefferson Avenue church, Evansville, has recently broken ground for a new house of worship to cost $40,000. Rev. A. D. Light is pastor.

Rev. Newton P. Patterson was installed at Delhi May 21. He was at one time pastor of South Park church, Chicago and was called to his present charge last January.

Parke Memorial church, Evansville, has recently received a gift of $10,000 with which it is expected that a Sunday school hall will be built. Rev. W. B. Lile is pastor.

Following the dedication of new Bethel church at Knightstown there was a surplus of $1,000 in the treasury. The church cost $24,000. The pastor is Rev. H. T. Graham.

Abolition of the modern funeral sermon was suggested by Rev. Thomas R. White, student pastor at Indiana University, in a recent speech before the Indiana Funeral Directors' Association at Indianapolis. He is quoted as saying: "The funeral sermon is unnecessary and ought to be cut out. If a minister cannot say anything good about the deceased he ought not to say anything." He also suggested that Sunday was not the time for funerals, and believes the time will come when cremation will be generally adopted.

Celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of Plymouth church was begun May 25 with a sermon by Dr. George A. Little of Alexandria, who was pastor from 1873 to 1885. Monday evening there was a reception, at which a number of former pastors and their families were greeted by members of the congregation. Dr. E. P. Thomson of Springfield, Ohio, preached the anniversary sermon Tuesday. Reminiscences by members and former pastors were given as part of an informal program Wednesday night. Rev. W. C. Logan is the present pastor. A collection of relics of the church attracted attention.

There were 138 guests from out of town registered in the eightieth anniversary guest book of Thorntown church during the recent celebration May 29—June 1. Dr. George L. Robinson gave the opening address. Music was furnished for one service by a choir consisting of singers by bygone days. Congressman William L. LaFollette came from Washington, D. C., to attend the celebration, and others came long distances. An automobile trip and a reception for the visitors were features of the celebration. Nearly 1,200 persons attended the three services Sunday, June 1. President George L. Mackintosh of Wabash College preached the anniversary sermon in the morning, an anniversary musical service was held in the afternoon and short addresses were made by Rev. O. H. Carmichael of Lebanon and Dr. M. L. Haines of Indianapolis at the closing services in the evening. A souvenir booklet was prepared for the occasion.

Kansas

In First church, Spearville, there has been organized a brotherhood of twenty-six men. June 15 the evening service will be conducted by Dodge City brotherhood. The men are frequently going into the country schoolhouses and holding gospel services. A home department of thirty-six members has been organized in the Sunday school.

Washington

As a result of two weeks' special meetings at Larene church conducted by Rev. Frederick Tonge of Davenport an adult Bible class was organized with thirty members.

Port Townsend First church, one of the oldest on the sound, recently installed Rev. A. Raymond Eckels, formerly pastor at New London, Pa. Mr. Eckels came to Port Townsend as stated supply for a year, but at the close of nine months a unanimous call was ex-

John Huss: Bohemian

The value of a man's life in terms of the influence on his fellows does not depend upon his ability to talk the English language distinctly. Men of "broken speech" may wield a greater power among people of their own nation than does any American.

An educated Christian among thousands of non-English-speaking men who are doing the manual work of America has large possibilities for usefulness. Ideals of law and justice can be explained by a countryman in a more convincing way than they can by an American who may be able to use the tongue of the foreign born, but is not racially in sympathy with him. At Dubuque German College and Seminary are students of twenty or more races studying to be Christian workers among their fellows in this country. This is a Presbyterian institution doing heroic work for the whole country. There are no more loyal Presbyterians than our German people, our young men from Bohemia (the land of Jan Huss) and our young men of other races. We want your interest. We want you to tell others about our work. You will have a larger grasp of the affairs of the church if you know what the men of Dubuque are doing.

A postal request will bring full details. Address Dubuque German College and Seminary, Dr. C. M. Steffens, President Dubuque, Iowa.

Buy in the light

Advertising is largely responsible for the "one-price" basis of present-day merchandising.

The value-for-their-money which our grandparents received was dependent on a price haggle and a quality guess. The storekeeper's effort was to sell what he wanted to sell at a price as high as he could make the customer pay.

Advertising has changed all this by standardizing goods and their prices. It enables you to buy in the light. To buy unadvertised goods is to take an unnecessary chance on satisfaction.

It means both safety and economy to buy the advertised wares which are placed before you by this paper.

THE ADVERTISING MANAGER

Mineral Baths

PERMANENT RELIEF FROM RHEUMATISM
AND A SPLENDID PLACE TO
REST AND RECUPERATE

tended. In addition to the regular services the pastor is voluntarily preaching at Port Ludlow, Chimacum and Irondale, three towns twenty-two, twelve and ten miles distant. Each place is given a service once in two weeks. The trips are made on a motorcycle.

Colorado

"If you do not wish to be a helper do not come" is the frank request to those who are invited to worship at the evening service of First church, Boulder, Dr. Henry B. Hummel pastor.

North Dakota

Previous to the departure of Rev. W. J. McIver from Towner to Cartwright, Manitoba, he was given a reception and a clock as a memento of Towner church.

Canadian Presbyterians in Congress

(Continued from page 817)

birthday. Special prayer was offered and the national anthem sung with great zest, followed by three cheers for the king. After this interlude the question of the foreigner was dealt with by Mr. Berlis, a Russian, and by Mr. Rohold, a Christian Jew. Mr. Rohold has done in the last few years a really remarkable work among the 15,000 Jews of Toronto, and this week a large Christian synagogue was opened in the Jewish quarter.

Presentation of the problem of the city was made by Rev. J. A. Clark of Calgary, Alberta; Dr. J. W. MacMillan of Halifax and Dr. J. G. Shearer, the Nestor of social service in Canada. The situation of the rural church was discussed by Dr. Warren Wilson of the U. S. A. Home Board. Dr. Wilson's address made a very evident impression. In fact the problem of the rural church and community seems to be one of the hardest to solve and to become increasingly urgent. Professor Graham Taylor of Chicago dealt with the social applications of the gospel to the city. Dr. J. A. Macdonald of Toronto spoke on the relation of the church to the social and industrial situation. This was one of the most thrilling of all the addresses delivered. The concluding sentence of it was, "There is no omnipotence under the sun, but far above all suns, hid with Christ in God, love has the power to lift, to light, to move, to save the world."

Congress Suggests Three Vital Objectives

At the conclusion of Dr. J. A. Macdonald's electrifying address Dr. A. S. Grant was introduced to the congress and received such a greeting as few ministers ever received in such a situation. He moved a resolution which was carried with almost indescribable enthusiasm and evidences on all sides of the deepest emotion. It dealt with the general religious situation in Canada and demanded immediate and united action by ministers, elders and individual members. Three definite objectives were named:

"1. To bring to a personal confession of their faith in Jesus Christ as Lord and Master those whose relation to our church is at present merely nominal.

"2. To bring into the fellowship those of our own communion coming from other lands.

"3. To unite the whole body of our Presbyterian people in the work of humanizing and of Christianizing the social, industrial, civic and other departments of our national life."

At the conclusion of the conference Dr. Grant, the chief organizer, made a wonderfully impressive address and presented a strong resolution in which the General Assembly was asked to invite all other religious bodies and temperance organizations to cooperate in a movement having for its object the total suppression of the liquor traffic in Canada. The resolution was adopted with great enthusiasm.

"Theologue" Beats Champion

Princeton Seminary has suddenly come into athletic fame. At a field day of sports in Princeton last week F. C. Thompson, a student in the seminary, made in ten successive athletic events a record of points excelling the highest previous corresponding achievement in athletics—the "decathlon" record made at the Olympic games in Stockholm last summer by James Thorpe, the Carlisle Indian, who was afterwards disqualified as a professional. There were, of course, fewer competitors in Princeton, but the games had been sanctioned by the Amateur Athletic Union, and were scored under the same rules which were followed at Stockholm, so that the record will undoubtedly stand as official and will give Mr. Thompson recognition as the champion athlete of the world.

To Help Rebuild Churches

The Dayton Presbytery flood relief committee was appointed for the purpose of securing funds for the rehabilitation of the damaged church buildings in the presbytery. General Assembly has indorsed very cordially the efforts. It is found, however, that a large number seem to think that the contributions they sent for the immediate relief of suffering at the time of the flood is all that can be asked of them. But this is an entirely different matter; it is for the purpose of helping the people who have been so seriously damaged in their homes, business and farms, to repair and rebuild destroyed churches. The case is parallel with what was ultimately done for Presbyterian churches after the San Francisco earthquake. Checks should be sent to John S. Crowell, treasurer, Springfield, Ohio.

JOHN CLARK HILL, Chairman.

Y. M. C. A. Officers at Lake Geneva

A conference of general Y. M. C. A. secretaries from larger cities opens the series of summer schools for association officials at Lake Geneva June 26—July 3. The physical directors and state secretaries will confer at the same time. The conference for educational directors and those interested in country work, boys' work and the railway department will be held during July. The annual commencement of the Institute and Training School will take place July 24.

The Bible in the Public Schools

When I first went to public school the Bible was used as a textbook, but of late years some people who are afraid to let their children have the free reading of the Bible have had influence enough to have it discontinued. Now that foolish action is about to be reversed. The Pennsylvania legislature passed a law requiring the Bible to be read each day in the public schools. The penalty for violation of the law is dismissal of any teacher who fails to comply with its provisions. This question of the Bible in the public schools has been discussed over forty years. Pennsylvania has taken the lead in settling it, and settling it right.

There never were any logical reasons or arguments against the Bible in the public schools; they were flimsy as fog; and in a government like ours, based on the intelligence and morality of the people, where can we learn as much of the moral law—on which all our laws are founded—as in the Bible?

I predict, after much study of this question, that the law passed by the Pennsylvania legislature will be an incentive for like legislation in other states.

JERE WATSON TALLMAN.

If the sun of success and happiness seems not to shine on you, it is because your face is not turned that way. Turn, then, out of the darkness in which you have been walking, into the Light. This turning must not be a discontent with nor a dislike for your present environment, but it does declare for a more earnest endeavor.—Agnes Greene Foster.

7% Atlanta 7%

Here are some of the features that make our First Mortgage Loans attractive.

1. 25 years experience without the loss of a penny.
2. Real Estate worth over two for one.
3. Abstract by Attorney representing YOU, showing a clear title.
4. Note with Coupons attached.
5. A Georgia Loan Deed.
6. Fire Insurance for at least the amount of the Loan, assigned as additional security.
7. A rental value that would more than carry the Loan under adverse circumstances.

Write for booklet.

REALTY TRUST COMPANY
ATLANTA, GEORGIA
Capital $600,000.00 - Surplus $400,000.00

6 and 7 % Sure When you purchase from us a mortgage on Improved Georgia City or Farm Property you take as little chance as is humanly possible. You receive from 6 to 7 per cent and you can be sure of receiving it regularly. Our property appraisals are the work of successful experts. We are extremely careful in our estimates of the moral hazards. We protect your principal with ample security. Let us send you our list of loans and interesting literature. Address "Dept. F."

Sessions Loan & Trust Co., Marietta, Ga.

FIRST MORTGAGE FARM LOANS

6% We offer only select first mortgages on improved Northeastern Oklahoma farms at 40% value of farm. Interest collected semi-annually and remitted investor without charge. SEND FOR BOOKLET. 6%

PARKER-WISE INVESTMENT CO.
VINITA, OKLAHOMA

The Security for Our Alberta Farm Mortgages has Quadrupled in Fourteen Years

The Dominion Government reports that the sale price of lands by corporations having land grants increased from $3.18 per acre in 1899 to $13.70 per acre in 1913.

Offerings of 6% Alberta Mortgages on request, in amounts from $500.00 upwards.

ASSOCIATED MORTGAGE INVESTORS
KINGMAN N. ROBINS, Treasurer, Granite Bldg., Rochester, N.Y.

DON'T THROW AWAY YOUR DISCARDED Furniture, Clothing, Magazines, Papers, etc. YOU can do great good by sending them to the Chicago Christian Industrial League, helping the church to find work for the idle, to shelter the homeless, to feed the hungry and to preach the gospel to the men of the down town streets. Over 1,000 men helped annually. Every little counts. Send a card to GEORGE A. KILBEY, 12 East 12th Street, Chicago, Ill.

St. Regis Camp for Boys

On the beautiful Saranac River, in the heart of the Adirondacks. An ideal camp, combining pleasure and study for refined boys (study is optional). Free tutoring in all school or college subjects by experienced and high-principled instructors. All land and water sports. Plenty of excellent food. Long and short mountain hikes; also cruises by canoe or motorboat through the wilds of the Adirondacks, camping and exploring. Boys are taught everything practical, from operating motorboats to resuscitation of drowning. Just the life your boy needs. His summer will count. $135 covers absolutely all expenses. Send for booklet.

PAUL LANGDON, M.D., Saranac Lake, N. Y.

Olivet Camp

REV. NORMAN B. BARR, :: Superintendent

A Presbyterian outing center. Beautifully situated on famous Lake Geneva. Tents and cottages for boarding and Housekeeping. Send for booklet to

J. M. HESTENES, Camp Manager
WILLIAMS BAY, :: WISCONSIN

6% SECURITY, RATE AND SERVICE 6%

Is what we offer YOU in our FIRST LIEN REAL ESTATE MORTGAGES. They are placed only on income bearing property on a basis of 40 per cent actual value.

INTEREST and PRINCIPAL remitted on due date by NEW YORK check.

EIGHT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES attest the soundness of these mortgages by purchasing in increasing volume.

Write for list, information and references to

REYNOLDS MORTGAGE CO.
R. B. BISHOP, Vice-Pres.
FORT WORTH TEXAS

Selected FARM LOANS

I offer only First Mortgage Farm Loans made by thoroughly reliable firms who have stood the Test of Time. I diversify as to climate, rate and crop yield. Interest and principal collected free.

Ask for Circular No. 101

G·F·CARSON
717 JEFFERSON BUILDING, PEORIA, ILLINOIS.

The safest investments from the viewpoints of
INCOME and SECURITY
are carefully selected
REAL ESTATE MORTGAGES

When made and guaranteed by experienced and financially responsible persons and corporations there is nothing better. For years we have made such loans in one of the best agricultural districts in America. Full information on request.

THE JEFFERSON TRUST COMPANY
McAlester, Okholama

NORTH DAKOTA
FARM MORTGAGES
THE IDEAL INVESTMENT

¶ 30 years Residence and Business activities in Banking and making Farm Mortgages. ¶ Write for my Booklet, Investment Facts, and List .075

WALTER L. WILLIAMSON, LISBON NORTH DAKOTA

SEASONED
North Dakota Farm Loans
and
FARM LAND BONDS
Netting 6%

Write for particulars regarding our investment service. Highest references.

R. C. KITTEL & CO., CASSELTON NORTH DAKOTA

FARM MORTGAGES bearing 6% interest, first liens on improved farms. Original papers held by the investor. Principal and interest GUARANTEED; interest payable at the Hanover National Bank, New York. Thousands of satisfied customers for references. We've been doing the same thing for TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS

The W. C. Belcher Land Mortgage Co.
Capital $320,000.00.
Fort Worth. - - Texas.

High Grade Farm Loans
Oklahoma Farm Mortgage Co., Oklahoma City U. S. A.

Financial Situation

Depression of Stocks Does Not Affect Owner of Farm Mortgage—S. W. Straus Says Continued Advertising Pays Broker.

Recent financial difficulties of central western railroads, together with complications arising out of wars in the East, united to cause a flood of selling orders on the New York stock exchange a week ago. A number of financial writers compared the occasion to similar days during the panic of 1907 and prices on ordinarily stable stocks were depressed considerably. At a time like this the owner of a farm mortgage or a prospective investor in this form of security can rest with no fear that his investment will be depreciated by the fluctuation in the stocks and bonds. Even though the income from stocks, the market value of which is now low, is not affected, the cash value of the investment may be smaller now than it was when the stock was bought.

Farm Mortgage Security Enhanced

On the other hand, the conditions now tending to influence farm mortgages are all in the direction of increasing the security behind the mortgage. A few days ago wholesale houses in Chicago were forced to send to their retail customers petitions to be patient if orders were not filled as promptly as usual. A flood of buyers from the country clogged the distribution machinery of many of the larger wholesale houses. This, of course, indicates that retailers of the West have no fear for the condition of business during the coming fall and winter. In fact the prospects for crops continue to bear out the highly optimistic reports which were issued earlier in the year. This means that farms will be more valuable this fall than a year ago and consequently farmers will be still more able to pay interest promptly, and the value of the security upon which the investor holds a mortgage will be enhanced.

The money situation continues to be a source of concern among bankers who have been trained to take a worldwide view of conditions. Although the rate for time loans is about normal in most parts of the United States, the demand for gold from the countries of the world which are now in the midst of developing their resources to a large extent is showing bankers that it may be necessary to exercise extreme care in future movements. Funds in this country are largely tied up in permanent forms, and gold is going into such countries as Egypt and India, whence usually it fails to return. Meanwhile department store sales of bonds in various parts of the country are having the beneficent effect of making the people generally acquainted with another way of investing their money and timid capital is being brought into circulation.

Continued Advertising Breeds Confidence

It is also significant that advertising has been largely used in marketing these securities of municipalities through public officers or department stores. S. W. Straus, president of a well known mortgage and bond house of Chicago and New York, in speaking on investment advertising before an advertising club in Chicago recently said:

"The man who looks for big and quick results in the advertising of investments is going to have a sad awakening, because persistency and continuity are the first essentials. In investment advertising one must hammer and hammer and hammer—and then keep on hammering. Continuity is the first law. One cannot advertise by fits and starts. The first object an investment house must have in its advertising campaign is the creation of confidence. Does one gain confidence in a friend in a day? No, and this fact is doubly true in investment advertising. Gaining the confidence of a man to the extent of getting his surplus or his

SAFETY AND 7%

IDAHO offers today a splendid field for safe and profitable investments. Carefully selected first mortgages on improved CITY AND FARM property are securities which will give you no worry, but will return regularly and promptly an excellent interest return, ranging from 6 per cent to 7 per cent, and occasionally even higher. The city of Boise has trebled its population in ten years, and the agricultural districts in which the IDAHO TITLE AND TRUST COMPANY and THE NATIONAL TRUST AND SAVINGS COMPANY operate are among the most productive in this prosperous state.

CHARLES B. COXE
President
BOISE :: IDAHO

WHERE TO INVEST WITH SAFETY AND GOOD PROFIT

The famous Corn Belt of Eastern Kansas offers the best possible field for safe and profitable mortgage investments. This territory was settled 60 years ago and during that time has been thoroughly tested as a fine agricultural and stock raising country. We have been in this field for 40 years and during that time have never lost a dollar for an investor. Loans negotiated by us exceed $25,000,000. Your money when placed in our First Farm Mortgages will be absolutely safe and net you excellent interest return. Write us for particulars and references.

J. L. Pettyjohn & Company
Olathe, Kansas

3% or 7%
WHICH DO YOU GET FOR YOUR MONEY?

Savings Banks pay 3%. Farm Mortgages yield you 7% secured by never failing wheat land in Eastern Washington. Security double the amount of the loan. Mortgage and notes signed by farmer and wife. Abstract certified to by responsible Attorney. Nothing safer. Write me for particulars and references.

B. F. CULP, P. O. Box 493 Walla Walla, Washington

7% FARM MORTGAGES 8%

Title guaranteed. On choice farms in Panhandle and fertile valleys of Eastern New Mexico. No loan made for more than thirty per cent of value, nor closed until examined and approved by our experienced examiner who is an officer of Company. We collect and remit interest free. Larger loans drawn to net investors 7 per cent; small ones, 8 per cent. Write for sample application, references, etc.

The Union Mortgage Company, Clovis, New Mexico

5½% and 6% Interest

The most careful investor always selects a choice farm mortgage when placing funds. Ask for detailed information, references and list of offerings.

G. W. HART, Pres. The Merchants Bank
BRYANT SOUTH DAKOTA

6% NET GUARANTEED AS WELL AS BACKED BY 20 YEARS OF SUCCESS

Farm Mortgages sold by us net six per cent, and we guarantee their payment. Interest remitted the day due. Write today for booklet and references and ask your local banker to investigate us.

BROAD & BOMAR, Bankers, Ft. Worth, Tex.

REAL ESTATE LOANS
6% Safest, Most Promising and Profitable Investment on the Market Today 6%
During the Past 30 Years no Client has Lost a Dollar.
BEVERLY H. BONFOEY
Send for Booklet B UNIONVILLE, MO.

6½% Net First Mortgages

on improved OKLAHOMA FARMS from $200 up are safe investments. I have sold them for years to ultra conservative investors with entire satisfaction. Write today for list and interesting BOOKLET "E." Refer to Dun or Bradstreet.

GEO. R. FISH, Investment Banker, Ardmore, Okla.

4 Per Cent

BONDS SECURING POSTAL SAVINGS FUNDS
BONDS YIELDING 4%-5% PAYABLE SEMI-YEARLY
BACKED BY CERTIFICATES FROM UNITED STATES TREASURY
CERTIFYING THEY PROTECT POSTAL SAVINGS BANK FUNDS
AVAIL YOURSELF OF THIS PROTECTION
SEND FOR OUR BOOKLET "BONDS OF OUR COUNTRY"
BONDS SENT TO ANY BANK OR EXPRESS
COMPANY SUBJECT TO EXAMINATION
BONDS BONDS
THE NEW FIRST NATIONAL BANK COLUMBUS, OHIO.

5 Per Cent

savings as an investment is the result only of slow, steady, tireless, persistent effort. As a rule, the interest of the investor is stimulated to the point of inquiry only after he has read one's ad not once but repeatedly.

"Not long since an investor came into our New York office. He said he had been reading our advertisements for three years and had gradually become very much interested. Walking down Broadway he saw the bronze plate bearing the name of our house at the corner of Wall street and decided to drop in and find out about it. Eventually he bought, but the point is that his interest was not stimulated even to the point of inquiry until after three years—and then only by accident. Even when interest reaches the point of inquiry, only the first battle has been won. I could show you many instances of a correspondence extending over two and even three years, but which eventually resulted in sales and in gaining valuable accounts.

"Does advertising pay? Of course it does. It pays tremendously if one is willing to spend the time, the energy, the patience and the money. It has paid the house of which I am president and it will pay all others who have good investments to sell and who advertise along the right lines. The American investment field has only been scratched. Where there is one investor today there are going to be ten tomorrow."

The Spirit of an Old Church Revived

Old Hickory church is the familiar or romantic name we give the historic little church founded by the stout-hearted Scotch and Irish Presbyterians who came from the Carolinas, Virginia and Tennessee to settle in the Hoosier county which bears the name of the brave old soldier-President, Andrew Jackson. These pioneers were organized as the Jackson County Presbyterian church. There were some Kentucky Scotch-Irish intermingled with the rest, and later on a very substantial element of Germans increased the sturdy congregation. They, too, had been exiled or driven from the homeland for the sake of freedom.

The record of Old Hickory church is now mainly tradition. The building long since disappeared, and only a small country cemetery remains to mark the spot where it stood. The members not dead or scattered abroad have removed their names to the successor of Old Hickory meeting house, the Brownstown Presbyterian church. But the spirit of that heroic past and people survives in the present.

This little Brownstown church congregation has its own interesting history, running back to 1839, and its membership at one time was larger and wealthier than now. Just a few years ago the church and community stood the shock of a bank failure that seemed a more disastrous experience to encounter than the perils of frontier days. Then followed the death and removal of many who had been the mainstay of the church for a generation.

The First of Community Churches

Three years ago, when the message of social service and the rural life work first came to them, they were "in the depths," as a devoted woman member expressed it. Experiments with traveling evangelists had left the people more dispirited than ever, for they were unconsciously starving for the social word and work. Their response to it was instant and touching. They were hungry for fellowship, eager for service, and they took hold of things with a willingness, loyalty and unity characteristic of the Scotch-Irish and German at their best. Employing a pastor for half time only, Brownstown church followed the wise Presbyterian policy of uniting with a neighboring half-time field, the little church at Crothersville, whose kindred awakening and work preceded that of Brownstown by four years. These two congregations, whose paying membership numbers but 100, mainly working people, became the first community churches in New Albany Presbytery.

A community church is one that does not exist to be served but to minister itself to the entire community of all the people; and only such a church can fulfill the conditions demanded by the home mission and social service committees of this presbytery today. When the pastor of Brownstown and Crothersville churches was made chairman of the committee on social service and country life, with the task of demonstrating the success or failure of the rural work in southern Indiana, he went back to his people and told them what presbytery expected. The summer months constituted the time of experiment for the church in the open country.

The people responded with characteristic unity and enthusiasm. They invited presbytery to hold its fall meeting at Brownstown, and meanwhile the first annual conference on church and rural life was arranged by the committee immediately to follow the meeting of presbytery. In preparation for these events the Brownstown church building was remodeled and enlarged to make it a social and community center.

Boy and Girl Scouts of Brownstown and Crothersville

Boy and Girl Scouts and Crusaders

The strongest recommendation of the rural life work is the new hold it gives the church upon the young people of the community. The Presbyterian churches of Brownstown and Crothersville stood sponsor for the Boy and Girl Scout movement in those communities till it was organized and successful. Eliminating militarism and denominationalism, the quicksands of the scout movement in small towns, the Boy and Girl Scouts of Brownstown and Crothersville are the pride of their respective communities.

Drilled and trained in scoutcraft and Red Cross service, these young people have renewed and ennobled the national holidays, religious anniversaries and community celebrations of the entire year. They have nourished and restored the traditions and ideals of the people in home, school, church and community. The work has revealed and developed a capacity for leadership upon the part of the older people which has bound the heart of one generation to another. As a result there is now in process of formation in these communities, with the counsel of the National Red Cross Society, an organization of Crusaders which will make scout work and social service doubly effective and popular with young and old.

LUCIEN V. RULE.

"Ian MacLaren" Professorship at Parsons

The late Dr. John Watson, beloved the world over as "Ian MacLaren," the author, died in an Iowa town while on a lecturing tour. Thus far, apparently, America has established no permanent memorial to this famous writer who died almost alone among a people who highly appreciated his Scotch stories. It was a happy thought which led Parsons College, the thriving Presbyterian college at Fairfield, Iowa, to honor Dr. Watson in the proposed establishment of an Ian MacLaren memorial professorship of English literature. The plan, which has special appeal to Scotch-Americans, is well begun, and the field secretary, Rev. John Yule, hopes to secure the whole $30,000 in the next few months.

Summer in Southwest California

(Continued from page 838)

ested in this work of his playtime and seemed glad to exhibit his really beautiful fowls.

Southern California being a reclaimed desert, there are practically no native trees. But along the highways there is an endless succession of ranches with groves and orchards. The shades of green are countless. The low, bushy trees of the citrus fruit in their straight, cultivated rows, show the dark glossy green of the orange tree or the paler leaf of the lemon, while the blossoms of both perfume the air. The mocking bird and the hooded oriole build their nests in these groves. Covering a hillside or the slope at the bottom of a canyon is an orchard of silvery green olive trees. Here and there are spreading fig trees with their big, branching leaves. One looks eagerly at each for its yellow-green fruit, to see whether it, too, deserves the curse passed upon that other fig tree 2,000 years ago. A rather sickly banana tree pines for its native swamp lands. But a grove of giant eucalyptus, whose ragged trunks and crescent leaves are tinted as with an early frost, is as much at home as in its native Australian forests. The beautiful feathery pepper trees appear in pairs, the female, like a native squaw, apparently bedecked with hundreds of strings of red corallike beads. Many palms lift their fans along the roadside. The bamboos, both giant and dainty Japanese, rustle and sing as their slender yellow stems sway in the wind.

By the time summer had merged into the mild winter our triangle had happily regained its wonted symmetry. For us southern California has solved the problem of where and how to summer coolly, restfully and pleasantly.

San Diego, Cal. EMMA V. BERGER.

Against the Wind and Wave

WHEN PETE and I decided to go for a two weeks' outing on the shores of Saginaw bay we determined, instead of shipping our tent and supplies by train, to take them in Pete's little sailboat. In order that we might get an early start the next morning I went up to his house the day before and we packed our eatables and other camping requisites.

We awoke to find a strong northwest wind blowing, and for a time did not think we would attempt the trip that day, the boat being only sixteen feet long, and with the tent, stove, blankets and other things, it would be pretty well loaded. However, we decided, or rather Pete, who was captain, decided to start and go as far as the mouth of the river and stay there all night, if the bay was too rough to go farther.

In spite of the load we managed to find comfortable positions, and with the sail reefed started out. When we reached the middle of the river we fully realized the strength of the wind. It took us along at a good rate and all went well, until we came to a bend about four miles from the river's mouth. Here the wind came directly up the river, and in order to make headway we were compelled to tack from one side to the other. This made progress slow, as the boat drifted badly with the heavy load. Where we had covered the previous mile in half an hour, we had not progressed that much farther in the next hour.

As we neared one of the bridges an especially strong puff of wind came along, and with a loud snap the gaff broke, compelling us to crank up "armstrong" and row to the bridge. Here the captain learned that we would have to get repairs from home; so by common consent the crew decided to leave the boat in care of the bridge tender and return home.

We fixed up the sail next morning, and with the wind still head on again set sail. By noon the mouth of the river had been passed and we were only five miles from our destination. But I fully believe that that was the longest five miles, from point of time, I have ever covered. Waves continually washed over the sides of the boat and soon made it necessary for me to start bailing. By 3 o'clock we had passed the water works, half way from the mouth; and from then on our progress was even slower, if possible. The wind had freshened, bringing in choppy waves on top of the large rollers. On each tack we made less headway, until finally, when about a mile from Killarney beach, where we intended to stay, we had to run our boat up on shore to avoid being swamped.

As we came through the breakers each wave broke completely over the boat. The water was shallow there, so we got out in our wet clothing and guided the boat along. Thus we covered the last mile, taking turns at pulling the water-filled boat along near the shore and running up and down to keep warm.

After covering what seemed an endless distance, we arrived at the beach about dusk. Cottagers, wondering at the strange sight, came down to the shore to offer help. One kindly consented to let us pitch our tent in front of his cottage for the night. Needless to say, everything was soaked. With the help of a number of men we succeeded in getting up the wet tent. All the blankets and food supplies were saturated; but for the cottagers we should have slept in wet clothes, with empty stomachs.

The ladies brought up dry blankets and also served us with what tasted like the very best meal I have ever eaten. When our visitors had finally left us, and we had crawled into bed, it was with something of regret because it was ended that we looked back over the most exciting trip we had ever experienced.

Detroit, Mich. LEE EVERETT JOSLYN, JR.

Joy for Korean Victims Freed

Letters have lately come to the Woman's Foreign Board of Philadelphia telling of the unbounded joy of the friends and families of the nearly 100 men recently released from prison and prison tortures in Korea. The victims were set free shortly before Easter and each and all were given a tremendous ovation. One of the missionaries reports that even the governor general could not have had a greater reception. She adds:

"The men came out of prison without shoes and bareheaded, their clothes filthy, but they came right into the arms of waiting friends. Several mothers had been in Seoul all these months seeing about food for their sons. The son of the famous blind pastor of Pyeng Yang was one of the three who had endured the torture and long imprisonment. His wife is one of our academy girls. The wife, her mother and Pastor Kil were waiting for him outside the gate. Then, after all, they found he had had a hemorrhage and may have tuberculosis. One of the boys imprisoned with them had been sent home to die of that disease.

"We cannot detect the slightest bitterness in their hearts toward anyone. They are thankful for the love and interest we have shown. It is a new bond, one that cannot be severed—though the authorities have asked them not to have so much to do with us."

Consider Work for Boys

The first general assembly of Y. M. C. A. workers with boys held a profitable conference at Culver, Ind., for two weeks closing May 30. There were 300 boy workers present, including representatives from fourteen foreign countries. The growth of the work with boys has been so rapid that it was thought advisable to conduct this "retreat" for consideration of pressing problems. Reports on various phases of the work are to be published.

Can Use Pictures

Booker T. Washington has announced that Tuskegee Institute can make use of new or old pictures, framed or unframed, which can be used to educate students. They should be sent to Dr. Washington at Tukegee Institute, Alabama.

Calendar and Record

Presbytery Meetings

Columbus—Columbus Central, June 16, 9:30.
Chicago—Chicago Assembly hall, June 16, 10.
Elizabeth—Califon Lower Valley, June 17, 10.
Indianapolis—Indianapolis Second, June 16, 10.
Westchester—New York, 156 5th avenue, June 17, 10:30 a. m.
West Jersey—Bridgeton First, June 17, 10.

Ordinations

Sioux City—Fred W. Backemeyer.
Wichita—James F. Mordy, Thomas A. Mordy.

Resignations

California—Watsonville Japanese mission: S. Yoshimura.
Iowa—Woodbine: Elmer Aukerman.
Kansas—Topeka Third: Jay C. Everett; La Harpe: C. W. Sydman; Carlyle: C. H. Ticknor.
Maryland—Aberdeen Grove: T. T. Brown.
Montana—Culbertson: J. W. Chase.
New Jersey—Hamilton Square First: Joseph Howell.
North Dakota—Cavalier: T. S. Thompson; Towner: W. J. McIvor.
Ohio—Westerville: L. H. Shane.
Pennsylvania — West Middlesex: John S. Plumer.

Calls

California—San Pedro: A. W. McConnell, Bairdstown.
Illinois—Decatur First: C. E. Jenney, St. Louis, Mo.
Indiana—Terre Haute Washington Avenue: F. Le Roy Brown, Brooklyn, N. Y.
Iowa—Grand Junction: Elmer Aukerman, Woodbine.
Kansas—Spearville: L. V. Schermerhorn, declines; Paola: Jay C. Everett, Topeka; McPherson: M. A. Stone, Denver, Colo.
Maryland — Baltimore Waverly: John S. Plumer, West Middlesex, Pa.
New Jersey—Hamburg First: Richard H. Hughes.
New York—Syracuse South: Clarence E. Macartney, Paterson, N. J.
Ohio—Toronto: J. V. Niehoff, Wellsville; Canton Calvary: F. S. Montgomery, Scio.
Pennsylvania—South Bethlehem: Edward I. Campbell, Manila, P. I.; Easton South: Joseph Howell.
South Dakota—White Lake: Marvin Meyer, Delhi, Minn.

Installations

Illinois—Mendota: J. G. Waits, May 29.
New York—Whitesboro: C. F. Kittredge, May 21.
Pennsylvania—Chanceford, May 15.

Supplies Arranged

California—Monterey: H. A. Fisk.
Illinois—Pawnee: S. M. Morton; Chicago Pullman: Thomas Hughes.
Iowa—Logan: C. S. Marsolf.

Vacant Pulpits

Iowa—Wapello: Professor J. L. Packer clerk.
Kansas—Spearville: I. Van Stewart clerk.
Missouri—Charleston Westminster: C. R. Trickey elder.
North Dakota—Towner: H. H. Bergh.

Change of Address

Pitts, Charles E.—Carterville to Mount Vernon, Mo.
Roberts, M. H.—Houston, Minn., to Newark, S. D.

Accessions

Idaho—Twin Falls, 11, June 1, J. F. Shepherd.
Illinois—Virginia, 12, June 1, John J. Wilson; Chicago Second, 29, June 1, J. B. Shaw; Chicago Hyde Park, 25, June 1, A. Alison, Jr.; Evanston First, 11, June 1, D. H. Jones; Oak Park, 19, May 25, G. N. Luccock.
Iowa—Walker, 5, T. D. Arends.
Michigan—Saginaw First, 25, June 1, H. R. Stark; Harbor Springs, 7, May 25, A. van der Meer.
Montana—Anaconda, 35, June 1, J. M. Ross.
Nebraska—Elgin, 26, T. W. Bowen.
New York—East Rochester, 20, June 1, B. Greenaway.
Ohio—Cincinnati Walnut Hills, 29, June 1, F. N. McMillin.
Pennsylvania—Palmerton First, 8, April 6, W. T. S. Seyfert; Clearfield, 123, May 25, E. C. Reeve; Philadelphia Gaston, 22, May 18, W. B. Greenway; Philadelphia Bethany, 21, May 25, Dr. Jarvis.
Texas—Athens, 43, May 25.
Wisconsin—Milwaukee Immanuel, 6, P. B. Jenkins; Milwaukee Westminster, 11, E. A. Cutler.

Necrology

Sherman—Los Angeles, Cal., May 28, G. W. Sherman, aged 78.

"There Shall Be No Poor"

Rev. James B. Converse, a retired minister of the Southern Presbyterian Church residing at Morristown, Tenn., has prepared a book with this title, based on Deuteronomy 15:4-5, and discussing the relation of religion and economics. It will be sold for $1 and those desiring copies are asked to send their names to Mr. Converse.

Get this one (8)
idea

The habit of thinking about great things, and thinking searchingly and sanely, is not easily cultivated. It is far easier to busy one's mind with the sporting page or the society page or the fashion page of the daily newspaper. When once we come to consider it, the fact is clear that the folk who most naturally and easily think about the big themes—and about the eternal relationship of the topics of time—are those who have been accustomed to reading a religious newspaper. As a help to high thinking the right sort of religious weekly is to be commended.

The Continent

WEDDING INVITATIONS ANNOUNCEMENTS CALLING CARDS FINE STATIONERY Send for Samples
S. D. CHILDS & CO., 200 CLARK ST., CHICAGO

SLIDE RENTING. STEREOPTICONS. NEW METHOD & SUBJECTS. CHURCHES REDUCED RATES.
MOORE-HUBBELL & CO. 713 MASONIC TEMPLE · CHICAGO

WANTS AND HELPS

Rates for classified advertising, Three Cents a Word, including the address. If desired a "box" address may be used, responses being sent to THE CONTINENT and forwarded to advertiser.

CASH MUST ACCOMPANY ORDER

MISCELLANEOUS

TEN MINUTES AND LESS THAN FOUR CENTS WILL bring good returns if you invest them in a letter giving the names and addresses of men and boys who have come to Chicago to live. The Presbyterian Brotherhood will be the connecting link between them and the nearest church. Write to Dr. Francis M. Fox, 509 S. Wabash ave., Chicago.

SUCCESSFUL CITY PASTOR, YOUNG MAN, WOULD like to change to town or village work. Address "V," Continent.

PAUL J. GILBERT, WHO IS NOW WITH THE SMITH-Robins Men and Religion Party in their world tour, would like to correspond at once with a pastor desiring the services of an assistant. Address 124 E. 28th st., New York.

FOR SALE—NEW SCHAFF-HERZOG ENCYCLOPEDIA of Religious Knowledge. Box 122, Oregon, Mo.

PASTORATE WANTED—BY SUCCESSFUL MINISTER in town, who desires to build up a run-down village church. Preference southern Pennsylvania or nearby state. Address "B. D.," Continent.

WANTED—YOUNG MARRIED MINISTER TWELVE years in pastorate, wishes change Middle West to Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, or Atlantic coast. Specializes young people, Sunday school, Brotherhood. Address 623 E. 70th place, Chicago, Ill.

HEALTH RESORTS

PENNOYER SANITARIUM (ESTABLISHED 1857), Chicago suburb, Northwestern Railway. Grounds (100 acres) fronting Lake Michigan. Modern, homelike. For rest, recreation, treatment. Booklet. Address Pennoyer Sanitarium, Kenosha, Wis.

REAL ESTATE

WE CAN HANDLE YOUR INVESTMENTS SAFELY, promptly and profitably, whether you live near at hand or on the other side of the world. Besides our many clients in the United States we have a number living in foreign lands, who have placed their funds with us. Here is a recent letter from an old client, living in Honolulu, Hawaii: "I have your letter of the 1st inclosing draft in payment of the Locking loan. During these years that I have dealt with you I have been pleased with your promptness, and with the fact that I could rely on your word I wish I had on hand now several thousand dollars that I could send to you for investment in North Dakota Mortgages." We shall be pleased to give you references and full information about the splendid investment opportunities in our field. Write today. Address E. J. Lander & Co., Grand Forks, N. D.

NEW BOOKS—AT ALL BOOKSELLERS

A "Vade Mecum" on Immigration. By author of "The American Government"

The Immigrant AN ASSET AND A LIABILITY

Illustrated By FREDERIC J. HASKIN $1.25 net

The widespread attention focused on this theme makes this book especially timely. No other work of this kind gathers into itself the consideration of so many phases of the subject and for this reason it admirably supplements the several textbooks on the topic. In brief, lucid replies it answers questions like these: "Why do the immigrants come?" "How do they come?" "How are they treated at ports of entry?" "What helps and what hindrances meet them?" "Where do they go?" "Who is the padrone?" "What is peonage?" "How does the new immigrant live?" "What of the future?"

I. T. THURSTON

A Camp Fire Girls' Story.

The Torch Bearer

The author of "The Scout Master of Troop 5" has scored another success. The beautiful ritual and practices of this new organization are woven into a story of charm. Illustrated, net $1.00

JOHN T. FARIS

Author of "Men Who Made Good."

The Alaskan Pathfinder

Mr. Faris tells the story of this apostle of the Western Indians in clear-cut, incisive chapters which will hold the boy's attention from first to last.

The Story of Sheldon Jackson for Boys. Cloth, net $1.00

Doc Williams A TALE OF THE MIDDLE WEST

Frontispiece By CHARLES H. LERRIGO Cloth, $1.25 net

Not since "David Harum" has there appeared in fiction a character more simple-hearted, shrewd, philosophical, humorous or more full of "hoss" sense than dear old Doc Williams

"The homely humor of the old doctor and his childlike faith in 'the cure' is so intensely human that he captures the sympathy at once—a sympathy that becomes the deepest sort of interest."—Topeka Capital.

PROF. JAMES R. HOWERTON

The Church and Social Reform

A graphic analysis of the causes of the present discontent and a rationale of alleviation that will arouse discussion and open the eyes of Christian citizens to their duty in the present crisis. Net 75c

JOHN DOUGLAS ADAM, D.D.

Letters of Father and Son During College Days

Dr. Adam lets the young man ask his own questions and by adroit discussion work out his own salvation. Study, recreation, friends, use of time, money, health, speech, thought, influence, religion, trouble, optimism and character are among the subjects treated. Net $1 00

Interdenominational Home Mission Study Course

THREE NEW TEXT BOOKS FOR 1913

The New America

By MARY CLARK BARNES and DR. L. C. BARNES

Illus., cloth, net 50c., (post. 7c.); paper 30c., (post. 5c.)

The regular textbook for the coming year The authors are eminently fitted as their lives have been devoted to home mission work

America, God's Melting Pot

By LAURA GEROULD CRAIG

Illus., 12mo, paper, net 25c.; (post. 4c)

A supplemental textbook from an entirely different standpoint. A "parable study" which deals more with lessons and agencies than with issues and processes.

Comrades from Other Lands

By LEILA ALLEN DIMOCK

Illus., paper, net 25c.; (post. 4c.)

The new "Junior" book is complementary to the last volume in this course of study, SOME IMMIGRANT NEIGHBORS and tells what the immigrants are doing in country industries

FLEMING H. REVELL COMPANY

NEW YORK, 158 Fifth Avenue. CHICAGO, 125 No. Wabash Avenue

The General Assembly

indorses Lafayette College Endowment

The following action was taken by the General Assembly at Atlanta on recommendation [illegible] the Standing Committee on Colle[illegible]

Spar[illegible]s Marion E †jan14
1205 Springfield av

> RESOLVED, that the [illegible] the raising of $1,000,000 for the [illegible] of the endowment and equipment [illegible] Lafayette College be commended and that this old and vigorous College be recommended to the Church and the people for aid in its effort to increase its efficiency and enlarge its influence.

The Synod of Pennsylvania has already indorsed it. Presbytery after Presbytery in the Synod has indorsed it. A large number of individuals have added the practical indorsement of their gifts.

What will you do?

The Committee of the Synod of Pennsylvania

Rev. William E Brooks, Chairman, :: Allentown, Pa.

Do You Contemplate Attending the

International Convention of Christian Endeavor

Los Angeles, July 9-14, 1913?

¶ You can reach the convention city quickly, comfortably and via a route rich in historic interest and renowned for its scenic attractiveness, by using the famous home comfort, electric lighted 'Los Angeles Limited,'' which leaves Chicago daily at 10:02 p. m.—less than three days en route via the Chicago and North Western Ry., Union Pacific R. R. and Salt Lake Route.

¶ For those with a little more time to spare who would like a glimpse of San Francisco en route—the ''San Francisco Limited,'' which leaves Chicago daily at 8:30 p. m. via Chicago and North Western Ry.. Union Pacific and Southern Pacific, makes direct connections with train leaving San Francisco 10:00 p. m., arriving Los Angeles 2:45 p. m., fourth day.

¶ This route is double tracked for over 1,300 miles and is protected all the way by automatic electric safety signals.

Dining Car Service Unequaled

¶ Your comfort begins when you enter the new Passenger Terminal of the Chicago and North Western Ry. in Chicago.

The Best of Everything

For rates, reservations and full particulars, call on or address

Chicago and North Western Ry.

A. C. JOHNSON, Pass'r Traffic Manager
C. A. CAIRNS, Gen'l Pass'r and Ticket Agt.
Chicago, Illinois

LA 2785

Here Is Your Latest Help

MATTHEW 4.12—4.23 Jesus calls the Four

12 Now when he heard that John was delivered up, he withdrew into Gal'i-lee; 13 and leaving Naz'a-reth, he came and dwelt in Ca-per'na-um, which is by the sea, in the borders of Zeb-u-lun and Naph'ta-li: 14 that it might be fulfilled which was spoken through I-sa'iah the prophet, saying,

15 [h]The land of Zeb'u-lun and the land of Naph'ta-li,
[i]Toward the sea, beyond the Jordan,
Gal'i-lee of the [k]Gen'tiles,
16 The people that sat in darkness
Saw a great light,
And to them that sat in the region and shadow of death,
To them did light spring up.

17 From that time began Je'sus to preach, and to say, Repent ye; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

18 And walking by the sea of Gal'i-lee, he saw two brethren, Si'mon who is called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea; for they were fishers. 19 And he saith unto them, Come ye after me, and I will make you fishers of men. 20 And they straightway left the nets, and followed him. 21 And going on from thence he saw two other brethren, [l]James the son of Zeb'e-dee, and John his brother, in the boat with Zeb'e-dee their father, mending their nets: and he called them. 22 And they straightway left t[illegible] boat and their father, an[illegible] lowed him.

23 And [m]Je'sus we[illegible] all Gal'i-lee, teac[illegible]

---

[h] Is. ix. 1, 2. [i] Gr. The way of the sea. [k] Gr. nations: and so elsewhere.

[l] Or, Jacob [m] S[illegible] read he.

12. Was delivered up. See ch. 14.3–5. Withdrew into Galilee. Jesus left Judæa most probably on account of the hatred of the Pharisees and began his ministry in Galilee. It is not known how long his Judæan ministry lasted. A few authorit[illegible] say about a month, but mo[illegible] them eight months. His w[illegible] through Samaria. 'Galile[illegible] a circle or region, whic[illegible] contained the twenty [illegible] Solomon to Hiram[illegible] Afterwards the p[illegible] larger district[illegible] country sou[illegible] plain.

13. [illegible] west[illegible] S[illegible]

phrase as [illegible] deepest [illegible] own J[illegible] Old [illegible]

The above is a facsimile part page of Nelson's Explanatory Testament in the American Standard Version with a general introduction to each book, the words of Christ in distinct black type, notes and comments by unbiased scholars at the bottom of each page, bound in French morocco divinity circuit, overlapping covers, red and gold edges, etc. An entirely new edition of the Testament which can be secured this year only through a few high class publications like The Continent. It will be sent postpaid to any reader of The Continent who will send us one new yearly cash subscriber, accompanied by $2.50, the regular yearly price. Address 509 So. Wabash Ave. Chicago, Illinois The Continent 156 Fifth Avenue New York, N. Y.

The CONTINENT

JUNE 19, 1913

How a Church Multiplied by Six

DAVID W. MONTGOMERY

Looking Back to Beecher

WILLIS A. ELLIS

Should a Christian Be Outside of the Church?

EDITORIAL

The Home Council: A Night in the Open—Jennie Brooks

NEW YORK CHICAGO PHILADELPHIA

EDUCATIONAL

Illinois

PRESBYTERIAN TRAINING SCHOOL

of Chicago

for Christian Workers

Organized in 1908 by the Board of Church Extension of the Presbytery of Chicago

There have been three periods in the history of the modern Church, which, however, overlap.

First, the period of witness to the truth, a time of statement, declaration, defense. This was the time of the great creeds, especially the middle of the seventeenth century, when the Westminster Confession was formed. For this period the Church produced great thinkers.

Second, the period of the propagation of the truth. The truth having taken its form, there grew a spirit which demanded its extension. That extension took two forms—worldwide missions, beginning with Carey, and evangelism, which is only missions at home. For this period the Church added to her force great evangelistic preachers and missionary heroes.

Third, the present era of the application of the truth, when the test of the gospel is not whether it will satisfy the intellectual needs of men, as in the first period, and not whether it will save all kinds of men individually, as in the second, but whether it will save everything that pertains to men, whether it will work everywhere and bring salvation to every human need and relation.

For this era the Church needs further to supplement her leadership with a trained lay force not "set" for the defense or propagation of the faith so much as for its application. This is one of the tasks for which the Presbyterian Training School was established. If you are now, or are willing to be, interested in these tasks write for our "Herald."

Address H. B. McAFEE, Director
210 East 50th Street
Chicago, Ill.

NORTHWESTERN

MILITARY AND NAVAL ACADEMY
Highland Park, Ill., & Lake Geneva, Wis.

A select school with a high standard of Academic work. Physical, moral and social benefits of a Military and Naval life. Limited enrollment. Catalogue. Address Col. R. P. Davidson, Supt., Lake Geneva, Wis. Chicago Office Room 305, N. Y. Life Bldg. 'Phone Randolph 1537

FERRY HALL A Christian Home School

For Girls and Young Women

Certificate accepted by Smith, Vassar, Wellesley, Mount Holyoke. Junior-College Course for high school graduates. Art, Music, Expression and Domestic Science. Country life with best opportunities of the city. Swimming pool. For catalog and other information address

Miss Frances L. Hughes, Box 123, Lake Forest, Ill.

Illinois Woman's College

A Standard College—One of the Best.

Grants degrees. College of Liberal Arts (full scientific and classical); College of Music; School of Fine Arts; School of Expression; School of Home Economics. Academy Course for younger girls. Ideal home life. Magnificent equipment. Catalogue on request. Expenses reasonable. Address

PRESIDENT HARKER, Box 31, Jacksonville, Ill.

Frances Shimer School of the University of Chicago.

For girls and young women. Academic and college courses. Music, Art, Domestic Science. 61st year. Catalogue.
Rev Wm. P McKee, Dean, Box 602, Mt. Carroll, Ill.

BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY

Instructors have wide experience in the "Boy Problem." ACADEMY ideally located, 35 miles from St. Louis. Healthful environment, Christian influence. Prepares young men for business or college. The ideal school for YOUR boy. Write HEADMASTER, BUNKER HILL, ILL.

EDUCATIONAL

Pennsylvania

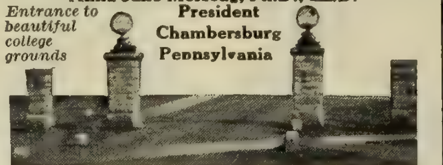
Main Hall

Wilson College

FOR WOMEN
Connected with the Presbyterian Church

Beautiful situation in the Cumberland Valley: extensive campus, water supply approved by the State Board of Health, careful provision for the health of students, a good social atmosphere, a strong faculty, high intellectual standards, solid and thorough work. Courses lead to the B.A. degree. A good department of music. Strong religious influence. Catalogue and views on request.

Anna Jane McKeag, Ph.D., LL.D.
President
Chambersburg
Pennsylvania



Entrance to beautiful college grounds

BEECHWOOD A Cultural and Practical School

FOR YOUNG WOMEN, AT JENKINTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA.
College Preparatory, College Departments—Conservatory of Music, Arts, Arts and Crafts, Domestic Arts and Sciences.
M. H. Reaser, Ph.D., :: :: :: President

Kiskiminetas Springs School

FOR BOYS

Each boy studied and his work adapted to his needs. Character developed along positive lines. Known and indorsed by every American University. Broad business course for boys not going to college. Beautiful new dormitory and 136 acres of land have just been added to equipment. Opens 26th year, under same management, Sept. 23, 1913. Write for catalogue.

Kiskiminetas Springs School, Dept. 12, Saltsburg, Pa.

Indiana

Before Deciding Where to Attend School

Send for catalog of Valparaiso University, Valparaiso, Indiana. This is one of the largest institutions of learning in the United States.

Thorough Instruction at Lowest Expense.

Catalog mailed free. Address
H. B. BROWN, President.
O. P. KINSEY, Vice-President.

Ohio

The WESTERN COLLEGE for WOMEN

OXFORD, OHIO
FOUNDED 1853

Ranked with Leading Eastern Colleges

A center of stimulating life for thoughtful students. Comprehensive curriculum; definite religious influence. 350 beautiful acres; campus, farm, garden. Music and Art Departments of special brilliance. Domestic Science. Outdoor Athletics; Gymnasium. Illustrated literature on request.
Mary A. Sawyer, A. M., Lit. D., Dean.

THE OXFORD COLLEGE FOR WOMEN Founded 1830. One hour from Cincinnati. Overflowing attendance of loyal students. High ideals, sound scholarship. Delightful home life and social privileges. Standard four-year course. A. B. Degree. Art, Music, Expression. Normal Domestic Science. Write for "Seven Points." JANE SHERZER, Ph.D. (Berlin), Pres., Box 2, Oxford, Ohio

Illinois

NURSES are given a thorough and practical three years training at PASSAVANT Memorial Hospital Training School.

They also have the advantages of a monthly cash allowance, a separate Nurses' Home, and affiliation with the Illinois Training School for Nurses. For further information, address

MISS E. C. GLENN, R. N.,
149-151 West Superior Street. - - Chicago, Illinois.

TODD SEMINARY FOR BOYS

An ideal school for young boys near Chicago. No serious sickness in 50 years. We educate the whole boy. Send for prospectus. NOBLE HILL, Woodstock, Ill.

California

GIRLS' COLLEGIATE SCHOOL. "CASA DE ROSAS" Twenty-second year begins September 25th. Accredited at leading colleges. Music, art, gymnasium, domestic science. Beautiful buildings, fine equipment. Limited number of resident pupils.
Miss Parsons and Miss Dennen, Principals,
Adams and Hoover Streets, Los Angeles, California.

EDUCATIONAL

Iowa

Highland Park College

DES MOINES, IOWA

Liberal Arts Normal Engineering Pharmacy Oratory Music Commerce Home Study	For the man or woman with limited time and money. Thorough courses with opportunities for practical work while learning. Ambitious students can earn part or all expenses. Expert specialists teach; students advance rapidly. Successful graduates everywhere. Large, well equipped plant. School all year. Board, $2.25 to $2.75 per week. Tuition in Preparatory, College, Normal and Business Courses, $18 per quarter. Write today for catalogue, stating which course interests you. Address

DR. GEORGE P. MAGILL, President.

PARSONS COLLEGE

OFFERS

To youth of both sexes superior advantages in securing an education.

IDEAL LOCATION.
STRONG FACULTY.
MODERN EQUIPMENT.

38 years of service to the church and country.
W. E. PARSONS, President. Fairfield, Iowa

SLIDE RENTING. STEREOPTICONS. NEW METHOD & SUBJECTS. CHURCHES REDUCED RATES.
MOORE-HUBBELL & CO. 713 MASONIC TEMPLE · CHICAGO

WANTS AND HELPS

Rates for classified advertising, Three Cents a Word, including the address. If desired a "box" address may be used, responses being sent to THE CONTINENT and forwarded to advertiser.

CASH MUST ACCOMPANY ORDER

MISCELLANEOUS

TEN MINUTES AND LESS THAN FOUR CENTS WILL bring good returns if you invest them in a letter giving the names and addresses of men and boys who have come to Chicago to live. The Presbyterian Brotherhood will be the connecting link between them and the nearest church. Write to Dr. Francis M. Fox, 509 S. Wabash ave., Chicago.

PAUL J. GILBERT, WHO IS NOW WITH THE SMITH-Robins Men and Religion Party in their world tour, would like to correspond at once with a pastor desiring the services of an assistant. Address 124 E. 28th st., New York.

A REFINED CHRISTIAN WOMAN, COLLEGE GRADUate, experienced teacher, desires position as tutor or chaperon for one or two young girls in a family during July and August. Best references. Address W, care Continent.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, ARGYLE, ILL., WILL give communion set to some needy church.

AGRICULTURIST AND FARM SUPERINTENDENT will be open for position October 1st. Experienced in handling large propositions with registered cattle and thoroughbred horses. Do not care for Gentlmen's Place proposition but that conducted on a practical and scientific basis. Desire ample time to investigate your proposition and you me. Address Box U, The Continent.

WANTED—BY A YOUNG CLERGYMAN IN THE West, books, including an unabridged dictionary. Address Box 117 care of Continent.

COLORADO VISITORS! MAKE DENVER HEADquarters. Enjoy mountain excursions daily. Don't pay three, when one dollar per day rents newly furnished apartment. Four rooms, bath, sleeping porch, hot water, janitor service, lawn, trees. Choice neighborhood. Dr. Smiley, 2300 Downing, Denver, Colo.

ETOWAH HEIGHTS: A ROMANCE OF SHERMAN'S March, is a beautiful little souvenir book compiled for the famous Atlanta Assemblies, by L. L. Knight. This volume commemorates the Atlanta Assemblies, contains 112 pages of reading matter, illustrated with typical views of the South. If you wish to obtain a copy send 30 cents in stamps to L. L. Knight, Atlanta, Ga.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS WANTED—IN THE MORMON regions of our country there are about 400,000 people, mostly Mormons, who are practically never seen inside a Christian church. Some of them live 50 miles from any service. The only way to reach them with the true gospel is by a traveling work. The Utah Gospel Mission of Cleveland has been doing this for twelve years, and is now in great need of several more workers. Capable, consecrated, adaptable men, with fair education and knowledge of the Bible, who can give at least one year with only all personal and traveling expenses provided, can learn particulars by addressing the Mission at 1875 E. 81st st., Cleveland, Ohio. Inquirers should give details and references.

WHY NOT HAVE Your Own Local Church Magazine?

Ready Made
Illustrated
Monthly
Inexpensive

Adaptable to Any Church
Write for Sample and Full Information
Revell's Church Magazine Service, : 158 5th Ave., N. Y.

The Great Natural Bridges

in UTAH—the greatest in the world—OPEN TO VISITORS, men and women, in JULY and AUGUST. Travel by team. Complete arrangements for comfort and pleasure. Address W. R. LEWIS, Lewis, Colorado.

Blackburn College students learn the science of agriculture and household economics by practicing these arts under university trained teachers. By this system they obtain a high grade college training at little expense. Combines earning and learning. Full classical course. Write President Hudson, Carlinville, Ill.

Subscription Terms—The subscription price of THE CONTINENT is $2.50 per year payable in advance.

Postage is prepaid on all subscriptions in the United States, Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, Guam, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, Cuba and Mexico.

Foreign Postage—For Canada, 50 cents should be added for postage, and for all other countries in the Postal Union $1.10 should be added for postage.

Remittances should be sent by draft on Chicago or New York, Express or P. O. money orders payable to THE CONTINENT. If personal check is sent, 10 cents must be added for collection.

THE CONTINENT

Continuing THE INTERIOR (Established 1870) and THE WESTMINSTER (Established 1904)
PUBLISHED WEEKLY

THE McCORMICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, Proprietors
OLIVER R. WILLIAMSON, Publisher

CHICAGO
509 South Wabash Avenue

NEW YORK CITY
Presbyterian Building, 156 5th Avenue

PHILADELPHIA
Witherspoon Building

Entered as second-class matter October 6, 1910, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879. Copyright, 1913, by the McCormick Publishing Company.

Acknowledgments—Within two weeks the date following name on "yellow label" will show to the first of what month subscription has been paid. No other receipt is given unless stamp is sent.

Change of Address—Kindly send us both old and new address a week previous to the date of the desired change.

Discontinuances—No subscription is dropped without a definite request from the subscriber; otherwise it is assumed that he wishes to continue.

Manuscripts—The Continent does not accept responsibility for damage or loss of manuscripts sent to it for consideration.

Advertising rates on application.

IN THIS ISSUE:

THURSDAY, JUNE 19, 1913

MUST I JOIN THE CHURCH?............. 853
EDITORIAL—
  Beyond Our Faith..................... 856
  Greatest Heresy Trial—May There Never Be Another.................. 856
  Don't Degrade Martyrdom with Cheap Comparisons 856
  Certificate of Orthodoxy from The Presbyterian 856
  Some Remarks Not Contributing to Pessimism 857
  Multiplicity of Under-Shepherds....... 857
THE WORLD............................ 854
RELIGIOUS WORLD...................... 855
MEN WHO ARE "HELPS"....J. H. Jowett 858
MULTIPLYING A CHURCH BY SIX (Illustrated).........David W. Montgomery 859
LOOKING BACK TO HENRY WARD BEECHER ....Willis A. Ellis 861
ALUMNI DAY AT ITS BEST..The Wayfarer 862
THE HOME COUNCIL—A Night in the Open ....Jennie Brooks 863
YOUNG AMERICA—The Gratitude of Spot ....Marion Everett Hayn 864
  Girl Burden-Bearers of India (with Illustration)......Helen F. Huntington 864
NEW BOOKS—
  Mr. Bryce on American Questions..... 865
  New Fiction......................... 865
  Personal Stories of Religious Experience 865
THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ....J. L. Scott, H. D. Jenkins 866
DEVOTIONAL SERVICE........E. A. Wicher 867
YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE......W. T. Ellis 867
MISSIONARY WORK (with Illustration).... 868
THE OPEN HEARTH...................... 869
WAYS OF WORKING...................... 870
NEWS FROM RELIGIOUS FIELD—Beginning 870
FINANCIAL SITUATION.................. 877

Around the Shop

The Around-the-Shop Man keeps over his desk in summer the picture of an iceberg. This he procured when in Newfoundland. He never glances at it without being reminded of a certain cold July day on a fishing boat when summer seemed farther away than when, a boy, he received a baseball for his birthday in January.

Our Continent readers often find the paper a link to connect them with past experiences and with scenes long distant. The pastor looks anxiously for news about his former parish; our California folk—though they would "never go back—the idea!"—are glad to read of old friends and old abodes back East; our missionaries see their fatherland through the type and pictures of our paper, and in the minds of veteran readers everywhere countless recollections are stirred by the mention of once familiar names of persons and places.

—

If every Presbyterian who goes to the city or seeks a new home in strange surroundings were to possess this connecting link, there would be less religious drifting. One way to help the stranger to get his bearings again—and to draw that church letter from his trunk—is to see that he gets The Continent. We'll make it easy for you if you'll write us about it.

Here's a southern minister who wrote us last winter: "That snow picture on your cover is worth three months' subscription price. We have scenes like that about once in ten years down here, but how the picture brings the time of my boyhood back again!"

—

Because Continent folk are loyal to their homes wherever they reside, they never lose their attachment when separation has made former environments only a memory. As one big family, all America is just a great household to them, with The Continent keeping its members bound together.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

ILLUSTRATE YOUR SERMONS
Pastors! Write for Our Special Stereopticon Offer.
Detroit Stereopticon Supply Co., Detroit, Mich.

PEWS-PULPITS-S-S-SEATING
Write Today for Our "Catalog B f"
Authoritative Guide on Church Seating; valuable suggestions on designs, finishes, seating plans, etc. Send Floor Plan and state fully your requirements
Blackboards, School Supplies, Catalog H1
School Desks, Catalog S2
American Seating Company
218 S. WABASH AV. CHICAGO
NEW YORK, BOSTON, PHILADELPHIA

HALLOWED HYMNS NEW and OLD
$25 per 100, not prepaid. 35 cents per copy by mail.
Returnable samples mailed to prospective purchasers.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York or Chicago

18,000 CHURCHES USE THE
THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
Noiseless, dust-proof, self-collecting, saves ¼ cost other services. Uses shallow glass—no tipping of head. Our SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER makes purchase easy. Outfits on trial—state number of communicants.
Thomas Communion Service Co., Box I, Lima, Ohio.

PULPITS, Platform Chairs, Sunday School Seats, Collection Plates, Church Pews, School Desks, Opera Chairs, Lodge and Bank Furniture, Office Desks.
Ask for Catalog by number only
C105 Church Furnit're | School Desks S105
L105 Lodge Furniture | Opera Chairs O105
B105 Bank Furniture | Office Desks D105
E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO., CHICAGO

Church Organs
BUILT BY
Hutchings Organ Co., 18 Tremont Street BOSTON, MASS

1500 MÖLLER PIPE ORGANS
Now in use. For Catalogues, Address
M. P. MÖLLER, HAGERSTOWN, MD.

HARRY W. JONES
Church Architect :: MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL
Sweet Tone Far Sounding Durable
Catalogue Free.
AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

Church Chime Peal BELLS
Memorial Bells a Specialty.
McShane Bell Foundry Co., Baltimore, Md., U.S.A.

CHURCH PEWS
AND PULPIT FURNITURE
Globe Furniture Co., Ltd., 10 Park Place, Northville, Mich.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 28
THE C. S. BELL Co. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

MENEELY BELL CO.
TROY, N.Y. AND 177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY.
BELLS

BELLS, PEALS, CHIMES
Send for catalog. Our bells made only of the best selected Copper and East India Tin. Famous for full rich tones, volume and durability. Guaranteed.
E. W. VANDUZEN CO., Prop'r Buckeye Bell Foundry (Established 1837). 559 E. Second St., CINCINNATI, O.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

CHURCH SEATING
HANDY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.

PIPE AND REED ORGANS AND PIANOS
Pure, sweet tone. Superior quality. Attractive styles. We sell direct at factory prices. Write, stating which catalog is desired.
HINNERS ORGAN CO., PEKIN, ILL.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
"Noiseless" Cushioned Trays with a new Short Glass. Trays interlock. All glasses well spaced. Outfits sent on trial.
DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
20 East Randolph St., Dept. J2, CHICAGO.

—MONEY—
Do you need it in your Church work. The International Banks will help you raise it. Write us.
The International Church Supply Co.
3 Clinton Bldg., Columbus, O.

George Kilgen & Son
BUILDERS OF HIGH GRADE
PIPE ORGANS
Best of References. ST. LOUIS, MO. Correspondence Solicited.

WEDDING
INVITATIONS
ANNOUNCEMENTS
CALLING CARDS
FINE STATIONERY
Send for Samples
S. D. CHILDS & CO., 200 CLARK ST., CHICAGO

Illustrated Sermons. They draw—the impression lasts. Good Lantern with Electric Rheostat or Acetylene Generator, $29.00 Large stock of Slides, Stereopticons and Educational Apparatus Get our latest catalog and terms
C. M. STEBBINS, 1028 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.

Attractive Sunday Evenings
With McIntosh illustrated sermons. Write for catalog.
McIntosh Stereopticon Co.
37 Randolph Street :: Chicago, Illinois

KIMBALL PIPE ORGANS
WON HIGHEST AWARD
At the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, Seattle, 1909 Special mention was made of the Tubular Pneumatic System (U. S. Patent) used in Kimball Pipe Organs, stating it "has solved a great problem that has vexed organ experts for years."
W. W. KIMBALL COMPANY
Pipe Organ Builders :: CHICAGO

The Selection of a School

is a subject which requires the fullest consideration. The Continent's Educational Bureau has on file information regarding all the principal institutions of the country and will gladly cooperate with parents and students in making a choice. This service is entirely free to readers of The Continent. Begin your investigation in time to permit a thorough inquiry. Address

THE CONTINENT EDUCATIONAL BUREAU
509 Wabash Avenue - - - CHICAGO

Georgia

AGNES SCOTT COLLEGE

DECATUR (6 Miles From Atlanta) GEORGIA
Letters—Philosophy—Science—Home Economics
B. A. Graduates, from this college, are admitted, without examination, as candidates for the M. A. degree in the leading universities of the North and East
No Preparatory Department Dormitory Capacity Limited to 300
For Catalog and Bulletin of Views, address the President
F. H. GAINES, D. D. LL. D.

South Carolina

Converse College
Spartanburg, S. C.
A Standard College for Women.
No Preparatory Department.
Confers degrees of A. B., A. M., B. Mus.
Near Blue Ridge Mountains.
Ideal winter climate. No malaria.
ROBERT P. PELL, Litt. D., President.

Indiana

WABASH COLLEGE
CRAWFORDSVILLE, INDIANA—80th YEAR
Opening Day September 16th. A college of liberal culture for young men. Modern equipment. Strong teaching force. Moderate expenses. For particulars address GEORGE L. MACKINTOSH, Pres.

Missouri

Missouri Valley College
MARSHALL, MISSOURI
College, Music Conservatory, Academy

Co-educational; four modern buildings; modern laboratories; library; museum; beautiful athletic grounds; forty acres in campus; all buildings heated from one heating plant; lighted by electricity; standards high; location ideal; Marshall and Saline County are "dry"; most beautiful and prosperous city. Opens September 8, 1913. Write for catalog.

WILLIAM HENRY BLACK, President,
405 College Street, Marshall, Missouri.

CHRISTIAN COLLEGE
and Conservatory of Music For Young Women Columbia, Mo.

Non-sectarian. 63d year. Offers highest scholastic courses amid distinctively moral and Christian environment. Located in a "city whose business is education." 20 college-trained instructors; 5 large buildings; 20-acre campus; outdoor sports; home care. Art, Music, Elocution and Domestic Science.

Mrs. L. W. ST. CLAIR-MOSS, President, 740 College Place

Forest Park University
53d year. College and Preparatory. Certificate admits to Wellesley, Smith, Mt. Holyoke, Vassar and Co-educational universities. College of Music, E. R. KROEGER, Director; STOCKHOFF, WILLIAMS, Piano; NORDSTROM-CARTER, Voice; Public School Music. Violin, Expression, Art, Bible, Domestic Science. Year, $300.
President, ANNA S. CAIRNS, :: St. Louis, Mo.

Lindenwood For Women. Est. 1831 Fully accredited by the University of Missouri.
Two years' recognized university work. Music and Art. Domestic Science, regular course with diploma. Preparatory Department. Modern buildings. Ideal climate. 50 minutes from St. Louis. Terms $350. Catalogue. Address
George Frederick Ayres,
Ph.D., Pres., Box 297
St. Charles, Mo.
Junior College

Tennessee

CUMBERLAND UNIVERSITY
Thorough Work. Christian Ideals.
Write the President, LEBANON, TENN.

Wisconsin

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR ACADEMY
Endeavor, Wisconsin
A home school, coeducational, accredited, giving the Christian interpretation to life, just when life ideals are forming, in a country village without the saloon; varied courses, including Music, Home Economics and Agriculture. Total cost for school year for tuition, board and heated room, $150.
Address W. M. ELLIS, :: Principal

Milwaukee-Downer College
Milwaukee-Downer Seminary
Milwaukee, Wisconsin
College Courses lead to Bachelors' Degrees.
Home Economics Training Course for Teachers.
Seminary admits to Eastern and Western Colleges.
Music Department directed by Emil Liebling.
Art, Elocution, Athletics. Location combines advantages of city and country. For information specify College or Seminary catalogue. Miss Ellen C. Sabin, President

RACINE COLLEGE SCHOOL "The school for manly boys." —Chief Justice Winslow. Character building is our serious work. Modified military system. Location near Chicago. Special provision for younger boys. Supervised athletics. Large gymnasium; swimming pool. Diploma accepted by leading institutions. Catalogue. Rev. William Francis Shero, A.M., Ph.D., Warden and Headmaster, Racine, Wisconsin.

RIPON COLLEGE
RIPON :: :: WISCONSIN

Virginia

Mary Baldwin Seminary
For Young Ladies. STAUNTON, VIRGINIA.
Term begins Sept. 11th, 1913. Located in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia. Unsurpassed climate. Modern equipment. Students from 34 States. Terms moderate. Send for catalogue. Miss E. C. WEIMAR, Principal.

Minnesota

SHATTUCK SCHOOL
1867 MILITARY 1913
27 per cent enrolled are related to Alumni.
Write for Catalogue and Athletic Book.
Boys 8 to 12 in separate school.
Rev. James Dobbin, D.D., Rector.
Rev. Edward T. Mathison, Associate Rector.
FARIBAULT :: MINNESOTA

Do you know-so?

Time was when we had to take the storekeeper's say-so as to what was best in merchandise. That was before the day of advertising trade-marked goods. Now we buy not on anybody's else say-so but on our own know-so.

The ability to call for things by name eliminates the element of chance in purchasing. You know that you are getting what you want and you know that you are paying the standard price for it. Advertising has made this possible. It has given you a known standard in all lines which you can call for by name with a certainty of satisfaction and economy.

You should continually extend your knowledge of the trade names of the best things. You do so by reading the advertisements in this paper.

THE
ADVERTISING
MANAGER

EDUCATIONAL

Theological Seminaries

AUSTIN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
PRESBYTERIAN—FULL COURSES
OPENS OCTOBER FIRST, 1913
ROBERT E. VINSON, President, AUSTIN, TEXAS

Hartford Theological Seminary
Scientific methods with practical training. Large faculty and library.
Graduate fellowships, both foreign and resident. Open to all college graduates.
Associated with
Hartford School of Religious Pedagogy
Training Sunday School and other lay workers.
Hartford School of Missions fitting for foreign service.
Address Dean M. W. JACOBUS, Hartford, Ct.

Lane Theological Seminary
Walnut Hills, - - CINCINNATI, OHIO
For catalogue and other information inquire of
PRESIDENT WILLIAM MCKIBBIN.

Kansas

Send a Postal Card for
The College of Emporia Picture Book
Containing Snap Shots of
Real College Life
Address Pres. H. C. Culbertson, Emporia, Kansas

Assembly Minutes and Reports

Minutes of General Assembly will be issued early in August. Paper covered copies will be sent without charge to ministers belonging to presbyteries that have paid their full apportionments to Assembly's contingent fund; cloth bound copies of the Minutes to such ministers will be furnished for 25 cents additional. Reports of the boards, in paper covers, when issued, will be sent to ministers in charge of churches, or who may request the volume, without charge; cloth bound copies will cost 35 cents. To all other persons the price of the Minutes is $1 paper and $1.50 cloth; the reports of boards, 40 cents paper; 65 cents cloth. Cloth copies should be ordered promptly from William H. Roberts, D. D., 515 Witherspoon building, Philadelphia.

THE CONTINENT

CONTINUING THE INTERIOR (ESTABLISHED 1870) AND THE WESTMINSTER (ESTABLISHED 1904)

VOLUME 44, NO. 25 JUNE 19, 1913 WHOLE NO. 2247

Nolan R. Best, Editor—156 Fifth Avenue, New York. Oliver R. Williamson, Publisher—509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago. William T. Ellis, Editor Afield—Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia. The McCormick Publishing Company, Proprietors

Must I Join the Church?

"CAN ONE BE A CHRISTIAN WITHOUT JOINING THE CHURCH?"

Yes, to be sure. But what's the use of being that kind of Christian?

It is queer how industrious some people are in figuring religion down to the minimum. When a man joins a secret order, he comes in asking how many degrees he is going to be permitted to take. But the same man when he decides he ought to be a Christian is apt to insist on knowing the least requirement he can get off with.

◆

There are two ways of looking at religion, and no man has seen all of it until he has taken both looks.

It is inevitable perhaps that the view of religion which shows biggest to an irreligious man is the guaranty side. The world is a puzzle of doubt and peril to everybody except a conceited fool, and when an ordinarily sane man hears religion promising him a safe conduct through the maze, he can't help being interested.

And if he believes the guaranty, business instinct naturally prompts him to inquire what is the lowest price for which this insurance of happiness and salvation can be obtained.

That is why so many people ask if they can't be Christians without being church members. Without church the price of salvation would be just that much less.

Of course, when it comes to that, there is nothing to tell them according to the Bible except that it is entirely conceivable that they can be Christian enough to be saved without joining the church.

◆

But there is another look coming to them. This answer is true all right, but to let it go at that would be mightily misleading.

The church is something much more important than a first-class parlor car to carry to heaven ladies and gentlemen not too frugal to afford the price of the luxury. If it were merely that, a certain measure of respect would be due to economical souls willing to put up with ordinary day coach accommodations, along with the mass of other folks—or even to travel "blind baggage."

In fact, the church is nothing at all like a parlor car—long, narrow and contracted. Instead, it is round, high and vast like the dome of noon overarching the world. And far from being a place of lolling ease, it is a place of urgent call for labor. It demands not a fare for transit but a hand lent to a famous enterprise.

The church stands on the big proposition that the world needs Jesus Christ—that men have got to know about him before they learn to live in any sort of realization of what they were meant to be.

Here is where the other view of religion comes in. This is the angle that shows it, besides being a guaranty, as also a challenge.

And after a man has seen Christianity from that viewpoint, the question whether he has to join the church in order to be a Christian gets decidedly inane. The barb of the query suddenly is found sharpened at the other end:

If a man is a Christian, what excuse can he possibly have for wanting to stay out of the church?

◆

The logic of the case begins with the premise that all men need Jesus Christ. Surely the man who has decided that he needs Jesus Christ himself is in no position to deny that.

And what is more to the point and still more impossible to deny—if Jesus wanted him for a servant and follower, Jesus must want other men just as much.

How is a fair man going to meet that? Is he going to attach himself to the Master for his own safety and then deliberately set up that it is nothing to him whether anybody else gets the same benefit?

Plainly no man can hold that ground very long without a shamed face. Just let him once acknowledge that he owes the slightest meed of gratitude to Christ for anything he has himself received, and he has proved that as a decent man he must take part in what Jesus wants done.

And the thing Jesus wants done is to have this religion of love and forgiveness and moral health spread to others. No man in his senses can question that.

Now, where are the people gathered who are working for that sort of thing? The answer is plain as daylight:

In the church.

Then if this is the same thing that you are bound to want and to work for, the church is the place for you to be too. What is the sense of calculating whether you can manage to stay out?

If you really want to do Christ's will in the biggest way possible, you will rush to get into the church as quick as you can.

◆

Of course, there are excuses. People say the church asks too much; they can't take all of its creed or don't enjoy all of its ceremonies. Sometimes they raise a great argumentation whether the church is really doing the will of Christ. And finally they say they think they can do more in an independent way.

But none of this prismatic palaver, however much it glitters, stands the acid test for the real gold of honest reason.

As for ceremonies and creeds, the assorted denominations of the present-day church surely offer enough variety for a man to find what suits him without too prolonged search. And at this late day, there are mighty few churches of any name that are going to cramp a convert into conformity with either creed or ceremony if once they know he has set out with them to follow Jesus Christ.

The notion that the church takes liberty away from a man is moonshine fiction.

And as for the pretense that a man can serve Jesus better going his own private way alone, that is fiction thinner than moonshine.

The great purposes that move the race are accomplished by men acting in brotherhood—through the might of the many joined together. To hold that one can go alone and do more defies the experience of humanity.

He who stays out of the church deserts the mission of the Lord. He who comes in pledges himself to nothing else.

Yes, the church falters at times, moves at a snail's pace, bickers internally when it should be fighting sin, palters with trifles when it should be swept with the surge of colossal enthusiasms.

But no cynic outside curling his lips at these follies will cure any of them.

Quit your own paltering, get into the ranks, lift the great banner yourself. You will see the church moving when you move.

You can be a Christian without joining the church—true; but not a Christian worth the being.

The World

Votes Won for Women of Illinois

Woman's suffrage last week crossed the Mississippi in triumph, marching, its friends believe, toward ultimate victory East and South. The Illinois legislature has passed, and Governor Dunne will sign, an act giving women the right to vote so far as the present state constitution will permit. Hereafter they may vote for president, mayor and aldermen, municipal judges and village officials, but may not vote for governor nor for United States senators nor for county officers, as the latter are specifically mentioned in the constitution, which restricts the franchise. A movement is on foot for a constitutional convention and a new constitution giving women the full suffrage. One of the women who has been active in the state campaign this year and in past legislative sessions remarked that in the meantime she should "feel like more than half a citizen."

The fact that in the second largest city on the continent women as well as men will vote for mayor and for presidential electors is indeed noteworthy, and goes far to offset recent suffrage defeats in Wisconsin and Michigan. Further enfranchisement in Illinois appears to be only a matter of time, but before the necessary legal steps can be taken in that state it is predicted by equal suffrage advocates that other states will be added to the ten now in the advanced column. Leading women in Chicago and in Illinois are planning schools of political instruction for their sisters, so that they may creditably participate in the 1914 primaries.

* * *

Railroad Case of High Importance Decided

A decision of vital importance to the railroads and the states in their relation to each other was handed down by the United States supreme court last week. The opinion is also of moment as pointing out a further duty of Congress in matters at issue. The whole question of the right of a state to regulate freight and passenger traffic charges, both inside and beyond state boundaries, was passed in review. The court held that a state had the right to fix railroad rates between points within the state, even where such rates had an effect upon or were lower than interstate rates, provided only that the regulation was reasonable or not "confiscatory." This until such time as Congress shall move. Speaking through Justice Hughes, the court recognized the paramount authority of Congress to intervene and to displace local laws by substituting laws of its own. In other words, "Congress must be the judge of federal action, and until Congress acts the states may act."

Not in years have railroad officials and stockholders been so disturbed by a court decision, and the effect on the stock market was depressingly evident—the more so as forecasts and prophecies had been that the decision of the court of last resort would be favorable instead of unfavorable to the railways. The decision opens the door for each and every one of the forty-eight states to regulate rates without reference to what the public just across the state lines may be paying, and it is easily conceivable that the effect on certain cities or communities may be damaging. A state, acting through its legislature or its railroad commission, may fix a rate between two widely separated points within the state lower than a rate authorized by federal authority for two points which, though in different states, may be fewer miles apart. And at the same time the court held that a rate which might be reasonable if charged by one railroad might be unreasonable for another, owing to differences in efficiency, equipment and management of the two roads. As to what is "reasonable," the court broadly said that rates should be "sufficient to yield a reasonable compensation for the services rendered." The roads are thus left in a position of uncertainty and perplexity bordering on the chaotic.

Fair play to the railroads seems to be guaranteed by the holding against confiscatory rates. In some quarters the decision has been interpreted to be a step toward ultimate government ownership of railways. However that may be, it has been made strikingly apparent that transportation by railroads which cross state lines is a matter of national, not local, concern, and can adequately be dealt with by the national government only.

* * *

Genesis of the Famous Railroad Rate Case

Six years ago the Minnesota legislature passed laws reducing all railroad rates a third and the state railroad commission made an order for maximum freight charges and a 2-cent passenger fare. The Great Northern, Northern Pacific and Minneapolis and St. Louis and other railroads sued for an injunction to prevent enforcing of the new schedules. Judge Sanborn in the federal circuit court referred the matter to a master in chancery, who found in favor of the railroads, and the injunction issued, on the general grounds that the state had exceeded its authority and that the rates fixed amounted to confiscation. From this decision of Judge Sanborn the state appealed to the supreme court, and the latter tribunal overturned the lower court's view. Incidentally the decision leaves the way open for Minnesota shippers to recover $3,000,000 of overcharges paid the railroads since the law went into effect.

Governors of several states became alarmed at the ruling made by Judge Sanborn and on the appeal joined with Minnesota in filing briefs in behalf of state control.

* * *

Constitutional Rights in Two States

State and local governments in West Virginia and New Jersey have been receiving some severe criticism because of conditions in the coal fields and silk mill towns. The military regime in West Virginia, previously alluded to by The Continent, is being investigated by a committee of the United States senate, and members of the committee have been astonished by the revelations made. Captain Charles R. Morgan and Major James I. Pratt, two members of the military committee which took control of 150 square miles of the Paint and Cabin creek districts, testified that their proceedings were conducted without regard to the civil laws of the state and without recourse to the civil courts, for they considered the entire strike region was in a state of "actual warfare."

"My understanding was," said Captain Morgan, "that during this state of insurrection which prevailed the constitution of the state of West Virginia had been suspended by the acts of these men who were burning, killing and destroying property."

Several miners testified that guards had not allowed them to enter the post office to get their mail. Serious complaints were made against the private mine guards employed by the mine owners. A former mine guard told about the armored train and the attack on Holly Grove camp and the "battle" of Mucklow. Ex-Governor Glasscock, who first established martial law, said he acted after the county authorities had admitted their inability to cope with the situation.

The president of the United Mine Workers and eighteen other officials of the union were indicted by a grand jury at Charleston a few days ago on charge of violating the Sherman antitrust law. It is alleged—and denied—that they conspired with coal operators of four other states to raise wages in the West Virginia coal fields so as to prevent competition with other states.

In New Jersey, which is at once the home of reactionaries and reformers, the Industrial Workers of the World at Paterson have succeeded in paralyzing the silk industry. If the present extensive strike is settled by granting the workers' demands they threaten to bring on another and make higher and still higher demands, until the workers have everything and the employers have nothing. Naturally the employers have fought stubbornly, and in the clashes between the strikers and their friends and the local police some unwarranted violence is charged against the authorities. The most serious mistake—if it be a "mistake"—was in the arrest and conviction of Alexander Scott, editor of a weekly Socialist paper in Passaic. He was tried under a unique statute which makes it an offense to "incite hostility to the government," and sentenced to from one to fifteen years in prison and fined $250. So conservative a newspaper as The New York Tribune declares the conviction imperils constitutional rights of free speech and a free press. The decision has been appealed.

* * *

Emperor William's Anniversary a Peace Jubilee

Emperor William of Germany ascended the throne twenty-five years ago last Sunday and his quarter of a century anniversary has been celebrated in Berlin and throughout the German empire with elaborate ceremonies and genuine enthusiasm. The festivities opened last Friday with a review of the imperial military volunteer automobile corps in Berlin, followed by a jubilee equestrian tourney held in the stadium erected for the next Olympic games.

When Emperor William was crowned in 1888, at the age of 29 years, on the death of his father, which had followed closely the death of his grandfather, the first ruler of the united German empire, there were many predictions that the autocratic impulsiveness and military ardor for which he had become noted would quickly lead him into war. This apprehension was in no wise lessened when soon after his accession he broke with the veteran "iron chancellor" Bismarck, who had been virtually master of Germany under the two preceding monarchs. Since Bismarck's enforced retirement there has been only one dominant mind and will in German public affairs, and that mind and will has been the kaiser's. And during these twenty-five years Germany has been one of the very few great nations of the world that has not become involved in war either large or small, civil or foreign. Not only has the potential war lord kept the peace himself, but, as has been lately pointed out, he has helped and even compelled others to keep it.

While all honor may well be paid to Emperor William for preserving the peace at home and abroad, it is no more than fair to call attention to the fact that under his regime the expenditures of the empire for military and naval purposes have been enormously enlarged, so that the burdens of taxation and the requirements of military service upon the great mass of the German people have increased almost beyond reason. It is largely due to the incitement of Germany's vast and growing armaments on sea and land that France, Great Britain, Austria, Italy and Russia have spent millions upon millions in maintaining huge standing armies and in building dreadnaughts and superdreadnaughts and various ships of war—money which could, of course, have been far better employed in channels of production, internal development, popular education, charity and religion. However, it is not to be denied that, even though the German people have staggered under their part of this great load, the nation as a whole has developed and increased numerically and in every other way, perhaps to a greater extent than any other nation with the exception of America.

Writing of the anniversary, two ex-Presidents of the United States pay high tribute to the kaiser. Says ex-President Roosevelt: "The one man outside this country from whom I obtained help in bringing about the peace of Portsmouth was William II. The emperor personally and his ambassador in St. Petersburg were of real aid in helping to induce Russia to face the accomplished fact and come to an agreement with Japan. . . . This was a real help to the cause of international peace—a contribution that far outweighed any amount of mere talk about it in the abstract." Ex-President Taft concludes that the emperor was for the last quarter of a century "the greatest single individual force in the practical maintenance of peace in the world."

Turkish Grand Vizier Shot in the Streets

Shefket Pasha, grand vizier of Turkey and minister of war, was assassinated as he was riding with his aid in the Constantinople streets last week. Several arrests have been made on charge of participation in the crime, among the prominent persons arrested being two generals. Shefket was buried with military pomp. Said Halim, the foreign minister, was appointed vizier ad interim.

When the venerable Kiamil Pasha was deposed from the head of the ministry in January Shefket Pasha succeeded him on account of his prominence in the Young Turk party, though he had formerly been one of ex-Sultan Abdul Hamid's favorites. He was an Arab, born in Bagdad, reared in Constantinople and educated in Germany. His assassination indicates anew the condition of internal dissension and treachery which helped to make Turkey an easy prey for the Balkan allies.

The so-called concert of European powers is endeavoring to bring about an amicable adjustment of differences existing between the Balkan allies, one of the latest moves being a demand that the Bulgarian army be demobilized. Bulgaria, which bore the brunt of the war, has felt that she was not getting the lion's share of the spoils of victory. Serious encounters between Bulgarian and Servian troops have occurred, but it was lately announced at St. Petersburg that the two nations had agreed to accept Russian arbitration in their dispute over new territory. If Greece can retain the important port of Salonica she will undoubtedly be satisfied.

According to official statistics, Bulgaria lost over 30,000 officers and men in her brief war with Turkey, besides which more than 53,000 were wounded. Only 400,000 Bulgarians were under arms—about a tenth of the total population—so the casualties were enormous. Servian, Greek, Montenegrin and Turkish losses have not been reported, but the grand total of blood and treasure poured out was evidently vast.

Moro Tribesmen Subdued After Fierce Fighting

The United States has been having another little war in the Philippines with the Moros of Jolo. Brigadier General Pershing, commander of the department of Mindanao, last week made his report, telling of fighting of a most stubborn character.

"Probably there has been no fiercer battle since the American occupation," reports General Pershing.

Religious World

Church of Scotland Moves Strongly for Union

The two great Presbyterian General Assemblies of Scotland, representing respectively the Church of Scotland and the United Free Church, meeting as always side by side in Edinburgh, distinguished themselves this year by simultaneously adopting, without a single voice of dissent, the report of their joint committee on union, which informed the two Assemblies that its negotiations have been marked with constant progress toward agreement.

In the Assembly of the Church of Scotland the committee was represented by the moderator, Dr. Wallace Williamson, and by Lord Balfour of Burleigh. Both of these told the ministers and elders of the Established Church that it had become their duty to satisfy the high ideals of Christian freedom entertained by the United Free Church, and to that end the Church of Scotland must secure a modification and readjustment of the historic relation between church and state in the ancient land of Knox. There must be obtained from parliament such a declaration as will forever put at rest any suspicion that Scotland's national church is in any way subservient to civic control.

That the committee was unanimously authorized to proceed with its conferences after this frank statement of the necessity of so considerable a change of base on the part of the Established Church argues that the sentiment in behalf of union has become overwhelming. Last year there was much debate over an intimation far less decided than this.

Doubtless this feeling that union is inevitable and imperative was accentuated by the gloom that pervaded the Assembly at viewing the statistics returned by its clerks. These showed that the denomination has 1,066 fewer communicants than a year ago, the first decrease of membership within the memory of anyone living. For the last forty years the average annual increase has run 7,000 a year. The reversal of this continuous record staggered the strongest leaders of the church. In 1911 the additions to the Church of Scotland on confession of faith were 26,700, against 28.200 nine years ago. There are, however, hopeful signs, such as the biggest foreign mission income in the history of the church and a 35 per cent increase above ten years ago in the number of students preparing for the ministry.

The moderator is minister of the ancient cathedral church of St. Giles in Edinburgh. It is an unwritten law of the moderatorship in the Church of Scotland that no man is eligible to the office until he has served thirty years in the ministry. Dr. Williamson was elected immediately after his thirtieth anniversary, and in consequence at the age of 56 is the youngest moderator which the church has had since 1878.

Free Church Men Satisfied of Spiritual Liberty

The moderator of the United Free Church Assembly in Edinburgh this year was Principal James Iverach, author of "Is God Knowable?" and other distinguished theological works, and head of the theological school in Aberdeen. In contrast with Dr. Williamson, moderator of the Established Church, Dr. Iverach, though one of the most eminent men of his denomination, has been allowed to wait for this recognition until his seventy-fourth year.

In his inaugural address the venerable Aberdeen professor spoke in most vigorous terms for the proposed union with the Church of Scotland, and thus prepared an atmosphere in which Dr. Henderson, representing the joint committee on union, was received with an extraordinary ovation. Dr. Henderson explained at length the concessions which the Church of Scotland proposed to grant in the matter of its relation to the state. He showed that the Established Church meant to frame for itself a new constitution which it would reserve the right to alter as it pleased without consulting parliament. In order to put this into effect, however, it will be necessary to secure from parliament an act recognizing the new constitution as the law of the Church of Scotland and repealing all laws of the realm inconsistent with this law of the church.

Every speech in the discussion following was in favor of proceeding with negotiations upon this understanding. Professor James Denney, in closing the debate, declared that it was impossible for the most earnest Free Church men to see anything hurtful to the spiritual freedom of the church in the basis of union now contemplated.

The Assembly elected two new theological professors. Dr. Adam Welch of Glasgow was named professor of Hebrew in New College, Edinburgh, and Dr. John A. Selbie, well known as the assistant editor of Dr. Hastings's Dictionary of the Bible, was appointed to the corresponding chair in Principal Iverach's faculty at Aberdeen.

Editorial

Beyond Our Faith

IT IS A GREAT SAYING, that God is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think. The more amazing thing is that he is always doing it. It is said, to be sure, "According to your faith be it unto you." Yet God is better than his word in that he does not measure his gifts by our faith. Everyone who has any Christian experience must have realized how often he has surpassed his promises. Just before the crash came there was a saving act that protected all the interests involved. Just when it seemed that a fine body of people would go wrong a sounder spirit asserted itself than we thought was there. When we had given up hope of some man for whom and with whom we had worked, the hand of God was reached out and laid hold upon him, and there proved to be more in him than we had thought. God is always going beyond our faith.

When faith comes rather to be in ourselves than in God, we miss the realization. Self-confidence breeds in us readiness to take for granted the goodness of God. We do not realize the marvel of his goodness because we cannot be surprised that he should do any great thing in our behalf. When we are ready to take lowly views of ourselves, we shall be able to take greater views of God's goodness. It seemed to David a great thing that God should claim him and his house to rule over Israel. That was because he realized his own unworthiness, and set in sharp contrast with it the favor of God.

Years ago we used to read more frequently than now the story of "The Shepherd of Salisbury Plain." Older readers will remember that in it the little daughter asked her father to let her say grace because she was so thankful. "Some people," she said, "have only potatoes for their dinner, with no salt, but see, our salt dish is quite full." It takes a large amount of grace to be thankful for a small meal of potatoes and salt. Some of us find it difficult to be thankful for far more sumptuous meals. Is that not because we are so self-assured, so self-important, that we feel finer things to be only natural? Someone suggests that the necessity for better provision to stir our gratitude is because we realize more fully the greatness of our God. We fear it is not so. It is our own greatness that grows upon us. God does not go beyond our faith because our faith is rather in ourselves than in him.

A godly man who had passed through reverses came to his pastor with his face aglow, to declare that he would never doubt God again; he had received such marvelous manifestation of the Father's goodness in that he had secured a position and would now be able to care for his family. The position was such a humble one that many would not have accepted it, and the pastor's heart fairly ached at the fine-fibered old man taking it. His own thought of himself was, however, so humble that he could rejoice in it as an evidence of God's great love and kindliness. God had gone beyond his faith, and had done for him beyond what he asked or thought.

When the disciples came to our Lord and prayed, "Increase our faith," he replied with a saying which does not mean that their faith did not need to increase, but that it could not be increased by anyone outside of themselves. It could be given to them by God, but it must grow within their own lives. He told them that if they had faith as a grain of mustard seed they could do the impossible. He was not speaking of the size of their faith but of the fact that it was alive, a seed, a growing thing. But always beyond our fullest growth of faith there is the good favor of God seeking to draw us on to larger things. It is never wise nor right to despair. No one ever trusted God for all that God is ready to do for him. He is always going beyond our faith, always doing exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think.

Greatest Heresy Trial—May There Never Be Another

The decease of Professor Charles A. Briggs, once the pivot round which swung the fiercest contentions ever known in American Presbyterianism, must surely leave both those who assailed him and those who supported him in agreement now on at least one point—that the heresy trial to which the professor was subjected was a bootless performance. Without question the critical opinions of Dr. Briggs in those days were out of harmony with the faith and understanding of his church, and sharp controversy was therefore inevitable. Moreover, the church was bound by every consideration of sincerity to speak out against his teachings—to testify against them explicitly and insistently. All conditions considered, the breach between the General Assembly and Union Seminary still looks to have been unavoidable. But the heresy trial was not necessary and did the truth of God no service.

That Dr. Briggs might have lived on unmolested as a minister of the Presbyterian Church without debasing the faith of Presbyterians is demonstrated by observing that for more than a decade he lived in the Protestant Episcopal Church as an ordained clergyman and in no wise contaminated its doctrine. Indeed, the latter years of the professor's life made it plain enough that he was not a man of destructive temperament. His latest services were in the championship of conservatism. He strenuously taught the virgin birth of the Lord on the strength of that very authority of Scripture which he was once accused of undermining. Time, in fact, never worked a more subtle irony than that amazing reversal of relationships which has driven the same conservatives who fought Dr. Briggs twenty years ago to take refuge latterly under the shadow of his colossal scholarship. But the irony of it was needlessly incurred. Dr. Briggs unprosecuted by his church would have gone the same way, and the church might have accepted the service of his old age with no memory except of honorable Christian debate. The long years in which the "root of bitterness" instead of the flower of fraternity was cultivated in the soil of Presbyterianism might better never have been.

Meditation on these facts is not intended, however, to cast shame on the past. The importance of the lesson looks toward the future. There are certain always to be contradictions of new opinions against old in the church, and controversies over doctrine will return again and again. In such case men of conviction must be neither hesitant nor timid. But if they will only take counsel of history they will certainly be convinced that in this warfare for the truth the church trial for heresy is a most inadvisable weapon, because it is both ineffective in action and disastrous in reaction. May there never be another heresy trial in Protestant annals. Truth will not suffer and Christian charity will be a vast gainer.

Don't Degrade Martyrdom with Cheap Comparisons

Suffragists in England are now hailing Miss Davison—the girl who threw herself under the hoofs of the king's horse at the Derby race—as a martyr to their cause. They seem to believe that having a martyr sanctifies with some religious sacredness their demand for the ballot and all the methods by which they have been agitating for it. But their ready and almost flippant appropriation of a term which has been peculiarly a church possession shows that, whatever their other merits, the thinking of the militant suffragists is deplorably superficial. The likeness which they trace between their heroine and the saints of the church is no likeness at all.

The spirit of the martyrs was never suicidal, nor was it ever spectacular. They did not fling their lives away nor rush to beckon death. They had too serious a sense of the solemnity of living; they did not dare volunteer to cast off its responsibilities. It was only when hands of external force compelled them to choose between fidelity and life that they chose fidelity and death. And they chose death modestly, without bravado and without fanatic address to public attention. They never thought of their martyrdom as a drama staged for the view of the multitude; it was their own personal trust with God even when the howling rabble around gloated over the sight.

Real martyrdom could not be self-conscious. It does not die for dramatic effect, but only because dying is grimly required of it. Miss Davison's wild sacrifice of herself in a defiant act of disorder, which jeopardized other lives than her own and which had at any event no conceivable relation to the reform she advocated, is in no sense worthy to be compared with the martyr deaths of either religion or patriotism.

The age is all too much given to defiling its great inherited ideals by association with trivial circumstances and cheap interests. It is important therefore for calm-thinking onlookers to protest against allusions and comparisons that drag the sublime act of martyrdom down to the level of a foolish girl's vain rashness. However noble may be at heart the movement for the enlargement of women's political rights, it is not noble on that side of it associated with riotous fanaticism and crazy purposes of mischief.

Certificate of Orthodoxy from The Presbyterian

The Presbyterian is pleased because the late U. S. A. Assembly at Atlanta gave official notice that it will enter into the "world's conference on faith and order" proposed by the Episcopalians only if assured in advance that no church is invited "that does not positively declare its faith in and obedience to Jesus Christ as God and Saviour." This action, says The Presbyterian, proves what former Moderator Matthews asserted: "Ninety-eight per cent of the Presbyterian Church is sound and loyal to the faith." Yes, it does—the percentage is at least no less than that—and we are sincerely glad that our Philadelphia contemporary has found it out. Moreover, we trust it will now hold hard and fast to this definition of orthodoxy which satisfies it so well in this instance. If The Presbyterian will continue content with "faith in and obedience to Jesus Christ as God and Saviour," and go on accepting that as sufficient assurance of soundness in the Christian faith, it will have no further occasion to worry over candidates received into the church's ministry. It is only when The Presbyterian adds extraneous and superfluous items to its theological test that it gets reactions which confirm its chronic state of blues. With a simpler criterion of judgment it might always be happy.

Some Remarks Not Contributing to Pessimism

In a recent interview with a New York Sun reporter who asked the former President to comment on differences between the Yale of the present time and the Yale of his own student days, Mr.—now Professor—Taft responded:

"I am quite clear that students' dissipations—what we call 'bumming'—prejudice their standing among their fellows now much more than they did with us. It really seems to me that the college world of my day was rougher. There was less refinement then, and there was a certain theory among many of the students that a man needed to be seasoned by a little exposure to dissipation in order to be a good fellow and really get the most out of his college course. I am very certain that the moral tone of the college and moral standards among the young are much higher now than they were in my day."

Speaking among a group of friends recently, Dr. Talcott Williams, principal of the school of journalism in Columbia University, bore the same testimony in regard to all college life with which he is familiar—and he makes it a pleasure to keep in close touch with the students of a number of leading institutions in addition to his own. Dr. Williams recalled that Thomas Wentworth Higginson told him a few years since that in his young manhood, more than half a century ago, when he took his evening walks through the streets of Cambridge he never failed to see five or six Harvard men drunk each night. In his old age, Mr. Higginson declared, he passed back and forth through the Harvard community without seeing a drunken man for weeks and even months at a time, although the student body had meanwhile increased enormously. As an additional witness to the same thing, Dr. Williams related a remark he had heard from President Woodrow Wilson—that in the latter's association with Princeton the change he had seen in regard to drinking habits of students amounted to a revolution in favor of sobriety. Furthermore, Dr. Williams insisted that students of today are vastly more religious in a sound day-in-and-day-out fashion than they were when he went to college in the '70s.

These are observations which self-evidently make far better reading for an optimist than for a pessimist.

The Multiplicity of Under-Shepherds

The saying has become current that the pastor of a large church is now more of a ranchman than a shepherd. That is, he is compelled to deal with his people at a distance in spite of himself. He is compelled to think of them in the mass, rather than in detail. He must leave it to others to attend to the details and work them out. That is most unfortunate, but very few men are able to avoid it. Happy the church in which is one of these men!

But after all, it is important that every man in a church feel that he is himself an under-shepherd. It does not belong to the ministers alone. It is part of the life of the Christian. He is under the great Shepherd, and the Shepherd himself commits the task to him. The truest conception of the whole church that we have is that it is one flock with many folds, and therefore many under-shepherds.

Thinking of our lives in this way, we come into a great peace which we cannot otherwise know. This which we are doing is the Chief Shepherd's business. We are at it under his eye. His heart is back of it all. He sets the task, and only leaves us to work out the details under his guidance. It makes the whole burden lighter for us to realize that the work is not primarily ours. We are part of the shepherding force of God, taking care of the young and the aged, looking after God's little ones and his greater ones. So we enter into peace and quiet, and into a new strength.

—Some time before General Assembly The Herald and Presbyter remarked that it would hardly be possible for itself and The Continent to find a man who as moderator of the Assembly would be equally satisfactory to both. The intimation was that The Continent would exact some test of sentiment or opinion that The Herald and Presbyter could not approve. Yet today The Herald and Presbyter is full of praises for Moderator Stone, and The Continent is just as unreservedly delighted. Does it not occur to The Herald and Presbyter that its pre-Assembly remark was rather foolish? What pleasure can there be in pretending that some deep cleavage divides Presbyterianism theologically, when in point of fact there are in the church no differences of belief more serious than different ways of saying the same thing? And to people ample enough to understand more than one language that is no difference at all.

—Doctorates of divinity have never been as plentiful in England as in the United States, but the output will now doubtless be much increased, since Cambridge University has decided to include Nonconformist ministers among those whom it recognizes as eligible to that honor. Heretofore the university has granted the divinity doctorate to nobody except clergymen of the Anglican Church; indeed, it would not even graduate a Nonconformist student from its theological school. But now any young man can come and get a bachelor's degree in the divinity school without regard to whether he is an Episcopalian or something else. In Oxford the theological professors are all in favor of just as liberal a policy as Cambridge has adopted, but the university corporation voted down their proposals, and the bars there are up still as high as ever.

—The announcement that Dr. Henry van Dyke has been selected by President Wilson as American minister to the court of Queen Wilhelmina at The Hague predicts an honor to a Presbyterian clergyman whereby American church people will all be pleased. It also is gratifying because it argues the resumption of old friendship between two men whom the administrative controversies in Princeton University a few years ago threw into antagonism. As the appointment of Dr. van Dyke will represent a return to the tradition in favor of literary men as American diplomats, so it may be trusted that his diplomatic life will renew the occasion of that national pride which in past generations has seen some of the greatest productions of American literature flow from the embassies of the United States on European soil.

—Catholic societies are fighting a bill pending in the Illinois legislature which contemplates a board of inspection in each county authorized to visit officially all institutions that receive under their care children committed from the juvenile courts. The Romanist objection is that the bill is inspired by the bitter anti-Catholic paper, The Menace, from Missouri, and must be aimed at Catholic institutions, which within the bounds of Illinois now care for more than 4,000 wards of the probation officers. But this reason for fighting the measure is a mighty poor and short-sighted one. Where The Menace persuades one citizen that the proposed inspection is needed, the opposition of the Catholics themselves will persuade a thousand.

—Dr. A. C. Dixon, who went two years ago from the pastorate of Moody church in Chicago to the pastorate of the Spurgeon tabernacle in London, has declined to return to the United States as Bible teaching associate with his friend, Dr. Riley, in First Baptist church of Minneapolis. It appears that the call from Minneapolis was the outworking of a plan long cogitated by Dr. Riley, to which Dr. Dixon had listened favorably before he ever thought of going to England. But having made the transfer across the ocean, the eminent Baptist preacher found that the Minneapolis proposition looked less compelling from the distance of London than it had formerly seemed from the comparative nearness of Chicago.

—When Dr. Nehemiah Boynton of Brooklyn, the present national moderator of the Congregational churches, had the unique privilege of "giving the charge" to his two sons as they were ordained to the ministry in his own church, he said to them: "My brethren, I gather it all up in one sentence—I charge you to be intimate with the integrities of life. Integrity is the sandal of the sun-treader." That is a tremendous saying. It is good enough for any young man to carry with him all his life as "a journeyman's card."

—The Christian Index, Baptist organ in Georgia, answering a challenge from The Continent, makes very bold to say: "To be sure. Baptists think that children born into Christian homes have no nearer relation to the church than children born of non-Christian parents." It would be mighty interesting to see The Index try to get a unanimous vote of Baptists on that proposition. We have more than a faint notion that if it risked the test it would come out with the short end of the rope in its hands.

DR. JOWETT'S MESSAGE

The Men Who Are "Helps"

IN THE HIERARCHY of radiant offices described by the apostle Paul as serving the church of Christ there is one which bears a very significant name. It is translated by our healthy English word "helps." And the people who are thus described are placed in high rank and status, and they shine among a very distinguished company. They do not fill conspicuous positions; they rarely come upon a prominent stage, but they fulfill a ministry which makes common life wholesome and sweet.

Their name describes the unobtrusiveness of their mission. They "take hold of things"; they "have a hand in things"; they steal in quietly and take a share in lowly labors which tell mightily in the life of the community. The help they give is vital; the mysterious energy that possesses apostles and evangelists also owns them. They are filled with the Holy Spirit. They may not be lamps lighting public squares, but they are hand lamps, shining with the same radiance and fulfilling gracious functions in the narrow ways of men.

Quiet Ministries Sustain Great Works and Workers

Now I want to look at one or two of these "helps" who ministered to the apostle Paul. It is no small thing to have been a helper of the great apostle to the gentiles. It was no small matter to have been his private secretary, and to have written his letters at his dictation. "I, Tertius, who write this epistle, salute you in the Lord." The epistle to which he refers is the epistle to the Romans; and it is surely a distinguished dignity to have been even the amanuensis of this immortal enterprise.

But let me quote a word in which the apostle Paul names one who had ministered to him in his own troubled life. "Salute Rufus and his mother and mine." There is a radiant little history in that modest phrase "his mother and mine." This woman, whoever she was, was a shining helper to this restless laborer for the Lord. She had given him motherly comfort such as only a woman can give. The phrase describes the simple kindness which addresses itself to human weariness when the body is aching and spent. Perhaps this unknown woman mothered the apostle after he had been beaten for the sake of the truth. Perhaps she washed his wounds and delicately attended him and did it all to the accompaniment of her tears. It was the kindness that our Lord himself found in the home of Martha and Mary at Bethany.

It is grateful to know that people of this kind are mentioned as being in the exalted ranks of the hierarchy of the church. And what a place there is in the world for this kind of help—mothering the weary and the tired, and those who have fainted and dropped in the way. What nobler office can anyone covet in the service of the kingdom? And one of these helpers had ministered to the apostle Paul. She had helped to remove the weariness of the greatest and noblest man who ever trod the ways of time.

Fidelity Bringing a Breath of Reviving Air

Here is another of these helpers named by the apostle Paul. "The Lord have mercy upon the house of Onesiphorus, for he oft refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my chain." We have no account of this man ever having preached a sermon or having written a letter; there is nothing preserved which records any conspicuous witness for the truth. He was one of these shining faithful helpers who go about lighting the ways of pilgrims who have stumbled in the night.

There are two things mentioned about him. And the first is this, that wherever he came, he brought an air of refreshment. It was as though a window had been opened, and the cool and vitalizing air breathed in from the hills. We all know such people in our common life; we describe them as "breezy." They alter the atmosphere of our communion. They break up the staleness and the fustiness, and they freshen everything. They are the ventilators of life, letting in the air of the Holy Spirit. When Onesiphorus came into the presence of the prisoner Paul, Paul felt as though he had been carried to the everlasting hills. "He oft refreshed me."

And the second thing which characterized the apostolic helper is his faithfulness. "He was not ashamed of my chain." He was not repelled by suggestions of servitude. Disaster did not freeze his devotion. His affections remained fervent in the dark and cloudy day. The chain was rather an allurement than a dread. The very bonds appealed for some tender service. And so this obscure, loyal helper carried with him the airs of heaven to the prisoner who was there suffering for the word of his testimony in Christ Jesus.

And here is another phrase in which the apostle describes the people who are ordained and appointed to the ministry of helpfulness in the church of Christ: "Helpers of your joy." This is a very beautiful designation of a very delicate ministry among the children of men. These are the people who go about helping other people's joys, fanning the sparks into flame and feeding the flame until the whole being is possessed with its genial heat. They are the joy-quickeners, joy-inspirers, who move about feeding the vital feelings of delight.

Cheer Surpassing and Extinguishing Complaints

How would they do it? Well, we may say two things about them. They would never carry about the tale of their own complaints. A monotonous story of our woes is like heavy slack and will dull and smother any fire. Who has not felt the room grow cold as someone has poured out the story of his repinings in an almost endless succession of woes? These "helpers of joy" would be entirely free from this practice. They would never parade their own sorrow; they would never make a spectacle of their own pain.

And the second thing we can say about them is this, they would never elicit the complaints of other souls. There are some people who draw out the story of our woes, and others who draw out the story of our blessings. Some people make us think of our tragedies; others make us recall our festivals. Some make us whine; others make us sing. Now to elicit that song of praise in our fellow man is one of the greatest services we can render him. Whenever a man recovers his sense of the divine mercy he will attain to a more glorious vision of his God. In the apostolic days there were men and women in the Christian church who were helpers of this sort, going about inciting souls to tell the story of their blessings, and to delight in the ways of the Lord. And surely there were some who in this way served even the apostle Paul, and who continually drew from his lips the rich story of his gracious dealings with the Lord.

Let me find another illustration of these inspired helpers of the soul in the Pilgrim's Progress. Christian had not got far upon his way when he tumbled into the Slough of Despond. "The miry slough is such a place as cannot be mended; it is the descent whither the scum and filth that attends conviction for sin doth continually return, and therefore it is called the Slough of Despond; for still as the sinner is awakened by his lost condition, there arise in his soul many fears and doubts, and discouraging apprehensions, which all of them come together in this place. This is the reason of the badness of that ground."

Into this fearful, depressing, miserable state did poor Christian come very soon after he had begun his pilgrimage to Zion. And in his wretchedness and groaning "a man came to him whose name was Help." Now Help is a very natural and healthy kind of man. There is nothing whining in his tone or supercilious in his manner. He does not begin to lecture Christian, or remind him of his folly, or describe to him the tragedy of his plight. Help was just manly, human, gentle and strong.

Helping Hand Lent to the Despairing

He did two things. First of all, he reminded the pilgrim of what he had forgotten—the gracious promises of God. And I do not know any service which one Christian can better render to another than to keep him in mind of the inexhaustible spiritual wealth which lies banked for him in the treasuries of Christ. We are all prone to forget the promises, and to sink in our depressions and fears. Even Bishop Butler sank into a slough of despond toward the end of his days. He called for his chaplain and said to him: "Though I have endeavored to avoid sin and to please God to the utmost of my power, yet from the consciousness of perpetual infirmities I am still afraid to die." "My lord," said the chaplain, "you have forgotten that Jesus Christ is a Saviour." "True," said Butler, "but how shall I know that he is a Saviour for me?" "My lord, it is written, 'Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out.'" This humble helper, unknown to us by name, was a gracious minister to this scholarly bishop who was lying in fearfulness in the Slough of Despond.

And the second thing which this healthy man Help did for poor Christian was to give him a lift. "Then said he, give me thine hand; so he gave him his hand and he drew him out and set him upon sound ground, and bade him go on his way." That helping hand, that lift, is one of the greatest things in the world.

J. H. JOWETT.

MULTIPLYING A CHURCH BY SIX

BY DAVID WALLACE MONTGOMERY

Is the scarcity of ministers a call to laymen?

A few years ago a stalwart Christian business man, the president of a big pork packing concern in Ottumwa, Iowa, sought and found a preacher who at personal sacrifice could and would meet a great need. This article tells of the unusual work of the minister of East End church, but more important still, it describes the activities of its lay members. The church has only one pastor, but it has a chain of community chapels which are vigorous centers of spiritual and social service.

Here is a clew to meeting successfully the problem of ministerless fields.

May Street Chapel

The "Old" Chapel

THE FUMES of the great packing house were floating over East end, Ottumwa, Iowa. The aroma of the whole region is fragrant to the pastor who boasts that his boyhood fitted him for such a region in that he served an apprenticeship in his father's tannery. While the stranger may not agree with the pastor concerning the delightful fragrance of the place, yet he soon discovers that there is a fragrance of spirit from sacrificial service which is most pleasing.

When an institution like the East End Presbyterian church thrives and brings forth a continuous harvest of good fruit in spite of adverse physical circumstances and with no great contributions of money, then must we look for the secret of such success in the leadership of the institution.

Eleven years ago T. D. Foster, president of the John Morrell Packing Company, applied to the late Dr. Willis Craig of McCormick Seminary for someone whom he could recommend to take up the work of East End church. Dr. Craig replied, "There is a man, if you can get him—I don't know whether you can or not—who can make your church known throughout the state and the General Assembly." Rev. William H. Hormel, of whom he spoke, was then in Toledo, Ohio.

When the matter was presented to Mr. Hormel (since given a doctorate by his alma mater, Wooster University) that which made to him the strong appeal was the fact that here was a great need, and in ministering to that need it would be necessary to make personal sacrifice.

Work Born in Heart of an Earnest Layman

Perhaps it should have been stated, first of all, that the work which was making such a profound appeal had been born in the heart of the man who is well known not only as a packer and a philanthropist but as a Christian layman of good repute in the councils of the church because he has been faithful to his trusts in his local affairs.

As an example of T. D. Foster's devotion to the smallest details in personal life, here is an incident which came under the writer's personal observation. Mr. Foster returned to his home town from an extended journey, which had included Cuba, and arrived after midnight Saturday night. The Sunday school of East End church meets before the morning worship, and it was not to be expected that one who had just returned from a tiresome journey of thousands of miles should be on hand for Sunday school, yet the early hour for Bible study found Mr. Foster in his place in the men's class.

It was this same faithfulness to the spiritual side of life, or let us rather say the spiritualizing of all life, which had moved him to begin religious services in the dining room of the packing house in its early days. There followed later at least partial provision for spiritual needs by the construction of the first chapel, which is now known as Old chapel. This work expanded into the church with its large central plant, and it was to this work that Dr. Hormel was called nearly eleven years ago. After doing a year's "ordinary church work" he said: "Unless we can make some kind of tremendous impact upon the community we might as well quit, for the people are so preoccupied and busy that the community at large is scarcely conscious that there is a church in its midst."

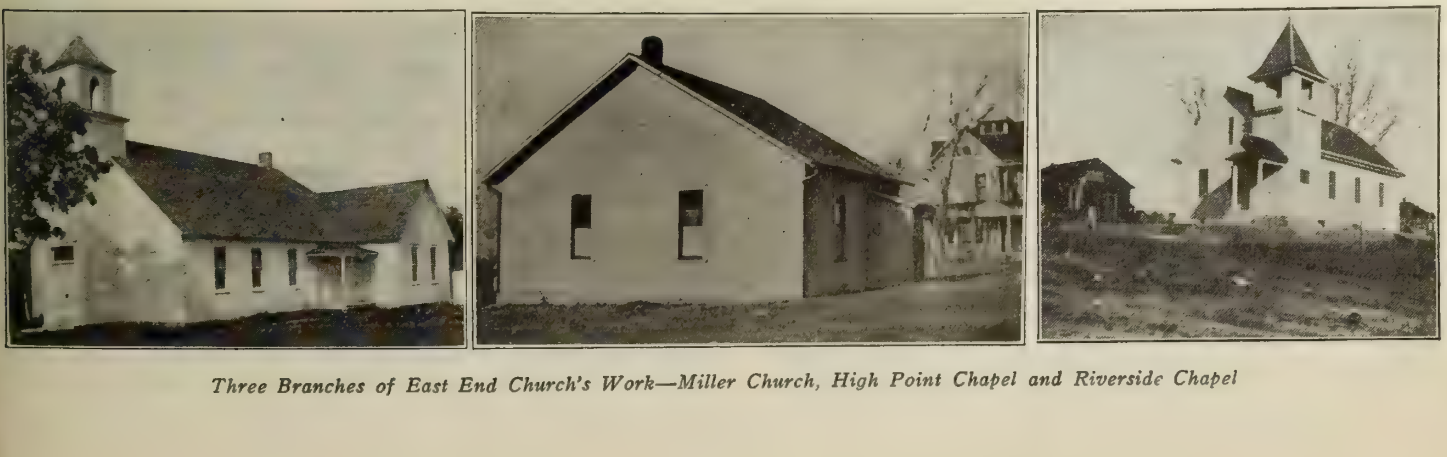
Gradual Unfolding of the Larger Work

Very gradually the plans of enlarged service were unfolded. Open air meetings were begun. Old chapel, the birthplace of the church, was reopened after having been closed for some years. Here a Sunday school was organized. Gymnasium classes were formed for both boys and girls. Night school, cooking and sewing classes were carried on. Half a mile north of the church High Point chapel was built and not a dollar was asked from the board. Men and women of the church were rallied to teach in the new Sunday schools and the Young Men's Christian Association workers led in the gymnasium work. After a few years the new Riverside chapel was built. Shortly after this a Sunday school was organized in the home of one who is now a most successful missionary under the Presbyterian Sabbath School Board in the Iron mountain region. The Missouri man may say "show me," but it was a Missouri man, shown to Christ in that humble little Sunday school, who afterwards gave a corner lot on which was erected the May Street chapel. That same man is now an elder in the church and a recognized leader and spiritual power in the community served by May Street chapel.

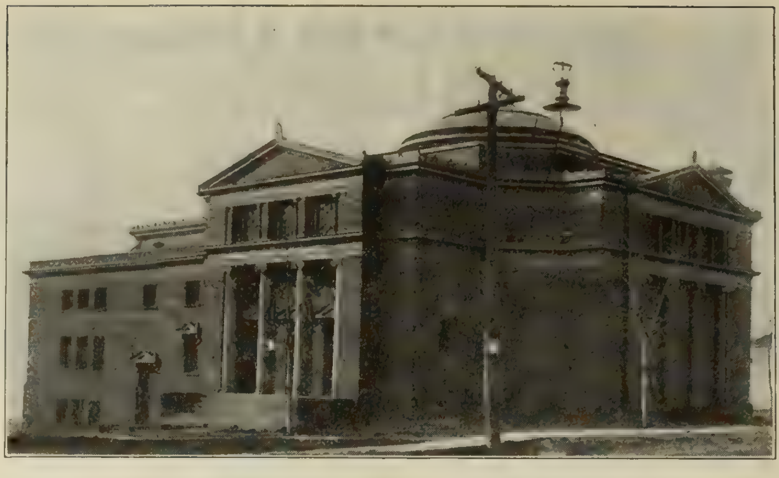
Four or five years ago a Sunday school missionary held tent meetings in a needy country region, the result being a spiritual flock which sought and found a shepherd in the busy East End pastor. A church was organized in this community, eight miles from the city, and though the farmers in that hill region are far from rich, they rejoice in a $4,000 church plant and a city pastor who comes to them every Sunday afternoon, besides the many other services of the months and years which are rendered by the pastor and his untiring wife. Thus Miller church is a conspicuous feature in East End's institutional work.

A Partial Inventory of Parish Activities

Time would fail me to speak of Oak Ridge, and the many side lines of service rendered by this church which is as a city set upon



Three Branches of East End Church's Work—Miller Church, High Point Chapel and Riverside Chapel



East End Church, Ottumwa, Iowa, Center of a Large Community Work

a hill. However, it may be interesting to take an incomplete inventory of the activities of this many-sided parish. The pastor's weekly schedule of work has the following services: Sundays he has three preaching services, a teachers' prayer meeting, a teachers' training class and a Christian Endeavor meeting. Each night of the week, excepting Saturday, there is a preaching service or prayer meeting in the chapels or the central church, also a midweek Bible school, which is conducted throughout the school year. Besides these there may be a social or two, a street meeting or open door mission meeting thrown in as recreations, and on top of all about fifty funerals a year. As these latter average less than a half dozen a year from the church itself, such services speak eloquently of the hold the pastor has upon a wide parish.

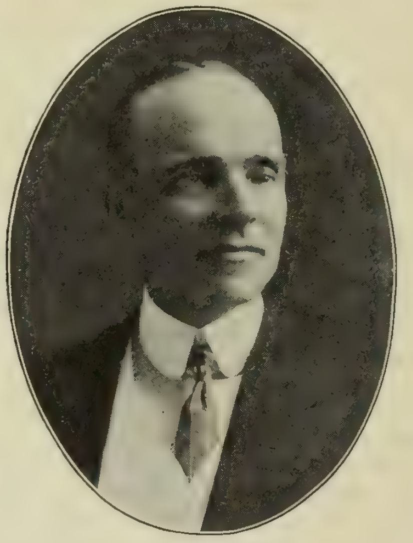
The pastor's wife is his able assistant, and is known as superintendent of chapel work. Mrs. Hormel assists in two Sunday schools and speaks every Sunday night. Bible classes in chapels, neighborhoods and Young Women's Christian Association are conducted every day in the week excepting Saturday. Missionary meetings and socials, with fifty calls a month, are her recreations.

Leaders Trained from the Ranks

The brotherhood has been the pastor's pride and joy. These men, brought up from the ranks, have many of them been trained for excellent Christian leadership. They are superintendents of chapels and Sunday schools, gospel wagon workers and revivalists. The influence of this organization is to be found in fourteen states and very many communities, for as these men have removed to other localities they have sought to duplicate East End's chapel work.

No less interesting than the inventory of activities is that of products and by-products of this peculiar parish. Outside the central church there are six centers of activity, each one of which ministers to a distinct need and constituency. These chapels are the liveliest kind of social centers for the people of the various communities. They are the clubhouses of the working people and their families, where, as the pastor told me, they have lots more fun than the rich, and at very little expense.

All these places are evangelistic centers, where, with the help of lay preachers and personal workers from the brotherhood, revival services are held every year. In one year there were a hundred converts, and in another fifty. Only a few weeks ago the pastor received nineteen into the church at Riverside chapel as the result of special meetings conducted by a student for the ministry who was himself brought to Christ in the East End work. These chapels are training schools for various lines of Christian activity.



William H. Hormel, D. D.

Henry B. Wright says in his book, "The Will of God and a Man's Life Work": "The church is a training school in method and a center of inspiration for the Christian layman, and for him only. It aims not primarily to do the direct evangelization and to bring the kingdom of God itself without a medium but rather to train and inspire the Christian layman to go forth as its representative into his trade and evangelize that. The test of the efficiency of a church is not the numbers who come to it but its answer to the question whether any laymen go out from it to Christianize their respective professions." Judged by this standard Ottumwa's East End church is a most gratifying success. It is a fine record to be able to say that there are fine young men in seminary and college who are candidates for the gospel ministry, but it is a finer record to say that the avocations of men are becoming evangelizing centers, and are being evangelized, and that laymen are being trained to do work which the professional ministry unaided cannot do.

Scarcity of Ministers a Call to Laymen

May it not be, in the providence of God, that the so-called scarcity in the ministry is but a call to the Christian layman to perform his own work and so fulfill his ministry, which cannot be done by another? If one pastor and wife, with the assistance of workers whom they have trained, to say nothing of those who have gone out to other fields, can care for so many centers of services, why may not many of our vacant fields and churches be cared for in like manner? May this not be the clew to the solution of the so-called ministerial problem?

Here is a work which is not flashy, which has not been known by any noisy blare, but which has gone on bearing fruit through the years. If you seek its secret it is to be found in a continuous exaltation of God's word—patient, persistent, painstaking and prayerful devotion to the task, and an all-absorbing love for men and women, boys and girls, that they may bear the image of Christ. Here is a Christ-commending church which lifts its eyes to behold its harvest, and which is not held by any narrow horizons of parish limits or services. Such a church and ministry are apostolic and missionary.

Tony Goes Across—with Help

Sixth avenue and 19th street, New York; the "rush hour," with the twilight of the late afternoon smirched to darkness by the murky city haze; overhead the roaring elevated trains—below the surface cars grinding and pounding to and fro; up and down, east and west; in and out, express wagons, trucks and every manner of vehicle known to business or pleasure, clatter and glide, with the flash of automobile headlights glinting through the maelstrom of traffic and the hoarse "honk" and startling screech of their signals adding a note of madness to the dimness and the din. Throngs of humanity everywhere, straining in and out, pushing every way, each seemingly oblivious to all save his own affairs, heedless, careless of all others.

In the center of the street at the meeting of the ways a tall policeman, a shining example of traffic squad efficiency as he needs must be—eyes everywhere, every sense alert, white-gloved hands motioning the moiling mass this way and that, stopping and starting the throngs and counter throngs, and so out of seemingly inextricable confusion bringing order and dispatch. Of a sudden and almost with a leap he is away from his post at the center and is striding toward a corner. With uplifted hand, cars, trucks, automobiles and hurrying throngs are halted, a way is made and the tall policeman is walking slowly from corner to corner at the side of the funniest vehicle in all the street—two wheels from a broken baby cab, a soap box swung between, and in and over all a mass of splintered wood and broken sticks—the whole thrust forward by a little lad too short to see beyond his high-piled heap of precious spoil. Rubbish it was to many a passer-by, but to the little son of Italy it meant warmth and cheer—things all too hard to win in this bleak land—and the policeman understood. So while hundreds halted, and merchandise to the value of thousands waited before his uplifted hand, the little Italian and the big policeman went their slow way. "I don't know but you're more trouble than you're worth, Tony," he was heard to say, "but, anyhow, you've got to go across," and so across he went. Then the whistle shrilled its signal note and two blocks of interrupted traffic surged on its roaring way.

Chronic Grumbler "Lost Out"

At several of the stations along the line of the railroad which runs between Wady Halfa and Khartum in the Sudan are well equipped baths, at which the trains stop long enough for the passengers hurriedly to refresh themselves. E. Alexander Powell recalls in his "The Last Frontier" (Scribner's) an amusing incident.

I once had, he says, as a fellow passenger on the journey from Khartum northward a red-faced, white-mustached, choleric-tempered English globe trotter, who was constitutionally opposed to the practice of tipping, which he took occasion to characterize on every possible occasion as "an outrage, sir!" Now, at these wayside bath stations it has long been the accepted custom to give the equivalent of 5 cents to the silent-footed native who fills the tub, brings you your soap and towels, and brushes your garments. But this the irascible Englishman, true to his principles, refused to do, still further unpopularizing himself by loudly cursing the cleanliness of the tub, the warmth of the water, the size of the towels and the slowness of the Sudanese attendant. Five minutes before time for the train to leave the whistle gave due warning and the passengers scrambled from their bath into their clothes, which the native attendants were accustomed to brush and leave outside the bathroom doors. Everyone hurried into his clothes, as I have remarked, except the Englishman, who almost choked with rage when he found his garments had mysteriously disappeared. Though a hasty search was instituted, not a trace of them could be found, the impassive Sudanese impassively declaring that they had seen nothing of the effendi's missing apparel. The engine shrieked its final warning and the laughing travelers piled aboard—all, that is, but this Englishman, who rushed onto the platform clad in a bath towel, only to retreat before the shocked glances of the women passengers. My last impression of that God-forsaken, sun-blistered bath station in the desert was the rapidly diminishing sound of his imprecations as he continued his fruitless search for his garments. There was no other train, I should add, for three days. Weeks later I heard that his clothes were eventually returned to him by a native, who said that he had found them, neatly folded, underneath a near-by culvert.

Looking Back to Henry Ward Beecher

BY WILLIS A. ELLIS

THE 24th day of the present month will mark the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Henry Ward Beecher. Dissimilar as were his gifts, his opportunities and his services from those of David Livingstone, whom the same year gave to the world, the two men had one thing in common—a thoroughgoing hatred of slavery, and each of them in his own way did much to bring about its extinction.

Beecher was not in the stricter sense a theologian. Not because, as has sometimes been thought and asserted, he neglected theological studies. The years of his early manhood fell at a time when escape from fierce doctrinal controversy was almost impossible. It was in the air he breathed. The fight between the Old School and New School was raging in both the Presbyterian and Congregational Churches. One of its results was the establishment of Hartford Seminary and another was the trial for heresy of Henry Ward's father, Lyman Beecher, then president of Lane Seminary.

From these bitter debates young Beecher turned with dislike, to hammer out a theology for himself. It had its foundations in his own experiences and needs. He cared not for hair-splitting or abstractions. He was a pragmatist long before the word "pragmatism" had been used to define a philosophic attitude. He believed that the only vital religious truths were those that could meet some human need and could be grasped by the spiritual experience of human beings.

Thus it was that, instead of becoming a great theologian, he became what the world needed more—a great prophet. In the name of God and the Christ who revealed him to men he preached righteousness—individual, commercial, social, political.

Church of Twenty Members—Nineteen Women

For the forty years of his great ministry at Plymouth church in Brooklyn he had an apprenticeship of ten years. Two of these were at Lawrenceburg, Indiana, where he went upon his graduation from Lane Seminary in 1837. The membership of his church included nineteen women and one man. For a salary of $400 he performed the duties of both minister and janitor. Even in these unpromising conditions his work was successful, and his congregations soon filled the small building to its capacity. From Lawrenceburg he went to Indianapolis, then a place of 4,000 inhabitants. Here his success continued and he became widely known as a preacher of power. He did not confine himself to his own church or town, but preached and lectured in other places. Calls came to him from several eastern cities. In 1847 he accepted, after much hesitation, the invitation to Brooklyn, where he remained till his death, March 8, 1887.

When Beecher went to Plymouth church it had been newly organized, and had only one more member than his first church at Lawrenceburg. During his ministry it became the largest and most influential church in the country, and Mr. Beecher the best known preacher in America, if not in the world.

The secret of power in a great preacher seems undiscoverable. In passing judgment upon Phillips Brooks hardly any two critics assign the same reason for his ability to enthrall his audience. The same is true of Beecher. There have been others who have been thought to equal or perhaps surpass him in one or another of the elements of pulpit power, but no other who seemed to possess them all in such balance and proportion. His gifts were inherited. Lyman Beecher was one of the greatest preachers of his day, and Henry Ward was only one, though the most conspicuous one, of his family of gifted children. Yet his success was the product of hard work as well as inheritance, for he cultivated his talents assiduously. Like Demosthenes, he was obliged to overcome defective articulation, and for three years he received training in elocution from a teacher whose services he never ceased to remember with gratitude.

It has sometimes happened that a man whose greatness has not been discovered by his contemporaries has influenced succeeding generations more than his own, but it is ordinarily true that the man who is destined to do most for ages to come is the one who does most for his own. Especially is it true of the preacher, who must transmit his influence through the lives he has touched. In the case of Beecher this direct impartation must have been very considerable. Year after year he preached every Sunday to two congregations of from 2,000 to 3,000 persons each, the men outnumbering the women. On his lecture tours he was heard by hundreds of thousands in all sections of the country.

Did Not Hesitate to "Meddle" Freely

He did not hesitate to handle from the pulpit any subject in which a moral question was involved, and in a sermon preached in 1869 he thus characteristically defended this practice:

"There is a popular impression—and it seems to men like a philosophical truism—that every man understands his own business best; that he need not be meddled with, at least till he asks advice; and that even then no one can counsel him so wisely as one of the same craft. Complaint is often made, on that ground, of ministers, that they meddle with things that they do not understand. I think they do, too, when they preach theology. There is an amazing deal of 'wisdom' that will be called 'rubbish' one of these days. But when ministers meddle with practical life, with ethical questions and relations, they are meddling with just what they do understand—or ought to. If they do not understand these things, they have failed to prepare themselves for one of the most important functions to which they could address themselves as ministers."

Like his father, he was an uncompromising foe of liquor, and frequently lectured on temperance, but the public question to which he most directed his attention was slavery. His service in this regard is so well known as to require no more than a mention. The critical stage in the slavery discussion was reached shortly after his Brooklyn pastorate began, and stormy times continued for more than a dozen years, culminating in the outbreak of the civil war.

Was Not Deterred by "Business Interests"

The business interests of many men in the North were thought to be endangered by anti-slavery agitation. Despite the well-intended advice of more than one friend, Beecher joined in this discussion with the utmost ardor, using voice and pen, denouncing the fugitive slave law and opposing every compromise looking to the extension of slavery. He was a steady supporter of the policies of Lincoln, and was among those who urged the issuance of the emancipation proclamation. Lincoln spoke with the highest appreciation of Beecher's services to the cause of the union. But all else seems eclipsed by the famous series of speeches in England in 1863, when by his patience and his eloquence he mastered turbulently hostile audiences and so effectively vindicated the position of the North that he in all probability checked intervention by Great Britain on behalf of the South—a thing many Englishmen were only too willing to see. During the ante-bellum agitation, the war itself and the reconstruction period that followed, he demonstrated that he possessed the gifts not only of oratory but of broad statesmanship.

Beecher exerted a large influence on the preaching of his own day and of the present. He put aside abstractions and spoke of vital things. He had a theology, but it was a practical one. He was a doctrinal preacher, but his doctrine had to do with life. He spoke to the hearts and consciences of men. It is due in no small measure to him that present-day preaching tends in this same direction, as contrasted with the "theological" preaching of two generations ago.

Phillips Brooks, who has so often been compared with him, said: "I regard him as the greatest preacher Protestantism has ever produced." It is said that Dr. Watkinson, the well-known English preacher, reads once a year a sermon of Beecher's preached in 1863 —"A Conversation About Christ." Beecher delivered the first three series of the Yale lectures on preaching, which were established in honor of his father. David Swing said, as he laid down the last volume: "They may as well close the series. Everything has been said that can be said." His lectures to young men, delivered during his Indianapolis pastorate, have been translated into twenty languages. These are some indications of the influence, direct and indirect, of his preaching.

The purpose of his preaching he thus sets forth himself: "When I am gone, do not let it be forgotten that my one aim was the winning of the souls of men for Jesus Christ; that I have restated old doctrines in new language for this purpose—to make them acceptable to living men—and not out of desire for destruction or innovation. My business has always been, and always will be, not to make theology, but to save men by bringing them to Christ."

Personally Beecher was a most lovable man, warm-hearted and sympathetic. The unanimous loyalty and devotion of his great church during the severe sorrow through which he was obliged to pass testify to the place which he held in their affection; and the many sincere tributes paid him when he had passed away, as well as the statue erected in his honor, show that his fellow countrymen believe his life among them was a beneficent influence.

THE WAYFARER

Alumni Day at Its Best

THE THINGS which New York cannot buy often furnish a satisfactory theme for the Wayfarer's meditations. That rich and mighty city, which lays the markets of all the world under tribute to its needs and whims, is an adept in the art of purchasing pleasure. Any sort of new sensation that money can command, whether it be the newest voice in grand opera, or the latest thing in educated orang-outangs, quickly finds its way to the pleasure-seeking metropolis of the new world. With all its resources, however, New York could not treat Broadway to any such spectacle as was witnessed by the multitude who gathered in old Princeton recently for Alumni Day. The thrill which these enjoyed is unpurchasable and inimitable, because it is real life. Obviously, too, Broadway cannot reproduce the setting of a Princeton event. There is the flavor of culture and of embodied history, such as Americans travel to Oxford and Cambridge to see, about this prerevolutionary town which is in all its aspects merely an adjunct of the university.

To experience Princeton campus is an event in a traveler's life. Since he owns no sheepskin from the university, the Wayfarer may be permitted to express, without prejudice, the opinion that, so far as his observation extends, Princeton is without a peer on this continent in its campus and environment and general appearance. Nature has done regally by the old college, and the college has not been unkind to nature. When the Wayfarer's far-traveled friends come from abroad he tries to guide their footsteps Princetonward—he knows no fairer impression of American life that he would have carried away by foreigners. To be on Princeton campus in the gloaming, and to hear the seniors singing on the steps of old Nassau hall, is to have experienced a poem.

* * * * *

The Princeton spell seems to be of a piece with the Princeton spirit. History, architecture, natural landscape and college usage all conspire to take hold of the imagination of the visitor; and much more of the undergraduate. To have lived for years in this beautiful thrall means to be bound heart and head forever to Princeton.

That is why the alumni cross continents and oceans to be present at class reunions. Even a phlegmatic person can understand why there should be a choke in the throat and tears in the eyes of Princeton men as hundreds of graduates, ranging from the gray few of half a century ago to the tumultuous host of youngsters of yesterday, rise en masse, and with bared head sing "Old Nassau." The incident is as fraught with solemnity as the old Roman sacramentum. The Wayfarer no longer wonders at what he has witnessed of the strength of the Princeton tie, which binds together a great host of men scattered over the whole earth.

* * * * *

The alumni parade, which the Wayfarer beheld for the first time this year and which is the occasion of this article, is really a great spectacle. The graduates march through the town and then encircle the athletic field, afterwards to settle down to watch a baseball game with Yale. "The old guard" led, bearing the banners of the states from which they came. Then appeared the veterans of the class of 1863, fifty years out of college, and no longer men of affairs, but simply Princeton graduates, aglow with something of the same ardor as the class of 1913.

Class reunions are held upon the anniversaries which mark five-year multiples. Bands and banners and mottoes and uniforms enliven the procession. Thus the class of 1893 proudly proclaimed itself the founder of the "honor system" of student self-government. The largest graduate group, more than 200 men, was mustered by the class of 1903, celebrating its decennial and clad in colonial uniforms, with a living representation of the picture, "The Spirit of '76," marching in front. The 1908 boys, clad as "Paddies," admitted that they were "five years out, and still green." The impressiveness of uniform was especially apparent in the case of the 1909 students, clad as Roman soldiers in white and silver, with a Trojan border to their mantles in the Princeton colors. Before the grandstands these warriors with life engaged in a lively battle. The 1910 class was dressed as locomotive engineers, in black overalls and caps and orange shirts; and a life-size canvas locomotive led their contingent. The frolicsome 1911 graduates, with many slangy mottoes, were garbed as Pierrots, while last year's class wore white sailor costumes, and drew a nonsense boat.

* * * * *

If there is by chance any snob in the class of 1910 or of 1912 he may be offended by this observation: The young men dressed as locomotive engineers and as sailors looked the part perfectly. They would be taken anywhere for a group of American mechanics and sailors. There was no apparent difference in physiognomy or mien between these college graduates and the graduates of machine shops, locomotive cabs or warships. Both show the American type. Both are expressions of an American training for life. The college graduates in overalls looked like mechanics; an equal number of young mechanics in conventional college toggery would look like college graduates. The Wayfarer received a new sidelight upon American democracy as he studied this coincidence. He mentioned it to his host, a ten-year graduate, who was frankly pleased with the thought that colleges did not make men into a separate class, distinct from their fellows; but that it stressed their strength and manliness as men, so that the college man might easily be mistaken for a locomotive engineer.

* * * * *

From his high seat on the bleachers the Wayfarer enjoyed, with indescribable thrills, that rare spectacle of the assembled thousands, and the fair and rolling land beyond. It was all like a story book or a picture book in its charm. Even the dozen of round balloons, in Princeton colors, released to float across the field, added to the picturesqueness of the occasion. And the songs—several thousand men, on opposite sides of a great field, singing in unison, by the help of half a dozen strenuous cheer leaders—and the scientific organized and tremendous cheering of the students and graduates, set the visitor's nerves to tingling. The baseball game itself, which was terminated after the fifth inning, with a tied score, pleased the Wayfarer better than any big league contest he has lately seen. As for the scurrying host, suddenly driven toward shelter by the downpour, that in itself was a study in human nature.

* * * * *

For anyone who is inclined to see life through blue spectacles, and to think pessimistic thoughts about our national destiny, the Wayfarer would recommend a visit to a great American university —preferably Princeton—at commencement season.

THE WAYFARER.

THE HOME COUNCIL

A Night in the Open

By Jennie Brooks

Too few of us have opportunity or inclination to make a sympathetic study of our little feathered comrades. We take their presence for granted and let it go at that. The author, however, delights in her bird neighbors, and infuses a goodly amount of genuine friendship into her observations of them, even sacrificing her sleep that she may see them "off guard."

IF YOU have ever watched, through the long twilight, the going-to-bed of the birds, you know that never, by any chance, does a bird come quietly and settle himself down at the first impulse. He comes, and he goes. He flits in and out among the leaves where his nest may be, settling himself sentinel fashion as closely as possible to the mate who covers the eggs or the young birds that are his; but he does not stay settled. The instant milord arrives, milady slips like a sprite from her nest—a little exercise of weary wings must be hers ere the long hours that will intervene before the dawn. Thus deserted, the male follows her to the edge of the garden—my garden—then flits back, a silent guardian of his home until the return of his partner, when away he darts on swift wings.

Again and again the performance is repeated. It is purely an act of exercise or of joy to be on the wing, for as darkness falls there is no way of seeing provender, and nestlings themselves long since have gone to sleep. There is no such clamoring for food as, in the daytime, greets each return of the old ones.

Principally, I have watched the night-keeping habits of catbirds, blackbirds, thrushes and cardinals, who dwell among the vines and in shrubby places. After the lots have been drawn for "seats"—or perches, I should say—from the first homemaking of the proprietors until the last they keep them unmolested. Thrushes, catbirds, cardinals—even a robin (though sometimes he is quarrelsome)—I have found all nestling and sleeping in community of life, under the broad-spreading shelter of a patriarchal syringa bush. But year after year I wondered why the umbrella trees held no single bird home.

Feathered Homemakers Defend Hearthstone

LAST summer for the first time, so far as I know after six years of residence, to my delight a thrush made her home under the broad green leaves; but she held it with difficulty, and I then saw the reason why the umbrellas had been passed by. Watching the homemaking of my little guest in cinnamon color, I learned that umbrella trees are the finest roosting places imaginable, and the securest of shelter in sleepy time for every bird under the sun. Such quarrelings! Such bustlings! Such driving each other in and out with angry notes of war! Such surprise at sudden invasion of territory so peaceful by day as was endured by my homemakers at eventide; and such valor as they showed in defending their hearthstone! Blackbirds, jays, robins, catbirds, one and all fled as if the witches were after them, for no matter how lightly they settled on the outer branches of the tree, instantly they were routed. So thick was the canopy of palmlike leaves that only by their tremulous motion could I trace the passage of the little brown bird to her nest. On the tip end of an outer branch she invariably alighted, entirely hidden by the foliage, and I, looking from the porch, would follow her progress by the green undulations as she struck branch after branch in her ascent.

Forcibly ejected from one tree, the birds in this old garden of ours found shelter in a second umbrella tree on the south side of the house, and wrangled their way to rest each night of the summer, disputing, scolding, flying in and out—but in the end hiding away in sleepy content all the long night through.

February sent a first robin to my windowsill, where he established himself, dog-in-the-manger fashion, eating suet until satisfied and then cuddling against the window pane, fighting angrily at the winter residents in feathers who had been guests at my board for months. I presume he felt warm, sheltered against the glass; and was waiting until he once more had appetite, but his size, as well as his presumption, created consternation among all the birds who strung themselves along the wire fence—a hungry little "bread line" in feathers! They were positively afraid of this arrogant fellow in brown and red! Every single morning found him sitting on my sill. Many mornings, also, I opened my window, wrapped myself up in a shawl and sat beside him with my own breakfast, while he ate not alone what was his but the share of every other bird who fluttered about in envy.

Foraging Pussy Saves Fledgling

MY SECOND real friend among the birds last year had a start in life far from propitious. I never saw his nest or his "folks." He was, apparently, born without relations of any kind, and had started out to forage for himself at a tender age.

Scarcely had he tumbled out of some secure old nest to the top of the lichen-covered "snake fence" when the gray-green eyes of Marcus Aurelius sighted his pin-feather coat of blue.

Proud of his skill, Marcus brought the little bird all aquiver, just as he brought mice, and crouched, growling, at the feet of my little neighbor across the way, expecting praise, but receiving cuffings. That was Marcus's one fault—he would not distinguish birds from mice.

The little neighbor, tearful and distressed, came across the road bringing the young fledgling to the "Bird Lady" out under the trees. "He's all numb," she wept; "he's cold; he can't move." But he had only undergone a hard squeezing, so we warmed him with our hands and held him close and were soon rewarded with stirrings of life.

He opened upon us a pair of round, dazed black eyes, then the little sticks of legs began to twitch, the broad yellow mouth gaped widely, exactly as if he were awaking from a good nap, and soon we had in our hands a lively little bunch of feathers.

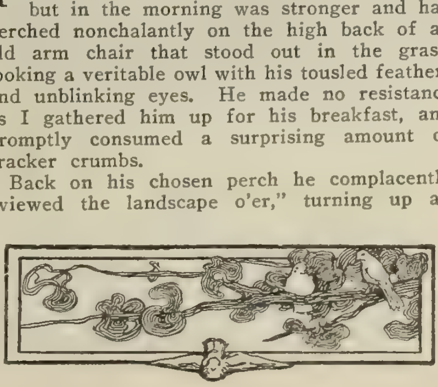
How my small neighbor danced for joy! But she would not take him home again. "You take care of him! You take care of him!" she begged. So I added him to my six motherless young rabbits fed from a bottle and a wee chicken hatched at odd moments by a dozen odd hens from a nest egg, and fed him on cracker and milk when suppertime arrived.

Pending the getting of my own supper, I hid him safely in the low-down hole in the twisted apple tree where some chickadees had hatched their brood. He could not fall out, neither could he fall in, and, as yet scarcely fit for effort of his own, I knew he was tolerably safe. When dark fell I put him among the long dewy grasses and left him.

Bird Baby Happy in New Home

TO MY amazement he did not flutter away, but in the morning was stronger and had perched nonchalantly on the high back of an old arm chair that stood out in the grass, looking a veritable owl with his tousled feathers and unblinking eyes. He made no resistance as I gathered him up for his breakfast, and promptly consumed a surprising amount of cracker crumbs.

Back on his chosen perch he complacently "viewed the landscape o'er," turning up an inquiring eye at the waving branches and, again, picking at his pin feathers as though thoughts of flight were buzzing in his brain. Hourly he gathered strength, venturing from chair to bench, from bench to chairback, to gather himself up, owl-fashion, and stare.



By midafternoon he had hopped and fluttered as far as the drinking pan. Much he admired his own reflection in the water, flirting it about and over him until, leaning too far, he fell wholly into the pool! Deep for larger birds, for him it was a drowning proposition, and had I not been keeping an anxious eye open for his safety here would end his story. But I ran and fished him out, dried him as best I could and set him back on his safe old perch. "Every two hours feed!"—that's the rule for young babies, and I followed it with the fledgling, but at 5 o'clock, lo! he had found a "foster mother."

Two old jays came studying him curiously. He sat looking indifferently at them as they flew about and then came down beside him, evidently saying, "Shall we or shall we not?" When I approached with cracker and milk in hand it settled the question promptly, and instead of thanks for my charity such a berating as fell my way you never heard!

No matter; I was satisfied. The baby had found a mother of his own kind, and, in a trice, was gobbling down bits of earthworms with gusto. The meal ended, he fluttered on shaky wings after the old folks over into the pasture.

In the evening my small neighbor came running across the lawn to make a call upon me among the trees. A wide mellow pathway of light creeping nearer and nearer to a fallen tree in the garden revealed on the very tip end of a broken twig a tiny, no-headed bird. The aimless little wanderer had come home again! How we scampered across the grass, softly and silently as might be, to greet him; and how we dropped down about him in an admiring ring, and laughed at him, and praised him, there alone, sound asleep, and said: "Brave boy, to be out here alone in the scary dark!"

I laid a soft finger on his feathers and out popped his head from under his wing, while two staring black eyes opened roundly; but he did not "uncuddle" himself, remaining just as he was, a plump, serene little bunch of feathers. We talked to him, and petted him, and occasionally patted him quite gently on the back. He never stirred nor winked, but merely looked rather bored, and presently tucked his head down under his wing and left us to stare at him as long as we chose.

Foster Mother Carries Away Foundling

FOR him night was the time to sleep, and he wasted none of it. I called upon him at 12, at 2, to find him immovable and soundly napping in the light of a moon that was like day. At earliest dawn he was still precisely as I had left him, all snuggled up in his feathers, not a sign of any head to him, and even when the birds were piping all about him he still slept on.

But by daylight he was broad awake and making his toilet in great shape—picking at his few feathers and fluffing himself out to make the most of his scanty raiment, and standing first on one foot, then the other, as if a trifle in doubt as to their ability to "hop."

Again, when I drew nearer, the foster mother swept through the air from some place of concealment and notified him that I was not the person to be trusted—to follow her; and in short flights she finally carried him away, as lively looking a bird baby as one would hope to see—and quite as though he had not within two days escaped death by land and water and all the powers of darkness!

I waved him farewell as he hopped and flew out of sight and got no reward for my pains except discourteous remarks from his parents. I have often wondered since if he were deaf and dumb; for not a sound or a chirp did he make during his entire visit.

YOUNG AMERICA

The Gratitude of Spot

BY MARION EVERETT HAYN

"DID YOU FIND Spot in there, Peggy?" asked Paul, as his little sister came running out of the barn. Peggy shook her head. "Run behind the rose bush, quick!" whispered Paul suddenly. He placed a saucer of milk by the barn door and a piece of meat beside the saucer. Then he ran after his sister.

"Spot hasn't eaten a thing today," he explained softly, looking toward the barn door; "and he hid all day yesterday, too."

"Oh, look!" cried Peggy in a whisper.

The children peeped through the bush as a small, black dog came out of the barn. The dog trotted over to the milk and lapped it quickly, then seized the meat between his teeth and hurried back into the barn.

"He must have come from the loft!" cried Paul. "I can hear him going up the stairs. Let's follow him."

Into the barn they hurried and climbed up the steep stairs. The loft was dark and for a long time they could not find the dog. At last they came across a hole in the hay and Paul put in his hand.

"Why, Peggy," he cried, "here's Muff!"

He pulled out the dog and crawled into the hole. Inside was Muff, stretched out at full length with her head on her paws. Beside her lay the meat Spot had just brought her.

Spot broke away from Peggy and followed Paul into the hole. The dog licked Muff's face and whined, but she did not open her eyes.

"Oh, Peggy," cried Paul, "call father!"

Mr. Hill, who was near, hurried up to the loft. "What's the matter, Peggy?" he asked.

Peggy pointed sadly to the hole. Her father pulled away the hay until he found Muff, while Spot whined and pulled at his trousers. "Can't you help Muff?" he seemed to say.

"Muff must be sick!" cried Mr. Hill. "I'll go to the village for the animal doctor."

Just then Mrs. Hill climbed into the loft. The dog whined and ran back and forth between his mistress and Muff.

"Why, Spot!" cried Mrs. Hill, "you must be nursing Muff to pay her for what she did for you when you were a puppy."

"What did she do for him, mother?" asked Paul as he swept the hay away from the stairs.

"Just ask the animal doctor when he comes," replied his mother.

As soon as Mr. Hill returned with the doctor the children rushed to meet him.

"Dr. Dale," they cried, "what did Muff do for Spot when he was a puppy?"

The doctor smiled as he looked Muff over. "She taught him how to lap milk and how to walk," he said.

"Is Muff very sick?" begged Peggy. "Will she die?"

"No. She's been poisoned," replied the doctor, "but she'll be all right before long."

"Oh!" cried Paul. "Mr. Bell put out some poison the other night for the rats. They've been killing his chickens. And Muff was eating a rat Saturday afternoon."

"That's where she got the poison," said the doctor. "Give this medicine to Muff," and he handed Mrs. Hill a little box. "She'll be better in a few days."

Spot looked up at the doctor and barked, and Dr. Dale stooped and patted him.

"It was seven years ago," he said, "when Paul was a baby, that Muff played mother to you, Spot. You are a grateful dog to remember it."

Spot wagged his tail.

"He couldn't walk over the doorsill when the man gave him to Paul," added Mrs. Hill. "Muff slept with him every night and cared for him during the day until he was old enough to take care of himself."

"I believe Muff would have died up here if it had not been for Spot," said Peggy as she hugged the dog lovingly.

Spot barked loudly. Peggy was sure he said, "Wasn't I a good nurse?"

Who'll Write Vacation Stories?

DEAR YOUNG AMERICA: School is over for the year, or soon will be, and you are going to have two glorious months of freedom. What are you going to do during those two months? Perhaps you don't know yet; but it's quite safe to guess that whatever you do you will get some fun out of it.

The Continent wants to hear about that fun. Won't you tell us about it, when your vacation is over? You know it isn't necessary to go away from home to have a good time. Some of the very best times are the home good times. If your vacation is a stay-at-home one, a story of the fun it brings you may help some other boy or girl to have stay-at-home fun next year. But whether you go away or spend your two months at home, please tell us something about your vacation—either some one day or event, or experience, or of the vacation period as a whole.

You may use 400 words—no more—and stories must be at the Young America headquarters of The Continent by Oct. 14. That seems a long time ahead, doesn't it? But the weeks will pass before you know it, and you may waken some morning and remember that the time is nearly gone and your story is still unwritten. Beter write it, therefore, the earliest moment you can.

For the benefit of boys and girls who have never taken part in these contests, the editor repeats the terms: Stories must be written in ink on one side of the paper only, and signed with full name, address and age. And you understand, of course, that you must receive no assistance.

Be sure to send photographs if you have them. Pictures add greatly to the attractiveness of a story.

This year we are going to give two first prizes of $3 each—one for boys and girls of 14 and 15 years and the other for boys and girls under 14. There will also be two second prizes of $2 each and three $1 prizes.

Don't forget the date, Oct. 14, on which your stories must be in the hands of the editor, who wishes you a very happy summer.

Girl Burden-Bearers of India ⁂ By Helen F. Huntington

ONE SEES THEM everywhere in rural India, girls little and big, bending under great loads of all kinds and shapes, toiling along the dusty hill trails, carting dirt among workmen in charge of native overseers, breaking stones for road building squads and carrying them hither and thither. Generally their fathers or brothers or husbands are at work near the girls employed at stone breaking or dirt carting, and although they may not do more or better work they draw twice the pay that the girls receive—which is little enough at that.

A strong, well grown girl can earn from two to three annas (one anna equals two American pennies) a day by the hardest kind of manual labor. If her earnings are not absolutely needed at home she usually invests them in bangles or anklets of silver, because these trinkets form the wedding dowry of the peasant Indian girl, and in time of need they can always be disposed of for their full value or very close to it, hence they are the safest form of investment.

Near the Nepaulese border—in northern India—where the trails are so rough and steep that even the hardy pack mules of the country can scarcely travel over the best of them, women and girls carry freight for many weary miles along mountain passes where a sharp watch must be maintained for the wild creatures that lurk there seeking their food as jungle creatures must. The freight carriers are generally armed with kookris, or native hunting knives, which are very sharp and deadly when skillfully used, but which cannot always be used quickly enough, especially in case of a tiger onslaught.

We met one stocky little brown woman, with muscles like steel, near the end of an eighty-mile journey, with a 200 pound load of kerosene in tin cans. She could understand and speak English fairly well and told us that she had received only seven rupees (about $2.30) for carrying her previous cargo of 200 pounds over 105 miles of difficult and dangerous mountain trails. But she had made no complaint; on the contrary, she had seemed thankful to be so profitably employed for the sake of the children at home, who needed what her earnings would supply. She was 19 years old, but she looked at least 30, and she had been doing a man's work for ten years.

Instead of balancing their loads on their heads, as they do in southern India, the women of northern India sustain them by means of stout leather thongs passed around the burdens on their backs and over their foreheads, thus throwing the greatest strain on the cords of the neck, and causing an ugly forward hunch that becomes habitual.

At Darjeeling the Lepcha and Bhutian women bring fruits and vegetables to native markets from the outlying country districts and carry them about to customers' houses loaded down like pack mules. In intervals of work they sit about the market grounds chatting among themselves and laughing as lightheartedly as if no such thing as grinding toil existed—that is, the girls and young women. The older women all show the appalling strain of their labors in their bowed figures and lined, gaunt faces. At thirty they look middle-aged, and at forty premature decrepitude begins in most cases.

The lot of the Indian peasant girls is hard indeed, but they generally have peaceful homes, for it is the rarest thing to run across anything like domestic harshness in Indian nomes. Parents never strike or cuff their children, and rarely ever scold them, but treat them with great affection and consideration. Indian mothers are the gentlest, most patient women in the world, and naturally their daughters pattern after them, consequently there is little or no friction.

"They sit about the market grounds, chatting among themselves"

The teacher was explaining the tenses. "Now, Willie," she said, "suppose I should say, 'I have a million dollars.' What tense would that be?"

"That'd be pretense," answered Willie.—Boston Transcript.

NEW BOOKS

On the way to life one must face the enemies of life.—Henry Churchill King.

Mr. Bryce on American Questions

UNIVERSITY AND HISTORICAL ADDRESSES, by James Bryce. The twenty addresses which make up this volume were delivered by Mr. Bryce during the years of his residence in the United States as British ambassador, and are therefore up-to-date as well as comprehensive and scholarly. Mr. Bryce has just terminated a long period of public service, has traveled widely, observed minutely and analyzed keenly. Probably no Englishman ever entered more sympathetically into the real life and heart of this nation or ever better understood its spirit than he, as was first shown by his "American Commonwealth," which has become a recognized classic.

Among the historical subjects here covered are the beginnings of Virginia, the landing of the Pilgrims, the discovery of Lake Champlain, Thomas Jefferson and the character and career of Abraham Lincoln. University education and intellectual pleasure, the mission of state universities and phases of university activity, the study of ancient literature, and the Scotch-Irish race in Ulster and in America are among the miscellaneous topics treated. "Some Hints on Reading" and "Some Hints on Public Speaking" are in their way invaluable, even though the matter is necessarily not new. Mr. Bryce believes that what is wanted today is less reading and more thinking—"reading is easy but thinking is hard work." He urges that note taking accompany reading. And he explains how one can read at once thoroughly and swiftly. The suggestions on public speaking are fourteen in number and voice the author's long experience.

The final address, made to the Pennsylvania Society of New York last December, is on the constitution of the United States, briefly and broadly analyzed from a historical and also from a present-day viewpoint. Referring to the question of amendment, Mr. Bryce suggests that we should not forget that "ballast as well as sails are needed if a ship is to pursue with safety her course over seas that are sometimes stormy." He objects to the local residence requirement for members of Congress, and to the strict separation of legislative and executive departments which bars the President and cabinet from legislative halls. He hints at some other imperfections—at the time he still represented a foreign government—but concludes that the constitution has become one of the vital and vitalizing forces of the modern world. The book, which is dedicated to Senator Elihu Root, may be regarded as a final expression of Mr. Bryce's ideas on themes which are distinctly interesting to the people of this country. [Macmillan Company, New York. $2.25 net.

New Fiction

DOC WILLIAMS, by Charles H. Lerrigo. The author of this unique "tale of the Middle West" is a Presbyterian elder and a practicing physician in Topeka, Kan. This contribution of his to contemporary fiction is worthy of both these capacities. There is a stalwart religion in it, and a gentle, generous sympathy well becoming a man of medicine. The charm of the story, however, is not in its incidental discussions of science, but in its quite exceptional skill in constructing a character of dignity, appeal and even inspiration out of one whom his neighbors with no small reason called an ignorant quack. There is about "Doc Williams" all the quaint allurement of shrewd, though unsophisticated, human nature which in past years has made David Harum and Eben Holden popular heroes; but "Doc Williams" is a greater man than either of them because his moral stature is higher. And the waif who became the old healer's foster son is drawn in moral lines equally challenging to respect. The best recommendation for Dr. Lerrigo's work is that any father or mother may hand the tale to the growing lad in the home and be sure of bringing him nothing but incentives to high, clean and honest manliness, with religion in its proper place as an essential factor thereof. [Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. $1.25.

THE RED HAND OF ULSTER, by G. A. Birmingham. The clever clergyman who masquerades under the name of Birmingham has made fictional use of the stir created in the northeastern corner of Ireland among the sturdy men of Ulster by the pending Irish home rule bill, and has produced a lively satire on what might have happened. "An Irish peer, far from wealthy," serves as the recounter of this tale of a remarkable war that failed, at the climax, to materialize. An American millionaire of Irish extraction, looking for excitement, arranges and finances a revolution which makes lively and humorous reading out of a naturally serious subject. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $1.20 net.

VERONICA, by Florence Morse Kingsley, tells again the story of Christ and his time, with an admirable description of the normal life as lived by the people of Palestine. Christ himself does not appear, except as he directly effects some marvelous cure. Mainly, the book is shadowed by the discussion of his acts among the scoffing inhabitants. The chief figure is that of Veronica, a soulless princess who becomes afflicted with leprosy and is taken from the court. The book is concerned with her gradual coming into humbleness sufficient to permit her to receive the blessing of healing from Christ. [D. Appleton and Company, New York. $1.30 net.

THE HILL OF VENUS, by Nathan Gallizier, is a novel of distinction laid in thirteenth century Italy. The chasm between church and state is fearlessly and impartially shown throughout the romance. A youth reared in the atmosphere of a gay and happy court life is forced to become a monk on account of the superstition of his dying father; his tragic fight against love makes up the rest of the story. [L. C. Page and Company, Boston. $1.35.

CHILD OF STORM, by H. Rider Haggard, relates in vigorous, energetic fashion a wild love tale of Zululand, in which a Zulu beauty plays some such a treacherous role as the Greek Helen. There are wooings and battles and trials, and the end of it all is truly tragic. In the story there is interesting native character work, and a good deal of life and vim. [Longmans, Green and Company, New York. $1.35.

Personal Stories of Religious Experience

A MAN'S RELIGION, by Fred B. Smith. The dynamic leader of the Men and Religion Movement, who is now carrying the same work into Australia, has here summed up succinctly the conclusions he has gathered from his experience in that movement. As generalissimo of the four Men and Religion teams which traversed the country during the winter of 1911 and 1912, Mr. Smith managed to visit practically every city which these teams touched; and he frankly recognizes that there are many features of alarm in the stubborn facts which the church is facing today. But he sees more conditions of encouragement and believes that religion is bound to be in the future a more triumphant force than it has ever been hitherto. The weakest point in the book is Mr. Smith's failure to apprehend the significance of many important adjustments effected in modern Christian faith by progressive theological thought. But he is not at all wrong, even in this connection, with his insistence that Christianity must continue to be a religion of fact, fortified by the continual recurrence of the fundamental fact of the new birth in individual souls. Little book though it is, it is withal a great book for the modern man—a book to nerve the man who has religion and to put a mighty challenge before the man who has not religion. [Association Press, New York City.

AMONG THE HERETICS IN EUROPE, by J. A. Packer. A chatty, running account of the trip of a journalist, who had spent twenty-five years of his working life in Australia and who took a holiday in Europe to see what was going on in the cause of religious liberty. Mr. Packer is a Baptist, and his observations are largely confined to the efforts of the Baptists to find freedom under Greek and Roman Catholic restrictions. He times his visit to attend the congress of Russian Baptists in St. Petersburg in September, 1910. There he saw and studied Pastor Fetler, who is at the head of the evangelical movement identified with the Russian Baptists and who has suffered severely for his faith. Half the book is devoted to experiences in Russia, where the Greek Catholic Church is the restrictive one, but of which he says, "There is no country in the world offering richer dividends for Christian service than Russia; the fields are white to harvest; the people are ravenously hungry for the gospel." The remainder of the book covers Spain and Italy, and France, "a nation without God." Some of the statements would be incredible if they were not confirmed by very wide experience. The book will help anyone who wants a view of the religious situation in Europe. Dr. John Clifford of London writes a commendatory introduction. [Cassell and Company, New York.

THE LURE OF THE IRON TRAIL, by Ward W. Adair. Like Begbie's "Twice Born Men," this is a collection of tremendous stories of Christian conversion—the kind of conversion that makes foul men clean and wicked men righteous and weak men adamant against temptation. The material is all drawn from a comparatively narrow section of modern life—the life of railroad men. This is the rather hidden significance of the title, for the author, Mr. Adair, is a secretary of the Y. M. C. A., who has felt that iron trails lure so much in his religious work that he has given his whole life to service among the men who handle the railroad trains of this country. If, however, anybody should come to the book looking not for religious documents but merely for stories, he would not be disappointed, for the stories are told with a swing and spirit that Begbie in his similar work has scarcely matched. And these men made over are heroes of life and Christianity out of whose history no moral need be drawn, because the moral pervades it all, first and last. [Association Press, New York. $1 net.

THE GREAT ACCEPTANCE: The Life Story of F. N. Charrington, by Guy Thorne. Many readers will remember "Miss Messenger," who appears in Sir Walter Besant's "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," and who was inspired by the true character in history of Frederick N. Charrington, who is still living and doing his work. Charrington is the son of a great brewer in London. He set out to help the poor of the East end and found that their largest damage came from drink, for which he was himself largely responsible. He therefore renounced his connection with the brewery and the fortune accompanying it, and became an earnest opponent of the whole business. Under Dr. Rainsford he was converted. He became a friend of Ion Keith Falconer and was Mr. Stead's largest helper in his famous exposure of the immorality of London. The story reads like a romance, but it is true and should have wide reading for the cheer it brings. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $1 net.

Books Received

Educational Dramatics: A Handbook on the Educational Player Method, by Emma Sheridan Fry. Moffat, Yard and Company, New York. 50 cents net.

Love Letters of an Actress, by Elsie Janis. D. Appleton and Company, New York. $1 net.

School Hygiene, by Fletcher B. Dresslar. Macmillan Company, New York. $1.25 net.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

June 29, 1913—Review

Everyday View of the Lesson

By J. L. Scott

Golden Text, I. John 5:4: This is the victory that hath overcome the world, even our faith.

For three months we have been studying one of the most attractive parts of Scripture, and now how much of it can we recall? That question this review is intended to help us answer.

The first lesson introduced two characters not easily forgotten—Jacob and Esau. They stood, like Jachin and Boaz, at the very entrance to the temple. And they are there still. Abraham began things. He was the source of the stream. In Isaac the stream found a single channel, but in Jacob and Esau the stream divided. One branch flowed toward God and the other away from him. Esau was naturally the stronger of the two. Judged by the physical man, we might perhaps prefer him to his brother. But Jacob was twice born. Through all history he will live as a monument to sovereign grace. His second life was the especial work of God.

Though the Future Is Dark, Jacob Still Dreams of God

But from effectual calling to sanctification is a long distance. One falls a great many times and each time God must enter his life anew. This God did with "Jacob at Bethel." Jacob was fleeing from the face of an enraged brother. His future was dark and there was little for which to hope. But his dreams were still of God. The Lord was far away. It required a ladder to reach him, but the light of his face shone out from behind the stars.

Jacob awoke from his dream a better man, but other experiences awaited him farther on. Time had wrought its changes. Jacob had been absent from Canaan for twenty or thirty years. God sometimes builds fences about his promises, and Canaan was to Jacob the land of promise. To that country he must return according to the imposed conditions. The patriarch had become rich; his family and flocks were about him; but Esau with 400 men opposed the way. Years before Jacob had wronged his brother and in the glittering spears he read his doom. But Jabbok differs from Bethel in that the ladder is gone. God in the form of a man descends to the earth and wrestles with the patriarch until the day. Prayer had overcome and "Jacob's Meeting with Esau" becomes a benediction.

But Esau was only a bend in the road. There were experiences farther on of which Jacob had never dreamed. Joseph was his favorite son, as he himself had been the favorite of Rebekah. Family favoritism is another name for injustice. It will set any house against itself. One day Joseph was sent away to visit his ten brethren. They returned to their father with a coat dyed in blood. He recognized it as Joseph's, and for twenty years mourned his son as dead.

Joseph's Gift of Dreams Proves Open Door to His Advancement

Joseph, sold into Egypt, was held as a slave. It was a bitter experience, but God was sifting out the chaff from the grain. Joseph was a dreamer. His youthful dreams had awakened the envy of his brethren, and even his father had been disturbed by them. But in Egypt his dreams proved an open door to his advancement. Pharaoh also dreamed and Joseph became his "interpreter." The result was that he was "Made Ruler of Egypt."

A famine visited the land of Canaan and the sons of Jacob were sent into Egypt to buy bread. Egypt was a land of idols, but Jehovah was its virtual Ruler. His dominion over palm and pine remains ever secure. God likes ample room in which to work. Palestine was too small for the development of his purpose. Egypt was essential to it. The migration of Abraham to Haran was no more a part of the divine plan than was the journey of those ten men into Egypt. Here it is that "Joseph Meets His Brethren," and here, too, the designs of God begin to unfold themselves.

But Benjamin was absent. His presence was necessary in order to complete the plan. There can be no missing links in the chain of providence. "Joseph and Benjamin" were two chapters to the one history. All history is more or less a revelation of God. His footsteps trace the boundaries of nations. Many look upon Joseph as if he were merely some biblical Monte Cristo, with no mission beyond that of stimulating interest and wonder. But Joseph lives not because his story was true but because it is true today. Under some form the same old lessons still remain. Joseph is not here but justice is. The patriarch is dead, but his sheaf out in the harvest is ever bowing to the principles of truth and of God.

"Joseph Tests His Brethren" for their sake as well as his own. When God invites one to a higher plane he fits him for the place. Those men were to be the pioneers of a nation. God was hewing the foundation stones to the line of truth. It is not strange that "Joseph Forgives His Brethren." His method was not to punish but to forgive. In that respect he was like unto God himself. Pain for pain's sake is torture, delighting only the evil spirit that inflicts it. But there may be a suffering beneficent as love. It wounds but to heal.

Jacob of Other Years Lost in the New Jacob

The scene of "Jacob before Pharaoh" was but the benediction upon a long, eventful life. One can think of no more beautiful sight than that aged man waiting for his life's sun to set. The Jacob of other years was not there. He had fallen by the wayside and died to his better self. Life to him had been a pilgrimage not only through this world but away from it. The "Blinding Effect of Sin" was something to which he was no stranger. It may not have assumed the form of wine, as it does in our last lesson, but it distorted values and changed the very meanings of God. He saw in gold what no one ever found in it. Deceiver and deceived, he lived in the shadows and died a better man than he was born. In theology the illustration often precedes the doctrine. Jacob was a sinner saved by grace. He was two men. On the one side of the Jabbok he was Jacob, on the other Israel.

Review Lesson by Lesson

By Hermon D. Jenkins

Jacob and Esau—Dean Stanley gives us sketches of Jacob and Esau which have never been surpassed. He admires the dashing hunter, the hard-riding sheik Esau, but he confesses that the world owes more to Jacob, the "plain man living in tents," than to his brother. The showy characteristics of the one impress and charm the beholder, but the sober graces of the other lift up a community and build firm the state.

Jacob at Bethel—The story of Jacob's dream puts heart into every man conscious of his own defects. Jacob knew he had done wrong, although he had been actuated by high motives. He believed God had a glorious purpose to carry out in connection with the spiritual life of mankind and he wished to be a leader in that new era. But he had taken the wrong road to achieve his end. He had deceived his partial father and secured, through a brother's need, the precedence which was a matter of just dispute between that brother and himself. He had no Bible, he had no decalogue. But he was not at ease as he lay down upon the rocky heights to spend the night. It was then God came near. Nothing was said to justify his treatment of his brother, but he was assured that the God of his fathers would bring him back in peace and safety to his father's house.

Jacob Prepares for the Worst and Prays for the Best

Jacob's Meeting with Esau—That his brother, now the head of a roving band of desert rangers, was coming to meet him with hundreds of spearmen was disconcerting. Jacob prepared for the worst and prayed for the best. Just as matters were approaching the crisis and he was to know the worst—or best—he had a vision and an experience which at once humbled and heartened him. He was not to die. His children were not to be thrown out upon the barrens of the wilderness. He was to be a leader and more than a leader in that world's advance of which he had dreamed.

Joseph Sold Into Egypt—The life of Joseph was full of dramatic interest and worthy of all the study we will ever give it. Indeed it is in the life of Joseph the distinctively Christian graces are anticipated. As a youth he may have lacked discretion, but he never lacked filial loyalty or fraternal love. The threads of history begin to tangle, but the Master of the loom is weaving his own pattern in his own way.

Joseph Interprets Dreams—Even in a prison the beauties of character shine. Falsely accused, unjustly punished, Joseph's spirit is not embittered. He is the one to whom his fellow prisoners, innocent or guilty, turn instinctively in trouble and he will neither refuse comfort nor awaken false hopes. Joseph is not more the saint in the old-time home or the future palace than in the jail.

Joseph, Faithful in School of Adversity, Raised to Greatness

Joseph Made Ruler of Egypt—Joseph reached the palace through the prison. Macaulay says that in all his biographical studies he never found a great character that had not been trained in the school of adversity. Faithful in little, Joseph was raised to greatness.

Joseph Meets His Brethren—It is only the great soul that forgives greatly. The man who "can forgive but not forget," or forgives with reservations, exceptions and conditions, has not reached the divine ideal of remission. Chaucer well says of our Heavenly Father that he "forgives us every whit or not a dele." Joseph had been deeply hurt, but he repays hate with love and injury with largess.

Joseph and Benjamin—Abundant as grace may be, the ties of blood are not obliterated. God nowhere requires of us to ignore the natural relations of the family. While the New Testament enjoins a universal benevolence, it also commands a special regard for the "household of faith," and writes down as "worse than an infidel" one who fails to feel the natural ties made stronger and more sacred by religion.

Joseph Tests His Brethren—To permit ourselves to be an "easy mark" for the hypocrite and impostor is likely to weaken our faith in human nature. Joseph was as cautious as he was kind. He does not rashly trust his secret to men who might bring up and misrepresent his past and make his tenure of office impossible by their malice. He uses every precaution which wisdom might suggest to make sure that his brethren, once so tricky and cruel, are now men to be trusted and to be presented at the court of the greatest monarch of his times.

Joseph Sees Unholy Conduct Turned to Good by Divine Providence

Joseph Forgives His Brethren—When once assured that he may follow out his generous impulses with safety to all concerned, Joseph is overcome by the tenderness of his feelings and expels the servants that his brothers may not be humiliated by the inevitable disclosure. He stills their self-reproaches by seeing in their unholy conduct something turned to good by divine providence. He will not dwell either upon their sin or upon his own greatness, except to see "in each event how clear" a hand has brought them all together safe amid the perils of the times, reconciled at last.

Jacob Before Pharaoh—The prosperous son still owes honor to the humble parents from whom he sprang. Joseph was not the man to intrude his family upon scenes which would have been painful for them, nor to hide them from honors they could with self-respect enjoy. Without ceasing to be the courtier he is still the son. He seeks an interview with Pharaoh, presents his father, explains his father's calling and the reason of his presence, and then withdraws in dignity to establish his dependent family where, like himself, they can enjoy the prosperity due to his own relations to the king. Taken all in all, the character of Joseph, while simply outlined in the Bible, is one of the most beautiful and manly in all history. He was dignified without pride, respectful without servility and courageous without bravado. In him were exemplified those virtues and graces which were to be further emphasized in the New Testament and, considering the profligacy and boastfulness of the people among whom his lot was cast, he was a miracle of grace, a worthy forerunner of the Christ who was to be born of the same race in later times.

DEVOTIONAL SERVICE

BY EDWARD ARTHUR WICHER

Week Beginning June 22, 1913

Topic—New wine in old bottles. New cloth on an old garment. Luke 5:36-39.

The problem of the adjustment of the old and the new in matters of religion is one that has always been more or less present with the expanding church. It was most of all insistent when Jesus taught. For every one of Jesus' first followers was a Jew, and Jesus himself, to his life's end, was a Jew; and yet the religion he revealed was to make forever antiquated the ancient Jewish religion.

—

The broad meaning of these two parables is that between the old and the new there can be no compromise. The new religion must supplant the old. There can be no place for the man who says both "No" and "Yes"; who agrees with the Jew that Judaism is the true religion, and with Christ that his teaching has come from God. He who is not with Christ is against him (Matt. 12:30). He who tries to maintain his Pharisaism and yet professes himself a follower of our Lord is nothing at all. The trimmer shall in no wise inherit the kingdom of God.

—

It is true that in the teachings of Jesus on the relations of the old and new there is another side. Christ never tries to put the whole truth into one saying. But here we are concerned with the necessity of making no compromise in the maintenance of that which is new in religion, but which our experience has shown to be true.

—

The parable of the new cloth on the old garment has in Luke's version one special feature. The patch of new cloth was torn out of a new mantle, or outer garment, that it might be used to repair the old. Thus two garments were spoiled. The shrinking of the cloth of the patch made the rent in the old garment larger than it was before. This was a double folly. It was the very folly which would afterwards be committed by those men who would try to take some phase of the religion of Jesus and use it to patch up some decrepit old doctrine in the religion of the Jews. It was the error of all the eclectics, who thought that they could take pieces of Christianity with which to mend their decaying philosophies and theologies.

The age of Jesus was an age of eclecticism; and the votaries of every system of human thought were trying to keep it alive by doctoring it with a prescription taken from some other system. And inasmuch as Christianity was the one vital movement amid the general decay of society, the one life that revealed the beauty of holiness, the one force that renewed the wasted wills of men and made them capable of practicing the moral virtues, therefore the dying gods of the heathen faiths, and the fading philosophies of the ethnic speculations, were all trying to borrow from it something of its vitality and freshness, with which to perpetuate for a little longer time their own existence amid the general ruin.

—

In the mission fields of the modern world the like phenomena may often be seen. The Buddhist priests are everywhere trying to incorporate into their own religion phases of the Christian morality without the Christian name. In Japan the textbook on morals used in the public schools is largely made up of excerpts from the sermon on the mount, and the ethical utterances of Paul, without, however, making any direct reference to the New Testament.

—

If the new patch on the old garment refers to an endeavor to take extracts from the teaching of Jesus with which to mend other religions, primarily Judaism, the new wine in the old bottles represents an endeavor to take the whole of this teaching and embody it in the forms of the older religion. The Judaizers of the apostolic age, who dogged the footsteps of Paul from city to city and tried to pervert his converts, were men who exactly fitted this figure. For them Christianity was not something new and different from Judaism; it was rather something put into Judaism. All the rites and ceremonies of the old religion were to remain. Circumcision was still incumbent upon all Christians. The gentile must become a Jew before he could become a Christian.

—

But if the Judaizers had had their way Christianity would have been strangled at its birth. The followers of Jesus would have become merely another Jewish sect, to be added to the sects already existing.

Stephen first broke with the Jewish traditions in the interest of Christian liberty, declaring that the temple of Jerusalem was no longer essential to a spiritual worship. He died for his bold faith. Paul took up the mantle of Stephen which had been laid at his feet, and wore it. He led the whole Christian church out of the bondage of Judaism into the freedom of the sons of God. And the author of the epistle to the Hebrews sternly warned the Hebrew Christians of his age that if they should continue to practice Judaism they would forever lose their Christianity.

—

Christianity is a living, moving thing, and it cannot be compressed within dead forms or ceremonies. With the widening experience of faith there must continually be found a fresh expression of its hope and confidence. New statements of belief must be made from age to age; new confessions of the Spirit's life and work in the heart of the Christian, and in the world abroad. So long as our faith is true to Jesus, we need never be afraid to meet new statements of the Christian hope. Our only caution need be that we hold ever nearer to Jesus, as we move onward and upward.

—

We dare not compromise with the truth as we have seen it in the face of Jesus Christ. We dare not profess to be both Pharisees and Christians. Jesus has here forever silenced the man who will compromise with conscience in the interest of an outer ecclesiasticism; he has forever discredited the man who, whenever a fundamental question arises to divide an assembly, climbs up on the fence and does not come down again until he has had an inkling of the probable outcome of the debate.

—

There is perhaps a touch of irony in verse 39. A comfort-loving man has no relish for new wine. He does not call for it after tasting the old. He smacks his lips and says, "The old is good" (literally, "serviceable"). The new has a sour, rasping flavor, while the old is smooth and mild.

—

But the word of the kingdom has ever been bitter in the mouth of him who has tasted it. For it is stern, imperious, uncompromising. It may bid him leave his ease, and, like Stephen and Paul, accept a martyr's crown. Or Christ's kingdom of truth may place on the victor's brow a crown of thorns. The Jewish people will prefer the old, established religion, with its regular well known formularies, to the new, seething, stinging, inworking religion, with its unseen Lord and Saviour.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE

COMMENTS IN BRIEF BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

June 29, 1913

THE NEW PATRIOTISM

Topic—Our nation's glories and perils.—Exodus 19:1-8.

Jingoism has been experiencing a time of drought and famine of late. Small ideas of nationalism have not thriven. Easy insularity and cheap boastfulness have been blighted by the new atmosphere which envelops the earth. Pettiness in patriotism has given way to larger, saner conceptions. Men have become aware of the whole world, and of the particular nation's relations thereto. No nation, we now see, can live its own life unto itself. The destiny of each is inextricably bound up with the welfare of all. So it has come to pass that, with a new seriousness of mind and a new largeness of view, patriots are facing their problems in a spirit of consideration for the whole world.

—

The greatest glory of a nation is its people; and the people are also its greatest peril. Noble men and women have given greatness to little countries with few natural advantages; while unfit citizens have brought ruin upon fair lands. The most important service that can be rendered the state is to help build up the character of the people.

—

Democracy is on trial, but triumphing. The surest safeguard of government "of the people, for the people and by the people" is religion. Before there can be democracy there must be theocracy. Human brotherhood is dependent upon divine Fatherhood. Men cannot be counted upon to give allegiance to the great ideals of altruism which are inherent in democracy, except they have first yielded obedience to God. Thus the most direct service that can be rendered the cause of the democratic ideal of government is to strengthen the hold of religion upon the minds of the people.

—

"The strip of territory fifty miles wide from Boston to Washington, D. C., is said to be the most densely peopled region of similar size in the world. No section in France or China equals it. It is only approached by the territory between Liverpool and London, whose extent, however, is not so great. The Atlantic coast is rapidly becoming an almost continuous city for about 500 miles, as it is one succession of harbors inviting commerce." The foregoing quotation suggests but one of the radical changes which are making over the life of this wonderful western world. New legislation, new and undreamed of forms of obligation on the part of the state, new methods of ministry by the church, and new adjustments of social life, all are bound up in the transformations which are under way in the nation. New conditions teach new duties. Patriotism today must pioneer its way through problems upon which the past sheds no light. The call for loyalty to the nation is one demanding the ripest powers of the ablest men and women; while it never abates one jot of the ceaseless need for the cardinal qualities of character.

—

New diseases seem to have found their way into human life, animal life and plant life of recent years. Of them all none is so hurtful to human society as the growing disrespect for law. The sanctity of the statutes of the state is not so highly regarded as in our fathers' day. From the boys on the street to the great corporation in its office building the spirit to give no heed to laws that are personally inconvenient seems rampant. Every public teacher, in schoolroom, pulpit and press, should lift a clear voice against this peril which threatens the very foundations of the state.

—

A nation's character is the sum of its splendid deeds; they constitute one common patrimony, the nation's inheritance.—Henry Clay.

—

Twenty-five years ago Josiah Strong wrote a memorable book called "Our Country." Within recent weeks he has written another book, possibly still more memorable, called "Our World." This is the larger interpretation of the tendencies of our times. It dramatically portrays the increasing solidarity of the race, and the growth of that spirit which cries, with Garrison, "My country is the world." The brilliant opening chapter of "Our World" ends with a stanza of the Christmas hymn:

"For lo! the days are hastening on,
  By prophet bards foretold,
When with the ever-circling years
  Comes round the age of gold;
When peace shall over all the earth
  Its ancient splendors fling,
And the whole world give back the song
  Which now the angels sing."

—

Think long enough and deeply enough upon any problem and you will be carried back to the eternal thought of God. The deepest disasters and the loftiest triumphs all suggest the Infinite. We cannot consider patriotism without considering God.

MISSIONARY WORK

Japanese Lad on Money and Missions

Persons who suppose that the "schoolboy English" attributed to Japanese learners in the mission schools abroad and in American colleges is an invention and caricature are not aware of the papers which come to teachers actually engaged in the instruction of Japanese students. Characteristic Japanese idiom translated into English phraseology makes a peculiarly interesting combination, and the missionaries often have occasion to remark the unique naivete of the first efforts of young Japanese in English composition. From Port Arthur, Manchuria, Rev. A. V. Bryan sends a specially attractive specimen of this sort of Japanese-English. It is an essay written by one of his students when Mr. Bryan directed the class to compose some connected sentences on any subject they might choose. This student, obviously impressed with the mission work which he had seen, wrote as follows:

"Money is very useful thing for our lives to make happy, but only by it we cannot acquire happiness. We perceive many people who think they could acquire happiness only by money. We would see these people are some pity fellows because they had lost the other part of happiness that is the mental happiness and when they had not got money they would feel always unhappy. I think the only arm of religionists is their kindness (or love). They rush even into savage places with that arm and triumph everywhere. If they had lost that powerful arm they would have fallen into unfortunate fortune in those places. I know many missionaries had died in uncivilized parts for sake of their faith but I mean if they had lost the kindness in their minds they must have died much more."

The teacher's comment is: "If such a thing does not make a missionary happy, he ought to be kicked. What is all the routine and fatigue compared with such a testimony as this from a non-Christian? I am sure this man is sincere and does not use flattering words."

Ninety Young Men and Women of the Presbyterian Church Under Appointment to Go This Year for the First Time Into the Foreign Mission Field

The picture includes Secretaries Brown and Speer at the right, Acting Secretary Rodgers at the left, and Treasurer Day in the center at the back. Dr. A. W. Halsey is not in the picture because of his injury at the beginning of the conference week. which compelled him to go to the hospital. Dr. C. A. R. Janvier of Philadelphia, who is returning to India to become president of Ewing College at Allahabad, is seated at the right. Rev. Reuben A. Torrey, Jr , son of the famous evangelist, is second from the right in the back row. The background of the picture is the famous old First church on Fifth avenue, New York, and the photograph is by Pach, New York

Christian Literature Secretary in Japan

The Christian Literature Society of Japan is a new agency just created by the Conference of Federated Missions in that empire. The Southern Methodist Board has agreed that its experienced worker, Dr. S. H. Wainwright, shall give his whole time henceforth to the secretaryship of this society. It will continue to pay his salary. An incorporation has been granted by the Japanese government, and nearly $5,000 has been contributed for the distribution of Christian literature in the Japanese language.

Other important acts of this federal conference at its last annual meeting were the adoption of plans for a union Bible institute in Tokyo and the decision to establish a summer school for missionaries at Karuizawa, where young missionaries are to be instructed on Japanese customs, religions and other national characteristics. The conference was addressed by three American visitors—S. D. Gordon, Hamilton W. Mabie and Dr. Blackburn of Covington, Ky.

First Japanese Presbyterian Elder

The death of Rev. Joshiyasu Ogawa at Tokyo is noted with particular interest and sympathy because he was the first Japanese to be ordained officer of the Christian church in Japan. In the sixties Mr. Ogawa was engaged by Dr. Thompson, a new missionary just arrived in Tokyo, to teach him the language, and the association resulted in the teacher becoming a convert to Christianity and receiving baptism from his pupil. In 1872 Dr. Thompson ordained Mr. Ogawa as a ruling elder in the Kaigan congregation of Tokyo, at a time when there was no other native Japanese holding office in any Protestant communion. Several years afterwards Mr. Ogawa decided to enter the ministry, and he and two other middle-aged men, made ministers the same day, became the first ordained Japanese pastors. The other two died years ago, and left Mr. Ogawa standing alone as the Nestor of the Japanese ministry. During his years of service he had filled several most important pastorates in the capital city. He was not a man of rugged physique, but his steady, patient and quiet labors were very effectual in the conversion of his fellow countrymen.

Eskimos Not Spoiled by Education

Alice Ahlook, an Eskimo girl at Point Barrow, Alaska, made such excellent progress in the mission school there that Mr. and Mrs. Spriggs, the missionaries, determined to bring her to the States for education. Once in an American school among American scholars, she again surprised the missionaries by showing a wonderful and very complacent adaptation to civilized ways of living. For a time her missionary friends were much concerned lest she should take on too much of the ways of the white race and lose all missionary feeling toward her own people. But Miss Ahlook has stood the test better than was feared, and she has now gone back to the frozen shores of the Arctic, with its six months alternation of light and dark, and is serving most cheerfully among her own people, bringing light and cheer into the igloo homes of the far North.

Paul Pakotak, a Point Barrow boy who has been studying two years in the States, is likewise going back to teach among his people in the old home.

Rejoicing in the Albay Mission

Mrs. Roy H. Brown lately wrote from the Philippines after nine years in southern Luzon: "Much to our joy, Dr. and Mrs. Carter, who were in Maasin Leyte, were transferred to us. This has been their first Sunday. We get a good many members here, but they move away. Of course that helps to spread the work, but it makes the home field slim. In Sunday school today we had nine classes, in three dialects of this country and two different kinds of "English." Some of the people are taught English in a good American way and others in a Filipino-English way. It would sound a little mixed to you were you to come in. Dr. Carter had his first case today."

Board Notes and Announcements

—The treasurer of the Board of the Northwest, Chicago, led the Friday morning meeting and called the great joy in Samaria after Philip's preaching "the result that is to follow all the missionary effort that is put forth now." Mrs. Shellman of Pitsanuloke, Siam, illustrated this truth by a story of one of her husband's hospital assistants, in whom the gospel has made so great a change that wondering nobles take knowledge of him, that he is a follower of Jesus. A Presbyterian minister connected with the China Inland mission, who for years has been on the border of Tibet, spoke of the need of cooperation. Tibet now fills a large place in the attention of the Edinburgh council's continuation committee. Rev. E. Wade Koons of Chai Ryung, Korea, told how a woman, Sung Si, saved the church there when the men of the congregation had been so intimidated by the Romanists that not one dared attend service and the building was soon to be sold for a mortgage. It is now one of the strongest churches in Korea and has lately given its pastor to be the first Korean missionary to China. Mrs. Allison, about to return to Guatemala, said, "Do let us be more careful not to prejudice young people against ministers by criticism, and against missions by gloom."

The Open Hearth

Bible in Colorado High Schools

For some time past I have noted with in-erest references to Bible study for high chools in North Dakota under the direction f Professor Vernon Squires. Colorado has een to the fore in this proposition. While a astor in Greeley it was my privilege to be a member of the original committee to work out scheme for Bible study in connection with the State Teachers' College at Greeley, the first hing of its kind ever undertaken.

What is now popularly known as the "Greeley lan" is being worked out in North Dakota in onnection with the high schools, and is also bout ready for introduction in Colorado. The most popular elective in the State Teachers' College at Greeley is the course in Bible study, s is shown in the fact that last year 250 en-olled, and about the same number this year, ixty of them being members of the Roman Catholic Church. Since coming to Longmont I ave undertaken to obtain the application of he Greeley plan to the high schools.

The political machinery of Colorado's State Teachers' Association is more complex than in North Dakota, and it has taken us longer to et the course introduced and adopted in our chools. However, everything looks favorable o the adoption of the course at the next as-ociation meeting. We are giving special rominence to this question in our three state Sunday school conventions at Grand Junction, Rocky Ford and Greeley. W. A. Philips.

Teaching Catholicism in Public Schools

Undeniable proof has come to my hand that he Catholics are teaching the doctrines of he Romish Church in at least two of the pub-ic schools of Chicago. In these two schools lasses remain after school hours and are in-tructed by public schoolteachers in the cate-hism and in such doctrines as are required o be learned in order to be prepared for onfirmation.

The plea made by the public schoolteachers who are doing this is that in this way the cholars are kept in the public school and can hus go on uninterrupedly with their studies o graduation, instead of quitting for a time nd thus losing ground by going to the paro-hial school. The two schools where this thin dge of the wedge of Romanism is being in-erted are the Cooper School, West 19th street, etween Ashland avenue and Paulina street, nd the Jirka school on 17th street, between Loomis and Laflin streets.

Presbyterian Minister.

Another Quotation

If Dr. Fox had seen Dr. Briggs's latest book efore he wrote the letter lately published in The Continent he would undoubtedly have been lad to make another quotation from him, as ollows:

"We must apply the same principles of riticism and interpretation to the creeds as o the Holy Scriptures. We cannot tolerate in he one case, any more than in the other, mis-nterpretation in the interests of any modern heories whatever. These creeds have their istoric meaning, which we must either accept r reject. We cannot honestly accept them n form and reject them in substance."

Robert Barbour.

Pastors and Scientific Farming

As one acquainted with conditions in the arming districts of the eastern states—and they oubtless do not differ much from those in the western—the writer fails to appreciate much hat has lately been published about the need f young ministers for the country being so well educated in the science of soils and other gricultural realities, and the "art of tilling God's good earth," that they may be able to nstruct their farmer parishioners in these hings and inaugurate reforms in agriculture nd make it more attractive and profitable.

It fails to take into account the progress the armer has made in these directions the past uarter of a century. Through the circulation f the agricultural journal, and bulletins sent ut statedly by the agricultural department of the government, and lecturers from state agricultural colleges, and discussions in granges and farmers' institutes, and extended articles and criticisms in daily and weekly papers, farmers have become well informed in the science of soils and the needed composition of fertilizers for various grains and the benefits of rotation of crops.

As we write our attention is called to a well known city daily which has four pages devoted to the farm and its crops, with striking illustrations, and this is a feature every week not only of this paper but of many others. Many farmers have sent their sons to agricultural colleges and the knowledge there attained has later been utilized at home.

There is little doubt that most of the farmers of Pennsylvania, New York and New Jersey are better informed in respect to the science of farming than any candidate for the ministry could hope to be through a limited course of lectures on the subject during his seminary career.

Of course it is desirable that he should have a general acquaintance with the subject, as with every other, so as to take an interest in it and converse intelligently upon it, but as to being fitted to instruct the farmer how to farm, and what grains to raise, and how to feed the soil, it is neither practicable nor necessary. The attempt would frequently expose him to ridicule. W. P. W.

Makemie's Death and Burial

In the admirable article by Mr. Ellis on Makemieland in The Continent of May 15 a doubt is implied of facts which we had regarded as settled. The words are these: "There is an intimation that, inasmuch as the names of the undertaker and physician who cared for Mr. Makemie at the end are not found in the Accomack records, perhaps he was on a visit to Boston when he died. This, like other moot points, will surely be made clear in good time."

After years of painstaking research into all that concerns our founder, I want to state that there lingers no uncertainty as to where Makemie died and was buried. Careful investigation settled the question before, but singularly the Boston mare's-nest was sprung while the work for the Holden's Creek monument was in progress. Everything stopped until Dr. McCook and his helpers looked into the matter thoroughly and secured incontrovertible proofs.

1. There was not a scintilla of evidence for the Boston guess.

2. There is no hint anywhere that Mr. Makemie was ever in Boston but once—in 1707, the year of his arrest and persecution in New York. There is not the shadow of possibility that he was back in New England in 1708, the year of his death.

3. It would appear that Mr. Makemie's health was broken by his persecutions and exposures and wrongs connected with his trial. He speaks of a "tedious illness," and he was to fade away at about 50 years of age.

4. The writer was fortunate enough to interview two living witnesses not long before they died, aged but clear in mind and definite in details—two survivors who had grown up among the contemporaries of Madam Ann Makemie Holden, daughter of our pioneer, in a community that knew all about the Makemies. The old brick inclosure and the broken tombstones were familiar objects to these unimpeachable witnesses. Thus we heard directly from Madam Holden's own neighbors.

5. That Dr. Charles Barrett and the undertaker, William Coman, are mentioned but once on the Accomack records (here in connection with their charges for services to our founder), proves nothing. Other Virginians of that day —like many Virginians of today—are not mentioned upon the court records at all. But we found the family names of Barrett and Coman in the traditions of the people.

6. But were there no other evidence, the will of Mr. Makemie is evidence all sufficient. The will was made and witnessed on the 27th of April, 1708, and probated on the 4th of August following. Of course he had died between these two dates. Now who affixed their signatures to the will of the dying man as witnesses? Bostonians? No, it is attested by six of his Accomack neighbors, prominent citizens of Virginia.

All this is impregnable. The Presbyterian Historical Society, thoroughly convinced, hesitated no longer and went on triumphantly in the erection of the handsome memorial at our pioneer's home on beautiful Holden's Creek. There Francis Makemie and wife and daughters sleep. L. P. Bowen.

Must Religion Be Relegated?

In answer to this question, asked in The Continent recently, reference is only necessary to the season just closing in the boys' department of the Minneapolis Y. M. C. A.—or in many other associations for that matter. The boys of that department are organized in clubs of ten each, with officers, business meetings, dues and the accompanying paraphernalia; and with an honorary member who is the club leader—an older boy or young man. These clubs compete with others of their same class in gymnasium work, club attendance and Bible study. Next year it is planned to include school standing.

The boys who came to the gymnasium remained for the Bible study class. The attention given during the study period would have shamed many a Sunday school class. The leaders were not primarily athletic heroes, although they were interested in what interested their boys, and while the boys saw their leader principally in the Bible study period, they were loyal to him and regarded him with as much hero worship as if he had been their favorite baseball pitcher or star track man. And when the final banquet was held the toasts given by the boys did not glorify their athletic victories, but rather recalled with a wealth of real sentiment the friendships that had been made, with a realization at heart of the real spirit of the Y. M. C. A.—equilateral development as expressed in the motto of which the emblem of the triangle is typical, "And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man."

But a more direct answer to this question is found in the observance by the department of the week preceding Easter as decision week. A month before the leaders at their regular meeting had begun to plan for it, and kept it close to their minds and hearts. Each one presented to his boys the question of "decision" in the manner that seemed most advisable, with a passion to set before the boys the ideal of Christ compellingly, simply and with particular appeal to the strength of manhood. The Christian life was presented naturally, without undue emotion or persuasion beyond the simple portrayal of the ideal to the boys. Cards were given out and in one class were returned by every boy present.

That the class was not composed of other than real boys is shown by the fact that it won by a good margin the gymnasium events of the season, and one of its boys, whose decision to lead the Christian life was one of deepest effect on his life, was the highest individual winner among the entire 300. In order to make a class of boys of 17 to 19 years a success is it necessary to relegate religion—real religion—to the background, to a place below athletics? D.

Should It Have Been Omitted?

I wish to enter protest against the use of the columns of The Continent for the publication of any story—or other article—that glorifies tobacco smoke. There are thousands of parents, readers of The Continent, who are doing their best to keep their sons from forming the habit of smoking. One of the worst obstacles to their success is the example of preachers who smoke. But to have such an interesting story as "Bradford Horton, Man" at the very climax of interest exalt a "well-worn pipe" as the source of comfort to the missionary hero—it's too much for my blood. The story has doubtless been read by thousands of young people. We subscribers expect the influence of The Continent in our homes to be the best that can be had for the money. Why should it not be so?

George H. Patch.

"The Fly in the Ointment"

Too bad to have a periodical as good as The Continent spoiled by small things. In the closing chapter of the serial, "Bradford Horton, Man," he is represented as smoking an old black pipe, and he a most remarkable preacher, too! Is there no way for a man to drive away the blues except by producing a blue cloud whose odor is so disagreeable to so many people that even soulless corporations make provision for the separation of smokers and other people? Hardly an advertisement of clothing as well as many others articles in even our best magazines that does not represent the young man with a cigar in his mouth. Why continue to encourage an extravagant, unhealthful and filthy, if not actually sinful, habit?

A. A. GALT.

Ways of Working

Sermons by Greatest Preachers

A Congregational church in a small town near Chicago has for several years tried a plan for supplying the pulpit during the summer vacation of the pastor which is both satisfying and inexpensive. The service is presided over by one of the deacons of the church and the usual opening service is given. In place of the sermon delivered by a pastor, the deacon at the proper time reads one of the great sermons of Talmage or Hillis, or some other preacher. This plan has been found far better for the congregation than closing the church. The element of surprise could be introduced in such a service by a clever announcement of the next sermon.

Boosting Summer Conferences

The young people of Auburn, N. Y., in May formed a loose organization to increase attendance at the summer conference of the Missionary Education Movement. The plan could be copied in any city to boost any of the numerous series of summer conferences. All of the young people of Auburn interested in missions or members of any missionary organization are eligible to the Auburn Young People's Missionary Movement. The officers must attend a conference during the summer following their election, expenses paid by the organization. This money is to be raised by entertainments and the officers are sent from their own churches, not from the new association. Representatives provide programs for Bible schools of the city on missionary Sunday and otherwise promote the study of missions, especially through the various young people's societies of the various churches. This organization was started by young people who last year attended the Silver Bay conference of the Missionary Education Movement.

A Volunteer Vacation School

There are many who believe in the vacation Bible school who are confronted with the problem of expense. That was the problem before the South Chicago Ministers' Association a year ago, when $250 was asked for Bible instruction for six weeks. The pastors of Baptist, Congregational, Disciple, Episcopal, Methodist and Presbyterian churches combined their forces and conducted a school by giving their own time and obtaining such other help as could be given free.

The total expense was about $15, which was spent for advertising and carfare for outings. The work of the school compared favorably with the schools manned by paid teachers. The program of the regular daily vacation schools was carried out.

Bible Baseball Game

Two teams, boys and girls, labeled to correspond with the positions on a baseball nine, recently played a contest at First church, South Bend, Ind., in which questions on the Bible were used by the pitchers in place of a ball. The pitcher hurled a question at the batter and if he answered correctly he advanced to first base. If he missed, the catcher had a try at it. If the catcher answered it correctly the batter was out, otherwise he took a base on balls. The score was 50 to 38 in favor of the girls.

Guests Pay by Weight

Admission to a social held recently by the brotherhood of First church, Los Angeles, was in more or less strict conformance to parcel post rates. Each arrival was measured and weighed and paid at the rate of one-tenth of a cent a pound to the social, which was counted a great success. Guests got refreshments by presenting their parcel post cards to a window.

"Catch-My-Pal" in Detroit

The founder of the "Catch-My-Pal" movement, Rev. R. J. Patterson of Belfast, Ireland, spent the first eight days of June in Detroit, during which he delivered sixteen addresses to audiences that varied in number from 100 to 1,800. Most of the meetings were held in churches, though some of the best were those at the Y. M. C. A. and the noonday meetings at the automobile factories, where the factory hands gave him an enthusiastic reception.

Mr. Patterson is a member of the Presbytery of Belfast. For seventeen years he was pastor in Armagh, where he was pained and appalled by the blighting effects of drink. He longed to do something to rescue the people from the grip of their ancient foe and the opportunity came in 1909 in answer to prayer, as he declares, on the 13th of July, "which in Ireland always falls on the day after the 12th." He came across six men gathered about a lamp post and got their promise to come to his house three days later and sign the total abstinence pledge. This they were to do in the presence of himself and of each other, and not secretly. He made it a condition that each should go out and catch his "pal" and bring him to the next meeting. At the fourth meeting 105 men met him at the schoolhouse, among them many of the hardest drinkers of the town. They all signed the pledge and, standing up, repeated the pledge with uplifted hand in token of dependence upon Divine help; then closing their fists as a sign of Irish determination, they repeated after him the "Catch-My-Pal" watchword, "We-Will-See-This-Thing-Through." The movement spread rapidly and he soon found himself deluged with requests to speak in other towns. Within a year 130,000 persons had signed, and though nearly four years have passed, the work goes on with every evidence of vigor and permanency.

Mr. Patterson is a man of youthful appearance, of pleasing address, charming personality and most entertaining in private conversation. In addresses he uses the language of the common people. He knows nothing of the technique of the mere professional lecturer and denies that he has any powers of oratory. He reasons with his hearers that he may move their hearts. He was heard with equal delight by the cultured audience that filled First church and the workmen who had just set away their dinner pails and came to the meeting in their working clothes.

In his Detroit meetings Mr. Patterson's aim was not so much to get signers to the pledge as to enlist workers who should go out after their friends who were known to be drinkers, however moderate, and induce them to become total abstainers. Many hundred did, however, sign the pledge. It is now expected that under the auspices of the Anti-Saloon League the work thus begun will be crystallized into an organized movement that shall enlist every Protestant church of the city in a special effort to reclaim drinking men, each working within its own bounds.

After leaving Detroit Mr. Patterson went to Flint, Mich., where he spoke for an hour to 1,200 persons in the Presbyterian church and later addressed an overflow meeting in the Baptist church. June 10 he spoke in Grand Rapids. His itinerary includes a short stay in Chicago, addresses at Omaha, Denver, Salt Lake City, Boise, Idaho, and three speeches at the Christian citizenship convention at Portland, Ore. His stay in America is to cover three months, and on his return from the coast he will be heard at various summer assemblies, including Bay View, Mich.

ALEXANDER DAUSKIN.

Monticello Has Diamond Jubilee

President Henry C. King of Oberlin College, which opened its doors to women only five years before the founding of Monticello Seminary, was the preacher at the opening of the exercises in commemoration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of Monticello at Godfrey, Ill. June 2 was devoted to reunions of different

A Titanic Task

"Ten Million Dollars for Ministerial Relief and Sustentation is a Titanic Task. To put it before a man and say to him, "You go ahead and do it," would be to demand the impossible. To put it before the Church and say, "We, with you, will do it," is something quite different; and in that spirit may our Church set itself to this plan today and in the months that lie before us."

The closing words of the address by Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Relief and Sustentation, given before the General Assembly at Atlanta.

If you want a printed copy of the stenographic report of the General Assembly addresses of Dr. Coffin, Dr. John R. Davies, President of the Board, and Dr. William Hiram Foulkes, General Secretary, a postal card request will bring you the copy.

Ministerial Relief and Sustentation
WILLIAM HIRAM FOULKES, General Secretary
507 Witherspoon Building - Philadelphia, Pa.

classes, which met at Alton, St. Louis and other places in the vicinity for luncheons and outings. The alumnæ presented an entertainment for the guests that evening. The anniversary exercises were merged with the commencement program Tuesday, when the chief speaker was Dr. Mary Emma Woolley, president of Mount Holyoke. Addresses were also made by Walter S. Booth, assistant superintendent of public instruction, President James of the University of Illinois, President Sabin of Milwaukee-Downer College, Dr. W. A. Colledge, president of the board of trustees, and others. The pageant on commencement afternoon represented symbolically the typical events of the Monticello year. The alumnæ have made an encouraging beginning toward raising a fund which is to be their anniversary gift. The school has reached a large measure of success under the principal, Miss Martina C. Erickson.

Temperance Topics

—The American Issue, with a keen eye for significant advances in the temperance fight, presents these figures from The American Contractor, a building publication. The figures show the total amount spent on new structures or additions according to contracts let for saloons and churches in the years named. The changing relation of the totals in six years ought to be encouraging to the big army of temperance fighters:

In 1906—	Breweries and distilleries.	$14,578,000
	Churches	5,632,731
In 1912—	Breweries and distilleries.	2,937,785
	Churches	14,870,506
The first four months of 1913—
	Breweries and distilleries.	429,500
	Churches	4,389,986

—The Webb law in action has surprised a arge number of different people in widely scattered sections of the country. In Kansas City, Kan., for example, where brewers have been in the habit of sending wagons of beer from Missouri across the river, selling the beverage from door to door, one stop cost the brewers $500. There are no more wagons crossing the state line. In Iowa it is said that the new law revives a clause requiring a certificate from a clerk of court with each shipment showing that the consignee is entitled to receive the goods. The Burlington road has decided to receive no shipments unless accompanied by this bothersome certificate.

—One of the significant changes in the attitude of the public toward the liquor traffic s the large number of cartoons appearing in widely circulated papers portraying the evil results of drink, with a lesson which only a picture can drive home. Collier's Weekly has been running a series of these, in most cases parodying the advertising phrase connected with the sale of the liquor. A daily paper in Baltimore recently showed a whisky bottle as a tombstone, with the suggestion that the cartoon should be given to anyone investing money in such an expensive tombstone.

—It is reported that Hecla, S. D., has not only raised the license fee for saloons to $1,500 but prohibits saloons within 150 feet of the main street, the only business street.

—The Webb law has improved conditions in Maine, railways refusing shipments.

Indiana Bankers Consider Church and Country Life

Two phrases have magical influence on home missions in America today—"immigration" and "the country church." A notable conference was held in Indianapolis June 3 and 4 on "Agriculture and Country Life in Indiana." Although called by the agricultural committee of the Indiana Bankers' Association, which met the expenses of the meeting, fourteen other organizations and institutions were represented on the executive committee to work out permanent plans to make Indiana farm life more attractive.

The conference went on record for a revitalized country church. Among the resolutions passed the following is of special interest. It called on "the religious denominations to recognize the very great importance of hearty, intelligent, effective cooperation in promoting the well-being and increasing the usefulness of the country church, to the end that unnecessary duplication of effort and division of religious workers be avoided, supernumerary churches be abandoned and the remaining ones strengthened by the merging of church societies." It declared that this would enable the church more effectively to minister to both "the spiritual and social needs of their respective communities."

When representative business men from several states call for such conditions let the church take notice and do her part. On all sides it was considered the important thing to produce noble manhood and womanhood on the farm, as essential to the best development of the state. Here the country church, as a social center and character-building institution, can fill a large place.

The writer asked the leading speaker on "Farm Life" if he knew Dr. Warren H. Wilson of New York, superintendent of the department of church and country life of the Presbyterian Church, and his answer was, "Yes, he is a winner." The rural survey in Indiana is a monument to Dr. Wilson. It is of great value in showing conditions which help to arouse the church to see its opportunity in a renaissance of country life. There was an estimated attendance of 1,000 representative people from over the state during the two days' conference. EDGAR L. WILLIAMS.

New Chapel for Persians

One half of the 2,500 Persians in the United States live in Chicago and are centered largely on the North side not far from Chicago avenue. The only religious work which has a foothold among them is that conducted by Rev. Haidow Ablahat under the direction of Fourth Church. Other Persian missions are at Yonkers, N. Y., and New Britain, Conn. For a number of years services have been held in a rented store building on Chicago avenue across from Moody church. Exercises were held last week dedicating the new chapel built specially for this work four blocks from the old location on Huron street—the Carter Memorial Assyrian-Persian chapel.

Chapel for the Persians of Chicago

The dedication took place June 8 with services at 3 o'clock, participated in by Dr. John Timothy Stone, Dr. E. P. Hill, Rev. Claude Porter Terry and Mr. Ablahat. Monday was historical evening, in charge of the Church Extension Board of Chicago. Dr. F. G. Coan of Urumia, Persia, assisted the pastor in preaching services each evening. Saturday night was the usual Christian Endeavor meeting and last Sunday afternoon was the consecration service, when Dr. Coan preached and Dr. John Newton Freeman also took part.

This mission is the outgrowth of a Bible class started by a Persian merchant in 1902. Sunday school is conducted each Sunday morning and rooms in the rear of the tasteful auditorium will accommodate the classes, which are composed mostly of young men.

Rev. Robert A. Elwood has begun services in "Board Walk Church" at Atlantic City for his fifth summer. Dr. Elwood preaches at the Bijou theater on the Board Walk every Sunday morning. Other pastors are apt to complain of preaching to a procession, but Mr. Elwood counts it a sign of success in the thing he is trying to do that 90 per cent of his hearers every Sabbath morning are strangers.

Pears'
The public's choice since 1789.
"Your cheeks are peaches," he cried.
"No, they are Pears'," she replied.
Pears' Soap brings the color of health to the skin.
It is the finest toilet soap in all the world.

Plan for Greater Efficiency

Home Board Surveys Baltimore Churches—Advertising Men Speak from Pulpits—Coleman a Christian Endeavor Product.

BALTIMORE—The Board of Home Missions, in cooperation with the home missions committee of presbytery and the Presbyterian Association of the city, has begun an investigation of the conditions of Presbyterian churches with a view to increasing their efficiency and also for the purpose of more intelligently comprehending the needs of the field so that when the association makes its appeals for funds for the extension of the church it can present facts which will make the need clear. Rev. W. P. Shriver, superintendent of immigration, is to have this work in charge and is already on the field. The schedules are the same as those recently used in connection with a similar investigation of the Presbytery of Brooklyn, and together with the survey of the rural portion of presbytery will present the

GREAT REVIVAL HYMNS
"BILLY" SUNDAY says:
"Song has always played an important part in every effort to set the world Godward. I consider
Great Revival Hymns
the best Gospel song book that has been published for years."
Over 400,000 Sold
This book is used exclusively in the "Billy" Sunday evangelistic campaigns. GREAT REVIVAL HYMNS will arouse enthusiasm in your various church services. We will send you a copy, postpaid, on approval, together with quantity prices. "TRY IT." Our complete catalog, including Songs for Men, Temperance Songs, Chorus Collection, Octavo Solos, Duets, etc., sent on request. Also learn how to obtain our new publications at half price. Great Revival Hymns No. 2 will soon be ready.
THE RODEHEAVER COMPANY
12-14 W. Washington St., :: Chicago

conditions of Presbyterianism in Maryland as never before.

June 13 officers of Babcock Memorial church gave a reception to Rev. Edward Haines Kistler and his wife, who have just begun their work.

The Associated Advertising Clubs of America met in Baltimore and on Sunday, June 8, thirty of the prominent pulpits of the city were filled by laymen from among these visitors. The president of the clubs is George W. Coleman, a product of Christian Endeavor and for many years manager and publisher of The Christian Endeavor World. William Shaw, general secretary of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, was also one of the visiting delegates, and he addressed the Baltimore Christian Endeavor Union at its annual meeting during his stay in the city. Dr. J. A. Macdonald, editor of The Toronto Globe, was also among the speakers.

Old Second church, located in the midst of an immigrant population, which has forced the native membership into remote parts of the city, has entered into a serious attempt to minister to the immediate surroundings and is so far succeeding that the old building is to be extensively repaired and changed to meet these new demands. The pastor, Rev. Edward Niles, is winning the sympathy and appreciation of the Jewish and other peoples who now surround the church and is also ministering acceptably to the large congregation which still remains faithful to the old church.

Robert P. Kerr, D. D., celebrated the close of the tenth year of his pastorate of Northminster church June 1. Dr. Kerr came from First church of Richmond and in his earlier ministry was for a time copastor with the grandfather of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson in the Independent Presbyterian church of Savannah.

On the evening of June 2 the congregation of Faith church gave their pastor, John P. Campbell, D. D., a reception. It was the occasion of his completion of thirty-five years as their pastor, and just as he was about to sail for the meeting of the Alliance of the Reformed Churches at Aberdeen. As an expression of their love the people gave him thirty-five $10 gold pieces.

Dr. Joseph W. Cochran of Philadelphia preached the baccalaureate sermon at Wilson College, Chambersburg, Pa. President E. D. Warfield of Lafayette College delivered the commencement address. Music recitals had a large part in the closing exercises of the year.

BEGAN YOUNG

Had "Coffee Nerves" from Youth

"When very young I began using coffee and continued up to the last six months," writes a Texas girl.

"I had been exceedingly nervous, thin and very sallow. After quitting coffee and drinking Postum about a month my nervousness disappeared and has never returned. This is the more remarkable as I am a primary teacher and have kept right on with my work.

"My complexion now is clear and rosy, my skin soft and smooth. As a good complexion was something I had greatly desired, I feel amply repaid, even though this were the only benefit derived from drinking Postum.

"Before beginning its use I had suffered greatly from indigestion and headache; these troubles are now unknown.

"I changed from coffee to Postum without the slightest inconvenience, did not even have a headache. Have known coffee drinkers, who were visiting me, to use Postum a week without being aware that they were not drinking coffee."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for booklet, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum comes in two forms.

Regular (must be boiled).

Instant Postum doesn't require boiling, but is prepared instantly by stirring a level teaspoonful in an ordinary cup of hot water, which makes it right for most persons.

A big cup requires more, and some people who like strong things put in a heaping spoonful and temper it with a large supply of cream.

Experiment until you know the amount that pleases your palate and have it served that way in the future.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

Will Push Work During Summer

Downtown Buffalo Will Have Opportunity to Worship—Calvary Church Extends Its Services—Magyars Have New Edifice.

BUFFALO—Calvary church is entering its second year of policy as a downtown church. Rev. D. M. Geddes has begun his work as its associate pastor. The expansion of the work has encouraged the ladies of the church to add a woman visitor, as well as a woman assistant to the office staff. The Presbyterian Union has raised $3,000 to aid in this downtown extension work for the coming year. Other churches in the neighborhood are adapting their methods of work to the boarding house district with the growing conviction that they can all, by persistence, build up a self-supporting downtown constituency. Special plans have been formed to keep up the interest during the summer months, Mr. Ross, who is at the head of the Calvary work, having taken his vacation early in order to be with the church during this period.

Presbytery at its last meeting adjourned to meet in the church of Springfield in order to ordain A. B. Fowler as an evangelist. Mr. Fowler, who is a member of Springfield church, expects to become a foreign missionary.

A great joy has come to the Magyars of Lackawanna through the dedication of their beautiful new church edifice. The time of the dedication was turned into a gala day. The members of the several societies of the church wore regalia and, accompanied by several bands and escorted by the mayor and officers of the city, marched from the steel plant to the church edifice. The dedicatory services were conducted in both Magyar and English, and continued through the day and evening.

Use Autos to Evangelize City

Philadelphia Committee Plans to Reach Many Groups—Death of Mr. Colton Is Mourned—Zurich Pilgrims Honored.

PHILADELPHIA—Three automobiles will be utilized by the Presbyterian summer evangelistic committee for open air evangelism this summer. They will be used every evening, as the weather permits, conducting services at three locations. Three tents will be operated in other locations and there will be open air services at five points. The superintendent, as for several previous summers, will be W. P. Fulton, D. D.

The Presbyterian church of this city and vicinity mourns very deeply the recent sudden death of John Milton Colton, elder of Abington church, trustee of the General Assembly and chairman of its committee of finance, member of the Presbyterian Board of Publication and Sabbath School Work and active in various charitable and religious agencies. Many are the benevolent causes which will miss his generous gifts and wise counsels. He had but recently paid for the erection of an Italian church in Germantown and a Presbyterian orphanage cottage, and was planning other equally important enterprises. He was a member of the last General Assembly and seemed in vigorous health. He was in his sixty-fourth year.

Forty "Pilgrims to Zurich" were given a reception by John Wanamaker in Bethany Brotherhood house previous to starting to Boston to take passage.

PAY HONOR TO DR. OXTOBY

Very marked appreciation has been shown Dr. W. H. Oxtoby by Tabernacle church in connection with the sundering of his pastoral relation preparatory to assuming the chair of Hebrew exegesis and Old Testament literature in San Francisco Theological Seminary. A complimentary dinner was given him by the session and board of trustees at the Union League June 7. On the evening of June 9 a largely attended congregational reception was given Dr. and Mrs. Oxtoby in the church rooms. As a testimonial of appreciation and esteem a beautiful grandfather's clock was presented Dr. Oxtoby. He was also remembered in gifts by the Christian Endeavor society and the branch Sunday school.

Dr. E. M. Wherry, the distinguished missionary of India, stopped a few days in Philadelphia on his return to Chicago from attending the missionary conference in New York. He spoke on Sunday in Lansdowne church for Rev. William Boyd and briefly at the ministers' meeting on Monday. He has relatives and many warm friends in this section. The four who went out as missionaries together to India forty years ago, viz., Dr. and Mrs. Wherry, Rev. Francis Heyl and Dr. Charles B. Newton, are still living and active in service for the Master.

Philadelphia as the native city of Dr. Henry van Dyke rejoices in all the honors that come to him. He was born here Nov. 10, 1852, while his father, Dr. Henry J. van Dyke, was pastor of First church of Germantown.

HEADS PUBLICATION BOARD

William H. Scott has been elected president of the Board of Publication and Sabbath School Work as successor to Judge Robert N. Willson, who recently resigned. Mr. Scott has been a member of the board for many years.

Announcement of the death of Rev. Samuel T. Graham, pastor of Tennent Memorial church, came as a great shock to his brethren in the ministry and friends, few of whom knew he was ill. The event occurred in the Presbyterian hospital June 11. He was but 43 years of age and full of vigor and ambition. He graduated from Princeton Seminary in 1900, having come thither from Ireland. After serving churches in Dutch Neck and Elizabeth, N. J., he came three years ago to this city, where he did a good work. He was an able preacher and tireless worker. He leaves a young widow.

The corner stone of a Y. M. C. A. building for negro young men and boys in the southern part of the city, to cost $100,000, was recently laid. The secretary of the southwestern branch, H. W. Porter, and George H. White, formerly in Congress from North Carolina, spoke.

Dr. Janvier preached the baccalaureate sermon at the recent commencement of Ursinus College. The degree of LL. D. was conferred by the college on John Wanamaker. Mr. Wanamaker was present as guest of honor and made an address. W. P. WHITE.

THE PASSING OF "THE PIE HABIT"

One of the Big Dining Halls at Harvard Substitutes Cereal Breakfast Foods for Pie and Other Desserts

Notwithstanding the valiant army that rushes to the defense of pie every time its food value is assailed, the spread of dietetic intelligence from year to year cannot fail to weaken its hold upon popular favor. Like the rocking chair, pie is distinctly an American institution. You can travel all over Continental Europe without seeing a rocking chair or a piece of pie.

It is not probable that we will ever dispense with the rocking chair, foolish as the rocking habit seems, but the time is near at hand when the pie habit will have to go, even though it may seem un-American to leave it out of our dietary.

The Harvard dining association, which operates Memorial Hall for the benefit of 1,200 of the university students, surprised the diners a few days ago by serving breakfast cereals for dessert at the noonday and evening meals. It was announced that the change was made in the interest of health and higher mental efficiency on the part of the students. Whether the change was made in response to advanced dietetic intelligence or not, it is certain that eating cereals in combination with fruit, in place of pie and other desserts, will insure better digestion, better health, more real body-building nutriment and hence keener minds and stronger bodies.

Two shredded wheat biscuits, heated in the oven to restore crispness, and eaten with fresh berries, sliced bananas, or other fruits, with cream, makes not only a delicious dessert but actually supplies all the nutriment one needs for a half day's work. These biscuits contain all the muscle-making, brain-building elements in the whole wheat grain made digestible by steam cooking, shredding and baking. They contain no fats, no yeast, no chemicals of any kind—just pure whole wheat in its most digestible form. They combine easily and deliciously with all kinds of fresh or stewed fruits.

Would Raise Fund for Hospital

Churches Want to Obtain $300,000—Sunday Schools Help Call Chicago Pastor to Shady Side—Presbytery to Pass Around Honors.

PITTSBURG—The campaign to raise $300,000 for the Presbyterian hospital was launched at an enthusiastic meeting in First church June 10. Many of the churches have responded and appointed special committees to cooperate. Noon luncheons are being given each day by the Hospital Aid Society in Second church. Every Sunday school in the presbytery is being urged to contribute toward the sum of $20,000 for a children's ward. A book of remembrance is to be kept and the name of every child who contributes registered.

After a three years' search for a pastor Shady Side church has issued a call to Hugh T. Kerr, D. D., pastor of Fullerton Avenue church, Chicago. Shady Side church is one of the wealthiest per member in the city. The salary of the new pastor is to be $6,000 and parsonage. Dr. Kerr is not a stranger in Pittsburg, having graduated from Western Theological Seminary in 1897 and served as pastor of Oakland church from 1897 to 1901

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the marriage and the twentieth anniversary of the pastorate of Dr. J. P. Jordan, was celebrated by McDonald congregation June 9. Rev. and Mrs. Jordan were presented with a silver bowl filled with silver dollars.

The June meeting of Pittsburg Presbytery was held June 10 in First church; North side. The committee on examinations proposed that an average of 75 per cent be necessary to pass in all examinations given by presbytery. After considerable discussion it was adopted. The committee appointed to propose an amendment to the rules governing election of delegates to synod and Assembly reported rules aimed at a more equitable distribution of these honors. The chairman, Dr. John Royal Harris, called attention to the fact that some men have been in the presbytery for many years without having ever attended an Assembly. The whole matter was again referred. The presbyterial missions committee reported that the new Lithuanian church on the South side, the gift of one woman, would soon be completed, and that the donor had also added $2,000 to erect a parsonage. Third church was granted leave to start a mission Sunday school in the vicinity of the Garfield public school building.

P. W. Snyder.

Has Served for Quarter Century

Detroit Church Celebrates Anniversary—Banquet of Woodward Avenue Men Results in $12,000 Being Pledged on Debt.

DETROIT—An event of unusual interest to many older Presbyterians was the twenty-fifth anniversary celebration at Immanuel church June 1.' This church started as a mission of Fort Street church in June, 1888, in a small hall on Baker street. During the twenty-five years nearly 1,700 names have appeared on the membership roll. There are at present 950 names on the active list. During this period $156,976 has been raised for current expenses and new church building, besides $17,000 for benevolences. Many other interesting facts were brought out by the pastor, Rev. A. H. Cameron, in his anniversary sermon. Sunday evening addresses were made by Elisha A. Fraser, first teacher in the Bible school; Rev. W. T. Jaquess and Rev. J. Frederick Fitschen, Jr. Mr. Cameron, the fourth pastor of the church, is now in the eleventh year of service here. To his untiring efforts and consecrated personality is largely due the present prosperous condition of the church.

Since the coming of Rev. Hugh Jack to the pastorate of Central church there has been marked improvement, especially in attendance at the weekly prayer meeting and the evening service.

The second anniversary of the dedication of their beautiful church edifice was observed by Highland Park congregation May 25. Dr. Joseph A. Vance of First church preached at the morning service and Rev. T. C. Sykes of Grosse Pointe in the evening. This suburb has been unusually successful in combating the encroachments of the saloon and places of hurtful amusements. In measures for public betterment the Presbyterian church has taken a leading part and the pastor, Rev. J. D. MacDonald, now in his eleventh year with this church, has proved a wise, fearless and consecrated worker. At the close of the anniversary service $5,000 was raised for the church debt.

The men's banquet given June 6 by officials to the members and friends of Woodward Avenue church brought out 400 men. Dr. W. C. Covert of Chicago, a former Michigan man and editor of Men at Work, was the guest of the evening and, as always, spoke in a happy, optimistic vein. Such was the interest aroused that without any previous planning a debt-raising movement was started which resulted in nearly $12,000 being pledged. Rev. S. L. Divine, pastor, is expected to return in a few weeks from a tour around the world. The pastor's assistant, S. R. Meyers, is now in charge.

Prepare for the C. E. Convention

Los Angeles Committee Issues Bulletin of Information—Three New Churches Organized—Push Campaign Against Liquor.

LOS ANGELES—The convention committee of the international Christian Endeavor convention to be held here July 9-14 has issued an "information bulletin" which contains a list of the speakers who have been secured and has much valuable information in regard to transportation, entertainment, side trips and general arrangements for the comfort and convenience of delegates. This committee is composed of fifteen leading workers of Los Angeles union, and has for chairman Leonard Merrill and for secretary J. O. Smith. President John Willis Baer is advisory member of the committee. Headquarters address is 912 Security building, Los Angeles.

Rev. Frank A. Keller, M. D., of China Inland mission addressed the Presbyterian ministers just prior to his departure for China. He spoke of the work of the tobacco companies which are making an effort to place a sample of their products in every home in China and gave graphic accounts of the work of houseboat parties in reaching thousands of homes in Hunan province for Christ.

Rev. Paul G. Stevens, field secretary of the Sunday School Board in Los Angeles Presbytery, reports the organization of two new churches in the month of June—Hillcrest at San Diego June 1 and Wilmington Park June 8. Another church is to be organized at Long Beach on June 22 with about 125 members.

Dr. Ervin S. Chapman, veteran leader in many antiliquor fights, is endeavoring to obtain an agreement among temperance favoring ecclesiastical bodies of the state to promote a campaign of education leading to an initiative movement against the liquor traffic. Coupled with this is an agreement not to support any initiative movement which has not the support of the federated churches of the state. The W. C. T. U. and the Prohibition party forces are just starting a movement to obtain statewide prohibition in 1914, but the Anti-Saloon League leaders believe the step premature.

Anniversary Finds Pastor Disabled

Dr. Robert B. Beattie, pastor of the great Munn Avenue church, East Orange, N. J., recently asked his congregation for two weeks respite in order to obtain treatment for an old football injury which had recently become troublesome. The treatment was progressing satisfactorily, and Dr. Beattie was about ready to return to his work when, in crossing Central park, New York, from the hospital, he was run over by an automobile, which broke practically all the bones in his left foot. He will not be able to reappear in his pulpit until autumn, although his complete recovery appears assured.

This misfortune will prevent Dr. Beattie from participating with his people in the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the church June 22-24. Dr. James M. Ludlow, former pastor of the congregation, returned last week from Italy and will take Dr. Beattie's place in the exercises. Dr. Ludlow will preach the semicentennial sermon Sunday morning and will be assisted by Dr. Simon J. McPherson of Lawrenceville Academy, who filled the pastorate prior to Dr. Ludlow's term of service, and Dr. George S. Webster of the Church of the Covenant in New York City, who organized for Munn Avenue church the Elmwood mission, which has since developed into a separate congregation. At 4 o'clock on Sunday all the pastors of East Orange will be guests of Munn Avenue church in a community service. Monday the Sunday school will celebrate with a picnic and Tuesday evening, "laymen's night," will be characterized by addresses from old-time members and a reception. Dr. John Douglas Adam, the immediate predecessor of Dr. Beattie, is in England and so unable to take part in the anniversary.

Ripon College has given the degree of D. D. to Rev. W. B. Millard, secretary of the Chicago Church Federation Council.

Home Life for Your Girl Away at School

When the parent feels sure that all of the proper and kindly influences of home are thrown around the daughter while she is away at college he has a satisfying confidence in the institution to which the girl is sent. The school which realizes to the full the responsibility passed to it by parents, and seeks to treat all students as members of a family rather than inmates of an institution, is the only safe substitute for home life. Ward-Belmont, Nashville, Tenn., in continuance of the high ideals of Belmont College and Ward Seminary, assumes the place of a wise parent to all girls intrusted to it. It stands throughout the South as the upholder of all that is best in the social traditions of the Southland, combined with thorough education along all the lines attempted.

Its ample buildings are situated on a twenty-two acre campus, with the characteristic beauty of a charming old southern estate. The climate is healthful; all drinking water is sterilized and aerated, and home influence is cultivated in all departments.

A six years' course of instruction in academic subjects, including college preparation for eastern colleges, in music, art, domestic science and similar subjects develops the young woman for highest usefulness. The faculty is of the highest character and exceptionally large. Teachers trained under best masters of Europe and America conduct the music department, classes being organized so that the talented are not retarded. Bible courses, Y. W. C. A. and church attendance make the religious life active and genuine. Large recitation rooms; every bedroom opens outside. Physical exercise required; rowing, swimming, walking, horseback riding. Send to the registrar for catalogue and illustrated booklet. Ira Landrith, D. D., LL. D., President. J. D. Blanton, LL. D., Vice-President.

Get this one idea (9)

Somebody or some institution has got to stand, in season and out, for the old, old ideals upon which Christian civilization is founded.

The attrition of frivolous and ephemeral and material notions constantly menaces these. For proof, one has but to reread carefully the latest issue of the daily newspaper.

Now the right sort of Christian weekly bears just this witness to the fundamentals—and bears it wisely, winsomely and fearlessly.

The Continent

Dr. Cadman May Go to Chicago

Committee of Second Church Goes to Brooklyn —Dr. Kerr Called to Pittsburg—Women Have Successful Meeting at Highland Park.

CHICAGO—Following action taken at a congregational meeting last week, a committee from Second church went East, and it will probably be known shortly whether or not Dr. S. Parkes Cadman of Brooklyn is to be Dr. Shaw's successor, as rumored in the daily press. Dr. Shaw's resignation was reluctantly concurred in at this meeting. Dr. Cadman is a native of England, where he was born in 1864. He was educated at Richmond College, London, and after ordination to the Methodist ministry became pastor of Metropolitan temple, New York City, in 1895. Since the end of 1900 he has been pastor of Central Congregational church, Brooklyn.

The Woman's Presbyterial Societies for Home and Foreign Missions held an unusually successful quarterly meeting at the charming Highland Park church June 12. Most of the Chicago delegates traveled by special train on the Chicago and Northwestern. In the morning the distinctive work, home and foreign, of the two societies was presented by representatives. Mrs. D. F. Diefenderfer spoke on home missions in the afternoon, Dr. J. C. Garritt of China presenting the foreign work.

The Chicago Brotherhood Council held its final meeting before vacation at the University Club June 13. Committees for the year were announced. The successful strangers' bureau will be continued.

Members of the Woman's Board of the Northwest met at luncheon at the College Club last Friday to do honor to Mrs. John Balcom Shaw, whose administration as president has been highly successful. Mrs. Shaw was reelected for the current year, but retires because of her prospective removal to Los Angeles.

Dr. Kerr Called to Pittsburg

Close upon the announcement of the prospective departure of Dr. Shaw to Los Angeles comes the call of Shady Side church, Pittsburg, to another Chicago pastor, Dr. Hugh T. Kerr, for six years minister of Fullerton Avenue church. Dr. Kerr had no intimation that he was to receive such a summons. He is one of the most active and best known men in Chicago Presbytery and has done a large work in building up his present charge, not only by adding many names to the roll but by removing the debt on the edifice. He was educated at Toronto and studied at Western Seminary, Pittsburg, coming to this city from Hutchinson, Kan., and for the past two years, in addition to his pastoral duties, has been lecturer on religious pedagogy at McCormick Seminary, thus coming in close contact with hundreds of students. Shady Side church, which has been without a pastor for two or three years, is one of the most influential churches in that predominatingly Presbyterian city. The last report gave it 582 members. Fullerton Avenue church has nearly as many. Dr. Kerr has not yet announced his decision, but it is believed he will accept the call.

A. G. Fegert of Third church is the new president of the Christian Endeavor Union.

Rev. Robert A. White, who is in charge of Bethlehem church, has developed a well attended preaching service, in addition to the live Sunday school, which has been in operation for some time.

Next Sunday evening Dr. John Balcom Shaw will preach his farewell sermon at Second church. He will spend the summer in the East and go to his new charge in Los Angeles in the fall. At this last service will be grouped about him in the pulpit six former and present assistants to Dr. Shaw—Martin E. Anderson, Champaign; J. W. Nicely, Crerar Memorial church; M. F. Allbright, La Grange; W. H. Phelps, Belden Avenue church, and E. J. Houghton and E. G. Wood, present assistants.

The men's club of Second church conferred with Dr. Francis M. Fox at a meeting last week in regard to work this summer. They decided to follow the plan of personal invitation to the evening service during the summer.

Several hundred guests, largely representative of Chicago Presbyterianism, traveled on a special train to Lake Forest June 10 to attend the marriage of Miss Harriet McClure, daughter of President J. G. K. McClure, to Robert D. Stuart. Lake Forest church was filled with the attending friends, who greatly enjoyed an outdoor reception at the McClure home after the marriage. The ceremony was performed by Dr. McClure, assisted by Dr. W. H. W. Boyle.

Religious literature treating up-to-date topics will soon be prepared in various foreign languages if the recommendation of a committee of presbytery is carried out. Rev. N. B. Barr presented a report Monday on the necessity of leaflets for the many foreign peoples in the city. Cooperation with the other Protestant forces of the city through the church federation was suggested.

In connection with the severing by presbytery of the relations of Dr. Shaw with Second church a large number of ministers testified Monday morning to the efficiency of Dr. Shaw in his widely varied activities.

The largest Y. M. C. A. for colored men in the United States was dedicated last Sunday on South Wabash avenue. This is one of the buildings in the country made possible through the initial contribution of Julius Rosenwald. It cost $200,000. Mr. Rosenwald explained how he, a Jew, had been led to contribute largely to the work for colored men. Dr. Booker T. Washington made the principal address. He also later addressed 3,000 on the street.

On West Madison street where the stream of life casts up many derelicts has stood a man for a quarter of a century offering help to any who would ask. A few nights ago the twenty-fifth anniversary of John Stewart as superintendent of the Bible Rescue mission was celebrated by a special program attended by several hundred men who have been led to better lives through this mission. During the period of Mr. Stewart's service 91,250 men, it is estimated, have decided to reform through the influence of the Christian lighthouse. Food and shelter and assistance in finding work are offered the men who visit the mission, and during May 153 men were assisted to positions. S. M. Meek is president of the mission and J. W. Scott of Carson, Pirie, Scott and Company is treasurer.

Summer School of Theology a Success

The first session of the Summer School of Theology of Princeton Seminary, May 26 to June 6, has been pronounced a success by those who attended it. One hundred and ten students registered, including a dozen ladies and several laymen. Ten denominations and eighteen theological seminaries were represented. The interest of the occasion was enhanced by the presence during the first week of the school of the executive committee of the World's Federation of Students, consisting of Dr. John R. Mott, chairman, and forty others representing almost every nation in the world. The students before leaving adopted resolutions of thanks for the privileges of the sessions, and added the formal request that the school be made a permanent feature of the institution. The ministers in attendance said that such a school would not rival any present summer conference.

Try to Buy Off Sunday Races

Automobiles races will be held in Tacoma, Wash., Sunday, July 6, in connection with the Montamara Festo, according to the announcement of the carnival management. The Sabbath Observance League attempted to prevent this desecration and tried to raise $12,500 which the managers of the race demanded to insure them against loss by changing the races from Sunday to Friday. Upwards of half of this sum was pledged, two men giving $500 each, but the full amount could not be obtained and the announcement was issued that the races will be held.

New Brotherhood Committee Meets

Most of the day occupied by the recent meeting in Chicago of Assembly's new committee on brotherhood was occupied with making changes in the constitution to conform to the change in management of the brotherhood, and discussion of policies of work. An executive committee composed of the Chicago members of the committee was named and charged with the duty of selecting a chairman of the full committee, who by virtue of that office will also be president of the National Council. Charles S. Holt, who has served as president, will be unable to act further in that capacity.

Dr. Brown Heads Big Campaign

Foreign Board Secretary Chairman Committee of United Missionary Campaign—Many Accessions to Churches.

NEW YORK—The central committee of the united missionary campaign met in the Methodist Book Concern rooms June 12 for further council in regard to the campaign of next winter, which is expected to include 2,500 missionary conferences and to be followed in March by a simultaneous every-member canvass of practically all the evangelical denominations of the country. The committee was greatly disappointed to receive word that the Protestant Episcopal Church did not see its way clear to participate. On this account Bishop A. S. Lloyd, president of the Protestant Episcopal Mission Board, who had been elected chairman of the central committee, offered his resignation, and Dr. Arthur J. Brown, secretary of the Presbyterian Foreign Board, was elected in his stead and accepted the office. George Innes, the secretary loaned to the campaign by the United Presbyterians, reported that his efforts to secure the adherence of the various denominational agencies had resulted in "lining up" sixteen denominations in the United States and Canada, which number 15,000,000 communicants in 200,000 congregations. Secretary Campbell White of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, who is in charge of the proposed conference of the campaign, reported that fifteen leaders of teams have already been obtained and the territory to be covered by team travels has practically all been assigned for the South and New England. The Middle West and the Pacific coast are, up to this date, the most backward in arrangements.

City Sunday Schools Grow

Stated Clerk Jesse F. Forbes reported to the recent meeting of New York Presbytery that the membership of the Sunday schools of the presbytery had increased 2,358 during the past year, making a total enrollment of 21,900. He also reported that the churches had given $749,463 for congregational expenses and $913,023 to benevolences. In addition $8,209 was given to the American and New York Bible Societies, which increases the entire giving of the churches to $1,662,486. This does not include the $291,398 income from endowment, which was disbursed by presbytery's extension committee.

The presbytery's committee on examination, through its chairman, Dr. H. G. Mendenhall, presented Candidate Bayard Dodge at the last meeting to be examined for licensure. After he had read his statement of belief as required by the standing rules of presbytery this examination was arrested and sustained by unanimous vote. Dr. John Fox, who had protested against the ordination of other young men from Union Seminary, was absent, having gone to Aberdeen to attend the meeting of the Presbyterian Alliance.

Following close upon the reassuring reports regarding the improved health of Dr. Edgar W. Work, moderator of New York Presbytery and pastor of Fourth church, it is announced that his physicians have forbidden his preaching for several months to come.

The speaker at the annual meeting of the New York Christian Endeavor Union last Monday night in Greenwich church was J. Wilbur Chapman, D. D., who was president of the union for two years—1901-1902. Officers were elected for the coming year and rewards for missionary reading were presented.

Open Evangelistic Campaign

Last Monday marked the formal opening of the tent, open air and shop campaign of the city evangelistic committee. Six open air services are being conducted each day at noon in Union square, Madison square and other places Nineteen shop meetings are being conducted, with addresses in English, Spanish and Italian. Two tents are in use now—one for Hungarians and the other for Italians. Rev. Arthur J. Smith, a member of the Presbytery of New York, is directing this work.

During the vacation of Dr. William P. Merrill Brick church pulpit will be occupied by Dr. Robert E. Speer during July.

During the year four new churches were organized. They are at Hunt's Point, Van Nest, Woodlawn Heights and Fort Washington. A net increase of 1,200 members over the year before was reported, which brings the total mem-ership up to 33,249. There were 1,894 added n examination and 1,438 by letter, which akes the largest accession ever reported by ew York Presbytery in a single year.

Two Presbyterian pastors in Brooklyn were sked to deliver baccalaureate sermons to graduating classes of institutions of that city. C. C. lbertson, D. D., of Lafayette Avenue church ddressed the class of Adelphi College and Rev. ohn Barlow of Memorial church preached to e class of Berkeley Institute.

Charles Augustus Stoddard, D. D., for many ears the publisher and editor of The New ork Observer and who celebrated his eightieth nniversary three weeks ago, will finish fifteen ears as head of the New York institution for e instruction of deaf and dumb this week.

While in New York to address the conference of outgoing and furloughed missionaries r. Cleland B. McAfee of McCormick Semiary preached in his former pulpit of Lafaytte Avenue church, Brooklyn, June 1.

FromVarious Fields

Indiana

ews of Indianapolis Churches

Since the summer suspension of vesper servces at Tabernacle church, Rev. E. W. Clipinger and the choir have been giving their unday afternoons to chapel services in some f the public institutions, among which are e women's prison, Old Ladies' Home and eform school.

Memorial Day furnished themes for an unsual number of pulpits; the central rally of e G. A. R. being at the morning service in econd church, where the address was made by e pastor, O. D. Odell, D. D. The chief eaker at the city memorial exercises was Rev. W. Munhall, the evangelist of Philadelphia, ho was ordained at Roberts Park M. E. urch of this city fifty years ago.

Rev. I. N. Houser, for many years a resident f this city engaged in work for the Sabbath chool Board, has removed to Michigan, where e enters the pastorate.

Professor James Y. Simpson of Edinburgh, cotland, lately visited Elder and Mrs. Thomas Day of First church, where he gave an ldress at the morning service.

Professor Hansen, the blind organist of econd church, planned a special Wagner proram in commemoration of the centenary of e great composer.

Presbytery, which met in Second church ne 9, received Rev. John Henry of Beverly, hio, who assumes charge of Bethany church Whiteland. He succeeds his brother, Rev. E. Henry, who is now in Iowa.

The Children's Day evening address at eventh church was delivered by Rev. E. A. llen of Harvard, Ill., formerly pastor of ixth church.

The closing session of the Union Ministers' ssociation took the form of a luncheon at the M. C. A. A shadow over the gathering as cast by reports from the home of the esident, W. S. Sigmund, D. D., whose death as near, the sad event occurring a few days ter the meeting. C. R. S.

An addition is being constructed to West ide church, Logansport, to be used for a unday school room. This congregation was cently nearly deprived of a place of worship the flood, but intends to enlarge its edifice.

California

The corner stone of the new $500,000 home the Los Angeles Bible Institute was laid rently. The institute will accommodate 1,500 udents and is the only school on the coast here the Bible is taught exclusively. It will thirteen stories high and will have accomodations for 683 people in the dormitories. ev. A. P. Prichard, pastor of Central church, ok part in the exercises. Rev. R. A. Torrey dean of the institute.

New Jersey

At Trenton on Sunday, June 1, the Sunday hool of Third church celebrated its sixtyurth anniversary with a service in which the hole congregation participated. Superintendt Edward W. Dunham reported that the total rollment of the school is 1,276, an increase of 120 over a year ago. The features of the anniversary were an address by William T. Ellis and the music of an orchestra conducted by Grant Tullar, the composer.

The second anniversary of the dedication of the Weequahic church, Newark, was observed with special services June 1. The pastor, Dr. Sherman H. Marcy, was in charge of the exercises. Sermons were delivered by Dr. David R. Frazer and Dr. D. W. Lusk.

Pennsylvania

Langhorne church, Rev. Benjamin F. Paist, Jr., pastor, celebrated with appropriate services its twenty-fifth anniversary June 6-8. Many greetings were received.

Rev. Mark Giovagnoli has been obtained as pastor of the church at the Italian settlement of Roseto. Mr. Giovagnoli is a graduate of the Waldensian University at Florence.

June 1 a union temperance meeting was held in First church, Masontown, when John A. Wilson, D. D., a representative of the Anti-Saloon League, delivered a stirring address. Rev. J. Byers Brice is pastor.

Dr. S. A. Martin, formerly professor in Lincoln University and president of Wilson College, has recently resigned the presidency of the state normal school at Shippensburg, a position which he had held for some years.

Several classes in the Sunday school of Calvary church, Wyncote, Dr. W. Barnes Lower pastor, are studying the shorter catechism. Dorothy Boring, a member of the school, recited it to the pastor without prompting and received from the Presbyterian Board of Publication a Bible.

A week's services were held in connection with the dedication of Tully Memorial church of Sharon Hill, Rev. Alexander Mackie pastor. Dr. David Tully preached on Sunday morning and Dr. J. Beveridge Lee of Philadelphia Sunday evening. Chester Presbytery met with the church one day. The new edifice is of stone, Tudor Gothic in style and cruciform. It cost $58,000 and very little debt remains upon it.

South Dakota

A Congregational church at Plankinton of eleven members, with a manse and a comfortable house of worship, was recently received into Sioux Falls Presbytery. The installation of its pastor, Rev. Edward Van Ruschen, called from the White Lake congregation, was held June 4.

First church, Sioux Falls, has matured plans for the erection of a new house of worship to be commenced during the present season. A new edifice is needed to give the church the influential place in the city of which it is worthy. Rev. W. E. Roberts, the pastor, is the inspiration to the new movement.

Livingston Memorial Reformed (Dutch) church of Sioux Falls has applied for admission into Sioux Falls Presbytery. This church is in the center of a large and growing part of the city and is the leading congregation among the denominations there. Rev. John C. Spencer, the Presbyterian pastor, has been leading this church during the past year.

Washington

Dr. Frank M. Silsley, pastor of Westminster church, Seattle, recently contributed an article to a local paper on the relation of young people to the church. He gave as his opinion that not doubt of the doctrines of the church but the pull of worldliness is the cause of young people neglecting their spiritual development.

The report of a special committee of Spokane Presbytery recently recommended the removal of Whitworth College from Tacoma to Spokane. The plan was adopted and the board of directors of the college was asked to indorse the scheme. A campus of forty acres has been offered near Spokane. No announcement has yet been made as to the attitude of the college officials on the proposed change.

Iowa

Revival meetings of a month recently closed at East End church, Ottumwa, under Dr. E. J. Bulgin. The various chapels connected with this organization united in the general effort and the different Sunday schools at some meetings sat together in the large tent in which the meetings were held. There were nearly 150 conversions, including a number from nearby towns.

New York

Rev. Thomas C. Bell was installed pastor of the church at Ontario Center May 20. Messrs. Baker, Norris, Scholl, Nelson and McMurdy officiated.

Rev. Walter B. Jorris of Grace church, Rochester, is finding it easy to keep in touch with all parts of his parish through a captain in charge of each of thirty divisions of the church territory.

Motorists who use the post road between New York and Albany have been invited to stop and admire the beauty of the church edifice at Scarborough, which has recently observed its eighteenth anniversary.

Rev. Charles M. Dodge, who recently began the tenth year of his pastorate at Bethany church, Utica, has married twenty-four couples and baptized eleven babies. During the nine years the church has lost by death only six members.

June 1 North church of Rochester closed its first year under the pastorate of Robert Wells Veach, D. D. Notwithstanding the fact that sixty members withdrew last June to help form the new Dewey Avenue church then organized by presbytery, this has been the best year in the history of the church for missionary and benevolent offerings. An every-member canvass has just been completed, the second since the introduction of the duplex envelopes in 1911. As a result there is an increase of 20 per cent are in originality of design and expert workmanship "way out of the ordinary."

SMITH GRANITE
MONUMENTAL PRODUCTIONS
We would be pleased to offer suggestions for the amount you have in mind to pay.
Write for booklets.
THE SMITH GRANITE CO.,
Westerly, R. I.
Representatives in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Syracuse.

THIS CHEST MADE OF FRAGRANT TENNESSEE RED CEDAR
At Factory Prices Direct to You. Freight Paid.
You will admire this practical, beautiful and exquisitely finished Solid Red Cedar Chest. Moth and dust proof, massive, durable, convenient; a safe place for your furs, woolens, etc. Appropriate for gifts on all occasions. Will last for generations and become an heirloom in the family. Sold under absolute guarantee. Local agents wanted. Write for interesting Booklet at once.
CEDAR PRODUCTS COMPANY, South Bend, Ind.

Queen of the Catskills
Stamford, New York. Most beautiful Village in all this lovely region. The Men's Club of the Presbyterian Church invites guests to come to this charming place. When to the natural beauty are added the attractions of a well cared for village—ELECTRIC LIGHTING, PURE WATER, GOLF, CLUB HOUSE, SWIMMING PAVILION, TENNIS COURTS, FINE ROADS, SUPERB SCENERY and an attractive PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH—the whole forms an ideal summer resting place. Many fine hotels and boarding houses. All information supplied by Brotherhood Committee—W. C. Platner and Dr. H. P. Hubbell, or by the Pastor, Rev. Alfred J. Sadler, M. A., Stamford, N. Y.

in the current expense fund and the same increase in the benevolences. A mission study class in charge of the Woman's Missionary Society and aided by the men's committee on missions was held once a month in connection with the prayer meeting. It was led by laymen.

The centennial of First church, Alden, was observed Tuesday, June 17, by special services. The pastor, Dr. P. T. Pockman, preached an historical sermon and addresses were made by Colonel Joseph E. Ewell and Dr. S. V. V. Holmes. During the afternoon the corner stone of Ewell Free Library was laid and there were field sports and an exhibition of antiquities. The library was the gift of Colonel Ewell, who also contributed half the cost of the church. The buildings stand side by side.

Illinois

Licentiate James A. G. Waits, a member of the graduating class at McCormick, was ordained and installed pastor of Mendota congregation May 28. Moderator J. H. Boose of Pontiac presided. Rev. E. Wallace Waits of Tipton, Iowa, father of the pastor-elect; Rev. D. K. Campbell and Rev. C. H. Miller assisted in the services.

The home mission committee of Illinois Synod is circulating an appeal to raise $6,000 to meet the emergency caused by the April floods of the Ohio river among the churches of Cairo Presbytery. In many places the property has been damaged beyond repair and in other towns the resources of the congregations have been badly crippled. E. S. Scott of Champaign has been appointed treasurer to receive contributions which will be distributed under the joint auspices of the presbyterial and synodical committees.

The annual report of First church, Dixon, recently compiled, shows that $600 was contributed for benevolences last year. Rev. Ralph M. Crismann is pastor.

Michigan

The churches of Mount Clemens, assisted by the Gideons, will place 1,400 Bibles in the guest rooms of local hotels June 28. This is part of the campaign which the Gideons are conducting to put the Bible into the rooms of every hotel in the country.

The proposed union of the Presbyterian and Congregational churches in Kalamazoo will probably be dropped. Plans have been under discussion for some time looking to amalgamation, but the members of the congregations so far have failed to approve plans suggested. The Congregational church is at present without a pastor.

Missouri

Dr. J. T. Bacon, pastor of First church, Springfield, celebrated his fifteenth anniversary in his present charge June 1.

It is reported that even baseball players of St. Louis are regretting the departure of Rev. C. E. Jenney, who recently resigned from Grace church to go to Decatur, Ill. Mr. Jenney is a warm friend of many baseball players. He established the "Child's Church," an organization of children with choir, ushers and other machinery of an ordinary church.

Summer Schools and Conferences

Winona Plans Diversified Program

WINONA ASSEMBLY, Winona Lake, Ind., offers this year a program that will compare favorably with those of previous years. Mme. Schumann-Heink is one of the attractions of the summer entertainment program. Among the special conferences are the summer school of missions, June 19-27; the Presbyterian young people's conference, July 9-16; Young Friends of America, July 23-30; Bethany girls, July and August; Sunday school training school, Aug. 11-21; Christian citizenship institute, beginning Aug. 7, and home mission week, beginning Aug. 10.

The Bible conference dates are Aug. 22 to 31. Hon. William Jennings Bryan, secretary of state, will preach the opening sermon. Gipsy Smith, G. Campbell Morgan, Moderator John Timothy Stone, Camden M. Cobern, Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, Bishop Edwin H. Hughes, Rev. William A. Sunday, Dr. William E. Biederwolf, Dr. George R. Stuart, Mrs. Booth Clibborn, Dr. A. T. Robertson, Dr. Mark A. Matthews; Dr. Hinson of Portland, Ore; John Willis Baer, Dr. Munhall, Dr. Moorehead, Dr. Roberts and many other distinguished men are to take part. Rev. A. H. Haigazian, Ph. D., president of the Apostolic College in Konia, Asia Minor, will deliver a series of addresses.

Dan Crawford, who is to lecture, is an Englishman who has spent twenty-three continuous years as a missionary in Central Africa and the author of a book entitled "Thinking Black," which has thrilled all who have read its pages. Mr. Crawford is a man of peculiar forensic ability.

Sol C. Dickey, D. D., is director of the conference, as in former years. The music will be under the direction of Professor E. O. Excell.

A Crowded Summer at Northfield

The last week of June begins the summer conference season at Northfield. The famous student conference, which draws together the largest and strongest body of American youth assembling in any place upon the continent, runs from June 20 to 29. As always, John R. Mott and Robert E. Speer are the principal figures of these meetings, and all the great eastern universities are represented by large delegations. On the second of July the Y. W. C. A. brings to Northfield a similar delegation of students from Wellesley, Mount Holyoke, Smith, Vassar and other women's colleges of New England and New York. This meeting will last until the 9th of next month, and the next day is succeeded by the summer school of the women's foreign missionary societies. After a week devoted to this work, women interested in home missions arrive and remain until July 24. Partially overlapping this is a summer school for Sunday school workers, extending from July 19 to 26.

Aug. 1 begins the general conference of Christian workers, which was founded by Dwight L. Moody himself, and which, above all the rest, is commonly known as the Northfield conference. For this the favorite speakers of other years—J. Stuart Holden, John A. Hutton, G. Campbell Morgan, Len Broughton, John Thomas and Dan Crawford—are coming across the Atlantic, and a long list of American speakers, including Charles R. Erdman, A. T. Robertson, Charles R. Brown, George R. Stuart and Melvin Trotter, is announced. This program concludes on Aug. 17, but through the remainder of August and all of September there will be daily lectures in the Northfield auditorium by some of the conference speakers, who will remain in this classic New England village until the end of the summer season. As will be seen from this statement, there will be no interval of inactivity in Northfield through the whole summer.

Young People in Five Conferences

The Presbyterian young people's department, under direction of Rev. William Ralph Hall, has now increased the number of its very successful annual summer conferences for members of young people's societies to five. They begin with the conference for the Eastern churches at Pocono Pines June 30 to July 6 and continue in succession at Winona Lake, Ind., July 9 to 16; Ovoca (Tullahoma), Tenn., July 15 to 25; Hollister, Mo., July 29 to Aug. 5; Storm Lake, Iowa, Aug. 7 to 14. Mr. Hall invites to these conferences all officers, committeemen and members of young people's societies, and also those who superintend intermediate or junior societies, lead boys' clubs or classes, or direct any sort of study classes.

The morning periods in each of these conferences will be taken for instruction in mission study, Bible study, church history, teacher training and the work of the members of the church. Evening sessions will be devoted to inspirational addresses, while afternoons are reserved for recreation. The young people who have attended these conferences in past years have unfailingly received great stimulus for the work of the churches and have been immensely increased in usefulness to their pastors. Live pastors should certainly see that their young people's societies are represented among the delegates to these conferences.

SAFETY first—then INCOME

6% A Non-Fluctuating Bond Investment

For SAVINGS or SURPLUS

¶ The chief advantage of a Bond investment is the fact that you know that you will receive a regular fixed income that can be counted upon in advance.

¶ The great thing about this Company's 6% Gold Mortgage Bonds is the fact that they are non-fluctuating—they are not affected by "money market" manipulations; because behind them is the most stable security in the world—select, improved, income-producing New York City real estate.

¶ Principal and interest are secured by a General Trust Mortgage.

¶ Write today for new illustrated booklet 25.

NEW YORK REAL ESTATE SECURITY CO.

Assets over $17,000,000

42 BROADWAY NEW YORK

7% Atlanta 7%

Here are some of the features that make our First Mortgage Loans attractive.

1. 25 years experience without the loss of a penny.
2. Real Estate worth over two for one.
3. Abstract by Attorney representing YOU, showing a clear title.
4. Note with Coupons attached.
5. A Georgia Loan Deed.
6. Fire Insurance for at least the amount of the Loan, assigned as additional security.
7. A rental value that would more than carry the Loan under adverse circumstances.

Write for booklet.

REALTY TRUST COMPANY
ATLANTA, GEORGIA
Capital $600,000.00 - Surplus $400,000.00

The Security for Our Alberta Farm Mort gages has Quadrupled in Fourteen Year

The Dominion Government reports that the sale price lands by corporations having land grants increased fro $3.18 per acre in 1899 to $13.70 per acre in 1913.

Offerings of 6% Alberta Mortgages on request, in amoun from $500.00 upwards.

ASSOCIATED MORTGAGE INVESTOR
KINGMAN N. ROBINS, Treasurer, Granite Bldg., Rochester, N.

FARM MORTGAGES bearing 6% interest, fi liens on improved farms. Original papers held by t investor. Principal and interest GUARANTEED; inte est payable at the Hanover National Bank, New Yor Thousands of satisfied customers for references. We been doing the same thing for TWENTY-EIGHT YEA

The W. C. Belcher Land Mortgage Co.
Capital $320,000.00.
Fort Worth, - - Texas.

DON'T THROW AWAY YOUR DISCARDE Furniture, Clothing, Magazines Pape etc. YOU can do great good by sending them to t Chicago Christian Industrial League, helping t church to find work for the idle, to shelter the homeless, feed the hungry and to preach the gospel to the men of t down town streets. Over 1,000 men helped annually. Eve littlecounts. Send a card to GEORGE A. KILBEY, 12 E 12th Street, Chicago, Ill.

The Trade Mark "1847 Roger Bros."
on Spoons, Etc., Is the Stamp of Quality

6% SECURITY, RATE AND SERVICE 6%

Is what we offer YOU in our FIRST LIEN REAL ESTATE MORTGAGES. They are placed only on income bearing property on a basis of 40 per cent actual value.

INTEREST and PRINCIPAL remitted on due date by NEW YORK check.

EIGHT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES attest the soundness of these mortgages by purchasing in increasing volume.

Write for list, information and references to

REYNOLDS MORTGAGE CO.
R. B. BISHOP, Vice-Pres.
FORT WORTH TEXAS

Selected FARM LOANS

I offer only First Mortgage Farm Loans made by thoroughly reliable firms who have stood the Test of Time. I diversify as to climate, rate and crop yield. Interest and principal collected free.

Ask for Circular No. 101

G·F·CARSON
717 JEFFERSON BUILDING, PEORIA, ILLINOIS.

The safest investments from the viewpoints of INCOME and SECURITY are carefully selected REAL ESTATE MORTGAGES

When made and guaranteed by experienced and financially responsible persons and corporations there is nothing better. For years we have made such loans in one of the best agricultural districts in America. Full information on request.

THE JEFFERSON TRUST COMPANY
McAlester, Oklahoma

NORTH DAKOTA FARM MORTGAGES THE IDEAL INVESTMENT

¶ 30 years Residence and Business activities in Banking and making Farm Mortgages. ¶ Write for my Booklet, Investment Facts, and List .075

WALTER L. WILLIAMSON, LISBON NORTH DAKOTA

SEASONED North Dakota Farm Loans and FARM LAND BONDS Netting 6%

Write for particulars regarding our investment service. Highest references.

R. C. KITTEL & CO., CASSELTON NORTH DAKOTA

6 and 7 % Sure

When you purchase from us a mortgage on Improved Georgia City or Farm Property you take as little chance as is humanly possible. You receive from 6 to 7 per cent and you can be sure of receiving it regularly. Our property appraisals are the work of successful experts. We are extremely careful in our estimates of the moral hazards. We protect your principal with ample security. Let us send you our list of loans and interesting literature. Address "Dept. F."

Sessions Loan & Trust Co., Marietta, Ga.

FIRST MORTGAGE FARM LOANS

6% We offer only select first mortgages on improved Northeastern Oklahoma farms at 40% value of farm. Interest collected semi-annually and remitted investor without charge. 6%

SEND FOR BOOKLET.

PARKER-WISE INVESTMENT CO.
VINITA, OKLAHOMA

High Grade Farm Loans
Oklahoma Farm Mortgage Co., Oklahoma City U. S. A.

Financial Situation

Some of the Indications of Future Business Trend — Time for Investors to Use Conservative Judgment.

The condition of the business and financial world is such that there can be found considerable ground either for pessimism or optimism. The decision of the supreme court in the Minnesota railroad rate case came as an unpleasant surprise to financiers as well as to railway men. The immediate effect on Wall street was a rapid decline in the price of Great Northern and Northern Pacific stock until the latter reached the low mark attained during the panic of 1907. Other stocks were likewise influenced.

This decline in prices has added to the nervousness which has characterized eastern financial markets for some time. The instigation of a suit to dissolve the kodak trust in an effort to destroy the alleged monopoly now existing added to this nervousness. Another depressing effect has been the uncertainty as to the exact result of the tariff discussion.

No Speculation and No Idleness

Those whose natural tendencies are toward optimism point to the fact that at the present time there is practically no speculation in business, there is little or no idleness among the laboring classes except in the silk mill region of the East, and the volume of immigration, usually a good index to business conditions in America, has been larger than the average. It is reported that there are more men now employed by the General Electric Company than at any time since 1906, the plants being worked by three shifts day and night. In spite of a recent slight falling off in the conditions of the spring wheat crop, it is probable that if conditions from henceforth are favorable, the harvest will equal the record of wheat yield of 1901 and be much larger than a year ago. Reports from the Northwest are to the effect that the cool weather following seeding helped to give the grain good root, and there is planty of moisture in the ground.

According to reports received by Bradstreet's, the failures during May were fewer than they have been for a number of months and the total liabilities smaller than since last November. Ore shipments down the lakes during May broke all records, and Chicago national banks June 4 show a much better condition than two months ago. There has been an addition of nearly $9,000,000 to their cash resources.

Hurry in Selling May Be Costly

Cautious advisers are suggesting to owners of stocks and bonds that they be not carried away with a desire to turn their property into cash at the present time. It is pointed out by financial journals that railroads like the Northern Pacific, which suffered heavy declines on the day following the decision of the Minnesota rate case, is amply able to pay its usual dividend of 7 per cent, despite the fact that recent reports have not shown large net earnings. A reasonably large spring wheat crop will, however, enable this well equipped road to replenish its exchequer.

It is true that stocks of stable corporations which have a long and uninterrupted period of dividend paying may be purchased at very reasonable figures now. Selling of one's holdings in one company, however, to obtain cash with which to buy stock in another concern is a proceeding which should be indulged in only after very careful counsel with one's bankers. Money can be made by investing in stocks now if the right stocks are bought. It is a time, however, when there is danger that enthusiasm or fear will overbalance one's good judgment, and any transaction should therefore be approached with caution. The inexperienced should remember also that a decline in prices on the stock exchange does not necessarily mean that they will not receive as large dividends as they have in other years. The value of the property on which the securities have been issued has not been affected by the rate decision, although there is a possibility that the income earning power of the roads may be diminished by the action of state legislatures in reducing freight and passenger tariffs. Meanwhile the owner of a farm mortgage has no fear that his security will be affected in the slightest by all the turmoil in the money markets.

COLONIAL TRUST AND SAVINGS BANK

La Salle Street, N. E. Corner Adams
CHICAGO

Resources over $8,000,000.00

Those in search of reliable investment at 5% and 6% should communicate with our Bond Department.

3% interest on Savings.
2% interest on Checking Accounts.

$25,000,000 Loaned; not one dollar lost for an investor. J. L. Pettyjohn & Co., of Olathe, Kans., will invest your funds in absolutely safe First Farm Mortgages to net you excellent interest return. Write them for particulars and references.

SAFETY AND 7%

IDAHO offers today a splendid field for safe and profitable investments. Carefully selected first mortgages on improved CITY AND FARM property are securities which will give you no worry, but will return regularly and promptly an excellent interest return, ranging from 6 per cent to 7 per cent, and occasionally even higher. The city of Boise has trebled its population in ten years, and the agricultural districts in which the IDAHO TITLE AND TRUST COMPANY and THE NATIONAL TRUST AND SAVINGS COMPANY operate are among the most productive in this prosperous state.

CHARLES B. COXE
President
BOISE :: IDAHO

7% FARM MORTGAGES 8%

Title guaranteed. On choice farms in Panhandle and fertile valleys of Eastern New Mexico. No loan made for more than thirty per cent of value, nor closed until examined and approved by our experienced examiner who is an officer of Company. We collect and remit interest free. Larger loans drawn to net investors 7 per cent; small ones, 8 per cent. Write for sample application, references, etc.

The Union Mortgage Company, Clovis, New Mexico

5½% and 6% Interest

The most careful investor always selects a choice farm mortgage when placing funds. Ask for detailed information, references and list of offerings.

G. W. HART, Pres. The Merchants Bank
BRYANT SOUTH DAKOTA

6% NET GUARANTEED AS WELL AS BACKED BY 20 YEARS OF SUCCESS

Farm Mortgages sold by us net six per cent, and we guarantee their payment. Interest remitted the day due. Write today for booklet and references and ask your local banker to investigate us.

BROAD & BOMAR, Bankers, Ft. Worth, Tex.

REAL ESTATE LOANS

6% Safest, Most Promising and Profitable Investment on the Market Today 6%

During the Past 30 Years no Client has Lost a Dollar.

BEVERLY H. BONFOEY
Send for Booklet R UNIONVILLE, MO.

6½% Net First Mortgages

on improved OKLAHOMA FARMS from $200 up are safe investments. I have sold them for years to ultra conservative investors with entire satisfaction. Write today for list and interesting BOOKLET "E." Refer to Dun or Bradstreet.

GEO. R. FISH, Investment Banker, Ardmore, Okla.

General Assembly of Canadian Church

BY J. B. FRASER

THE Canadian Presbyterian General Assembly, the thirty-ninth since the union of 1875, was held this year in Toronto, which has come to be the greatest convention city of Canada. It was unique in many respects. Owing to the attendance at the congress preceding it of practically all the ministers of the church and delegates from all pastoral charges, there was a full muster of commissioners. The blue badges which all wore gave a visibility to the Assembly in the city which made it the occasion of much remark. The discussions on church union attracted large crowds of the Presbyterian public, in addition to the large number of delegates to the congress who remained to the close.

The church is so constituted that there is no provision for such an emergency as changing the place of meeting after the call. But it had to be done. A few members met in Knox church punctually and in a few minutes agreed to adjourn to Massey hall, where about 5,000 persons were waiting. There the opening sermon was preached and there the business was done, the two sections of seats in front of the platform being reserved for commissioners. The clerks made a determined effort to get back to Knox church, to a more ecclesiastical atmosphere "far from the madding crowd," but failed. Fancy a General Assembly doing business for a week in such a place, with its immense platform, and footlights, and boxes, and great galleries! It looked as if the church and the world were getting pretty close together. And it didn't just happen so. The emergency had been foreseen and the change foreordained by the men who planned the congress and who engaged the hall a month in advance.

Veteran Missionary Is Chosen Moderator

The opening sermon was by Dr. D. G. McQueen of Edmonton, Alberta, for twenty-five years the most influential man in the Canadian West. The choice of a new moderator fell unanimously on Dr. Murdoch MacKenzie, who for twenty-five years has represented the church and served the Master in Honan, China, and has this year published in book form a most interesting record of those years. Dr. MacKenzie is a typical Scottish Celt, rugged physically, genial and delightful socially, and deeply spiritual.

And now to note a few of the matters of widest general interest. One of these was the reception of nineteen Ruthenians—ministers of the Independent Greek Church—as ministers in full standing of the Presbyterian Church in Canada. These men and the movement of which they are the leaders are some of the first fruits of our home mission work in the western provinces. They are certainly a promising lot of men; all young, strong, bright, earnest. They have taken special studies for two or three years in Winnipeg College, while continuing mission work among their own people. As they came to the platform the Assembly rose and sang "Blest be the tie that binds."

After the sitting on Saturday the moderator and several prominent members of Assembly officiated at the opening of a Christian Jewish synagogue, containing a dispensary, gymnasium, nursery, an auditorium for 300, a clubroom for girls, a night school for women, large reading rooms, accommodations for the workers connected with the mission—a completely equipped modern institutional church for the Christian Jews of the city.

At University park a reception was given to the Assembly by the city council—a reception in every respect worthy of the city and honoring to the Assembly—certainly such a welcome as the Assembly had never before received.

On Sabbath the Assembly commissioners were pretty well distributed in the forty or more Presbyterian churches of the city and many were seen even in other churches, so ecumenical has Presbyterianism become in Canada. The official services were conducted in Knox church in the morning by George Hanson, D. D., of Montreal. In the evening Rev. C. M. Wright of Fort George, a mission station 350 miles from the railway in British Columbia, told of the conditions under which work had to be done on the frontier and of the unprecedented opportunity of today in the face of organized opposition of evil. The communion services in the afternoon were conducted by the moderator, assisted by ex-Moderator McQueen and Dr. Herridge, Ottawa.

Open Air Services a Sabbath Feature

An exceptional if not unique feature of the Sunday services was the holding in several parts of the city open air services for the many who don't attend any other. Dr. G. B. Wilson of Winnipeg was the leader of the new departure. The policy was advocated in Assembly of open air work in summer as a likely means to interest nonchurch-goers and promote attendance, which is so often small in summer.

The statistical and financial report makes a fair showing. The membership increased by 3,530 net, bringing the total over the 300,000 mark for the first time. The census returns just published show Presbyterians to be the largest of the Protestant population of Canada and to have made during the last decade a notable gain in proportion to the increase in population of the country. There was an increase in contributions of over $50,000, the total amounting to $5,417,163. This is a gain over the giving of last year of 27 per cent and amounts to an average of $25.45 per family and $10.79 per member for all purposes.

Methodist and Congregational Union

The discussion of the question of union with the Methodist and Congregational Churches occupied almost wholly four sessions of the meeting. The whole question in all its bearings was gone into most fully. It should be noted that last year as a measure of conciliation several who did not see their way clear to vote for union were added to the union committee in the hope that they might thus be enlisted in the movement. In preparing its findings for Assembly this year the majority of the committee consulted prejudices and sentiments in every way, and their recommendations were drawn up with the view, if possible, of securing practical unanimity. Six of those opposed to union prepared a minority report, which was afterwards signed by five others. The discussions centered around these recommendations. The majority, of whom fifty were present, recommended as follows:

"1. That the Assembly assure the other negotiating churches that the Presbyterian Church fully realizes its share of responsibility in the present movement, and earnestly desires that the spirit of unity which has given rise to it may be conserved and deepened, and asks the other churches to continue the negotiations because it feels the desirability of the practically unanimous action of all its own members.

"2. That the union committee be continued and further amendments to the present proposals of union be invited from presbyteries and from sessions, congregations and individuals and referred to this committee."

These recommendations were finally adopted with the addition of the words "in the hope that union may be consummated with no unnecessary delay" in the first paragraph.

The minority report recommended that the matter of organic union remain in abeyance, without prejudice, and that the union committee be continued, and instructed to obtain the fullest possible information regarding the organization and working of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, or any other method of cooperation expressing the unity desired by all; and also to correspond with all other evangelical Christian churches in Canada to ascertain the possibility of some wider plan of cooperation or federation in the great work common to all, and to report to the next Assembly.

On motion to adopt the recommendations of the majority report and an amendment to adopt the minority report the battle was set, for it was more like a battle than a love feast. Feeling at times ran high, but there was no breech of decorum and no sign of personal offense or umbrage. The minority recommendations were defeated by 251 to 75. Then an amendment to continue the union committee, with instructions to work along lines of cooperation, was defeated overwhelmingly. And later an amendment in the direction of more definite action was withdrawn. Finally by a vote of more than three to one the recommendations of the majority report were adopted. The announcement of the vote aroused the utmost enthusiasm. Thus ended one of the most memorable debates during the eight years since this union movement began.

The report on home mission work was encouraging. Increasing numbers of men are offering for the work and the increasing revenues make their employment possible. During the year 137 new fields were added to the list. The new general superintendent, Dr. A. S. Grant, has brought to the work a great accession of inspiration and executive ability. He is a man of broad vision, intense patriotism, high purpose, winning simplicity and personal magnetism.

Next in importance to home mission work comes the work in the department of social service under Dr. J. G. Shearer. One whole evening was given to its consideration. A feature of unique interest was the illustration by stereopticon of the conditions under which much of the work is done. Two of the ladies employed in rescue work thrilled the Assembly by the recital of some of their experiences. A strong pronouncement was adopted with reference to the tolerance of the social evil by civil officials in British Columbia, making that province the great market in Canada for the victims of the white slave traffic. The Assembly called upon the whole Canadian people to join in removing the foul blot.

Action Against the Liquor Traffic

In this connection it was recognized that the liquor traffic bears the largest share of responsibility for the social evil, and a resolution was unanimously adopted setting forth that the Assembly is convinced that the time has come that legislation should be secured for prohibiting the manufacture, importation and sale of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes. The earnest cooperation of other religious bodies and temperance organizations was invited. Temperance education and local legislation were urged under the cooperation of the Board of Social Service.

A resolution was also passed for transmission to the government expressing disappointment that legislation had not been passed raising the age of consent, prohibiting racetrack gambling and making certain forms of indecent conduct criminal.

A forward movement in foreign missions was agreed on which will almost double our forces in our Chinese and Korean missions where the remarkable expansion of recent years has created a crisis rendering large reenforcements imperative. The budget for the ensuing year providing for all extra congregationa work is $1,400,000. This is $200,000 in advance of last year.

Qualified Subscription to the Standards

On the last day of Assembly on report of a special committee it was agreed that subscription to the standards of the church may be made with explanations, considered reasonable by presbyteries; but that all such cases an explanations, with reasons given therefor, mus be reported to the ensuing General Assembly

The Assembly approved cordially of a basi of union agreed on by the Women's Home an Foreign Societies of the church, which are t unite under the name of The Women's Missionary Society of Canada.

The Assembly pledged the church to us every reasonable effort, both as individuals an as a body, to secure the abolition of war and t bring about the day of peace on earth and goo will to men.

Exhibitions of the various departments o Forest Park University, St. Louis, Mo., durin the last week of school attracted large attendance. The art department showed studies from nature, still life, roots and flowers, and exquisitely decorated china. Students of domesti science and art showed the beautiful dresse and dainty hats which formed part of th work of their course. The baccalaureate sermon was delivered in West church by D Francis W. Russell.

School and College

The exercises of commencement week of heaton (Ill.) College began June 13, when e closing exercises of the four societies of e college took place.

Rev. Alexander Alison, Jr., of Chicago de- ered the commencement address at Parsons llege in Place of Dr. John Timothy Stone, no could not be present.

Dr. Hugh T. Kerr of Chicago delivered the mmencement address at Emporia College. He so spoke before the men of Hutchinson, Kan., ere he formerly was pastor.

The largest class in the history of the insti- tion was graduated by Hastings College. The osing stretch of the endowment campaign is cupying the attention of friends of the llege.

Raymond C. Brooks, D. D., delivered the ccalaureate sermon at Whitman College, alla Walla, Wash. Commencement exercises ere held on the lawn the afternoon of ne 18.

The improvements made in Alma College apel have transformed it completely. The lls are tinted a beautiful buff, the steam pipes ve taken on the color of silver and other provements have been made preparatory to mmencement.

The commencement address at Huron Col- ge was delivered by Professor John J. Halsey, e only remaining member of the original culty of Lake Forest College. Others who ok part in the commencement week program ere President C. H. French, Dr. William W. hnstone of Chicago and Dr. M. D. Edwards St. Paul.

The baccalaureate sermon at Whitworth Col- ge, Tacoma, Wash., was preached June 8 Dr. Frank M. Silsley, pastor of Westminster urch, Seattle. The service was in First urch, Tacoma. At the commencement exer- ses Professor E. S. Meany of the University Washington spoke.

Western College commencement festivities ere ushered in by the baccalaureate sermon Rev. E. A. Elmore of Chattanooga, Tenn. iss Edna Cole, '78, of Bangkok, Siam, talked the vesper service. President George L. ackintosh of Wabash College gave the com- encement address, and the bachelor's degree as conferred upon thirty-six graduates.

The ninety-fourth commencement week of aryville College closed with many meetings. resident Wilson delivered the baccalaureate rmon and John Grant Newman, D. D., pastor Chambers-Wylie church, Philadelphia, de- vered the commencement address. The graduating class numbered twenty-four, represent- g eleven states and countries. Five of the oung men will enter the ministry. The total tendance in all departments was 702, or fifty- iree more than ever before, of which number l but twenty-nine were professing Christians the close of the year. A home economics epartment will be opened in the fall.

President F. H. Gaines of Agnes Scott Col- ge, Decatur, Ga. (Atlanta), announces that ie session just ended was decidedly the most ccessful in point of enrollment and college oirit in the history of this famous institution. le announces the discontinuance of Agnes cott Academy, which has served for years s a preparatory department of Agnes Scott ollege. The commencement exercises were iore than ordinarily interesting this year, the estowal of special honors being a notable eature. Agnes Scott College will be long emembered by the hundreds of commissioners the recent Atlanta Assemblies, who enjoyed he hospitality of the president and trustees. he college will reopen Sept. 17.

Commencement exercises of the College of mporia were held May 31—June 4. Sunday iorning the baccalaureate service was held in irst church, Emporia, with the sermon by resident H. C. Culbertson. The address to he Christian Associations was by A. M. Brodie, . D., First church, Wichita, Kan. Monday vening was the commencement exercise of he music department, followed by a reception o the college students by the ladies of First hurch, Emporia. Commencement exercises ere held in Austin chapel, the address being iven by Hugh T. Kerr, D. D., of Chicago. A lass of twenty-three received the degree of . A. The degree of D. D. was conferred upon ev. David S. Hibbard, an alumnus of the college, who is doing distinguished work as president of Silliman Institute in the Philippine islands, and upon Rev. Alfred E. Vanorden, pastor of First church, Salina, Kan.

President A. R. Taylor was commencement orator at James Millikin University. At the alumni banquet Dr. Taylor, who is closing twelve years at the institution, was presented with a loving cup. He introduced his successor, Dr. George Emory Fellows. Dr. Taylor has been elected president emeritus. Mrs. Millikin gave a lawn fete to the boards, faculty and students of the institution.

At its commencement exercises June 5 Westminster College, Fulton, Mo., closed its sixty-fourth year. Eleven men were graduated. The degree of LL. D. was conferred on George T. Coxhead, international secretary of the Y. M. C. A., New York City, and George F. Ayres, Ph. D., president of Lindenwood College. The degree of D. D. was conferred on Rev. J. Layton Mauze, Ph. D., pastor of Central Presbyterian church, St. Louis. Dr. J. J. Rice, vice-president of the college, was elected dean by the trustees with the local duties of president, in order that President Charles B. Boving might be set free to conduct a general financial campaign for the college.

Mountain Workers Will Convene

The mountain workers' conference and Bible school will open at Maryville, Tenn., June 24 with a sermon by Rev. Herbert B. Smith of Knoxville. Special department meetings will be held each day of the conference, which closes July 1, in charge of specialists. There will also be an exhibit showing what has been done in the mountains. Among those who will take part are Dr. Frank N. Palmer, E. P. Green, Dr. Edgar A. Elmore, Dr. T. A. Wigginton, Rev. Edwin W. Hall and Dr. W. Francis Irwin. Popular lectures will be given each evening.

Calendar and Record

Presbytery Meetings

New Brunswick—Frenchtown, June 24, 9:30.

Resignations

Idaho—Malad: W. D. Williams; Boise Second: Henry Quickenden.
Indiana—Fowler: Frederick A. Johnson.
Maryland—Baltimore Fulton Avenue: James E. Cook.
Michigan—Lansing: Charles Christensen.
Minnesota—Redwood Falls: J. J. Ehrstein.
Missouri—St. Louis Kirkwood: T. B. Southall.
Nebraska—Dunbar: Eugene W. Love.
Wisconsin—Janesville: J. W. Laughlin.

Calls

California—Oakland Union Street: Henry Quickenden, Boise, Idaho.
Illinois—Harvey: Frederick A. Johnson, Fowler, Ind.; Le Roy: Selden C. Adams, South Chicago; Wheatland: Arthur A. Amy, Stanley, Wis.
Indiana—Bedford: B. T. Scott, Pittsburg.
Iowa—Kingston: W. F. Grundy.
Kansas—Bern: F. C. Humphrey, Kanopolis; Sylvan Grove: William R. Scott, Solomon.
Maryland—Baltimore Waverly: J. S. Plumer.
Nebraska—Morrill: George C. Porter; Diller: Walter N. Gillis; Blue Springs: Albert B. Byram; Gresham and Thayer: Dewitt C. Williamson.
Pennsylvania—Franklin: James A. Patterson.
South Dakota—Lake Andes: David L. Miller, Gordon, Neb.

Installations

New Jersey—Newark First: Andrew H. Neilly, June 4.
Ohio—Hicksville: A. E. Stockham, June 17.
Pennsylvania—Osceola: John C. Wood, June 9; Lawrenceville: Thomas E. Barr, June 10; Hadley and Sewickleyville: S. L. Johnston, June 3.

Supplies Arranged

Illinois—Aledo: H. P. Dunlap.
Nebraska—Rushville: W. S. Morrow; Papillion: Lester A. Thompson.
Kansas—Natoma and Fairport: J. R. Trett.

Vacant Pulpits

Minnesota—Redwood Falls, John Colville clerk.
South Dakota—Two country fields, Dr. William Wallace, Sioux Falls.

Accessions

Idaho—Malad, 5, W. D. Williams; Gooding, 8, May 25, A. J. Dressler.
Indiana—Indianapolis Tabernacle, 16, June 1, E. W. Clippinger.
Kansas—Bucklin, 22, 6 months, E. I. Gilmore; Oakley, 3, June 8.
Minnesota—Redwood Falls, 15, June 8, J. J. Ehrstein.
New Jersey—Trenton Fourth, 19, June 1, W. N. Curry.
New York—Rochester Grace, 34, June 1, Walter B. Jorris.
Pennsylvania—Masontown, 7, June 1, J. Byers Brice; Pittsburg First, North side, 26, June 1, Malcolm L. MacPhail; Philadelphia West Hope, 14, May 29, Charles E. Bronson; Philadelphia Cohocksink, 17, June 1, Z. H. Copp; Glenolden, 16, June 1, David Winters; Rutledge, 5, June 1, George L. Van Alen.
Washington—Seattle Mount Baker Park, 5, May 25, E. Hubert Broyles.

Churches Organized

Ohio—Toledo: Lodge Avenue, April 23.

Necrology

Thompson—Pender, Neb., June 3, Francis E. Thompson, stated clerk Niobrara Presbytery, aged 64.

Marriages

A charge of one cent per word is made for marriage notices. Payment must accompany copy.

STUART-MCCLURE—Married by Dr. J. G. K. McClure assisted by Dr. W. H. W. Boyle, on June 10 at Lake Forest, Ill., Harriet McClure, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. J. G. K. McClure, and Robert Douglas Stuart of Chicago.

SAULT STE. MARIE
NORTH CHANNEL
GORE BAY
KAGAWONG
LITTLE CURRENT KILLARNEY
PARRY SOUND
GEORGIAN BAY
MACKINAC ISLAND
HARBOR SPRINGS
WASHINGTON ISLAND
SISTER BAY
EPHRAIM
FISH CREEK
GREEN BAY
STURGEON BAY
COLLINGWOOD
ALCOMA
KEWAUNEE
MANITOWOC
SHEBOYGAN
WHITEHALL
MUSKEGON
GRAND RAPIDS
MILWAUKEE
RACINE
GRAND HAVEN
CHICAGO
LAKE MICHIGAN
GOODRICH STEAMSHIP LINES

A Week's Cruise TO Georgian Bay $40.00 Meals & Berth Included
SATURDAY, 2:00 P. M., JUNE 28th TO AUGUST 23rd INC.
3 and 5 Day Lake Trips
To Green Bay, Mackinac Island and the Soo
TUESDAYS, 1:00 P. M.; THURSDAYS, 2:00 P. M.; SATURDAYS, 2:00 P. M., JUNE 28th TO AUGUST 28th INC.
To Grand Haven and Muskegon
Michigan's Delightful Resorts
8:30 P. M. DAILY. Day Boats Saturday, Sunday and Monday
Write for illustrated summer folder or Georgian Bay Booklet
PARK ROBBINS, G. P. A., Foot Michigan Avenue, Chicago

What can we do for the man who returns?

From a third to a half of the immigrants who come to this country return home later for longer or shorter periods with the money they have been able to accumulate. They take with them countless impressions of American life—impressions which too often are but slightly affected by real Americanism. They usually live here in colonies of their countrymen and speak their own language. If these workers could be touched by the forces of Christianity during their time in this country it would mean a great change in the attitude of succeeding groups of immigrants. This work is now under way to a limited degree. More men are needed who have had careful training. The countrymen of immigrants are most effective. Ten of the nations of Europe send young men to Dubuque German College and Seminary to be educated for such work. We also train many men to be pastors of German and Bohemian churches in the Central West. This is a Presbyterian institution which has sent out 159 ministers. Our students this summer are widely scattered, using what they have learned for the uplift of their fellows while earning money for the next year's course. You would like to feel that you had a part in this campaign of foreign mission work at home. It will encourage us to know that you are interested. Send a postal for full information. Address Dubuque German College and Seminary, Dr. C. M. Steffens, President, Dubuque, Iowa.

Ever been lonesome?

Lonesomeness is a curious affliction which seems to attack men and women alike. In a city crowd with people or on a farm with the nearest neighbors a mile away, lonesomeness may find you. It is a trouble for which no physician can find medicine. Few people however, get so lonesome as to keep track of the number of times that affliction strikes them. "Ma" Smith started to keep a diary for this purpose and the way a cure was found will be told with a touch of humor by Rose Seelye-Miller in The Continent next week. This is but one of a number of stories and articles that will be printed this summer, in which your whole family will be interested.

The Continent Next Week

Spari sMarion E tjan14
1205 Springfield av

FREE—to Continent Readers—FREE

REFERENCE EDITION

of the

American Standard Bible

Published by Thomas Nelson & Sons, New York. Edited by the American Revision Committee, with references and topical headings prepared by them. It contains 12 indexed maps.

No. 172

THE BIBLE FOR MINISTERS, SUPERINTENDENTS AND LEADERS.

Size 5¼x8 inches. Bourgeois type (sample below.) Egyptian seal, round corners, red under gold edges.

No. 167

21. 13 II. SAMUEL

The Bones of Saul and Jonathan brought to Zela. Wars with the Philistines. David

Jabesh-gilead, who had stolen them from the [1] street of [a] Beth-shan, [b] where the Philistines had hanged them, in the day that [c] the Philistines slew Saul in Gilboa; 13 and	[a] Josh. 17. 11 [b] 1 S. 31. 10 [c] 1 S. 31. 4 [d] Josh. 18. 28 [e] ch. 24. 25;	22 [g] And Jehovah song in the day ered him out of enemies, and

No. 167 (Limp) will be sent by The Continent to any present subscriber who will send one NEW yearly subscription at the regular rate of $2.50. (Or we will send it for $1.75 cash.)

No. 172 (Divinity circuit) will be sent by The Continent to any present subscriber who will send one NEW yearly subscription at the regular rate of $2.50, and 50c additional. (Or we will send it for $2.00 cash.

509 So. Wabash Ave: CHICAGO THE CONTINENT 156 Fifth Avenue NEW YORK

JUNE TWENTY SIX NINETEEN THIRTEEN

The CONTINENT

EDUCATIONAL

Iowa

Practical Education

at a low cost for young men and women

These courses are taught by expert specialists, and equal those of any Eastern college. In addition to thoroughness, our low tuition fees and living expenses appeal to ambitious men and women with limited funds and time. A third feature is the many opportunities for practical work while learning; and a fourth—our aid to students, enabling them to earn part or all expenses.

Highland Park College

Well-grounded, thorough, practical courses. Liberal Arts, Normal, Engineering, Pharmacy, Oratory, Music, Commerce and Home Study.

Buildings large and well equipped. Thousands of successful graduates everywhere. Tuition in Preparatory, College, Normal and Business Courses, $18 per quarter. Board from $2.25 to $2.75 per week. Write today, naming course interesting you. Address

Dr. GEORGE P. MAGILL, President
Des Moines, Iowa

Oskaloosa College

Correspondence courses to usual degrees in liberal arts, divinity, normal, and graduate. Courses and methods standard. Tuition reasonable. Especially interesting to clergymen unable to attend in residence. Send for catalogue Oskaloosa College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

PARSONS COLLEGE

OFFERS

To youth of both sexes superior advantages in securing an education.

IDEAL LOCATION.
STRONG FACULTY.
MODERN EQUIPMENT.

58 years of service to the church and country.

W. E. PARSONS, President. Fairfield, Iowa

Pennsylvania

The Montrose Bible Conference Association

Rev. R. A. TORREY, D.D., Director

AUGUST 1st TO 10th, 1913

A Summer School for Ministers, Students and Christian Workers

Rev. R. A. Torrey, Los Angeles; Rev. A. C. Dixon, London, Eng.; Rev. Prof. W. N. Griffith Thomas, Toronto, Can.: Rev. John McInnis, Halifax, N. S.; Rev. R. V. Miller, Henderson, N. C.; Rev. Geo. G. Mahy, Philadelphia, Pa.; John R. Clements, Binghamton, N. Y.; and others. Write for announcement.

WM. C. GAMBLE, Executive Secretary,
28 Maple Street, Montrose, Pa

BEECHWOOD

A Cultural and Practical School

FOR YOUNG WOMEN, AT JENKINTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA.
College Preparatory, College Departments—Conservatory of Music, Arts, Arts and Crafts, Domestic Arts and Sciences.
M. H. Reaser, Ph.D., :: :: :: President

Kiskiminetas Springs School

FOR BOYS

Each boy studied and his work adapted to his needs. Character developed along positive lines. Known and indorsed by every American University. Broad business course for boys not going to college. Beautiful new dormitory and 136 acres of land have just been added to equipment. Opens 26th year, undei same management, Sept. 23, 1913. Write for catalogue.

Kiskiminetas Springs School, Dept. 12, Saltsburg, Pa.

Minnesota

SHATTUCK SCHOOL

1867 MILITARY 1913

27 per cent enrolled are related to Alumni.
Write for Catalogue and Athletic Book.
Boys 8 to 12 in separate school.
Rev. James Dobbin, D.D., Rector.
Rev. Edward T. Mathison, Associate Rector.
FARIBAULT :: MINNESOTA

Macalester College

ST. PAUL, :: MINN.

Leading coeducational college in the Northwest.
Write for catalog.

$400,000,000 FOUR HUNDRED MILLIONS OF DOLLARS TO BUILD THE Panama Canal—

"The whole thing is stupendous, prodigious, overwhelming."

The Panama Number (July)

of

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE

will tell the story of the completed canal, how it will be operated, its uses and value to the United States and the world.

Panama's Bridge of Water

How it was built, how it will be operated, is told by JOSEPH BUCKLIN BISHOP, Secretary of the Isthmian Canal Commission.

What the Canal Will Accomplish

By EMORY R JOHNSON, Government Expert on Traffic.

Its value to commerce, saving in time to the ships of the world.

The Defence of the Canal

By former Secretary of War HENRY L. STIMSON. Its fortifications and strategic value in the event of war.

"The Panama Pacific"

International Exposition of 1915, by ELMER GREY. How it will look, the buildings, the beautiful courts and water-gates, the rich color scheme.

Wonderful Pictures in Color

The Panama Number will have a series of 16 full page illustrations made directly from nature in the natural colors that reveal the scenes of the canal with all the realism and convincing truth of a personal visit.

The number will be a very notable one also for its other contents.
The two greatest novels of the year

Mrs. Wharton's The Custom of the Country John Galsworthy's The Dark Flower

(The Love Life of a Man) are continued and both reach situations of absorbing interest.

Mary R. S. Andrews, author of "The Perfect Tribute," contributes one of her delightful stories about college life, "Amici"—full of humor and sentiment.

H. G. Dwight writes of "Mohammedan Holidays," scenes in Constantinople.

Ernest Peixotto describes his journey across Titicaca, with a glimpse of Bolivia Lake Titicaca lies over 12,000 feet above the sea.

SPECIAL: A reprint of the earlier chapters of Mrs. Wharton's story will be sent free to any one upon request.

$3.00 a year CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, NEW YORK 25c a number

EDUCATIONAL

Missouri

Missouri Valley College

MARSHALL, MISSOURI

College, Music Conservatory, Academy

Co-educational; four modern buildings; modern laboratories; library; museum; beautiful athletic grounds; forty acres in campus; all buildings heated from one heating plant; lighted by electricity; standards high; location ideal; Marshall and Saline County are "dry"; most beautiful and prosperous city. Opens September 8, 1913. Write for catalog.

WILLIAM HENRY BLACK, President,
405 College Street, Marshall, Missouri.

Forest Park University

53d year. College and Preparatory. Certificate admits to Wellesley, Smith, Mt. Holyoke, Vassar and Co-educational universities. College of Music, E. R. KROEGER, Director; STOCKHOFF, WILLIAMS, Piano; NORDSTROM-CARTER, Voice; Public School Music. Violin, Expression, Art, Bible, Domestic Science. Year, $300.

President, ANNA S. CAIRNS, :: St. Louis, Mo.

When answering advertisements mention this paper

EDUCATIONAL

Missouri

Lindenwood

Junior College for Women

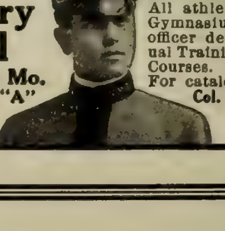
St. Charles, Mo. Est. 1831. A strong, up-to-date institution with high standards. Fully accredited by the University of Missouri. Two years college work equal to the first two years at any University. Music and Art.

Domestic Science—A regular study without extra charge. Thorough instruction. Diploma granted.

Excellent Preparatory Department. 50 minutes from St. Louis. Delightful climate the year round; 30 acres woodlands; modern buildings. Terms $350. Catalog. Address

George Frederic Ayres, Ph.D., Pres., Box 297

Kemper Military School



Boonville, Mo.
Rated Class "A" by War Dept.

A teacher to every ten boys. Modern buildings and extensive grounds. All athletics. Fine Gymnasium. Army officer detailed. Manual Training. Business Courses. 70th year. For catalogue address

Col. T. A. Johnston
Supt.
726 Third St.

Subscription Terms—The subscription price of The Continent is $2.50 per year payable in advance.

Postage is prepaid on all subscriptions in the United States, Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, Guam, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, Cuba and Mexico.

Foreign Postage—For Canada, 50 cents should be added for postage, and for all other countries in the Postal Union $1.10 should be added for postage.

Remittances should be sent by draft on Chicago or New York, Express or P. O. money orders payable to The Continent. If personal check is sent, 10 cents must be added for collection.

THE CONTINENT

Continuing The Interior (Established 1870) and The Westminster (Established 1904)
PUBLISHED WEEKLY

THE McCORMICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, Proprietors
Oliver R. Williamson, Publisher

CHICAGO
509 South Wabash Avenue

NEW YORK CITY
Presbyterian Building, 156 5th Avenue

PHILADELPHIA
Witherspoon Building

Entered as second-class matter October 6, 1910, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Copyright, 1913, by the McCormick Publishing Company.

Acknowledgments—Within two weeks the date following name on "yellow label" will show to the first of what month subcription has been paid. No other receipt is given unless stamp is sent.

Change of Address—Kindly send us both old and new address a week previous to the date of the desired change.

Discontinuances—No subscription is dropped without a definite request from the subscriber; otherwise it is assumed that he wishes to continue.

Manuscripts—The Continent does not accept responsibility for damage or loss of manuscripts sent to it for consideration.

Advertising rates on application.

IN THIS ISSUE:

THURSDAY, JUNE 26, 1913

EDITORIAL—

RELIGIOUS WORLD—

Proud or Efficient?.................... 885
Editorial—
  Impressive Preaching.................... 888
  Background of Fact Behind "Bradford Horton" 888
  Zeal for Truth Among Advertising Men 888
  Toronto's Conclave an Immense Achievement 889
  Another Traffic Trading on Temptation 889
The World.................... 886
Religious World—
  Irish Assembly Committed Against Home Rule 887
The Beloved Memory of a Righteous Man (with Portrait)...Robert E. Speer 890
Is the Law a Vocation for a Christian Man?................Henry W. Jessup 891
"Ma" Smith's Diary and What Came of It..................Rose Seelye-Miller 893
The Home Council—Your Boy's "Own" Room...............Marion C. Graves 895
Young America—Emily's "Bosom Sin" ....Ruth Hall Johnston 896
  The Voyage (with Illustration) ....Kathryn C. Wheeler 896
New Books.................... 897
The Sunday School ....J. L. Scott, H. D. Jenkins 898
Devotional Service........E. A. Wicher 899
Young People's Service......W. T. Ellis 899
Missionary Work (with Illustration).... 900
The Open Hearth.................... 901
Ways of Working.................... 902
Proposed Presbyterian Federation ....Thornton Whaling 903
Helpful Talks on Investments—B. H. Bonfoey, C. F. Pettyjohn, David T. Bomar, M. M. Sessions, E. S. Ellis, A. M. Kingkade, G. W. Hart............. 904

Around the Shop

Recently there passed away from earthly life a man of great talent, under whom the Around-the-Shop Man served a part of his apprenticeship to journalism. This man was strictly moral. His habits were good—mostly they came within the province of work. The truth is that he was so exclusively devoted to the immediate work for which he was responsible that he was known as "a man of no outside interests." He never took a vacation. Perhaps some of these facts account for the sad assertion by one of his friends: "He died of old age—and barely 50!"

Almost every day the Around-the-Shop Man has evidence that in our Continent family youthfulness ranges down from pretty near the hundred mark. (We'd almost surely be challenged if we put the mark as low as 90.) Why is this? Well, of course, we do not actually know, but we suspect that our folks are of the sort who do not live to themselves. They have a genuine Christian interest in making life more joyful for others, and they maintain this interest not only by personal contact but by keeping in touch with the good that the world is doing. Do you wonder that the writer of the following letter is young at—well, read for yourself:

"Dear Friend and Publisher: I am very glad to renew my subscription to The Continent for another year. I value the paper highly. It it just what I want to keep me in touch with the religious news of the day particularly, though the contributions on other subjects are very enjoyable.

"It may interest you to know that I am a very old subscriber—within a few months of 90 years. Have you many of that age? Very cordially. Anna E. Cole."

—

The Around-the-Shop Man doesn't know how many Continent readers of 90 there may be, but he wishes for all of them as youthful an old age as that of Anna E. Cole.

EDUCATIONAL

Illinois

Can't Afford to Go to College?

That's because you haven't heard of

BLACKBURN COLLEGE, CARLINVILLE, ILLINOIS (60 miles north of St. Louis)

Helps Young Men and Women to Help Themselves

UNIQUE FEATURES OF THE SELF HELP PLAN

I—A high grade college education for one hundred dollars a year.
This includes room, heated with steam and furnished (except bedding), board and tuition.

II—A college community in which students work three hours a day at some profitable and educative labor.

III—A fund of twenty-three thousand dollars to educate young men in college for the Presbyterian ministry.
The charge per year to such is only fifty dollars.

For further information write

President Hudson, Carlinville, Ill.

The JAMES MILLIKIN UNIVERSITY

A Christian College offering full classical and technical courses

The Decatur College and Industrial School offers courses in the Liberal Arts, Engineering, Domestic Economy, Manual Training, Pedagogy, Library Management, Commerce and Finance, Music, etc.; full preparatory courses in the Academy admitting to the above and apprenticeship courses in the mechanical trades. Seven large and beautiful buildings. Fine equipment and superior faculty. Over a thousand students each year.
For Pictorial Bulletin or Catalog, address
A. R. TAYLOR, President
Decatur - - - - Illinois

NURSES are given a thorough and practical three years training at PASSAVANT Memorial Hospital Training School.

They also have the advantages of a monthly cash allowance, a separate Nurses' Home, and affiliation with the Illinois Training School for Nurses. For further information, address
MISS E. C. GLENN, R. N.,
149-151 West Superior Street. - - Chicago, Illinois.

NORTHWESTERN

MILITARY AND NAVAL ACADEMY
Highland Park, Ill., & Lake Geneva, Wis.

A select school with a high standard of Academic work. Physical, moral and social benefits of a Military and Naval life. Limited enrollment. Catalogue. Address Col. R. P. Davidson, Supt., Lake Geneva, Wis. Chicago Office Room 305, N. Y. Life Bldg. 'Phone Randolph 1537

Illinois Woman's College

Music, Art, Expression, Domestic Science

Music Hall best in the West, Pianoforte, Pipe Organ, Voice, Violin, Public School Music, Ear Training, Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition, Theory, Analysis, History of Music, Normal Classes. Expenses reasonable. Catalogue. Address

PRESIDENT HARKER, Box 31, Jacksonville, Illinois

Frances Shimer School of the University of Chicago. For girls and young women. Academic and college courses. Music. Art. Domestic Science. 61st year. Catalogue.
Rev. Wm. P McKee, Dean, Box 602, Mt. Carroll, Ill.

BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY

Instructors have wide experience in the "Boy Problem." ACADEMY ideally located, 35 miles from St. Louis. Healthful environment, Christian influence. Prepares young men for business or college. The ideal school for YOUR boy. Write HEADMASTER, BUNKER HILL, ILL.

EDUCATIONAL

Illinois

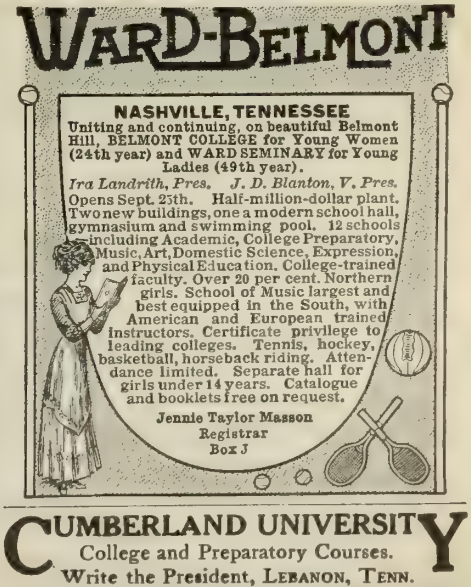
MONTICELLO SEMINARY

76th year opens Sept. 18th. A home school for young women and girls. Preparatory and Junior College Courses. Domestic Science, Music, Art. Certificate privileges. Well-equipped laboratories. Gymnasium. Tennis courts, archery range, basketball and hockey fields. Rates moderate. Music and Art extra. Send for catalog. Miss Martina C. Erickson, Principal, Godfrey, Ill.

TODD SEMINARY FOR BOYS

An ideal school for young boys near Chicago. No serious sickness in 50 years. We educate the whole boy. Send for prospectus. NOBLE HILL, Woodstock, Ill.

Tennessee



WARD-BELMONT

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE
Uniting and continuing, on beautiful Belmont Hill, BELMONT COLLEGE for Young Women (24th year) and WARD SEMINARY for Young Ladies (49th year).
Ira Landrith, Pres. J. D. Blanton, V. Pres.
Opens Sept. 25th. Half-million-dollar plant. Two new buildings, one a modern school hall, gymnasium and swimming pool. 12 schools—including Academic, College Preparatory, Music, Art, Domestic Science, Expression, and Physical Education. College-trained faculty. Over 20 per cent. Northern girls. School of Music largest and best equipped in the South, with American and European trained instructors. Certificate privilege to leading colleges. Tennis, hockey, basketball, horseback riding. Attendance limited. Separate hall for girls under 14 years. Catalogue and booklets free on request.
Jennie Taylor Masson
Registrar
Box J

CUMBERLAND UNIVERSITY
College and Preparatory Courses.
Write the President, Lebanon, Tenn.

Virginia

Mary Baldwin Seminary
For Young Ladies. STAUNTON, VIRGINIA.
Term begins Sept. 11th, 1913. Located in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia. Unsurpassed climate. Modern equipment. Students from 34 States. Terms moderate. Send for catalogue. Miss E. C. WEIMAR, Principal.

He named Ralph Connor

The Continent next week will print another of the series of sketches of prominent men by William T. Ellis. This article concerns a man who, as an orator, is said to violate all the canons of public speaking and yet forces trained speakers into second place when he appears on the platform. "He is the embodiment of an idea let loose on the platform," says Mr. Ellis—the strongest living link between Canada and the United States—a Presbyterian preacher of righteousness and international good will, who is editor of a prominent Canadian daily—James A. Macdonald. Dr. Macdonald is a member of the regular contributing staff of The Continent. Among other good things for next week is a Hymn of Consecration to the Cause of Social Justice, by Charles E. Perkins, voicing a new idea of Christian song.

Published only in The Continent

Registered Trade Mark Established Half a Century

Summer Shopping

At "The Linen Store"

We do not deplete our range of merchandise in the summer months by allowing stocks to run out till fall.

Our customers appreciate this convenience and come here with confidence that summer shopping at "The Linen Store" is practically as satisfactory as at any other season.

City people at distant summer homes will find that buying can be conducted by mail very easily and satisfactorily. We have careful arrangements for facilitating prompt and intelligent selling by mail.

James McCutcheon & Co

5th Ave., 33d & 34th Sts., New York

EDUCATIONAL EDUCATIONAL

Georgia

AGNES SCOTT COLLEGE

DECATUR (6 Miles From Atlanta) GEORGIA

Letters—Philosophy—Science—Home Economics

B. A. Graduates, from this college, are admitted, without examination, as candidates for the M. A. degree in the leading universities of the North and East

No Preparatory Department Dormitory Capacity Limited to 300

For Catalog and Bulletin of Views, address the President

F. H. GAINES, D. D. LL. D.

South Carolina

Converse College

Spartanburg, S. C.
A Standard College for Women.
No Preparatory Department.
Confers degrees of A. B., A. M., B. Mus.
Near Blue Ridge Mountains.
Ideal winter climate. No malaria.
ROBERT P. PELL, Litt. D., President.

Indiana

WABASH COLLEGE

CRAWFORDSVILLE, INDIANA—80th YEAR

Opening Day September 16th. A college of liberal culture for young men. Modern equipment. Strong teaching force. Moderate expenses. For particulars address GEORGE L. MACKINTOSH, Pres.

Wisconsin

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR ACADEMY

Endeavor, Wisconsin

A home school, coeducational, accredited, giving the Christian interpretation to life, just when life ideals are forming, in a country village without the saloon; varied courses, including Music, Home Economics and Agriculture. Total cost for school year for tuition, board and heated room, $150.

Address W. M. ELLIS, :: Principal

RIPON COLLEGE

RIPON :: :: WISCONSIN

Indiana

Before Deciding Where to Attend School

Send for catalog of Valparaiso University, Valparaiso, Indiana. This is one of the largest institutions of learning in the United States.

Thorough Instruction at Lowest Expense.

Catalog mailed free. Address
H. B. BROWN, President.
O. P. KINSEY, Vice-President.

School of Expression

Summer terms: Boston, July and August; Asheville, N. C., July; Chicago, August. Voice, reading, speaking. Personal work four and a half hours a day for teachers, lawyers and preachers. 12 courses. 34th year opens October 2d. Address S. S. Curry, Litt.D., President, Copley Sq., Boston, Mass.

Supremis Floor Finish

was the first Floor Varnish offered to the public (1883). Its surpassing beauty, rapid drying and great durability have put it in the forefront of floor preservatives. The manufacturers also produce an unequaled line of Varnishes, Stains, Enamels and kindred goods for Automobiles, Carriages, Yachts, Railways, Fine Furniture and similar lines.

CHICAGO VARNISH CO.

CHICAGO Established 1865 NEW YORK

EDUCATIONAL

Ohio

The WESTERN COLLEGE for WOMEN

OXFORD, OHIO FOUNDED 1853

Ranked with Leading Eastern Colleges

A center of stimulating life for thoughtful students. Comprehensive curriculum; definite religious influence. 350 beautiful acres; campus, farm, garden. Music and Art Departments of special brilliance. Domestic Science. Outdoor Athletics; Gymnasium. Illustrated literature on request.

Mary A. Sawyer, A. M., Lit. D., Dean.

GLENDALE COLLEGE

GLENDALE, OHIO

Founded 1853 Suburban to Cincinnati

Few residence schools for young women are as ideally situated for health, beauty and advantages. Courses of study prepare for all colleges, and give two years' collegiate work splendidly adapted for high school graduates. Strong Music Department, Art, Expression, etc.

Miss R. J. DeVore, President.

The Cincinnati Kindergarten Training School

University and Public School Affiliation

Unusual opportunities for public, private and mission kindergarten practice. Special courses for college graduates and social workers More positions offered our graduates than we can fill 34th year begins Sept. 18, 1913. For circulars address Lillian H. Stone, Prin., 6 Linton St., Cincinnati, O

DON'T THROW AWAY YOUR DISCARDED Furniture, Clothing, Magazines Papers, etc. YOU can do great good by sending them to the Chicago Christian Industrial League, helping the church to find work for the idle, to shelter the homeless, to feed the hungry and to preach the gospel to the men of the down town streets. Over 1,000 men helped annually. Every little counts. Send a card to George A. Kilbey, 12 East 12th Street, Chicago, Ill.

THE CONTINENT

CONTINUING THE INTERIOR (ESTABLISHED 1870) AND THE WESTMINSTER (ESTABLISHED 1904)

VOLUME 44, NO. 26 JUNE 26, 1913 WHOLE NO. 2248

Nolan R. Best, Editor—156 Fifth Avenue, New York. Oliver R. Williamson, Publisher—509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago. William T. Ellis, Editor Afield—Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia. The McCormick Publishing Company, Proprietors

Proud or Efficient?

"NO MAN CAN AT ONE AND THE SAME TIME GIVE THE IMPRESSION THAT HE HIMSELF IS CLEVER AND THAT CHRIST IS MIGHTY TO SAVE."

So says that straight-spoken Scotchman, Dr. James Denney of Glasgow. And what a searching word it is! It "pierces even to the dividing of joints and marrow."

Why don't the preaching of the pulpits and the teaching of the Sunday schools accomplish more? How can such a vast volume of Christian explanation, argument, testimony, exhortation, appeal, be unloaded on the world week after week, and so little effect comparatively come from it?

But "if ye are willing to receive it," is not this canny observation of Dr. Denney the clew of the mystery?

The preaching and teaching of the church fail of the effect the gospel ought to have, mainly because the thrust of desire and intent behind them is not all centered on the Lord of the gospel but partly diverted by self-consciousness to the preacher or teacher himself.

If the powder charge in a cartridge has any other outlet than straight behind the bullet, the bullet never goes home. And the preaching cartridge misses fire often because it is pin-pricked at the base with the preacher's pride and anxiety for himself.

* * *

The temptations attending Christian preaching are the most insidious that man encounters.

They root back in a minister's period of preparation. An intelligent candidate for the ministry must quickly see that it takes an exceptional equipment of personal qualities to make a man an acceptable pastor in this age.

Wide information, vigorous thinking power, extensive literary culture, convincing oratorical art, the highest possible degree of social facility, obviously enter into the strength of the men whose messages and leadership are today counting for religion most efficiently. So a conscientious young man is bound to put himself to it to achieve in all these particulars the utmost superiority that he can.

Yet essential as this is, it is just here where his peril begins. Stepping out of seminary into the pulpit after long years of hard work to make himself superior, he inevitably carries with him one anxious question: Is his equipment going to stand the test?

Can he think and speak strongly enough to hold strong men to his preaching? Has he tact enough to win the good will of his congregation? Can he be enough of a gentleman to be acceptable in the homes of his people?

* * *

Now these are all justifiable questions for a minister to think of. No man would be a worthy pastor who was indifferent or insensible to these personal adaptations. But human nature never seems able to set the correct boundary to these worries about self.

The danger does not get serious, however, until the minister begins to have reason for thinking he is succeeding—that his people are pleased with his eloquence, his depth of thought and breadth of learning, his gracious manners in the pulpit and out of it.

Just a few whispered echoes of comment from the pews, if the same be flattering, are sufficient to impress a minister that he has a reputation to sustain and must not now on any account fall below the standard his people expect.

After that, every sermon must prove the minister clever. The minister is there to see that it does.

And usually the sermon, thus watched by its author, does its appointed work. It proves the proposition. The preacher is clever.

But Dr. Denney is right. It does not also prove that Jesus is mighty to save. Hearers admire the minister; they do not seek Jesus.

* * *

To get brilliant equipment—the most brilliant possible—and then forget it, is the strain put on a man by highly cultured preparation for the gospel ministry.

The sainthood demanded of the modern preacher is the next-to-inconceivable self-forgetfulness that is able to be strong for the sake of others and successful for the cause of Christ and yet not covet rewards of reputation for himself.

The paradox consists of asking a man through his years of preparation to spend all efforts on developing his own personality to the maximum and asking him afterwards never to be proud of the result.

Yet no man who actually cares for efficiency—no man who in his deeper moments desires overwhelmingly to be of use to his Lord—can afford to indulge himself in the supposition that the paradox can't be solved in his case.

The idea that a little vanity is natural to a man and a preacher can't eliminate it any more than anybody else; the sneaking hope that after all one can evade the law of spiritual force and make his preaching tell without abandoning entirely self-glorification—these are specious appeals by which the old temptation comes back when half-routed.

But they are still as false as ever to the fact of things. The man who succumbs to them can never rise to power in preaching.

* * *

There is only one sort of sermon in which the gospel has free course to its full effect, and that is the sermon in which the preacher has forgotten every circumstance save one—that the men in front of him need Jesus and Jesus wants them.

Self-consciousness then disappears, but self comes forward as never before—literally the best self, self bound by an all-dominating constraint to complete enlistment in an overmastering cause.

Then the powers of the preacher shine at their superbest—but nobody praises him; they who hear are entranced by the Greater Man who shines through him.

It is vain, however, to prescribe conditions to produce such effect. Effective preaching and teaching are not attained by prescription.

The self-love that estops effectiveness is an evil spirit that can be cast out by no remedy save the "expulsive power" of a greater love—a love for Christ and humanity compelling enough to absorb into itself every smaller motive.

And that is reached not by willing it or wishing for it, but by abandoning one's self more utterly to fellowship with God and men.

When the need of man and the sufficiency of Christ are once seen in the light of all the gospel reality, the two will be hemispheres filling the universe. Then there will be room for nothing else.

All the ineffective minister can do is to ask his Lord to give him that vision.

The World

Great Reunion of North and South at Gettsyburg

Veterans of the civil war from North and South, survivors of the historic battle of Gettysburg, are beginning to gather to the number of many thousand in a great camp on the field where half a century ago they and their fallen brothers were engaged in bloody strife. The event will be at once unique, picturesque and memorable. The camp comprises 280 acres lying to the southwest of the town of Gettysburg, and consists of 7,000 tents, 5,000 for the veterans. The state of Pennsylvania and the United States government cooperated for this memorable celebration, each one appropriating $150,000 for expense of entertainment. Mr. Garrison, the secretary of war, last week asked Congress to guarantee an additional appropriation to care for an increase in the attendance. Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Illinois and many other states will also pay railroad fares of survivors living in their boundaries.

On July 1 there will be appropriate exercises under the joint auspices of the Grand Army of the Republic and the United Confederate Veterans. July 2 will be Military Day under the direction of the chief of staff of the United States army, with exhibition drills and maneuvers by the regular service. July 3 will be Civic Day and the governor of Pennsylvania is to preside. A program of orations, sermon and music has been prepared. The Fourth of July—National Day—the chief justice of the United States supreme court has been asked to preside and the President to make an oration. At noon the corner stone of a peace memorial will be laid with appropriate ceremonies. Most of the exercises will be held in an immense tent, one of the largest in the United States.

General J. M. Shoonmaker of Illinois is chairman of the Gettysburg commission and General C. Irvine Walker of Charleston, South Carolina, is chairman of the Confederate Veterans committee. General Walker recently said: "I am sure that the presence of the 10,000 veterans expected from the southern states will mean more for the peace, happiness and prosperity of our country than any event that has happened in its history."

Mr. Wilson Urges Reforms in the Currency System

President Wilson on Monday read to Congress a special message on the currency question. This was Mr. Wilson's second personal appearance on a similar mission since his inauguration, and senators and representatives now recognize beyond peradventure of mistake that the President wants to be and must be considered as a vital, dynamic part of the government. Not only is he the chief executive but he has guided, if not initiated, new legislation, and the chief credit will be his, as likewise the blame, if the final results be unfavorable. But the latter contingency does not affright Woodrow Wilson. Already the Democratic editorial champions are proclaiming that there will soon be passed the first tariff bill in fifty years providing real reductions in schedules from a high protective basis, and the first income tax bill in fifty years that will stand the test of the courts. And the house has now received what The Richmond Virginian describes as "the first real piece of banking and currency legislation in 125 years."

There has been little if any disagreement in Washington as to the need of new banking and currency laws, but there is a question whether the reform shall be attempted during the present special session, or deferred until the regular meeting of Congress in December. Washington City is anything but attractive as a summer resort, and many of the national legislators want to hurry home just as soon as they can get through with the tariff. Mr. Wilson believes that tariff changes and currency reforms should be concurrent, as the contemplated improvement in the currency system would, he thinks, enable the business of the country to readjust itself more readily and easily to altered import duties. On this point it is stated that the President will be guided by the public opinion of the nation at large.

Secretary of State Bryan issued a statement strongly indorsing the currency bill presented by Chairman Glass of the house committee and urging immediate action.

Panama Canal May Receive Ships in Six Months

Colonel Goethals, head of the greatest public work ever undertaken by the United States government outside the national boundaries—one of the epoch-making undertakings of this age—has lately spent some time in Washington in conferences with the President and the war department, and on the eve of his return to Panama it was unofficially announced that the canal will be practically completed by December 1. By that date the Atlantic battle fleet could be transferred to the Pacific by way of the isthmus. In October the last dike which holds the water out of Culebra cut will be blown up. By January 1 the canal will, according to The New York Tribune, be in condition to handle commerce, but the permanent administrative force will first be organized and trained, and the whole of next year may be devoted to this work and to discovering and correcting errors and defects and getting everything into smooth running order for the formal opening on January 1, 1915. Colonel Goethals will have to his credit a large margin of time and expense over the estimates made when he quietly and energetically took hold.

Brazilian Minister the Nation's Honored Guest

Dr. Lauro Muller, minister of foreign affairs of the republic of Brazil, is touring the United States and has everywhere been received with honor, and in response has expressed sentiments of the greatest cordiality. The Brazilian envoy, theoretically, is returning the official visit paid to South America by Senator Elihu Root when the latter was secretary of state several years ago. He will also select a site for the Brazilian exhibit at the Panama exposition. Dr. Muller is looked upon as the next president of Brazil, and after reaching this country was accompanied by Mr. Malone, assistant secretary of state, as President Wilson's special representative, together with a few army and navy officers. New York, Boston and Chicago business men were particularly eager to offer entertainment to the distinguished guest.

British exporters are said to be watching to see what effect Dr. Muller's tour will have on the commercial relations of Brazil and the United States. The same is true of German exporters, who take pleasure in Dr. Muller's Teutonic descent, but they are warned by the German press not to place too great dependence on racial sympathies alone.

American Prestige in Argentina; German Plans

A Berlin newspaper reports that American trade with Argentina is increasing noticeably, while German trade with the leading Southern American republic last year showed a 3 per cent decrease. The recent declaration of the Washington administration that it would work in harmony with the Latin-American countries is said to have been most favorably received in Buenos Aires. To increase German influence and prestige in Argentina German citizens resident in both countries have established a fund to support Argentine students studying in German universities.

According to newspaper reports Theodore Roosevelt has been invited to lecture on political and economic subjects at Buenos Aires. The invitation is from a group of private citizens, with the reputed backing of the Argentine government. Such a step, if carried out, might go far to counteract the supposedly anti-American spirit of "the A. B. C. league," an alliance embracing Argentina, Brazil and Chile.

New York the World's Greatest Port

According to figures just compiled under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, New York City is the world's greatest port, leading London last year by not quite $2,000,000. New York's total of imports and exports was $1,793,690,123. After London come, in order, the ports of Hamburg, Liverpool, Antwerp, Marseilles, Havre, Bremen, Buenos Aires and Calcutta. Fifty years ago the commerce of the entire country was less than a quarter that of its great port now.

The extraordinary growth of the United States is shown by the per capita figures for imports and exports. Half a century ago the imports were $5.79 and the exports $5.83 for each man, woman and child, whereas last year imports amounted to $16.94 and exports to $22.41 per capita. It is significant that exports have increased far more largely than imports, though statistics show they were almost identical in 1862.

Physicians Hold Important National Meeting

The American Medical Association has just concluded an important annual convention at Minneapolis. The association reported nearly 40,000 members. Its president, Dr. John Witherspoon of Nashville, Tennessee, advocated a national board of health and centralized governmental power to prevent epidemics and stamp out infectious diseases.

"They call this association a medical trust," said Dr. Witherspoon, "and we are accused of selfish motives. This in the face of the fact that the accomplishment of the great demand we are making for national recognition, not of ourselves but of the principles of preventive medicine that we advocate, would at once lessen the income of every physician in the practice of medicine."

Dr. Bloodgood of Johns Hopkins University outlined a nationwide movement for the prevention of cancer. Dr. J. R. Williams of Rochester, New York, pointed to the household ice box as an example of fraud. "Paper-soled" refrigerators, he said, were both inefficient and dangerous for food and milk storage.

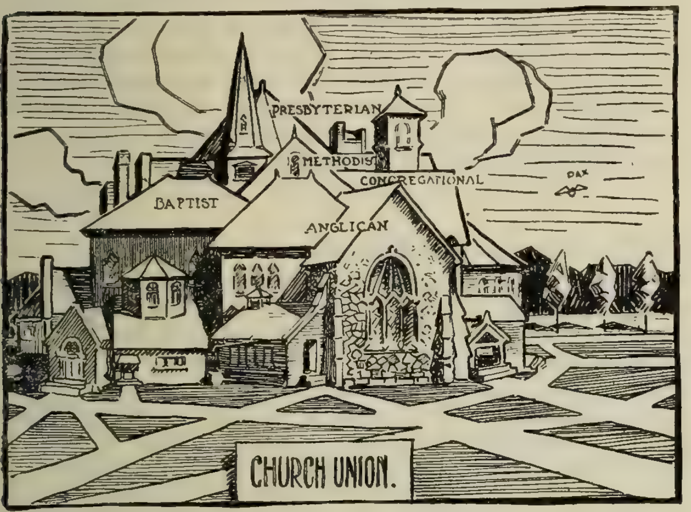
Dr. V. C. Vaughn, dean of the University of Michigan Medical School, is the new president of the association. For the first time in its sixty-four years of history the organization elected a woman vice-president.

✣ ✣

Carnegie Aids Anglo-German Peace

Andrew Carnegie, who visited Emperor William of Germany while the emperor's twenty-fifth anniversary was being celebrated, signalized the occasion by a gift of $25,000 to The Oak, the official organ of the German Peace Society. One of the chief objects of the organization is to promote good relations between Great Britain and Germany. Dr. Boyd Carpenter, head of the British churchmen's delegation to the kaiser's jubilee, announced the donation.

"Not Beautiful, but Effective"



The Very Latest Cubist-Futurist Picture
[From The Toronto Globe.]

✣ ✣

—Since the recent death of Alfred Austin, British poet-laureate, at the age of 76, there has been much discussion, some of it satirical, as to who will succeed to official poetic honors. The Asquith government has given no intimation as to who would be selected, and it appears to be quite possible that the office may be allowed to remain unfilled.

—Senator Works of California has proposed a constitutional amendment prohibiting throughout the country the manufacture, sale and importation of "distilled liquor containing alcohol" except for mechanical, scientific and medicinal purposes. The amendment would allow the liquor business three years of grace before becoming effective.

Religious World

Irish Assembly Committed Against Home Rule

In the recent annual session of the Irish Presbyterian General Assembly, convened as always in Belfast, the most exciting issue quite naturally was the recurrence of the home rule question. In June of 1912 the minority in the church, which refuses to believe that home rule in Ireland means Rome rule, protested vigorously against committing the church to an official position on a political question, no matter what might be the personal sentiments of a majority of its members. Under this protest compromising counsels prevailed, and the Assembly contented itself with adopting a statement which declared that the feeling of Irish Presbyterians had been sufficiently shown in the great Belfast convention of the previous autumn, when so many thousands signed the "Ulster Covenant," and therefore it was needless for the Assembly to make further pronouncement upon the subject.

But during the year the anti-home-rule leaders of the church have grown more and more dissatisfied with this concession. Perhaps the minority has been a little incautious in overemphasizing the significance of the Assembly's failure to go on record respecting home rule. For several months, therefore, a definite campaign has been fought to make sure that there would be no uncertain sound from General Assembly this year. It seems unquestionable that this movement has included intimidation and ostracism directed against Presbyterian ministers who have been broad enough to say openly that they trusted the integrity of Catholic fellow citizens in the center and south of Ireland. Such ministers have found attendance upon their churches declining and themselves put to severe personal annoyance in many other ways.

But the open measure employed by the uncompromising majority of the church was the circulation of a petition among the laity asking the Assembly to give a "clear and unmistakable deliverance against home rule." This was brought to Belfast at Assembly time with 131,000 signatures attached, all Presbyterians above 16 years of age and approximately 30 per cent of the denomination's full membership. Rev. William Park moved in response to this memorial that the Assembly declare the Presbyterian Church opposed to home rule as unyieldingly as in 1886 and 1893, and record its firm conviction that the pending bill for setting up an Irish government "would inflict incalculable injury on our country and on our church" if enacted into law. To this Rev. J. B. Armour, a well-known home ruler, opposed a motion which simply reiterated the action of 1912. For this amendment Mr. Armour himself spoke and also Elder George Henderson. But both addressed a very disorderly and impatient Assembly. When the amendment was put the temper of the gathering was so vehement that not even the mover and seconder had courage to lift their hands in behalf of it.

The question then turned on the original resolution of Mr. Park, and that being taken by ballot forty-three members were bold enough to cast their votes against the political commitment of the church. But as was readily to be anticipated, the favorable majority was overwhelming, 921 ballots being returned in support of the anti-home-rule action.

The Assembly received the result with wild enthusiasm, and sang "God Save the King" and the doxology. A considerable element were not satisfied, however, with this victory, but were bent on exposing the identity of the forty-three dissenters. It was moved that the clerk be instructed to publish the ballots. But by the intervention of Mr. Park, the majority leader, who said that with such an overwhelming triumph the victors could afford to be generous, this proposal was withdrawn. The moderator of the Irish Assembly for the present year is Dr. W. J. Macaulay of Portadown, who was elected by the preference of twenty-eight out of thirty-six presbyteries of the church.

✣ ✣

A University of Christian Extension Methods

The school year just ended has seen at Hartford, Connecticut, the initial realization of the great plans which President Mackenzie and his coworkers have afoot for America's first real university of aggressive Christian method—a plan made possible by the benefactions of Mrs. John S. Kennedy, for whom is named the Kennedy school of missions, one of the chief factors in the plan. The oldest constituent, of course, is Hartford Theological Seminary, which under President Mackenzie's guidance is developing more and more emphasis on practice in proportion to theory. The school of pedagogy stands next in seniority, but its scope is being gradually enlarged on the basis of the new endowment. This department, of course, is intended mainly for the training of lay church workers, peculiarly directors of education, Sunday school teachers and pastors' assistants. It also offers a special group of courses for private church members who crave greater efficiency in their volunteer service. A course for social workers aims to accentuate the practical harmony between the church and such social agencies as settlements, charity organizations, juvenile courts and public schools. Child study and home economics likewise find a place in the scheme of the school.

The school of missions is so conducted as to afford opportunities of instruction not only to young people preparing for the field but to missionaries at home on furlough. Every endeavor of the faculty is to be directed to exalting the conception of missions as a world force worthy to enlist the highest human powers, yet without minimizing in the slightest the essential supernatural conditions of success in the enterprise.

Editorial

Impressive Preaching

STATED CLERK ROBERTS rejoiced the recent Assembly and the whole church by his report that the addition to the church by confession of faith during the past year have been the largest in its history. This is good news. The tide turned some time ago. Now let us hope that the increase will be more rapid still.

A question that rises is, What kind of preaching did this, so far as preaching did it? How would one describe a sermon which is effectual to gain such purposes? When one has spoken of a sermon as "impressive," how much has been said, and how warmly has a sermon been praised? In Principal Forsyth's latest book, which he calls "The Principle of Authority," we find this paragraph:

"Impressive preaching is not the ideal Christian type, which is regenerative. A deep impression is not yet a new creation; and to create an impression is not to new create a soul, nor to set up an authority over life. This is one reason why out of much impressive preaching, to which audiences crowd, we have not so much in the way of personal conversion or church power. Churches are made by conversions rather than by mere impression."

Dr. Forsyth goes on to point out that "merely impressive" preaching may, of course, result in spiritual development of believers. Here he is only emphasizing that it does not lead to conversion.

In all such antitheses between impression and conversion there is constant danger, which we recognize. Some years ago there was a slogan which was sent broadcast, "Every sermon for a soul." Ministers were urged that the direct purpose of each sermon should be to win someone to Christ. One minister within our knowledge felt so strongly the importance of this work that he determined that every sermon should so shape itself that there would be some natural point in it at which he could quote the familiar John 3:16.

Like all slogans, that one contained a needed word for the time, a word which is still needed in our time. Like all slogans also, it left out of account certain other responsibilities. It would tend to mere tiresome reiteration if a pastor should decide that he would pay no heed to the fact that his congregation has in it many who in God's mercy are already converted, but who need guidance and counsel and spiritual food. Of course, every sermon must be for a soul, but it may be for a converted soul who needs nurture and spiritual supply. If it should fire such souls to zeal for the seeking of others, it will, of course, result in conversions.

We do not minimize such impressive preaching when we renew the plea that there be a large increase of preaching that definitely makes appeal to the will of the unconverted and presents a plea for Christ. When someone suggested to Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler that there were so few unconverted people in congregations now that sermons to them, or about them, were not wise, he replied with some warmth: "Why should there be any unconverted people in the congregations today? There is nothing there for them." He felt strongly that if it were understood that there was something for them in the service, more of them would attend.

Many ministers have sad experiences which raise doubt about that conclusion. Some have settled down to the feeling that the way to reach the world is through believers, rather than through church services, and that the church services are to inspire believers to seek the unconverted. We feel, however, that there is still need for this type of preaching, which we cannot call "impressive" in Principal Forsyth's meaning, but rather, with his meaning, must call "converting." It is simply not enough for a minister to feed the souls of his people, and to disregard the larger mass of the community who have not yet seen Christ as a Saviour.

No matter of method is involved. It is not a time to hold any honest work up to contempt. There is doubtless room for men who give their lives to the appeal for immediate decision. We are convinced, however, that a study of the returns will show that the great gains of our church this year have not come from exceptional methods. They have come from the steady appeal of ministers and other believers in the ordinary progress of the work. The evangelistic committee's excellent emphasis on the regular church work is having results.

We have faith to believe that there is an awakening church. The new appeal for social service is not deadening but rather quickening the responsibility for personal salvation. Now let the two movements go forward inextricably interwoven. A saved man in a saved community; saved conditions, under which saved men can live—this will mean continued church growth.

Background of Fact Behind "Bradford Horton"

Now that "Bradford Horton, Man," Dr. Holmes's spirited and stimulating story, has been finished in its serial publication in The Continent, it will interest all who have read it to know that the background of the story is constructed largely from Dr. Holmes's own life and experiences when he was in attendance at Auburn Seminary in Auburn, New York. Of course, Dr. Holmes never meant to picture himself in the hero of his story. He was totally incapable of a self-consciousness that would heroize himself, and the romance of his life had run in much quieter channels than the turbulent course of Bradford Horton's true love. But the author, with his keen delight in story telling, could not help attaching to Bradford Horton's name a number of his own experiences—especially an examination in theology before the Auburn faculty which Dr. Holmes remembered with gusto until his death.

And in the loyal character of Austin Sleighton Dr. Holmes paid tribute to his dearest seminary classmate, Dr. William H. Bates of Washington City. Dr. Bates, who saw the story in manuscript, writes now to The Continent:

"Many of the incidents are not fiction, but fact, yet considerably twisted. For instance, I purchased the lamp at the Jickers (Steele) drug store, but the breaking of it is fiction. I have the lamp yet. It is true, too, that I am the organist that got Dr. Holmes his first singing job; but the Second and the First Presbyterian churches of Auburn are all mixed up. The First, not the Second, was the 'Old Furnace.' In those days Dr. Holmes had one of the four best tenor voices I have ever heard, and he was not second to any of the others unless it be the Italian, Briegnoli. Three different times, in writing for The Westminster, I tried to do him proper musical honor, but as editor he blue-penciled it every time."

* * *

Zeal for Truth Among Advertising Men

The "declaration" promulgated by the late convention in Baltimore of the Associated Advertising Clubs of America has as heartsome a ring about it as any utterance of commercial origin that the country has heard in all its history. The document may be almost said to be the gospel according to business, and when business can produce a gospel like this, the times are a long way from being far enough out of joint to make moral surgery hopeless. In truth, the work of the advertising men is itself a demonstration that moral surgery has already progressed very far toward putting the times into joint. The reiterated creed of these advertisers and advertising dealers, "We believe in truth" and "We believe there should be no double standard of morality," is an adoption and reenforcement of Christian teaching for which the church ought to be profoundly thankful and which it would be consummate churlishness for it to ignore. Certainly the world is getting on.

This is comment in the large, and worthy comment too; yet the well informed will hardly be content without adding a more intimate comment, which is also true—that even the advertising men with all their present high ideals would not have been adopting just this kind of utterance three years ago. And the difference between then and now is mostly accounted for by the electric individual influence of their president the past two years—George W. Coleman of Boston. It was when he began to speak out for the square thing in business that other men of like mind in the organization found their voices and began to speak too. So it would not be true to say that Coleman taught the advertising men a love of honesty, but Coleman did inspirit them with the disposition to stand up for honesty and hammer hard in its behalf. Thus the Associated Advertising Clubs of America have seen a forcible epitome of what Christian influence ought to mean and could mean everywhere—an epitome of the way that church men in all lines of popular affairs could make their personal convictions count if only they would put a man's weight behind them and push.

* * *

Toronto's Conclave an Immense Achievement

The getting together of the Presbyterian General Assemblies in Atlanta, fine as that was, was neither so difficult nor so big an achievement as Canadian Presbyterians accomplished in convening at Toronto a church congress that included practically the whole active ministry of the denomination, all the pastors' wives likewise, and an elder from every live Presbyterian congregation between Vancouver island and the "rock-bound shores" of Newfoundland.

Like what happened at Atlanta, the thing done at Toronto is only in small degree the obvious thing already seen. There was, of course, a vast and singularly representative assemblage of Canadians, which mightily impressed Toronto. There was also a thrilling good feeling of enjoyment in the hearts of the men and women who owed the privilege of this Toronto experience to the generosity of Toronto Presbyterians. But these things are small compared to the effect of common understanding and unified purpose which is now to be worked out in the local congregations of the church as the members of that great convocation go back to take up their tasks anew in their home fields. The great difficulty about making a scattered democratic fellowship efficient is the difficulty of pervading the whole body with a single intention. All non-episcopal churches infallibly waste their strength by diffusion through lack of this unity. The Canadian Church hit upon a remarkable means for counteracting such diffuseness and obtained thereby a new efficiency which will be increasingly manifest as the returns of the coming year are made up.

Happily the program of the conference was wonderfully varied. No phase of the current obligations of the church was omitted. It might be said of the conference, as a New York department store says of its establishment, that it was "exclusively devoted to everything." Missions were emphasized, evangelism, social service, individual consecration, and all in such harmonious fashion that no interest was permitted to contend against any other.

Another Traffic Trading on Temptation

It is one of the queerest of queer things about the way human nature works out—and one of the saddest too—that wherever is discovered some evil thing which does harm to people there you can always find somebody, deep intrenched in his own profit, fighting desperately to prevent the destruction of the evil and the stoppage of the harm. Meanness always turns out on investigation to be somebody's business, and business claims the right to go on making money.

Down along the Rio Grande in places where nothing else will grow there grows wild a peculiar cactus which, when cut and dried, can be rolled up into pellets of most uncanny power. The plant is called "peyote" by some; "mescal" by others. Swallowing mescal pills in even small quantities produces one of the strangest intoxications ever observed in human subjects—an ecstatic dream state wherein visions of the most fantastic nature appear to the victims of the habit. Up to this time, however, the use of the drug has extended only to a comparatively few tribes of American Indians, and these almost all remote from the locality where the peyote grows—mainly the Arapahoes and Shoshones in Wyoming, the Winnebagoes and Omahas in Nebraska, the Sioux in South Dakota and the Otoes in Oklahoma. In accordance with the peculiar ecstasy of the intoxication the mescal habit takes on a religious aspect, and the devotees of it are gradually developing a religious sect, which teaches with startling impiety that mescal is the Holy Spirit promised by Jesus to be the Comforter of believers. But it goes without saying that a religion based on intoxication operates to the exact reverse of the effects which religion should produce, and the mescal fanatics are progressively demoralized in character and conduct.

The situation judged merely by the results in the lives of the Indians is unhappy enough, but the maddening factor in the problem is the sinister figure of the money-making white man moving behind it all. Except for the trafficker willing to weight his own pockets by teaching dissipation to weaker and more susceptible humanity, this drug from the far South would not be working havoc in distant northern states like Wyoming and Nebraska. It takes deliberate commercial enterprise to transport the stuff so far and create a demand for it. The trade is small at present, but exploiters see large hopes of increasing it. Proof of the strength and determination of this new kind of "vice trust" is its ability to influence federal legislators at Washington. Into the Indian appropriation bill the house of representatives put an item of $75,000 to fight the sale of liquor and peyote to reservation Indians, but the senate committee struck out the word "peyote." Unless senators can be persuaded to put it back, there will be no money available for the investigation into the mescal evil which the Indian bureau is anxious to undertake.

There are so many commercially boomed wickednesses ramping up and down the country that it seems almost hopeless to get any effective public attention to another. But there surely ought to be a few Americans at any rate big enough amid all other demands on the fighting blood to turn and bestow at least a bunch of terrifying frowns on this contemptible mescal trade.

—The Assembly Herald shows the effects of a bright idea—though in such a miscellaneously edited periodical the reader doesn't know to whom the bright idea should be attributed—when it prints on the first page of its June number a selection from the sermon which Dr. Henry A. Boardman, as retiring moderator, preached in Nashville to the General Assembly of 1855, in the good old days when nobody thought of distinguishing between Southern and Northern Presbyterians. Dr. Boardman said, as The Assembly Herald now reminds us: "Let it be the care of this venerable court to foster the sentiments of conciliation and Christian affection. Let us discountenance whatever may tend to 'cause divisions and offenses' among us as we would the introduction of false doctrine." If Presbyterians six years afterwards could only have had the grace to follow this good advice literally the church would have escaped many sorrows and much shame over its divisions in the days since. And if the church of today will only remember that "divisions and offenses" are every bit as heretical as false doctrine, the recollection will be the church's insurance against sorrow and shame in days to come.

—There are probably few Presbyterian pastors who have not had experience with the difficulty of persuading laymen suitable for the eldership to affirm their acceptance of the Westminster Confession, as required in the ordaining ceremony of the church. Many men who ought to be in the eldership will not accept election because they have never read the confession, and don't feel that they have time or patience to read it now. So they decline ordination and miss the opportunities of service which the eldership would bring to them. But pastors should not let valuable workers escape so easily. A perfectly legitimate way out of the difficulty is that which Rev. R. W. Anthony of Cleveland uses, and doubtless many other pastors with him. Mr. Anthony asks prospective elders to read the Brief Statement, and if they can accept that he tells them that they are perfectly safe in affirming the "system of doctrine" in the confession. Indorsed by the General Assembly as a fair epitome of that "system of doctrine," the Brief Statement is certainly an honest short cut through the territory the confession covers.

—The long vacant commissioner's chair in the bureau of Indian affairs at Washington—a position whose essentially philanthropic character gives concern to see it occupied by a man of sympathy, probity and wisdom—has at length been filled by the appointment of Hon. Cato Sells of Texas. Although Mr. Sells was not supported for the office by the Indian Rights Association, the appointment appears to be in every respect an admirable one. As a political leader in Texas he has fought the liquor gang right and left, and he doesn't need to do so very much more than keep that up in order to be a mighty good Indian commissioner. But he has other recommendations besides that, for all the associations of Mr. Sells in Texas have been with the people who like to do things on the square and hate hypocritic tricks and wirepulling. And that kind of sentiment is good for the Indian service too.

—A very eminent American attorney, holding a high place in the legal staff of an immense railroad system, has lately joined the Presbyterian Church on confession of faith. The pastor to whom he came desiring to be received into the church had but little acquaintance with the attorney, and naturally inquired what had been the chief inducing cause of his decision to become a church member. The great lawyer replied that he had been reading the Westminster Confession and, finding it convincing, he wished to identify himself with the church holding that creed. So it seems that the old Westminster book has not entirely lost its vital force after all. But it must be admitted that the attorney is an unusual man.

—Dr. J. S. Lyons, the moderator of the Southern Presbyterian Assembly, has all plans laid to take with him at least a dozen of his "yoke fellows" from the big First Presbyterian church in Louisville into the mountains of Kentucky during August for a house-to-house religious campaign. "Into whatsoever city or village they enter," or into whatsoever community they come, they will go two by two to every house and invite the occupants to preaching service at some central point at night. In this fashion Dr. Lyons hopes to cover the whole of Letcher county in the month, and his Louisville business men will get a vacation about as "different" as anything possibly can be.

—The manufacture and importation of intoxicants have been absolutely prohibited in Iceland, and being such a "tight little island" as it is, its civil authorities are having no trouble in making the prohibition good. There is said to be enough liquor in stock in various places to supply Icelanders who drink with potations for about a year longer. After that, everything and everybody must be "dry."

—The temperance people of Maine are taking heart again, and enforcement of the prohibition law is admitted to be more thorough in the state today than for many years past. Governor Haines and the state legislature are both on the enforcement side. If Maine will only compel respect for this prohibition part of its constitution it will have no more trouble with "resubmissionists" than Kansas has.

The Beloved Memory of a Righteous Man

BY ROBERT E. SPEER

Though we are beginning to count by years the time since the personality of Dr. William R. Richards (pastor of Brick church, New York) was lost to this present world, none who knew him would abate by one sentence the glowing tribute here paid him. These words were spoken just after his death.

A STREAM of yellow sunlight on the sloping shoulder of a New England hill touched a mass of granite bowlder with warmth and radiance! This is the memory of him which comes back to all of us who knew him, as a man opens his heart to his brother, who is his friend. He was the granite bowlder. To recall the broad, overhanging forehead, the steel flash from the gray and deep-set eyes, the firm set of the thin lips, the solid, resolute chin beneath with the controlled muscular alertness of the lithe form; to recall the man as we saw him is to feel again the tense strength and firmness which he was. He came of old New England stock, and all his training had been in New England schools, and while for many years he had lived in these mellower climes, he never quite lost the New England accent. He embodied the Puritan tone and uprightness. It appeared in his neat carelessness as to dress, and in his loyalty to the old Puritan moral ideals. We saw the granite in him in the clear and definite sharpness of his conviction, in the austerity of his sense of duty, and in the sternness of his judgment of character.

In the best of all the biographies of Stonewall Jackson, his British admirer tells us that in his cadet days at West Point Jackson dealt with a light hand with the conventional social ideals, choosing his companions quite as often from the class below him as from his own, "and in yet another way," adds Colonel Henderson, "his strength of character was shown. To one who was guilty of dishonorable conduct he was merciless almost to vindictiveness. He had his own standards of right and wrong, and from one who infringed them he would accept neither apology nor excuse." No one could have said this about Dr. Richards. I doubt whether it is truly said of the great Christian soldier. But that steadfastness and ethical tenacity and rigid principle which gave Jackson his familiar name were all in Dr. Richards, too. He was no mincer of words; he was a fearless smiter of what needed to be smitten. Yes, thank God, there was granite in him! Therefore, men who were uncertain or aweary could rest on the bowlder and rise strengthened and assured. But he was also the golden sunlight. It played in his yellow hair. We saw it in the blue love looks of the eyes that were not gray after all, and it sparkled in the music of his laughter. A good story was always twice as good heard in the echo of his boundless enjoyment of it. There was granite—and there was also gentleness. We remember the quizzical twist of the head, the twitching of the thin lips before the jest broke, the maidenlike sensitiveness at suffering and the shrinking hatred of giving pain, the boyish delight in teasing, the divine pleasure in small things and every little human experience. Oh, rich indeed today is our memory of the yellow light, a gleam upon his head, shining with candor over all his life!

The Late William R. Richards, D. D.

A Lover of Fresh Air and Mountain Climbing

The sunlight fell on a bowlder on the hillside beneath the open skies. The light we knew was open to all the winds that blew, bared to every smile and frown of God, not cloistered, but laid out upon all the plain, indisputable facts of life. "Creed or no creed. Bible or no Bible," he said once, "here are the facts"—facts of spring flowers laughing on the hillside, facts of black, scudding storm clouds and of winter wrath. It was part of his open life to love the fresh air and the trout brooks and all clean and wholesome games. If in the land where he has gone there is merriment, as our Lord has assured us there is also joy, we are confident that he is laughing gleefully now at the thought of our recollections of him in the games that he lost and hated to lose, which were not as many—we must be just—as the games that he won and took a boy's joy in winning. The greatest of all sports to him was climbing over the hills we call the White mountains and to the tops of the higher peaks of Switzerland.

This going to the very top or end of things was characteristic of him, and it made him the true scholar that he was. Scholarship for mere scholarship's sake was no lure to him. His interest was always in life, in living men and living women, and most of all in living little children. But as a minister to the living and to life he would not offer what he did not know, or give what he himself did not live. He had his own, firmly wrought-out theology thought cleanly through and reasoned, as God has always bade his children to reason through their thought of him and man and duty. I was told once of the examination in Elizabeth Presbytery when he came from New England to the church in Plainfield. It lasted the whole day through and at its close old Dr. Kempshall made an apology. "It was no ill will, Mr. Richards," said he, "no ill will toward you. It was just pleasure and self-indulgence for us to listen to the reasoned convictions of a man who had thought through his truth for himself and knew what he believed." Yes, and Dr. Kempshall might have said "whom." He had his own original theories regarding church organizations also. He had studied carefully the methods which the apostolic and the subapostolic church had used in fitting Christianity to municipal life, and the convictions to which he came were embodied in his work in Crescent Avenue church, with its half-dozen affiliated chapels. And in religion, out of which theology and ecclesiastic polity grew and for which they exist, he would have nothing second-hand or unreal. For all holy living and divine experience in other souls he gave thanks to God, but he would bring to men not a thought which he had read in a book, which another man had thought, not a view of God and life prescribed by this or that authority, whether in philosophy or psychology. Religion to him had its rich rootage in the past, but it was a living and everspreading self-revealing of God in the soul. Perhaps this was the reason that he thoroughly disliked Professor James's "Varieties of Religious Experience." He did not care for some of these "varieties." Religion to him was not something abnormal, erratic. Was religion not the relation of the human soul and God, the ultimate ground of all personal and social life?

There was granite strength and stability in the whole cast of his character and method of his thought. His scholarship was positive and constructive and the work that he did was a creative work. In none of his utterances is this more clearly seen than in "God's Choice of Men"—a series of sermons which he preached in half contemptuous reply to a newspaper charge of insincerity against all those who professed to hold our church's view of the character of God. I know no worthier or nobler vindication of all that is eternally true in Calvinism, with its fearless facing of the actual facts of the universe and its awful reverence for the sovereign God and its unflinching assertion of our human liberty. Nowhere was Dr. Richards more himself than in this large-minded, forward-reaching, loyal proclamation of truth that was only Calvin's because it ought to be every man's.

Found "The Monotony of Sin" a Vital Theme

Nothing that ever had been part of human life and no record of the deeds and experiences of men was fruitless to his thought. His fresh and original mind drew out from the apparently driest record some living and life-giving truth. I know of no better illustration of this quality of his mind than the sermon which none who heard it will ever forget, on "The Monotony of Sin," from the oft-recurring phrase in Kings and in Chronicles—"He departed not from all the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, wherewith he made Israel to sin." For months after that sermon was preached in Battell chapel phrases from it lingered in the college vernacular. There must have been few men who heard it who did not carry away its terrible picture of sin's pitiless dullness and mockery.

It was in part his creative interest and instinct, in part, doubtless, the missionary temper of his family relationships which brought him into admiring intimacy with a great missionary character in Dr. Blodgett, but it was chiefly his own spiritual honesty and generosity and his contempt for the idea that the gospel is a personal perquisite instead of a heavenly trust for all humanity, which made him the ardent missionary spirit which we knew him to be. No man was more loyal to immediate local responsibilities. No one took up such responsibilities more adequately equipped to bear them by the world breadth of his sympathy and the world interpretation which the gospel bore to his thought. For twenty years he served as a member of the Board of Foreign Missions—for a good part of this time as chairman of one of its most important committees, and his share in its work constituted one of his truest pleasures in life.

Never was he happier in preaching than when pleading the missionary cause. In the sermon which he preached on "The Upper Room" he said, "I think that never are the tones of the Master himself more distinctly heard in a Christian congregation than in the missionary appeal." Every other cause, he felt, had, in a sense, something more to be said for it than could be said for foreign missions. The very strength of this cause lay in the fact that it was a pure appeal to unselfishness and that it was a work for men and women whom we had never seen and who could do nothing to recompense us; that it contained no element of self-interest or of compensation in any form, and that to plead this cause, accordingly, was to open to the Christian mind in its fullest and most unclouded glory the divine unselfishness of the Incarnation itself. And nothing could surpass his ingenuity in the choice of missionary texts. Wherever he could find any truth, he could find a way to this richest and most Christlike of all truths.

A Leader Because a Tireless Worker Himself

And the home-driving quality of these texts was truly illustrative of the man, who was no generalizer in his teaching, no manipulator in his work, no theorizer or scheme builder. He was wont to go straight to the practical heart of all truth and duty. He was such a leader of others as he was because he was in himself a tireless worker. The principle that it is better to set ten men to work than to do the work of ten men is a very much overdone principle, and it overlooks the simple fact that the only man who is likely to have about him inspiration enough to set ten other men to work must be a man in whom the energies of ten such lesser men as need this inspiration are concentered.

But we turn from all these things to the personal flavor of his spirit and the quality of his friendships. Much of this flavor and quality sprang from the depth of his old New England reserve. There were reticences which were yet revealings, and withholdings which were the richest givings. It was this reserve, I am sure, which gave him much of his power.

And it was this same reserve of temper and of thought which gave such tenderness to his sympathy. Many of us recall him best when he came to us as a comforter and gave gifts whose value came from their cost to the giver. It was a pain that was all joy to him to fulfill this ministry. He wept under it, but with that deepest weeping which is tearless. He was one of those to whom the richest spiritual expression was not easy. It was the difficulty that gave it its fragrance and its power.

Loyal to God, to Country, to Friends, to College

His reserves were no check, however, on the enthusiasm of his loyalties. His friends knew they were his friends and the world knew it. And beyond his personal friendships there were three great fidelities in which he gave himself with fullness and without reserve. I have been speaking of his faithfulness as a minister of Christ; but he joined to this loyalty the other two of which he had often sung—"For God, for country and for Yale."

And now and then, even in his spiritual utterances, he told us as much as man can tell. One such time at least surely many will recall, when we had met together both to mourn and to rejoice, when Mrs. Whitman, or Janet McCook as we knew her, had finished her brief and glorious life here, and we believed we could almost hear the trumpets sounding for her on the other side. Then in the prayer which expressed nothing which silence could best express and left unexpressed nothing which could be put in speech, he said to God for us and to us for God all God could give to be said, and in the completeness of his utterance of what we felt or wanted to feel, revealed himself without reserve and yet wholly concealed, and we knew that even then what had been so long growing before us was made well nigh complete. Like the upper room of which he had delighted to preach, he, too, was prepared and furnished.

And now when we look out on the hillside where once he was, the bowlder which we used to see and by which we were wont to rest is gone, and the sunlight that used to fall upon it is elsewhere shining, but we have still, and of this nothing can bereave us, "the beloved memory of a righteous man who loved God and truth above all things, a man of untarnished honor, loyal and chivalrous, tender and true, modest and humble, gentle and strong, pitiful to the weak, yearning after the erring, stern to all forms of wrong and of oppression, yet most stern to himself, who being angry yet sinned not, who lived unto God here, and passing through the grave and gate of death, now liveth unto God forevermore."

Is the Law a Vocation for a Christian Man?

BY HENRY W. JESSUP

Himself the worthy son of the greatest of modern missionaries to Syria, as well as a ruling elder of first rank in the Presbyterian fellowship, and withal a practitioner of distinction at the New York bar, Mr. Jessup is as well fitted by his attainments as by character to discuss the legal profession as a life work to an aspiring young Christian

IT IS elementary, in speaking to Christian young men, to say that the highest vocation in life is the preaching of the gospel. And I assume, before I address any young Christian upon the profession of the law as a life work, that he has first of all disposed of the claims of the ministry. We have in legal practice what is known as the "order to show cause." When that order is issued by the court and its signature exhibited to the respondent, he has to appear and show the court why the relief requested should not be granted. So, in regard to the preaching of the gospel, every man has been served with and must respond to the order to show cause why he should not preach the gospel.

But that aside, I am free to advocate the profession of the law as making proper and just appeal to the powers of a Christian. The lifework of a Christian man must necessarily be honorable, beneficial and satisfying; otherwise he will always feel that he has in some way come short of the fullness of life and service. But I think it will not be difficult to show that in each of these three respects the profession of the law fulfills the conditions of life that a Christian man has a right to anticipate.

Men of Honor Find Opportunities of Unselfish Service

The law is an honorable profession. It has been increasingly evident in recent years that writers and speakers consider it humorous and effective to refer to the profession of the law in connection with such terms as chicanery, pettifogging, hair-splitting, dishonest delay and oppressive conduct. But I assert that no thinking man will attribute to a class the defects of occasional members of that class. There are in our profession dishonest, tricky and unworthy men, but in every state in the union the bench and the bar are laboring as never before to purge their ranks of such members. Codes of ethics are being formulated and adopted, and the principles underlying these codes are being patiently and thoroughly enforced by the courts in dealing with those against whom complaints have properly been made. In fact, the chief complaint I have heard urged against the adoption of a code of ethics has been made by men who have said that the profession of the law is a profession for gentlemen—and gentlemen need no code.

Moreover, the law is a beneficial profession. By this I mean that the profession of the law rightly used has not only been helpful to the welfare of the community but is absolutely essential to such welfare. The conditions of our life today emphasize that. Those conditions, social, political and economic, are presenting continually so many new problems of government and administration that it is only those trained in the history of our institutions and in the principles of our fundamental and constitutional law who can deal effectively with the solution of these questions. It must be borne in mind that the principles of our law represent in their present form the social strife of centuries, the struggle of the individual for his fundamental and his social rights, and only a trained mind can properly put these conditions and these facts in proper relationship and view them in their right perspective.

Sir William Blackstone in his Viner lectures at Cambridge referred to the necessity for legal training for every English gentleman. What he said is as true today with reference to every American man of affairs, be he a senator of the United States, the president of a great corporation, the head of a trust company, or the manager of a commercial industry. Dependent for his success upon a knowledge of social and economic conditions, he is better worth his salt if his mind has been trained in at least the theory of the law.

But, you may ask, is the profession of the law one in which I can do helpful service to the individual? It certainly is. The ministry is recognized as an unselfish, doing-good profession; medicine is recognized as a great ministry of healing; but there are diseases of circumstance as well as those of the mind or the body. Widows and orphans and men too poor to assert their rights often present what I might call "clinical cases" which call for the skill and unselfish service of men who cannot expect and who even never think of pecuniary reward. A man may suffer as intensely in complications of ways and means as he does in physical agony. He is often exposed to conditions as a result of a trusting disposition or folly or negligence, which try his soul as much, and whiten his hair and exhaust his energies as greatly, as a spiritual conflict or surgical operation or a long siege of illness. I venture to say that the average decent lawyer has as many clients whom he serves for naught as the average decent doctor has charity patients.

Only Conscientious Patience Wins Long Success

You will notice that I make no appeal for the law as an immediately lucrative profession. My friend and former partner, Hon. Noah Davis, formerly presiding justice of the supreme court of the first department, told me that for seventeen years he had been observing the bar as it came for admission and practice in that department, and he believed that there were few who could attain satisfactory self-support before they had been fifteen years at the bar. There are, of course, many who through family influence or special circumstance or unusual ability reach that goal sooner. But short cuts and sharp methods do not pay in the end.

I met at special term one day an old pupil of mine in law school who spoke to me, and I asked him how he was getting along. "I ain't complaining, professor; I'm catching suckers." Somewhat amused, I asked him if he was making money. "Sure," he said. "I made $1,500 yesterday." I asked him how he came into so handsome a fee, and he explained that he had organized a corporation under the laws of the state of New York. To my surprise that so substantial a fee had been paid for this service, he explained that he had exercised the "sacred right of retainer," as the funds had passed through his hands. I expressed doubt as to whether the corporation would continue to employ him as its attorney in the face of the exorbitant charge, to which he replied, "I don't suppose they will, professor; the fact is, I do mostly a transient business."

An honorable practitioner has to be patient. To him transient business makes no appeal. He is willing to toil and to wait, confident of the substantial reward of character and reputation in the long run. He must work. He must be alert to recognize his chance.

It is a life full of temptation, but temptation properly resisted is the great formative of character. The elder bush that grows in the shelter and is swayed little by the wind has a heart of pith and can be broken by a breeze. But the oak sapling that stands exposed to the blasts of winter develops fiber as durable as steel.

Lawyer's Satisfactions Rest on His Own Attitude

But is this profession a satisfying one? Will it appeal to a strong man? To answer, I must say that the law is like a rose diamond, with many gleaming facets reflecting varicolored lights according to the angle from which we view it and the degree of light which is shining upon it; and one's attitude to the law depends not only upon the angle of vision from which he views it, but also on the condition of his vision.

Some enter the profession as a stepping stone. They evince no real affection for it and never trouble themselves to get into touch with the higher conceptions of duty and obligations which the thoroughbred lawyer is never without. They have studied the law to complete an education, or because they think the knowledge of it will help them to secure some more lucrative commercial position. Those of us who have embraced the law for better or worse, for richer or poorer, cannot afford not to take high grounds. We must keep our standards high, we must adhere to them at personal loss; we must be willing at times to incur ill-will and misunderstanding in support of them. For no lawyer liveth unto himself. If he fails in his duty to the bar, verily he hath his reward.

As related to the community, the lawyer must take high grounds of professional ethics and never prostitute his talents; he must be loyal to every duty, as a private citizen and as a member of his profession. Ready to rebuke every unprofessional deed, he must not be pharisaical. "Judge not that ye be not judged." On questions of great public movements involving constitutional law or vested right he must stand for law and order. Calm in the face of public clamor, he must never lend himself to aught that lessens respect for our courts and our constitution.

The great lawyer, like good wine, needs no bush. He will not advertise. He will shun the petty devices for publicity so many affect. He will avoid interviews as to important cases. He will not sound a trumpet before him as the hypocrites do. He whose clients are his friends, whose reputation is unblemished, who knows the law, or where to find it, is like a city set on a hill—he cannot be hid.

To an honorable profession, one offering an honest living to honest men, a profession in which a Christian man may exercise the graces of charity in the widest sense, a profession necessary to the proper development and safeguarding of our institutions, I invite young men because they are strong.

Tracking "Lost" Church Members

Churchgoing with many people is a matter of congeniality. If people with whom they are acquainted go to church, they go too. They may grow to be interested in church work for its own sake. When they move into a new community, however, where they will not be missed from church services if they fail to attend, they often join the army of the "lost." This is specially true of young men who leave home for work or study in another city. The attractions of other sorts in a large city combine with the indifference of church members to strangers to make it easy for the young man to persuade himself that he can be good without going to church.

This indifference of church members is often bred from the bigness of the church as well as from individual carelessness. It is also fostered by the reserve which every city dweller learns to throw about himself. There is, however, room for legitimate criticism of churches in their relations to strangers, criticism which is not confined to the largest cities of the country. Some time ago a young man attended the services of a large church in Minnesota, and even after seeking the Sunday school superintendent during the week failed to find anything to which he could put a helping hand. He left the church, but fortunately found a chance to help in another congregation.

But hundreds of young men, and older ones, do not go so far toward establishing a church connection as did this one, and do not affiliate with any church after they have left the congregation in which they were brought up. To help rescue these wanderers, who number thousands each year, the Presbyterian brotherhood in two cities, New York and Chicago, is using organized efforts to deal with this stray material. New York has for some time had a strangers' bureau in charge of a salaried man, who devotes his entire time to looking up wandering men who should be in churches. In Chicago the work has recently been started as part of the duties of Dr. Francis M. Fox, associate national secretary, who this year is doing special work with the Chicago brotherhood. Individual churches in Chicago, as well as elsewhere, have for many years looked up men referred to them. The organized work is, however, comparatively new.

Advertisements have been used in church papers by the Chicago brotherhood calling the attention of pastors and parents to the opportunity of having young men in Chicago looked up and visited by members of their nearest Presbyterian church. The bureau has been instrumental in doing some work which has brought it newspaper notice throughout the Middle West, and this has further spread knowledge of what the men are trying to do. Although this bureau has been organized for only a few weeks, over fifty names have been obtained. One family of four have been persuaded to present their letters to a Chicago church. A former Ohio Sunday school superintendent was also brought into touch with a Chicago church.

When a name is thus obtained it is given to the Presbyterian pastor whose church is nearest to the address, and the person is visited or the name is passed on to workers to be looked up. This not only supplies additional workers for the brotherhood but gives present members something tangible to do to further the progress of their church. Careful card records are kept for each name, with reports of the results of visits. More than one man has been surprised by callers who have awakened memories of the church relations of earlier days.

"Ma" Smith's Diary and What Came of It

BY ROSE SEELYE-MILLER

"PA," SAID MA SMITH, laying her Sunday-gloved hand on pa's rough coat sleeve, "I wisht you'd holt on to them horses a minit. I'd like to talk a little about the discourse; as soon as ever we get home there'll be chores to do 'n' no chance to digest the sermon."

"All right," said pa, laughing, as he slackened the pace of his driving team. "My spiritual stummick don't seem to be much overloaded, but if you feel the need of some mental gastric juice, why, then, go ahead."

"Well, the new preacher is awful genteel lookin', 'n' he uses such smart words, 'n' when he got to lettin' on about our loneliness, 'n' isolation, 'n' desolation, out onto these wide-apart farms, it just moved me to tears, 'n' Mis' Jones, she just bu'st out cryin', 'n' I guess the hull bunch of us felt the lonesomeness which he held up to us like a lookin' glass more 'n we'd ever sensed it before. Just look off now to them great reaches of prairie—not a tree, nor a house fer miles, just cattle feedin' 'n' sheep nibblin' 'n' horses rangin' 'n' wheat fields stretchin' fer acres 'n' acres. Now I leave it to you, pa, if that hain't the lonesomest lookin' landscape you ever seen."

"Wal," said Pa Smith judicially, "I hain't one of the lonesome sort, 'n' I hain't never give myself up to gapin' at the landscape to see how lonesome it air, but it looks mighty comfortable 'n' homelike to me, 'n' it looks prosperous, too, to see all them live stock, 'n' all them acres of wheat 'n' things. Mebbe it would look lonesome if a feller wus lonesome himself. I asked the preacher over, 'n' he said he wanted to foster sociability, 'n' that he wus goin' to try to git around 'n' see the hull parish soon."

"I'd admire to have him come to our house, fer that would break up the loneliness for us 'n' him too. I never did realize how turrible lonesome I've ben all these years. I'm going to keep a diary this week 'n' see just how lonesome I'd ort to be," said ma.

"'N' I s'pose you'll try and turn from the error of your happy ways," Pa Smith chuckled, then added soberly, "Happiness belongs to you, ma, and fits you better'n a kimono, 'n' it's easy to wear, 'n' don't cramp you none, and so long as we're so com'table bein' cheerful, why go out of your way seekin' after lonesomeness? Just be yourself, ma, just as usual. The hull fam'ly are pret' well satisfied with you just as you air." Pa laughed as he helped ma out of the buggy and gave her plump arm a little extra pat as he released her.

"But we live a mile from anybody, 'n' miles 'n' miles from most folks," ma returned. "'N' if we're not lonesome it's because we're hardened in our ways 'n' stiff-necked, 'n' don't care fer folks like we'd orter. We'd orter hanker after 'em 'n' long to do 'em good."

"Well, well, well!" murmured pa, as he drove to the barn, "ma's in fer a spell now sure enough. But she hain't cut out fer lonesomeness—ma masquerading as a lonesome woman!" The idea seemed to strike pa as especially funny, and his round face broke into a hundred lines of laughter.

Monday brought its work for every person on the farm, and ma and the girls were so busy with the washing and general housework that lonesomeness was utterly forgotten. Just as the last piece was hung on the line ma looked around at the vast stretch of open prairie, with its sunburned grass and lack of shrubbery, and gave a little gasp—it seemed as though all the lonesomeness of life came rolling toward her like the billowing of the prairie land. She stood with her blue apron flying in the brisk breeze, her hair in silvering curls about her plump face, looking away into immensity.

"Good morning, Mrs. Smith," said a cordial voice close by her side.

Ma turned, looking a little perplexed for a moment, then her face broke up into dimpling gladness. "Why, if this isn't Tracy Paulin that used to teach school ten miles south of here 'n' lived on the quarter section east of us. Dear me! I'm powerful glad to see you,' 'n' pa'll be too."

Ma Smith and Tracy Paulin shook hands vigorously. "My brother and I are touring the country selling nursery stock, so I just thought we'd stop and renew old acquaintance."

"Pa hain't here now, but he will be when dinner's ready, 'n' we can have a good visit during the nooning hour. I dunno 's you can hardly get into the house though, the tubs 'n' things are clutterin' up so."

"We'll empty the tubs," Tracy Paulin said cheerfully, and then arose a babel of cheerful talk and clamor and rattling of tins and stove lids and dishes as the men emptied tubs and ma and the girls cleaned up and made ready the comfortable dinner, all enjoying the hour to the fullest limit.

It was after 3 o'clock when the guests left the farmhouse. "I meant to take a little nap this afternoon, but I guess by the time we get the dinner work done, 'n' the upstairs work fixed up a mite, the chickens tended to 'n' the eggs hunted, some peas picked for tomorrow, 'n' the clothes brought in and folded it'll be pret' near suppertime, so I'll put off my sleepin' till bedtime," ma said, with happy self-renunciation, as she watched the cloud of white dust down the long, open prairie road.

"How pretty the summer is!" said Ellen, as she drew in a long breath of the sweet, invigorating air. "No cluttering trees or shrubs, just open and wide and fine. Oh, but I love the prairie!" Ellen threw a light arm about her mother's ample waist and the two went into the house together.

"To think that Tracy Paulin has grown to be such a splendid lookin' man," ma ruminated. "Why, he used to be thin-chested 'n' pindlin.' When he first begun to teach that school ten miles south he couldn't hardly make it on horseback, but in a little while he got to walkin' it, 'n' he walked himself into splendidness."

Supper was steaming over the fire, and the table was neatly set when the men came in from the field. An extra figure loomed among the familiar ones.

"This is Mr. Hempstead, ma," pa introduced cheerfully. "He's out sellin' farm machinery, 'n' I asked him to stop over night."

"Sure," said ma cordially. "You'll have to take us just as you find us, Mr. Hempstead."

"Truly, I appreciate this kindness," Mr. Hempstead said warmly. "The farms are so big, and the homes so far apart——"

"Yes, yes," agreed ma quickly. "We're so far apart we're turrible lonesome," and for a fleeting moment ma's face clouded, but the evening flew past so swiftly in joyous talk that it was past 10 o'clock before ma had a chance to think further of her deferred lonesomeness.

Before Mr. Hempstead drove away next day a couple of horse buyers arrived, and what with the time required for the herd boy to round up the ranging horses, and with the inspection and talk of sale and bargaining, it was so near dinnertime that the men were asked to stay for that meal.

Ellen was madly creaming potatoes, and Mary turning the crisply browned ham, when a heavily loaded wagon drove into the yard.

"Peddler!" cried ma. "I'll get my pins and needles and save the trip to town," and she bustled out joyously, followed by the younger children. By the time she had bought three papers of pins, six spools of thread, two cans of baking powder, some gingham and a pair of overalls came the call for dinner, and so the peddler made one more at the ample farmhouse table. It was a most interesting party, and what with township news from the horse buyers and the little religious element supplied by the talk of the Mohammedan peddler a joyous time ensued.

"We believe in God, and in Mohammed, his prophet, and in doing right, and being good, and being fair to people," said the peddler in parting, his eyes bright and his voice soft with kindly feeling. "I think you'd make a good Mohammedan," and he bowed to ma gravely.

"I guess most human folks would make good belongers to most any religion," ma replied cheerfully. "Now you stop the next time you come this way."

And the believer in God and in the prophet went away strengthened and blessed by this human comfort in an alien land.

"I reckon," said ma, as she rolled out the pie crust next morning, "that I'd better make extry, for when folks live so far apart there's always sure to be someone coming for a meal or two." So she rolled out extra pie crust, and made a cake, and attended to the bread, but dinnertime came and the extra pie and cake reposed untouched upon the pantry shelf.

Ellen and Mary were busy washing up the dinner dishes, while ma ironed some extra stiff sailor collars for Johnnie, when a joyful, "Hello!" broke the quiet of the workers. Ma and the girls ran to the door to find Mr. and Mrs. Henderson and their children.

"Well, well!" exclaimed ma. "It's such a time since I've seen you, Mis' Henderson. Come right in. I'll warrant you're as hungry as bears riding so far this morning."

"I knew you'd have your dinner out of the way, Mis' Smith, but we're going to Crandall, and it's too far to go without stopping, so we planned to stop here and make Lank Jones's tomorrow."

"I baked extry this morning," ma said happily, as she went about making ready the second dinner.

"I 'most always do bake extry," laughed Mrs. Henderson, "for it seems as though all creation comes and goes, and most of 'em stay to eat. We're all open houses on the plains, Mis' Smith."

"Isn't it a lonely life we lead, Mis' Henderson? I hadn't sensed it much till Sunday, when it was brought to me like a picter on a wall by the new preacher. He's a wonderful talker, he is, 'n' bound to do much good missionarying to us plains people." Ma paused a moment as she caught the bark of a dog. "Why, for the mercy sakes, if there hain't Mr. Harmon and a woman with him! Put on a few more plates, Ellen," and Ma Smith went smiling to the door and out to the standing buggy.

"I s'pose you must be Mis' Harmon," ma said genially. "We know Mr. Harmon; he alwus comes to buy our pigs. You just come in and have a cup of tea to rest you up a bit."

"I hadn't really thought I'd get out," Mrs. Harmon demurred, "but it is so lovely riding over the prairie country that I just couldn't refuse when Mr. Harmon invited me to take this trip with him." Mrs. Harmon was out of the buggy, smoothing her long dust coat as she spoke. "It's so good of you, Mrs. Smith." And the two women went into the house and presently the second dinner was in high and hilarious progress.

A great barking of dogs broke in upon the festivity, and ma and the girls rushed to the window in wondering anticipation. A young man was standing at bay, Jack, the collie, was barking vociferously at his shins, and the bird dog, Ole, stood directly in front yelping wildly, while a few puppies joined the chorus and loudly announced the fact that a stranger had arrived.

"It's the new preacher," said ma. "Them dogs is scandalizin' us. Run out, Ellen, 'n' call 'em off 'n' fetch him in, fer likely 's not he's wantin' his dinner."

It was half past 5 before the dinner dishes were washed and the young preacher found a chance for any personal conversation.

"I intended to go on to the next ranch tonight," he said to ma, tentatively, "but I've seen so little of you people I have not become much acquainted."

"It is so," ma assented warmly. "You'd better stay the rest of the week. Pa'll prob'ly have a few minits this evenin'. 'N' me 'n' the girls 'll try 'n' get into the parlor fer a little quiet spell after the supper work's done. We're a turrible busy lot of people, we folks of the plains." Ma paused and gave the young man a furtive look. "We'd orter be lonesome, too, I reckon, 'n' I meant to be this week, but I hain't sorter had time to sense many silences 'n' isolations."

"Hardly today, Mrs. Smith," and the young man laughed gleefully.

"There's the photygraf album, or the phonygraf," ma said genially, bent on entertaining this distinguished guest. "Er—if you don't care for them things, there's the organ 'n' the hymn book."

"I'd like any or all of them," the young man agreed; "but I'd like better to stay in the kitchen with the rest of you if you've work to do, and I suppose you have."

"Why, sure," concurred ma pleasantly, her whole rosy face beaming with pleasure. "I reckon we can talk and peel taters too."

"I wonder if you'll let me help," the preacher was saying, his whole face illuminated. "I worked my way through college and I know how to do all sorts of things."

The next morning ma baked "extry" again, while the young missionary followed the men in divers pursuits.

"Must be one of them dry whirlwinds comin'," the hired man announced as he stood by the back door wiping his face on the crash towel. "There's turrible dust down the road."

"It seems to keep pretty straight in the road," pa remarked, judicially.

"That isn't a whirlwind," said Johnnie. "That's—that's an automobile. I'll betcher it's Mr. Sellum coming out here. He said Saturday in town he was coming out some day to give us all a ride. Whoopee! It is Mr. Sellum!" And sure enough it was the automobile man.

"Of course I couldn't come any time but mealtime," Mr. Sellum explained easily. "You are all such busy people I would not be apt to find you at any other time. I've been off south on a trip this morning and I saw——" Here he launched into a detail of his trip, and an eager lot of listeners kept him busy talking till the dinner was over.

"No," said Mr. Sellum, as he rose from the table, "I don't want to keep you people from your work, but it won't hurt your horses to take a few minutes more rest. I want you all to try a ride in the car. You'll be wanting one before long, Mr. Smith; they are the greatest time savers on the farm. You can get repairs for your farm machinery so quick you lose practically no time, and you can keep your hired men busy, with no lay-offs." Here Mr. Sellum laughed gayly and the hired men grinned.

The ride was a treat to the whole family and it ended by ma and the preacher going into town in the car.

"It don't take any more gas to haul three than it would to haul me alone, and I'll be glad of your company," Mr. Sellum had said cordially. It was 6 o'clock when ma and the preacher boarded the train for the little flag station near the farmhouse, and it was late indeed when the evening work was done, although the divinity student wielded the dish towel cheerfully.

Friday morning the young preacher spent in writing and study and the kitchen work went on in its usual busy fashion. Ma had not baked "extry," as there was sewing and mending clamoring to be done, and the whir of the sewing machine made steady music under Ellen's skillful manipulation. Ma basted and planned, while Mary pulled threads or sewed buttons. It had been such a quiet, pleasant morning, and the noon meal required no extra plates, save that used by the young preacher, who seemed now almost like one of the family.

Ma and the girls were just settling down to renewed sewing about 2 o'clock when a surrey drove into the yard and four men alighted, as though it was a pleasure to step on the ground again.

"It's a lot of real estate men," Mary volunteered from a peep hole of the window shade. "They'll want dinner, too——" There was a little shade of annoyance in the girl's voice, for she wanted her new dress finished for Sunday, and this would delay the work some.

"Just a little snack," Mr. Spaulding said, "and for the sake of old times and old friendship Ma Smith set out a second dinner. The men had hardly disappeared when another rig drove into the yard and an array of fine linen appeared.

"It's Mr. McNab," ma said, peering out of the window. "But who on earth has be with him?" The question was settled a moment later at the door.

"How do you do, Mrs. Smith?" came Mr. McNab's pleasant voice. "A party of us have been out hunting. A young, newly wed couple have been in town for a quiet time, and we thought we'd give them a taste of real prairie sport. We've brought some lunch with us, but we'd like to get indoors out of the heat a little while and——"

"We'd love to have you all come in," said ma cordially, and the girls, who had been listening, were as eager as she.

"We'll make coffee, and——" said Ellen, excitedly.

"It'll be better than a new dress!" cried Mary rapturously.

The girls of the party flew around and helped set the table and the men unpacked the baskets, while ma made some of her best coffee and flanked it with a great pitcher of cream, cheese and sauce, and then came fritters, piping hot from ma's frying, and served with honey. It was the gayest party of the week, and after the dinner was over the girls of the party insisted upon washing up the dishes, while the bride and groom, who were both trained musicians, gave the country people such a treat as they had not had in years. There were glad tears in ma's eyes as she kissed the young bride good-by, and she told the groom she hoped he'd come out every year on a wedding trip. Which wish caused ma considerable confusion when the laughter of the crowd brought to her realization just the import of her words.

"Ma," said pa late Saturday night, "I'm lonesome. I'd like to read that diary you've been keeping this week." Pa's good eyes were twinkling and his whole rosy face was lined, but with laughter, not lonesomeness.

"Ho, pa," ma said joyously, "I've got it all writ down in my heart and life anyway, and that's better than just on paper. The farm is good enough for me. We may live far apart, but when folks come they come to stay a spell and not just formal calling—and I love it, pa, I love it!"

"All the lonesome stretches of prairie, ma, and the cattle and the sheep, and the wheat fields?" pa asked quizzically.

"There hain't nothin' so pretty as the fields, and the cattle and sheep and horses, and the waving wheat, and the shaded coloring of the prairie. Why, it's all a picture, pa, it's all a picture, and it's ourn to keep."

Sunday the young missionary preached upon the beauty of hospitality, and in closing he paid a great tribute to the open homes on the plains, quoting something to this effect:

> "Let me live in the house by the side of the road,
> And be a friend to man."

"He's changed his mind some sence last Sunday," pa said, as he patted ma's Sunday glove, which covered her toil-worn hand.

"Mebbe he hain't lonesome any more," said ma. "'N' I guess they hain't none of us lonesome, 'n' don't need no diary to write it into."

THE HOME COUNCIL

Your Boy's "Own" Room

By Marian C. Graves

THE HUMAN problem looms so large in some homes that all other household perplexities seem insignificant. The particular human problem in the home where I live has been John.

John is just turned 13 and is a normal, very active boy. Some months ago he began to show a disposition to wander from home at every opportunity. John's mother and his two older sisters held a consultation when they noticed how often he asked permission to do this. They believed that being so much away from home at this period of John's life, even at places so desirable as the public library, the Y. M. C. A. or educational entertainments, would soon lead him to look elsewhere for his pleasures. And they realized that the only thing to do was to make home more attractive to John than any other place in town.

His room was a small one opening out of the living room. It was John's in name only, for none of the family hesitated to enter it at any time, his sisters even using it occasionally for a sewing room. This room was kept painfully neat, and John was always in disgrace because magazines, library books, stamps, Boy Scout papers and all the belongings dear to a boy's heart persistently strewed his bed and often overflowed onto the tables and racks in other rooms of the house. On the walls hung two pictures, one a dingy winter landscape, the other a picture of an aunt whom John had never seen.

At the conference of which I spoke the mother suggested that John might stay at home if his sisters gave him more privacy in his room. This suggestion was followed by others, the result being a transformation in John's environment.

One sister remembered that John had always admired a picture net and some banners on her walls—relics of college days. The picture net was removed to John's room and the sister invested in two 10 cent banners of the kind used on automobiles. The net was left empty except for a copy of one of Frederic Remington's pictures and a good motto.

John's other sister cut a sheet of cardboard about 12 by 20 inches, hung it on the wall vertically and printed across the top, "Things to Do and Know." Just below the printing were two clips and in these she slipped two or three pages of ideas cut from magazines. These pages contained information about stamps, useful homemade articles, simple magic and sleight-of-hand tricks, and many other things she knew were of interest to John. Below this she placed a simple magazine rack, with two shelves large enough to accommodate the largest magazines. This rack was made from a box, the outside being covered with matting and the inside neatly papered with plain wall paper.

Eavesdropping

Though the winds but stir on their hoary thrones
Of hemlock and pungent pine,
All the whispering woodland tones
Gossip of things divine—

Why God is gray in the granite rock,
And green in the lichen flake,
And swift in the darting swallow flock,
And slow in the lapping lake;

Why God is sweet in the hermit thrush,
And hoarse in the frog; and why
His touch on the bee is golden plush,
And gauze on the stinging fly;

Why God is life in the mushroom there,
And death in the toadstool here;
Mirth in the dancing maidenhair;
In its hidden adder, fear.

Oh, if this berry that stains my lip
Could teach me the woodland chat,
Science would bow to my scholarship,
And theology doff the hat.

—Katharine Lee Bates in Suburban Life.

The furniture of the room consisted of a single iron bed, a chiffonier, a desk and two chairs. To these was added a lapboard for games, etc., which was to be kept in the clothes closet when not in use. And John was always careful to put it away, too.

Then John's mother told him casually that, if he would keep his room in order, no one except herself should enter it without his permission. She also told him that he might use his own taste in decorating the walls, if he would be chary of pins and nail holes. John was overjoyed and began at once to fill his picture net and decorate to the queen's taste. The result may not be artistic from the adult point of view, but it is at any rate expressive of a wholesome boy's personality, and therefore admirable.

The idea of keeping suggestions for things to do appealed to John and he added daily to the pages of ideas; what is more, he acted upon the suggestions. His mother and sisters interested themselves in the working out of these ideas, and unconsciously John came to look upon them as partners, while they were daily surprised anew at the fund of general information which an open-eyed boy accumulates.

The first time that John asked to go to one of the boys' homes his mother said, "Why not have Lee come here and entertain him in your room with some of these many ideas?"

John responded to the suggestion with an enthusiasm that made his mother wonder why she had never thought of this before.

The experiment has worked so well that someone asked me the other day why our boy always preferred to bring boys to his home rather than to seek his companionship elsewhere. We find, too, that John is much more helpful around the house than he used to be and is interested in all that pertains to home. Even now, as I write, I can hear him constructing an ash sifter for use in his daily home tasks.

If you find that your boy is losing interest in his home, why not try making him feel that one room is his castle, a storehouse of delights which he may share with you because of mutual interests? You will find, I am sure, that in solving the problem of the boy at home, you have gained an invaluable aid in solving your other home problems.

BITS BY THE WAY

BROWNING NOT HEALTHFUL

To make a deliberate attempt to acquire a coat of tan is usually the first thing a girl or woman does when she goes to the country. "You see," she explains, "no one will know I've been away if I don't look brown." So she sits hatless in the blazing sun, and feels virtuous and uncomfortable.

A well known medical man, however, emphatically condemns this practice, which he declares arises from a species of vanity, as being most unhygienic. As often as not, he says, it will send her home far less fit physically than when she started, for even if one escapes sunstroke the effects of the sun's rays upon the uncovered head are very bad. They will cause dizziness, headache, nausea and loss of appetite, and will often upset the digestive system for many days. He advises the vacationer who must have a brown face to stain it with walnut juice and wear a broad brimmed hat like a sane and sensible individual.

THE CLUB AND SELF-CONTROL

This is the day of the woman's club. There are social clubs, service clubs, study clubs, civic clubs, mothers' clubs—clubs for every age and for every taste and for every purpose. To paraphrase a very nice saying, no woman is useless while she has a club. But now comes a woman whose years of club work have made her wise in their lore, and declares that no woman ought to venture into a club until she is 30 years old at least. Her point of view is that only veterans, hardened and strengthened by long contact with life, are fitted to endure the nervous strain of club elections and debates and executive business, and so forth. Young women participating in such bouts, she says, take into their homes the unrest and irritability they absorb at the club, and family jars are the result.

Even the most seasoned veteran, however, cannot count on being always irritation proof. It seems to be a matter less of years than of temperament and self-control. If club life had no other use, it undoubtedly gives a good all-round training in respecting the other person's opinion, and in subordinating one's individuality to the cause of peace—two lessons no woman can begin too young to learn.

VIRTUE OF SEEING CROOKED

To be able to "see straight," as the saying goes, is a great thing; but it happens now and then that to be able to see crooked is an even greater.

Last Christmas a girl who had taken sincere pleasure in embroidering and making up a shirtwaist for a dear friend discovered at the last minute, to her dismay, that the embroidery was a trifle higher up on one side than on the other.

"What shall I do?" she asked despairingly.

"Send it, of course," advised her mother. "Probably the design wasn't stamped straight. You can explain how it was."

And so it was sent, with a note of apology and explanation tucked under the gay ribbon which tied the parcel.

When the note of acknowledgment came the girl glanced hastily through it for some reference to the defect. Here's what she found: "No, I didn't see any defects in the embroidery —they say I have a crooked eye! The waist was so filmy that I saw nothing else."

"How like Kathryn," cried the girl, "to see the good part and nothing else! That's the way she always looks at things—with a crooked eye that doesn't take in the flaws. It's a pity more of us haven't crooked eyes." S. C. R.

Position a Hard One

The A English class of a Louisville school, says a writer in The Courier-Journal, formed a basket ball team. It was wholly composed of girls and practice work began with vigor. It was the intention of the team after it became proficient to challenge the players of several other classes. No member of the A English class was over 12 years old, and Marion, who was being tried out for a position on the team, was only 10. She was quick and athletic, but all the hard knocks in the practice work seemed to come her way.

On one afternoon one of her teachers found her in a hallway off the gymnasium crying.

"What is it, Marion?" she asked. "Don't you like the practice work? What is your position on the team, dear?"

"I—don't—don't—know, ma'am," blubbered Marion, "but the way they—they treat me, I think I'm the basket."

Mrs. Randall—"Those two women aren't friends any more; each claimed to have the smartest child in town." Mrs. Dart—"Which was right?" Mrs. Randall—"Neither of them —I have."

YOUNG AMERICA

Emily's "Bosom Sin"

BY RUTH HALL JOHNSTON

"EM'LY! EM'LY!" mother's voice rang from the kitchen door, but Emily was far away from the little brown farmhouse in spirit, though her outward and visible self was perched in the favorite crotch of her favorite tree, where all she had to do was to stretch out a hand, and the ripe, red, round cherries were in her mouth.

"Em'ly! Em-i-l-e-e!"

Emily closed "Little Women" with a sigh. "I wonder what mother wants?" she said. "Oh, I know—she wants me to carry the eggs to Mrs. Fellows. Oh, well, there's no hurry about that! Mrs. Fellows never cares if she don't get them early," and she settled herself anew with her book.

How long she read she could not say, but as she dried her eyes after Beth's death her glance fell upon Brother Fred driving Black Bess from the stable.

"Why, where's Fred going? What's he home from the field for this time of day? Fred! Fred!"

She sprang down from her perch and ran toward him. "Oh, Fred, what's the matter!" she cried as she saw his grave face.

Fred glanced at her as he buckled the harness onto Black Bess. "Didn't I hear mother calling you half an hour ago? Better go see what she wants."

Emily's head dropped at the rebuke and she ran into the house, but stopped abruptly at the living room door. The room was in disorder, just as she had left it, she reflected with a twinge of conscience; but that was not the sight which brought her heart into her mouth and held her spellbound on the threshold.

Mother stood before the table putting a miscellaneous collection of things into the big brown basket which was so painfully associated with mother's absences. She stood irresolute, an expression of keen anxiety on her face, her eyes on a garment in her hand, but her thoughts evidently on some other care, which she was pouring out to father. Emily stood still and listened shamelessly. Her eyes traveled from mother to father, sitting listless by the table.

"I declare, I don't see how I can go, pa. Em'ly so little an' know-nothing," said Mrs. Bowen, "an' there's the ironing, an' the milk to take care of, an' the churning, an' the cooking, an' the chickens to feed, an' the mending, an' Em'ly's new dress—the poor child does need it —an', oh, I don't know what all, an'——"

"Now, mother, don't you worry a mite. We'll get along fine. Em'ly's a first-rate little cook, you know, an' Fred 'an' I c'n make out to do the hard work. Will needs you worse'n we do, that's flat, an' you're goin'—an'——"

Emily could contain herself no longer. "Is mother going away? What's the matter at Brother Will's? Why wasn't I told? Nobody ever tells me anything. Is father going?"

"You weren't told, baby, because you didn't come when mother called you," explained Mr. Bowen. "Sister Lou's sick an' needs mother the worst kind. You an' me are to keep house. Mother says we can't do it, but we'll show 'er, won't we?"

"Yes—but, oh, mother, are you going right now?" she cried, as Fred appeared at the door with a cheery "Come along, mother, no time to lose."

Mrs. Bowen tied on her bonnet, kissed Emily hurriedly and followed Fred to the buggy, leaving a stream of directions behind her.

"Just leave the ironing till you can get Mandy to help you. But you c'n get along, an' Fred'll do the churning—an'——" until only the beat of Black Bess's flying hoofs was borne, more and more faintly, to the two standing forlorn in the kitchen door.

They turned and looked at each other. It was the first time mother had left them for a long time, and each felt the responsibility, though in different ways and degrees. Mr. Bowen broke the silence.

"Well, baby, I must get back to the field. Can you get dinner alone, think? If you can't, blow the horn early an' I'll come in an' help."

Emily drew herself up in all the dignity of her fourteen years. "Of course I can get dinner alone, father! I'll get you a good one, you'll see!" she said proudly, while father smiled, a little skeptically, a little sadly. He was well acquainted with Emily.

It was a lovely morning, and Emily, dropping down on the top step, drank in its beauty, her chin in the cup of her hands. And thus Fred found her on his return. But something in the huddled little figure made him go to it and take it into his arms. "Mother-sick, poor little thing," he thought.

She buried her face on his shoulder and sobbed aloud. "Oh, Fred, isn't it horrid! Here vacation's just begun and I had so many such lovely plans, and now Lou has to get sick and I've got to work and not enjoy one bit of vacation. If father loved me he'd get Mandy to come. There never was a girl had as much trouble as I."

"No, I s'pose not," said Fred as he put her down decidedly. "But you needn't complain of the work. You don't seem to be doing it." He walked rapidly away, but came back to ask curiously, "Aren't you one bit sorry about Lou, except as it concerns you?"

"You're not nice to me and I shan't answer any questions."

"Well," said Fred, "you'd better be up and doing; it's late. What a pig she is!" he thought, as he joined his father. "But we've all spoiled her."

Emily glanced at the clock. Ten o'clock. Now, let's see! What shall I get for dinner? I'll get—I'll get—oh, I know, I'll make potato puffs; they sound so good. And hot biscuits, and—what kind of meat shall I have? Ham and eggs? It's sort o' warm for ham, but father likes it. Oh, yes, and coffee and lettuce! None of those take very long—I'll have time to read some more."

But "Little Women" is interesting, and time flies, and presently the clock struck 11. Emily sprang up.

"Oh," she cried, "father'll expect to be called in half an hour, and dinner not even begun, nor the room cleaned up, nor anything! Whatever shall I do? Oh, dear! Oh, dear, why do I put off things so? I wonder—I wonder—if Fred was right? I don't 'seem to be doing it.'"

She had gone into the kitchen. "I'll not have time to make potato puffs. I'll have to fry 'em —and brother hates 'em. Well, he can eat biscuits." She pared potatoes with a lavish hand and carried them over to the stove. There was no fire; she had forgotten it. It was a quarter past 11. Emily fell into a chair and burst into tears, but fiercely dried them.

"This won't do! But I did mean to have such a good dinner for them, and to be on time."

She poked the fire vigorously, and flew from molding board to table, from table to stove, to such good purpose that when father and Fred came in dinner, though not ready, was well under way.

Fred smiled. "Why, father, at this rate dinner won't be more than an hour late."

The ever-ready tears sprang to Emily's eyes. "Father, I'm so sorry. I wanted to have such a nice dinner and prove to you and mother that I'm not so no 'count as you think. But I've failed again. And I know why, now. Fred helped me see it. All my 'troubles' are because I let my 'bosom sin' run away with me. It is 'procrastination.' Everything's spoiled, and I forgot the coffee!" She flung herself into his arms. "But, oh, father, if you'll try me again, I will do better, all the time mother's gone. I'll be the best kind of a housekeeper—only try me again. And don't laugh—and don't look so serious, and——" but her sobs choked her speech.

Fred started to speak, but Mr. Bowen shook his head at him and whispered, "There, there, baby, we all get tangled up in our work sometimes. You'll come out all right, never fear."

Emily had been sorry so many times before for the troubles her fault had brought upon her that she was soon cheerful again. But she did try, and although, of course, she did not improve very fast, and forgot many times, she had learned her lesson, and when mother came home reporting Sister Lou almost well, Emily was "almost well," too.

An Endless Marathon

A small negro boy was a regular attendant at a boys' reading club, and always called for the same book, and always turned to the same place, at which he looked eagerly, and then laughed heartily.

The attendant's curiosity was aroused by the performance, so he followed the little fellow one night and, looking over his shoulder, saw that he opened the book at a picture of a bull chasing a terrified negro across a field. He was just about to ask what the joke was, for the laugh had again come rippling up to him, when the boy looked around grinning.

"He ain't kotched him yit!" he cried, slapping his knees.

The Voyage ❧ By Kathryn C. Wheeler

Blow, summer breezes, blow lightly, blow joyfully;
Swing, elm-tree branches, swing high and swing low;
Myra and Mildred are sailing so merrily
Off to the land where the happy dreams grow.

Myra's the captain to sail the ship steadily,
Mildred's the lookout, who's standing close by,
Watching for danger ahead, oh, so warily;
Dolly's the passenger, mounted on high.

Yonder they see, with its shores gleaming mistily,
Turrets and towers of the Land of Fair Dreams;
Gardens where roses and lilies are sugarplums
Frosted with honey and silver moonbeams.

There in the woods, where the fairies trip daintily,
Gayly they'll dine with the Man-in-the-Moon;
Play with Miss Mary, who, sometimes, contrarily,
Willfully frolics the whole afternoon.

Then in the twilight, with eyes drooping wearily,
Homeward, at last, from that far golden gate,
Soft summer breezes will pilot them tenderly,
Safe to the harbor where mother's arms wait.

Blow, summer breezes, blow lightly, blow joyfully;
Swing, elm-tree branches, swing high and swing low,
Myra and Mildred are sailing so merrily
Off to the land where the happy dreams grow.

NEW BOOKS

To be GOOD*—that one's single will might be the good angel of millions, that is the supreme dream of my intellect.—Frances E. Willard.*

The Efficacy of Prayer

Prayer and the Human Problem, by W. Arthur Cornaby. This is a book of a thousand, one of the best of this season's output. It is a rare and original contribution to the most vital of all religious problems, that of man's establishing and maintaining communication with his Creator. Mr. Cornaby has an earlier book called "Let Us Pray," but this new one is much stronger. He spent over twenty years in central China, where he held an engrossing Chinese editorship. That led him into the careful study of Chinese religious teachings, the so-called classics. In a time of enforced quiet, spent in part on a mountain in central China and in part on the Canadian shores of the Pacific, he faced the problem of prayer and wrought out the solution.

Prayer is rooted partly "in the haunting sense of moral failure" which the best men have, and in the vision of the depths of evil from which no merely human struggle can lift them. This sense utterly forbids the easy theory that evil is only a stage in the progress of good. "It is next to impossible for any man unversed in metaphysical casuistry to hold for a moment that treachery has ever been incipient fidelity, that burglary has ever been incipient honesty, that adultery may be a stage on the road to chastity, or that ferocity and malice can be sideposts of the gate of brotherly love."

Men who know themselves feel a sense of need for the connecting of their lives with a power that rises above that need and which may lift them above it. Such a power the Chinese classics do not reveal, though they give perfectly correct principles for practical life. Such a power is found in what Mr. Cornaby calls, in a striking chapter, "The Full-Orbed Gospel." That gospel, enthroning Christ, makes prayer natural to men. But prayer is more than this. It is also "the linking of human energy with divine potency for the attainment of some result which is desired of God." This part of the study follows the general lines of the similar study by Nolan Rice Best in his little book, "Beyond the Natural Order." It is a clear statement of the fact of a spiritual universe, upon whose power man can draw and with whose service he can cooperate. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $1.50 net.

Topics of Practical Religion

Social Religion, by Scott Nearing of the University of Pennsylvania. In July, 1910, Dr. Nearing had occasion to deliver an address to the Friends' General Conference at Ocean Grove. He was told by the managers that they were ignorant of social conditions, and was asked to tell the facts and wake them up. This little book is the outcome of that request, and if it does not wake any man it must be because he is in a dead sleep. Dr. Nearing still looks out on the social order with young eyes, which are apt to be keenly sensitive to certain groups of facts and not so clear regarding some others. He has a strain, therefore, of pessimism, which is not often relieved by hopefulness. Yet this is another of those voices which we shall disregard at our peril. The author's statement of the social disorders of the day is unusually clear, and men who are seeking to arouse their own churches or friends will find material here which they can trust. The book is best understood in the light of Dr. Nearing's earlier volume, "Social Readjustment." [Macmillan Company, New York. $1 net.

The Gospel of Labor, by Charles Stelzle. Having been a workingman himself, Mr. Stelzle has had access for years to the columns of the labor journals. This little volume contains thirty-two of the short papers which he has published in these journals. They are addressed to workingmen, but are valuable also to others. The title comes from Dr. van Dyke's familiar lines, beginning "This is the gospel of labor," which are quoted as an introduction. Such chapters as those headed "Suggestions to Saloon Fighters," "What Is Christianity," "The Church and the Social Unrest," are needed widely. Mr. Stelzle's position in the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions gives him the right to speak for the church, as well as for laboring men. [Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. 50 cents net.

Across the Dead Line of Amusements, by Henry W. Stough. A successful evangelist here sets forth the message of his preaching respecting the three forms of amusement—theater going, card playing and dancing—which the stricter Puritanism of the church has so long marked as questionable. While Dr. Stough does not scorn those Christians who feel that such entertainment is a problem not to be settled by "wholesale denunciation," nevertheless, for himself, he feels constrained to preach and practice a doctrine of total abstinence in regard to theater, cards and dancing alike; and here calmly and unequivocally he gives his reasons. Without calling these amusements inherently sinful, he does pile up a startling demonstration of the perils to good morality that attend them. This is a book to concern those who expect to desist entirely from such amusements, but those who purpose to indulge them moderately should read it in fairness to their own welfare, for if they are set on following the primrose path in this particular, common discretion ought to prompt them to study, before they set out, a map of its pitfalls. [Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. 75 cents.

Theology

Living Messages of the Books of the Bible, by G. Campbell Morgan. Volume III.: Matthew-Colossians. Volume IV.: First Thessalonians-Revelation. Since author and publishers are desirous of advertising the fact, it may be said at the outset that the work of which these volumes are parts is quite distinct from Dr. Morgan's "Analyzed Bible." It is a much more condensed treatment of the spiritual content of the Holy Scriptures. Dr. Morgan aims to discover in each book of the Bible a single spiritual message; and having discovered this he endeavors to adapt it to the present age in as practical a way as possible. Accordingly these volumes contain brief expository treatments of each of the New Testament books, presenting (a) the essential message and (b) the application of each. This method of treatment assumes the literary unity of the books in every case, an assumption that historical study does not corroborate. Otherwise it is quite suggestive and helpful. [Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. Each $1 net.

The Historical Setting of the Early Gospel, by Thomas Cuming Hall. This modest volume is evidently a by-product of the studies which its distinguished author, professor of Christian ethics in Union Theological Seminary, New York City, prosecutes so diligently in the field of the social relations of the church. His effort here is to construct an outline picture of the political, economic, domestic and social conditions amidst which Christianity was first preached. His conclusion is that there is "a striking analogy between the world in which Jesus spoke and the current day." Dr. Hall contends that it is idle to expect the Christian religion ever to be "nonpolitical," since it never has been that, but has from the first taken active part in all vital questions of the times. But he does strongly warn the church against the danger of coming into bonds to any political power. The "connecting up" of the church with the Roman empire was a ruinous blunder, because in it the church sought rulership instead of seeking to be of service to mankind. [Eaton and Mains, New York City. 75 cents net.

The Glory After the Passion, by James S. Stone. The rector of St. James' church, Chicago, here completes his studies of the life of the Lord Jesus during the last few weeks of his recorded ministry. In previous works he has traced his exposition of the gospel narrative down to the time of the death upon the cross. In this volume he takes up the descent into hell, the resurrection and the ascension and enthronement in heaven. The point of view is that of the devout but open-minded believer in the historicity of all that is written of Jesus in the New Testament. The "descent into hell," hinted at in the first epistle of Peter, naturally offers a difficult problem to the author. He treats it, however, with great caution and discrimination on the basis of the patristic conceptions, without insisting on the absolute necessity of a clear-cut conviction on the subject. The volume is well adapted to the devotional study of the New Testament account of what follows the crucifixion of Jesus. [Longmans, Green and Company, New York. $1.50 net.

The New Testament Manuscripts in the Freer Collection; Part I.: The Washington Manuscript of the Four Gospels, by Henry A. Sanders. The Washington manuscript of the gospels, which was purchased and is now owned by Charles L. Freer, first became known in 1906. It was at once determined not only to publish it in full but also to compare it with some others and present its special features with adequate fullness. This has now been done by Professor Sanders of Michigan University in a volume indicating careful study. The manuscript is described with great accuracy, its history given, its contents explained, the problem of the text discussed and its peculiarities compared with the representative accepted texts, showing the variations from these. Several facsimile reproductions of sample pages enable the user to realize the kind of work that Professor Sanders was obliged to do. [Macmillan Company, New York.

Aids to the Housekeeper

The Helping Hand Cook Book, by Marion Harland and Christine Terhune Herrick. The names of Mrs. Terhune and her daughter insure the utility of any book to which they are attached, and their newest one may be described literally as invaluable to any housewife. It contains a menu for every day in the year; but it is far removed from the conventional and unsuggestive list of menus to which we've grown accustomed. The authors know that variety in food is almost as essential as good cooking; they also recognize that one of the most difficult problems for the average housekeeper is the restriction of table expenses to a certain limit. Their book aims to meet all these needs, and does so more adequately than any recent volume of its kind. Besides the daily menus and those for special occasions there are 243 recipes. [Moffat, Yard and Company, New York. $1.25 net.

"Dame Curtsey's" Party Pastimes for the Up-to-Date Hostess, by Ellye Howell Glover (A. C. McClurg and Company, Chicago); The Art of Entertaining for All Occasions, by "Madame Merri" (F. G. Browne and Company, Chicago). Both of these books present novel schemes for the entertainment of young and old. The first offers pastimes for all the different seasons, besides suggestions for after dinner tricks, bazars and church socials, showers and announcement parties; the second follows the same general scheme, though the two are sufficiently unlike to supplement each other nicely. Each $1 net.

The Chafing Dish and the Preparation of Sandwiches, by Alice L. James, is replete with practical suggestions for suppers, teas, picnics and that puzzling problem of Sunday night lunches. The mystery of chafing dish concoctions is made lucid enough for the merest amateur to master. [G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. $1.25 net.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

July 6, 1913—The Child Moses Saved from Death

Everyday View of the Lesson

By J. L. Scott

Lesson Text, Exodus 1:8-14; 1:22—2:10. Golden Text, Matthew 18:5: Whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth me.

Three hundred and fifty years more or less intervene between our last lesson and this. The invasion of northern Egypt by possibly a thousand or even more must have had a marked effect on its subsequent history. These people were from Canaan and in many respects very different from the native Egyptians. They spoke a different language and worshiped a God peculiar to themselves. Colonists may or may not be a strength to a country. Everything depends upon their powers of assimilation. Their occupation was, for historic reasons, abhorred by the natives. But they were kindly received by the king and assigned to Goshen, a pastoral district on the northern border.

Israelites, Though at Peace with Surroundings, Unprepared for Complications

Their hospitable reception has never been fully understood. Joseph's services were, of course, in a measure responsible for it; while many think the king was a believer in the one God, which would form a strong tie between the Hebrews and himself. And it must also be remembered that Joseph, while at heart an Israelite, was externally an Egyptian. His wife was the daughter of the high priest of the sun god in the holy city of On, and a worshiper of the goddess Neith, the Minerva of the Egyptians. With such affiliations it is not strange that the Israelites lived at peace with their surroundings. But there were complications yet to arise for which they were not prepared. Time reverses conditions, and the oldest world is likely to become new. The history of the Israelites during their sojourn in Egypt is largely conjecture. The time itself is indefinite, nor is it a matter of vital interest.

The original number of the Israelites has been variously estimated as from 1,000 to many times a thousand, while it is said the land of Goshen did not exceed sixty geographic square miles. Moreover, Goshen had its own native population, which, together with the new invasion, must have drawn heavily upon its resources. The Hebrews multiplied and so did their flocks, but the meadows remained as they were. As a consequence many were compelled to seek employment beyond the borders. This would bring them into closer relations with the Egyptians and the question of hire and service became a living one. The Hebrew is not a natural servant. He is industrious and prefers to work for himself. But no people can long survive on a single occupation. When Pharaoh asked the Israelites as to their calling they replied, "Thy servants are shepherds, both we and our fathers." They knew but one thing. The condition must have been pitiful, but "men must work." The masters knew this and drove the Hebrews to the most menial service.

Fruitfulness of Hebrews Frustrates Plan of King to Exterminate Them

Misfortunes seldom come singly. While Joseph's memory remained green there was always a friend at court, but gradually memory died and there at length arose a new king, who "knew not Joseph." This monarch—whether his name were Seti or Rameses matters not—determined to extirpate the Hebrews by slavish toil. Poverty and children, however, have long been friends. The more the Hebrews were oppressed the more fruitful they became, until "the land was filled with them." This created a new apprehension on the part of the king. In the event of war on which side would the Hebrews be found? They lived along the border and might serve as an open gate to an invading army. The lash of the taskmaster was exchanged for the sword and a general proclamation was issued that every newly born Jewish boy should be cast into the river.

God's promise of a nation was seemingly in peril. But down by the marshes of the Nile was a humble cabin, destined to smite the palace of the king. The family consisted of Amram and Jochebed, with their two children, Miriam and Aaron. The coming of a child must have fallen like a shadow upon that home. The poor mother asked herself a thousand times: What awaits me? Food for the sword or another Miriam to bless our home? The child was born and the Nile awaited its victim.

For three months the mother hid the babe in the home. Then instinct told her what to do. She had long lived by the bank of the river and had often seen the little basket boats which the natives were accustomed to float upon the waters. They were made of bulrushes bound together and cemented with slime and pitch. She soon constructed a little ark and to it committed the child. No Argonant ever sailed a voyage so important as this.

Moses Saved for the Furthering of God's Plan

If ever a venture seemed intrusted to capricious fate it was this. And yet no voyage could have been better planned. It was the custom of Pharaoh's daughter to bathe in the river at a certain place and at a certain time. This the mother knew. She also knew the course of the currents and when to set the craft adrift. Little Miriam was in the secret and glided like a spirit through the reeds along the shore. The princess arrived at the proper time, saw the ark among the flags and sent one of her maids to bring the craft to land. "And she opened it, and saw the child and, behold! the babe wept. And she had compassion on him, and said, This is one of the Hebrews' children." Miriam appeared from among the flags and suggested that she go and find a nurse of the Hebrew women. The nurse was easily found and the babe nestled once more on its mother's breast. The princess no doubt understood it all, but she had felt the drawings of a mother's love and was equally anxious to save the child. She called him Moses, which means to "draw out."

Every life is an exponent of God, and great lives especially so. In their case God writes with a larger pen. Moses, like Joseph, was the incarnation of a purpose.

The Lesson Verse by Verse

By Hermon D. Jenkins

Analysis—The world's greatest hero is born. The outcome of the Egyptian decree shows that force alone never saved a state. The incident which follows exhibits the cruelty of power and the tenderness of love. We owe, under God, the great deliverer Moses to a mother's faith and a sister's fidelity.

With the beginning of the third quarter of the year we enter on the study of the greatest character in history, Jesus Christ alone excepted. Confucius as a philosopher has influenced one of the greatest of races for centuries; Buddha as a mystic has touched with a spirit of self-sacrifice multitudes of Oriental followers. Greek dramatists, Roman lawyers and ambitious soldiers in various nations have all had their field and day. But now, more than three millenniums after his death, the ideals of Moses in morals and civics show not only undiminished but increasing force and widening reach. The code he taught lies at the base of all modern enlightened legislation; and his idea of a commonwealth has won out even in China.

Yet, as we see in the lesson for today, he was sprung from the ranks of the common people, "the laboring class," as was our own great leader of the last century, Abraham Lincoln. Such heroes remind us of God's method for carrying forward life's betterment. Great men are not evolved by slow and imperceptible differentiations from the common mass but by bounds from mediocrity to greatness. They remind us of the possibilities of the race which produces them and whose infinite development is reserved for a world without sin.

No Government Founded on Force Alone Is Secure

Verses 8-11—A servile race is always a source of danger to a state. The Greeks feared the Helots and sought to reduce their numbers and to break their spirit. In America measures which seemed necessary for the safety of the whites were put into legislative form in various states, though they were never enforced by the humane masters of the blacks. The lesson may be slowly learned, but it is learned at last, that men are not things, and that the very precautions which slavery demands rouse the rebellion they are intended to suppress. Parents need to lay this lesson to heart as well as kings, for some of them arouse the spirit of rebellion in their children by the very means they take to secure obedience.

Verses 12-14—Severity may for a time curb, but it never cures the ills of the body politic. If the blood hold a cancerous taint, cutting out the tumor will not prevent its recurrence. We are not rid of anarchy when we hang an anarchist. When Burke told his colleagues in the English parliament that he knew no way of indicting a whole nation, he showed himself the wise man. The only safety to any government, whatever its outward form, is the consent of the governed; and no lesson is more needed in America or the home today than that. The Egyptian spread the perils he meant to eradicate. Unless the parent treats the child with reason, and the state accords the citizen of any color justice, parent and state are alike laying up trouble instead of removing it.

The Cruelty of Power; the Tenderness of Love

Verse 22—Power exercised without moral restraint always tends toward cruelty. Man, unprovided with hoof or horn, talon or fang, is the most cruel of all God's creatures unless spiritually born again. Lions form no armies of extermination and the cobra invents no instruments of slow and agonizing death for its victims. What is a mother's heartbreak to a Pharaoh or a Herod?

Chapter 2:1-2—The very dangers which threatened all the Hebrews draw young souls together. Love is the only solace for such suffering. The poor, fighting for a bare subsistence, marry younger than the children of the rich because the poor find in mutual sympathy their sole comfort. The landless class, the proletariat, is always prolific.

Verse 3—Misfortune presses most heavily upon the mother. In want, pestilence, floods, earthquakes, the mother bears not only her own pain but her child's. What must have been the agony of this Hebrew mother when she saw the carved and gilded vessels of Egyptian nobles glide along the river close to the reedy swamp in whose depths she had hid her babe before the world was astir! Yet God was preparing for that child a career of power and virtue which should never be forgotten.

Verse 4—Meanwhile the faithful sister was keen-eyed for the approach of any possible danger. Who so loving as the older sister upon whom depends the safety of the infant?

Deliverance Rewards Mother's Faith and Sister's Courage

Verse 5—Victor Hugo in relating the incidents which led up to the victory of the allies at Waterloo, says that "the face of the universe changed front because a shepherd boy said to a Prussian soldier in the wood, 'Pass this way and not that.'" But a more trifling incident still led to a far greater result when the daughter of Pharaoh was led by curiosity to see what was hidden in this ark of bulrushes.

Verse 6—Though many writers have sought to analyze the "eternal feminine," there are those who still think that the one emotion which lies always near the surface of the womanly life is love of children. A child's tear brings this love to the surface.

Verse 7—This was the opportunity for Miriam, the sister of the babe. She heard her baby brother's pitiful wail. It might have broken down her self-control had she not seen at the same time the tenderness in the face of this childless princess. With ready wit she suggested getting as a nurse one of the child's own race. It is quite possible the Egyptian saw through the Hebrew stratagem, but it suited her purpose to carry out the ruse.

Verses 8-10—In one moment the whole history of the world was altered. The future did not lie in the hand that held the scepter of Egypt but in the hand of that Hebrew babe. He might be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, but he was the child of Providence. It was his to stand between the old order of force and the new order of ideas. With him a new world came into view.

DEVOTIONAL SERVICE

BY EDWARD ARTHUR WICHER

Week Beginning June 29, 1913

HOME MISSIONS TOPIC—The Central Northwest.

Our subject for this week includes the states of Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota and Nebraska. While conditions differ widely in various localities, there is such a large measure of homogeneity in social and religious life as to permit of a single treatment of the topic. The home mission activities of this district are of four kinds—work in the lumber camps, in the mining camps, in the sparsely settled agricultural districts and in the congested districts of the cities.

—

The work among the lumberjacks has become inseparably connected with the name of Rev. Frank E. Higgins, whose ministry has always been in the woods. He gathers his congregations under the trees, or among the stumps, or in the bunkhouses, as may be most convenient. He lives with the men and is one with them.

—

But this work is not a one-man story. It is the story of 30,000 men in the woods of Minnesota alone, and of perhaps 100,000 men in the United States. They are strong men, who can be appealed to only by strong men. They cannot abide hypocrisy, but they have a profound respect for the truth, spoken by a true man.

They are also generally kind-hearted and easily victimized. The saloon, the gambling den and the brothel are always near by to rob them of their hard-earned wages and to debauch them in body and soul. If the members of the churches in the older and better equipped communities need the strength and consolation of the gospel much more do these men, who are away from home and kindred, from libraries, schools and churches.

—

"In Minnesota," writes Mr. Higgins, "we have six men and one woman in the work; four of these men are converts from the camps and are doing splendid work, to the satisfaction of the men in the camps and of the companies who own the camps. The successful work of these men argues that we need more converted lumberjacks to enter the field. Jack McCall is working in the Cloquet camps; Martin Johnson is in the camps in what is known as the Big Fork country in Itasca county; he also takes care of a little church at Big Fork which has grown out of camp work in the past. Jack Sornberger is working in the camps north of Virginia. Matt Daly is north and east of Duluth in Lake county. Rev. W. J. Lowrie and Rev. A. L. Richardson, pastors, are giving part of their time to this work and are doing splendid service in Aitkin county. Besides these, we now have Mrs. McCall, wife of one of the missionaries, who is visiting the hospitals in Virginia, Cloquet, Superior (Wis.) and Duluth. For a time the Roman Catholic sisters objected to our having a woman visit their hospitals, but these objections have been withdrawn and Mrs. McCall now finds a welcome. The men in the various hospitals are always glad to see her, and we look for valuable results from her ministering."

—

Next to the forests come the mines. The mines of Minnesota in 1911 yielded $53,460,561, of which $48,447,760 was paid for iron ore. Where iron, water power, water transportation and food supply are found in close juxtaposition there is a locality which is destined to become one of the world's great centers of industry. In Duluth Presbytery there is needed increasingly a large home mission enterprise.

—

But this whole territory is predominantly agricultural. And it is in the development of the resources of agriculture that the great increase of wealth of the past decade has been made.

—

We have nearly 850 organized churches in this district. In many of these the membership is small, due mainly to the fact that in the newer parts of the district there is a constant change in the population. The membership of today is in some other part of the country tomorrow, but the influence of the people whose hearts God has touched will be felt in other places. . . . In many cases the organized churches are only the centers of the minister's operations. He will sometimes have five or six preaching stations from four to fifteen miles from his church.—Report of Dr. Kearns.

—

One of the difficulties that confront the work of the Presbyterian Church in this territory is the large proportion of foreigners among the farmers—larger here than in any other section of the union. These are chiefly Swedes and Germans, who are often settled together in solid communities, where the services in the English language are unacceptable to the older generation. Until the process of assimilation is complete a homogeneous church life is impossible.

—

Many of the new settlements, too, are very small and widely separated, especially such as may be made in a clearing in the forest; and it is not easy to group these so as to form parts of a field.

—

For three years past the farmers of this region have suffered severely from drought, especially in the Dakotas and western Nebraska. And this year they have suffered from cyclone. Churches which had become self-supporting were compelled to go back to the board for aid; and some others needed more aid than formerly. But in spite of all disasters, other churches moved steadily upward to self-support.

The irrigation schemes of the national government are redeeming vast stretches of waste land, which are of the best quality and need only water in order to afford homes to hundreds of thousands of settlers. Conspicuous among these is the North Platte reclamation project, which is fast nearing completion. These new homes will at the outset make new demands upon the generosity of the board.

—

In the larger cities of this district—Minneapolis, St. Paul and Omaha—there are already found the problems of congestion, disease and poverty which confronts the Christian worker in every great city.

—

The Synod of Nebraska has bravely become a self-supporting synod. The Synod of Minnesota, with its more complicated activities, has not yet attained, but is aiming at, this distinction. The synods of North Dakota and South Dakota have both effected synodical organization, with a view to the more efficient handling of their work.

—

The first aim of a home mission church should be to attain self-support; the second, to help someone else. It does not always happen in this life that we have the opportunity of returning kind deeds and helpful services to the same people who have rendered them to us; but we are their debtors to pass on to others the favor they have shown to us. When the church that has been nourished by the board grows strong it lends a hand to help another church; and thus our brotherly kindness is transmitted from age to age.

—

What is the greatest need of the field in this district? It is men—men with the temper of the pioneer; men who will accept salaries of $700 or $800, and preach with as much fervor as if they were receiving twice that amount.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE

COMMENTS IN BRIEF BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

July 6, 1913

THE CHRISTIAN WHO DARES

TOPIC—The ideal Christian. VII. His courage. Joshua 1:1-9.

The long look back over Christian history enables us to make certain generalizations. One is that when tested Christians have proved courageous. Men of the Book have been brave men, from the days of the apostles down to the persecuted Koreans of the present year. There is something about the gospel which makes souls strong. The fear of the Lord drives out all lesser fears. Man cannot affright the Christian who is afraid only of offending his Lord. A volume of testimony could be compiled to show that, in the opinion of secular historians and observers, men of God have been men of courage.

—

Fearlessness follows faith.

—

Some persons are "born timid"; but they may be reborn brave. Take down your Bible and read through the book of the Acts, underscoring the word "bold" and its derivatives every time they occur. At least ten marks will result. A little study will show that this apostolic boldness was always in connection with speech; the word itself in the Greek means "free utterance." Also it is a direct fruit of the Spirit. The Christian church's first recorded prayer was a prayer for boldness. The first and last records of Paul's preaching are linked with this significant quality. The Christian who meditates upon this book of boldness will find himself acquiring the Christian courage which is learned in the school of Scripture. As Amos R. Wells pointedly says: "The Bible is a fountain of courage; it is not only the sword of the Spirit but the spirit of the sword."

—

These are the gifts I ask
Of thee, Spirit serene:
Strength for the daily task,
Courage to face the road,
Good cheer to help me bear the traveler's load,
And for the hours of rest that come between,
An inward joy in all things heard and seen.
—Henry van Dyke.

Sometimes we think we are courageous when we are merely quarrelsome. We are indulging in contentiousness, which is but a cheap imitation of courage. The really brave are peaceable. The best soldiers have sometimes been the ones most averse to war. Real strength shuns strife. A homely illustration of the immaturity of quarrelsomeness is the obvious fact that schoolboys frequently fight, whereas it is rare for grown men to do so.

—

Make of disaster an opportunity for your courage.—G. S. Merriam.

—

Courage comes from conviction. The way to learn to dare anything is to learn to believe something.

—

A tonic for courage is the eleventh chapter of Hebrews. A person cannot read of this roll of heroes without becoming more heroic. Courage is contagious. We become brave by associating with the brave, in literature and in life. The mind that is stored with the great words of heroism is least likely to stoop to deeds of cowardice.

—

Courage is the soil for most of the other virtues. It is elemental character. Out of it grow the qualities which make strong manhood. The Bible, with its oft-repeated injunction to "be strong," is not singular in inculcating bravery; all great literature does so. The souls which have dared to stand alone are the spiritual emancipators of the race.

—

The braggart is seldom brave, because he has not learned to conquer his own spirit.

—

A line cannot be drawn between faith and courage. Simple trust in God makes a person heedless of lower considerations. Because we believe his word we dare his work. When he commands, fear cannot countermand.

"The bravest are the tenderest,
The loving are the daring."

—

The daring which adventures is one form of bravery; but the higher courage is that which simply endures. The heroism of the sickroom is higher than the heroism of the battlefield. Woman's bravery is rated higher than man's, because more spiritual.

—

The finest quality in courage is its self-concealment. To fight without banners or bugles; to sound no war cries; to shun all spectators; to dare to be willing to be esteemed a coward—that is the sort of self-forgetting courage which makes one think of the Hero of Calvary.

MISSIONARY WORK

Denominational Lines Weary Filipinos

Ever since Protestant mission work was begun in the Philippine islands, succeeding the conquest of that archipelago by the United States, there has been a remarkable degree of federation and unity in effect among the various denominations at work there. But effects of union already realized dissatisfy the missionaries and the native converts. That is to say, where so much union seems so good there is constant pressure for the better advantages of more union. The Filipino conference of the United Brethren in Christ has just given very emphatic expression to this desire for a closer consolidation. By formal resolution this conference has asked the other conferences, presbyteries and sessions representing Protestantism in the islands to appoint two representatives each to a joint commission, which shall be instructed to discuss means and methods for the creation of a single solid Protestant church in the Philippines. The United Brethren leaders declare that their own native people are entirely unable to understand the reason for any sort of distinction between themselves and other Protestant neighbors. The way in which they come to their missionaries asking, "What is the difference between us and the Methodists?" or "between us and the Baptists," or "between us and the Presbyterians," is absolutely pathetic, because there is no answer which is sufficient to content them with a separation that from their standpoint appears absolutely needless. United Brethren, Methodists and Presbyterians are already working most harmoniously in Ellinwood Seminary and other educational work, and there seems no doubt that these denominations at least can easily be joined together in one.

Persian Women Aid Korean Sisters

All the mission lands are linked with boards in the home lands of the missionaries as a matter of course. Of these everybody connected with missions is well aware. But the ties which bind certain mission lands to one another are usually obscured from public gaze, and when discovered have the spice of surprise, and sometimes of romance. It would be little suspected that missions so remote from one another as those of East Persia and Korea would be connected in interdependent relations. Yet the circumstance that one of the missionaries now at work in Hamadan had it in her heart orginally to go to Korea makes a tie that has had already quite remarkable results.

Miss Annie Montgomery, going out to Persia under appointment of the New York Board in 1882, carried with her more than a little disappointment because she apparently had had to surrender the interest which circumstances of her girlhood had kindled in Korea—a land which at that time was still sealed tight shut against the operations of missionaries. And although she loyally gave her heart to Persia, she could not forget Korea. No sooner was Miss Montgomery able to get into the hearts of the women of Hamadan than she began to talk to them about the benighted condition of their Korean sisters. And from them she collected a contribution that she transmitted directly to the Bible society in New York for the printing of the first Korean edition of the gospels, which had been translated and prepared before any mission worker had yet secured access to Korea's closed ports.

This remarkable gift the Bible society duly acknowledged, and it has been followed every year by another donation from the same source. Last year, when the Koreans had undertaken to put a copy of the gospel of Mark into every heathen home in their land, the women of Hamadan supported that effort. And this year 600 "krans" have been transmitted from Miss Montgomery's classes to relieve the families whose breadwinners have been kept in prison under groundless charges of political conspiracy.

Opportunities Among Moslems of Persia

From Tabriz, Persia, Mrs. C. K. Pittman writes that the opportunities for work among the Moslems are multiplying around them so fast that they fairly chafe over their inability to get out into the towns and villages for preaching. Mrs. Pittman has a Bible class of Moslem girls studying Luke, and every day, she says, she is more and more amazed at the way these girls take hold of Christian truth. Indeed, she believes that at heart the girls are already Christians. Many mothers bring their children to the missionaries, offering to give them up entirely if the mission will take and care for them. Mrs. Pittman has been told that within the last year not less than 100 children, ranging in age from 5 months to 5 years, have been thrown out into the streets of Tabriz to die, because the parents are unable to care for them. The missionaries are broken-hearted because they have no orphan asylum where such children can be cared for. The best that they can do is to take a few of them into their own homes.

Some Indian Mission Projects

Two Sioux Indians from the Sisseton Reservation and a Friend

John J. De Mott, assistant superintendent of Indian Missions (in center), Jesse Wakeman and Amos One Road

Dr. T. C. Moffett, head of the department of Indian missions under the Home Board at New York, as well as two members of the Indian committee of that board—Henry W. Jessup and William S. Bennet—who were present at Assembly, took a great deal of pride in the Indian representation among the Assembly commissioners at Atlanta. There were five Indians in the U. S. A. Assembly and two in the U. S. Assembly. From the Choctaw tribe in Oklahoma—of whose people it is said 60 per cent are Presbyterians—there came four commissioners, two to each Assembly. There were also present in the U. S. A. Assembly Rev. George Head, a stalwart young Sioux, six feet three inches in height, the moderator of Dakota (Indian) Presbytery; Theodore Jimerson from the Seneca missions of Cattaraugus, New York, and Elder G. H. Ellis from the Pimas in Arizona.

In "The World in Chicago" exposition recently the department has been represented by its assistant superintendent, John J. De Mott, and two young Sioux from Sisseton reservation—Jesse Wakeman and Amos One Road—who wore the feathers and embroidery of the most princely costume of their forefathers without concealing in the least the polite cultivation of their education at Carlisle. The department now supervises 234 organized churches and mission stations, which are ministered to by thirty-nine ordained Indian preachers and fifty-eight Indian assistants and interpreters, beside white missionaries. During the past year two new hospitals have been erected for the Omahas of Nebraska and the Navajos in Arizona. Summer institutes are being held in Oklahoma for the Choctaws and Seminoles. Two Bible training schools and ten boarding and day schools are maintained by the Women's Board.

New Home of Katra School, Allahabad

An event which marked an important advance in the educational work of the North India mission took place at Katra, Allahabad, recently, when the corner stone of the new Katra Mission School, which is managed by Dr. J. J. Lucas, was laid in the presence of a large gathering of English officials, Indian friends and missionaries by Sir George Knox, judge of the high court of the united provinces. Dr. Lucas in opening the exercises briefly reviewed the long and honorable service the school has rendered to the community in which it is situated. It was founded in 1845 by Rev. Joseph Warren, who came to Allahabad from America in 1839 and who is credited with setting up the first printing press in the united provinces.

Sir George Knox paid a high tribute to the work of the American Presbyterian mission in Allahabad. He emphasized strongly the necessity of the religious basis for education and declared the divorce of education and religion to be an evil.

The educational department of the united provinces, recognizing the need of more suitable quarters for the school, made a grant covering half the cost of the new building, which will amount to nearly $5,000. Fifteen hundred dollars of the balance was appropriated by the board from the Kennedy fund. A remainder of about $1,000 will have to be raised from other sources.

Missionary Brevities

—On the west coast of Africa, where missions and other civilizing influences have come to affect deeply the habits of the natives, the custom has sprung up of wearing as many new clothes as possible on Christmas Day, and attendance upon Christmas services in the mission stations is coming to have incidental features comparable to the parade at church hour on 5th avenue, New York, Easter morning.

—The church in Lucena, the Philippines, has just been formed with fifteen members from the town and as many more from villages adjacent, making a membership of about thirty. Charles N. Magill is the missionary in charge and hopes soon to be able to complete the chapel for his little congregation. At present they are worshiping in the basement of the unfinished building.

—The Korean missionaries have extended their labors beyond the border of Korea into the southeastern corner of Manchuria, where at Sukando a large colony of Korean emigrants is now settling down under the Russian flag.

Board Notes and Announcements

—Miss Herma Clark was the leader at the Friday morning meeting of the Board of the Northwest, Chicago. Missionaries from China, Persia and India spoke. Dr. Garritt of Nanking showed the largeness of the present opportunity as he contrasted old and new China and told of the great and earnest endeavor of all Christian missions there to work as one. Dr. Coan of Urumia called Persia "the very center of Islam." Ten or twelve million Mohammedans are there accessible. Himself a son of missionaries, he now finds his daughter ready to return with her parents to the same work in which they have spent twenty-seven years. Mr. McGaw of Etah, representing the Endeavorers of Bloomington, Cairo and Ewing presbyterial societies, and his wife, the missionary of Muncie Presbyterial Society, each spoke to the heart of the "mighty miracle" God has worked in opening the eyes of the high castes by exalting them of low degree.

—The forty-second annual report of the Board of the Northwest is being mailed. If any synodical or presbyterial officer, or any secretary of a local society, fails to receive a copy, she is asked to notify the office. Copies are also sent to all missionaries of this board, all who have been made life members during the year and all other life or honorary members who send request for same. The price of the report is 10 cents.

The Open Hearth

Political Romanism in America

Why is it that the civil or secular press and much of the religious press is so silent upon the encroachments of political Romanism in this country? Why is it that in the preparation of mission studies our boards give us much light on Mormonism, Mohammedanism and Buddhism, but never a word about the greatest obstacle to mission work and the power of evangelical religion in the United States—Romanism? Does Protestantism, because of the silence of the press and the indifference of the Protestant church, suppose there is no peril? Is Protestantism afraid of the "papal boycott"?

No peril! when in Washington there is a well defined lobby styled the bureau of Catholic Indian missions, incorporated by a charter from the legislature of Maryland in 1894, Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishops Corrigan, Ireland, Ryan and Mons. Stephan being the incorporators.

No peril! when the President of the United States has to court Roman Catholic votes and is expected to recognize at a public function the cardinals as not only "princes of the blood" but as taking rank next to him in precedence of the governor of the state!

No peril! when we are indifferent to the fact that France, Italy and Portugal and other countries formerly dominated by Jesuits and Romish conspirators drove them out to save their governments!

No peril! when the secular press seems to be largely under Roman censorship, and when a great papal eucharistic council is held in Canada exploits it, but scarce a word of news does it give to the millions of Protestant Christians about the three notable Presbyterian Assemblies at Atlanta, Ga.

No peril! when Rome takes the blessed Bible out of our public schools and then has the effrontery to call them godless!

No peril! when magazine distributing agencies have placed a boycott at the instigation of the papal hierarchy on magazines and other publications that are defending American institutions against Romanism!

No peril! when practically all the chaplains of the navy are Romanists and two-thirds of the army chaplains the same!

W. F. DICKENS LEWIS.

Ministers and Divorce Marriages

In the report of the special committee of life and work to General Assembly at Atlanta appears the following observation upon the condition of our church in relation to the subject of divorce: "It is evident that our ministers and churches are not grappling with this great evil [divorce] as they should. . . . The movement for reform needs a great new stimulus of thought and effort." This is followed by two resolutions. One recommends that ministers and churches organize campaigns of education; the other that the influence of the church be exerted in changing state legislation on the subject.

A very important phase of the evil is here overlooked. It is this: Shall the Presbyterian minister be left free to decide whether or not to marry divorced persons? Shall he continue to be his own lawyer, judge and jury in the matter? It is not altogether the ease with which the dissatisfied and sinful secure divorces in our law courts that panders to the growth of the divorce evil, but in no small degree the likelihood that some minister of Christ will unwarily, or otherwise, remarry a divorced person under the blessing of the church.

The Roman Catholic Church has gathered to itself no small meed of praise by its strict laws on divorce and remarriage. 'Tis true, this stringency in the Catholic divorce market is reduced by the Roman casuistical method of annulling marriages. But whether on the basis of policy or of genuine Christian ethics such rules have had an appreciable effect upon the Catholic laity.

The Protestant Episcopal Church has raised the barriers of remarriage to the point where the red tape involved in sifting the evidence in each case is a process so delaying and embarrassing to divorcees that very few such in the Episcopal communion ask marriage at the hands of their own clergy. They hie quickly to some strange and unsuspecting parson who has not formed the investigating habit and who has no special ecclesiastical machinery to help him find out what he should know. In states where the civil law requires marriage to be solemnized

We Envy You
Who Never Tasted Puffed Grains

There's a charming revelation coming sometime to the folks who meet around your morning table.

They have yet to discover the most winsome morsels men have ever made from grain.

Some morning, a dish like we show will greet them. A dish of porous, brown grains—eight times normal size—puffed by a steam explosion.

A dish of thin-walled wafers—airy bubbles of grain—with a taste like toasted nuts.

Some will serve them with cream and sugar, some will mix them with berries. And the grains will crush at a touch of the teeth into almond-flavored granules.

Then, for luncheons or suppers, you'll serve the grains floating in bowls of milk. You'll use them at dinner to garnish ice cream. You'll use them in candy making.

Thus will come to your table a new delight. Also scientific foods which stand among the greatest of food inventions.

Puffed Wheat, 10c
Puffed Rice, 15c
Except in Extreme West

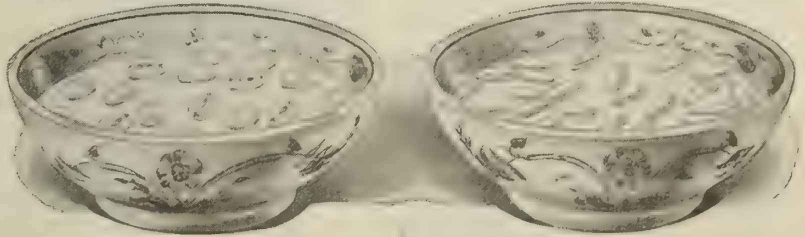
Millions of Explosions

Within each Puffed Grain have occurred at least a hundred million explosions. Every food granule has been blasted to pieces, by turning the moisture within it to steam.

Thus the countless cells are created. Thus digestion is made easy. And thus comes the nutty flavor.

This is Prof. Anderson's process for making whole-grain foods wholly digestible. But the foods are so fascinating—so dainty, crisp and melting—that one forgets the scientific side.

Don't let these summer days go by without having Puffed Grains on your table. Order them now—a package of each—and surprise your folks tomorrow.



Served like crackers in bowls of milk

The Quaker Oats Company
Sole Makers

(433)

by religious ceremony, the importunity of outcast divorcee candidates for remarriage, especially from the Episcopal Church, at the doors of the clergy of other denominations has become very noticeable.

Just recently at a wedding of a divorced Baltimore woman of social prominence, a member of the Episcopal Church, a Presbyterian minister from a neighboring city was imported to perform the ceremony. No local minister would have risked his reputation on it, if, perchance, his conscience had offered a loophole. Because of this haphazard way in which the Presbyterian minister is left to judge each case for himself, we stand in grave danger of having the Presbyterian Church become the Gretna Green for Episcopal divorce marriages.

Would it not be an important step forward and in keeping with our church order, if our presbyteries required their members to refer all requests to marry divorced persons to their judicial commissions, and if these commissions were required to review the court decrees and deliver opinions as to whether or not our church law permits remarriage in specific cases? Besides being a valuable safeguard of the high ideal of marriage for which our denomination stands, it would save many a young minister, entering upon his work with no clear plan of procedure, from serious embarrassment.

JOHN A. NESBITT.

There, Now!

As a member of the Presbyterian Church and subscriber of your paper, I wish to protest most emphatically against your treatment and the cowardly attacks that have been made by your paper on the character of "Pastor" Russell.

Before going any further I would like to say that I always notice that it is the man you attack, and not the doctrine. Of course the reason is very clear. You dare not stand up and attack the doctrine, for you know it is the Truth, and inasmuch as the Truth hurts, you feel bound to attack the character of the man instead.

Further than this, let me say that "Pastor" Russell is not trying to smuggle his literature into the churches of today; he don't need to, because the members of the various churches of today, feeling dissatisfied with the doctrine that is being forced down their throats, are reaching up for the Truth.

There is nothing whatever in your last editorial that would reflect on "Pastor" Russell's character or on any man's character. He has a perfect right to receive the mail where he pleases, and the very fact that there is a line on the door proves conclusively that he is actting fair and above board, something that cannot be said of the Presbyterians of today.

Furthermore, I dare you to print this letter in the next issue of The Continent.

DAVID M. PETTIGREW.

Boy Scouts and Sunday Observance

The organization of large numbers of boys into Boy Scouts has met with very general approval from all who have watched the progress of the movement. It seems to provide a satisfactory means for the development of the physical life and of the social instinct of boys. Teaching boys to be watchful of opportunities for doing favors both at home and abroad tends to the cultivation of a wholesome moral life and must react favorably upon the character of our young men.

But some recent events seem to indicate that this movement does not mean in any way to concern itself with the religious interests of boys. There is some reason to fear that this organization with its out-of-doors attractions may divert the attention of boys from church and Sunday school and increase the difficulties of those who are interested in the religious education of the young. That this is something more than a surmise is evidenced by the fact that on a recent Sunday afternoon in Brooklyn some 2,000 Boy Scouts assembled in one of the largest armories of the city to give an exhibition of their skill before a large company of spectators.

A large company also assembled on the afternoon of Memorial Sunday to participate in the annual parade in Prospect park. While such a parade may have some value in cultivating a patriotic spirit, it must tend to impair the distinctive character of Sunday as a religious day. If we care to guard our young people from the many insidious influences that tend to rob the Sabbath of its true value, we shall do well to discourage all such invasions of its sanctity.

F. W. OSBORN.

Ways of Working

Best Sunday School Picnics

The school that doesn't have a picnic of some sort during the summer thinks itself abused unless the children come from homes where picnics are common. The nature of the outing for the children during the summer depends largely on the sort of opportunities they usually have for similar pleasures. Children from a mission school in the heart of a city will enjoy the country—in fact all children like to go to some place they have not seen before. It is important that plans for amusement during the picnic are worked out beforehand and some responsible person intrusted with the details of particular pieces of work. To arrive at the picnic grounds without sugar for the lemonade is as bad as to be without the rope for a tug of war.

Giving everybody something to do is the secret of a good picnic as of good church work generally. The games planned should be such as to admit a large number of players. Getting backward people into action will increase their fun and make them think more of the Sunday school.

Summer Work by Men of One City

The little city of Fort Morgan, Colo., is situated in an irrigated belt in the Platte valley. Beyond the irrigated farms the dry land farms begin. These dry land claims have been taken up by earnest people, who are trying their best to win a home for themselves, but as always in the settlement and development of any new country they have had to endure many hardships and suffer many financial reverses. These good people, being unable to sustain churches themselves, needed outside help, and here is where the men of Fort Morgan found their opportunity for service.

Last summer the men's Bible class union, representing all of the English-speaking Protestant churches, authorized a committee to plan a summer evangelistic campaign, pledging themselves to help in this county work. A general schedule was made, covering appointments in nearly every part of the county, and teams were formed of the laymen and ministers in town, automobiles were voluntarily provided, and on every Sunday of the summer several teams went out into the country, holding services, organizing Sunday schools and trying to uplift every community in the dry land parts of the county.

In the city union evening services were held in the city park, with large chorus choirs to lead in the singing. Many men and women were touched and reached, who usually never darken the door of a church building. So enthusiastic were the men over the results of this work that an even more extensive campaign is planned for this summer.

Boys and Girls Work

A boys' club of Harbor Springs (Mich.) church takes care of the church lawn. A girls' club recently furnished the grass seed for an addition to the lawn. At the same church four owners of automobiles have arranged to take the pastor, Rev. A. van der Meer, regularly to a church now vacant to conduct services.

Whole Board Composed of Women

More women trustees are being reported following the accounts of women who have served in New Jersey, New York, California and Minnesota. A board in Pueblo Presbytery is composed wholly of women, and the congregation has recently built a new church, the women conducting all the negotiations. Lima (Ind.) church had as a member of the trustees Miss Jane P. Williams for many years and later her sister, Miss Katherine R. Williams, was elected and still holds office. It is said that the church never had more effective members than these sisters.

"Pension Horses! Why Not Preachers?"

[Title to an article in a Western Newspaper]

"Jack" and "Tom" had outlived their usefulness as most valued members of the City Fire Department. Night and day for years and years, in the dead of winter and in the heat of summer, they had jumped into their harness at the sound of the gong and with fleet-footed courage and power they had galloped to fire after fire and had saved the city, of which they were dumb but heroic servants, thousands and thousands of dollars, and many precious lives.

What shall be done with these old veterans of many a fire? was the question.

SHOOT THEM! said some cold-blooded man. Fortunately the City Council was too humane to do that.

SELL THEM! said another adviser, with an eye to business. But who would want to buy old fire horses, unless it would be someone who wanted to kill them for their hoofs and hide?

STARVE THEM, by turning them out to look after themselves, seemed about the only other alternative, until some man devised a happy plan which solved all the difficulties. It was this—

PENSION THEM! So the City Council voted a pension to "Jack" and "Tom" and they have all they want to eat—oats and corn and hay—and all they want to drink, which sensibly is just water, and all the raiment and shelter they need.

"Pension Horses! Why Not Preachers?" was the title of a recent article in a great Western newspaper. Why not? The preacher answers the gong by day and by night. He is at the call of distress and want. His telephone rings at all hours. He saves his community more than money. When he is disabled so that he cannot longer serve the people acceptably, what shall be done with him?

It is true that cold-blooded men have not dared to say "SHOOT HIM!" and the man with his eye to business refrains from saying "SELL HIM!" for who would buy a worn out preacher? He could hardly run a treadmill to good advantage. STARVE HIM, seems to be the easy way of escape for the Church.

Out of over nine thousand Presbyterian Churches last year, over four thousand voted to "STARVE HIM" by failing to give one red cent to his relief and sustentation.

Why not pension the disabled preacher?

If you believe in pensioning the preacher, consult your pastor, or address,

Ministerial Relief and Sustentation
WILLIAM HIRAM FOULKES, General Secretary
507 Witherspoon Building - - - Philadelphia, Pa.

The Proposed Presbyterian Federation

BY THORNTON WHALING, President Columbia (S. C.) Theological Seminary

The most far-reaching and historic action presented to any of the Presbyterian Assemblies in Atlanta was embodied in the report of a special committee on closer relations made to the Southern Assembly on the last day of the meeting, and referred to the succeeding Assembly which convenes in May, 1914, at Kansas City, Mo. That report is as follows: "In response to the communication from the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, your select committee on closer relations with other ecclesiastical bodies would recommend:

"1. That an ad interim committee be appointed to confer with similar committees (if appointed) from other Reformed churches holding the Presbyterian system in this country on closer relations among these churches.

"2. That the Assembly instruct its committee to propose to the conference a plan for closer relations through a federal congress consisting of lower and upper houses; the churches of the federation to have representation in the lower house on the basis of the number of communicants, and to have equal representation in the upper house, the concurrence of the two houses being necessary for authoritative action in such matters as may be referred to the federal council."

This notable proposal is worth the calm study and careful consideration of all the Presbyterian and Reformed churches of our country.

1. If the plan suggested be adopted, it will cure the standing scandal of American Presbyterianism. While there is not yet sufficient agreement to justify organic union, there is not sufficient divergence to justify the division of our Presbyterianism into a dozen or more competing sects. The history of the Presbyterian and Reformed churches in the United States shows more than one attempt to find some practicable basis of unity, but there never has been before such a time as confronts us today when the ideal of unity was more insistent, when the need of cooperation was more urgent, when the barriers which divide us were less conspicuous and when the vision and wisdom of ecclesiastical leaders seemed more adequate to deal with the largest issue now presented to all the communions of our Presbyterian and Reformed faith. Under divine guidance the schisms which cut into fragments our common Presbyterianism may all be happily healed.

2. The plan proposed is capable of easy explanation. The analogies of our federal civil government have made us all familiar with its processes and methods. As association and experience deepen our confidence in each other as to soundness in doctrine and genuineness as Presbyterians, the powers of the federal congress can be enlarged or modified to suit our growing appreciation of the powers which are needed to make it the efficient organ of our common life.

3. The smaller and weaker churches will be protected against encroachments by the easy combinations of policy which they could make with each other in the upper house of the federal congress. Through the masterly device of two chambers, recognized everywhere as one of the most remarkable contributions to safe government made in the whole history of the world, the smallest church in the federation would be clothed with very effective powers and a group of such small churches by combining would easily possess well nigh decisive power in the upper chamber. It is easily evident that no plan can be created which will give to all the churches ampler securities against unsafe dominance by bald numerical majorities.

4. The generosity and confidence of the larger ecclesiastical bodies, particularly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., can be shown by the adoption of this plan. The terms which define the powers of the federal congress may be so drawn that no property or other rights of any of the constituent bodies could be jeopardized and perhaps the era may soon dawn when Presbyterians discover that they can actually trust one another without danger. The orthodoxy and conservatism and intense spirituality of the smaller bodies would be the guaranty that they would not run away with the upper house, while the overwhelming numbers of a larger body would guarantee that the more influential lower house could only do what it consented to have done.

5. This plan is the only one which at present is in the field of practical ecclesiastics. The left wing in all the churches wants union, the right wing wishes to be left alone, the center is willing to move, but move slowly. The left wing will take this measure, because it can get nothing else; the right wing had better take it or it will get something worse; while the real center will move forward along the path of this plan confident of being guided aright today and leaving to the future and to the great Head of the church the decision as to what further steps may be taken at a later day.

BOTH GAINED

Man and Wife Fatten on Grape-Nuts

The notion that meat is necessary for real strength and the foundation of solid flesh is now no longer as prevalent as formerly.

Excessive meat eaters are usually sluggish a part of the time because they are not able to fully digest their food, and the undigested portion is changed into what is practically a kind of poison that acts upon the blood and nerves, thus getting all through the system.

"I was a heavy meat eater," writes an Illinois man, "and up to two years ago was in very poor health. I suffered with indigestion so that I only weighed ninety-five pounds.

"Then I heard about Grape-Nuts food and decided to try it. My wife laughed at me at first, but when I gained to 125 pounds and felt so fine, she thought she would eat Grape-Nuts too. Now she is fat and well and has gained forty pounds. We never have indigestion any more and seldom feel the desire for meat.

"A neighbor of ours, 68 years old, was troubled with indigestion for years, and was a heavy meat eater. Now, since he has been eating Grape-Nuts regularly, he says he is well and never has indigestion.

"I could name a lot of persons who have rid themselves of indigestion by changing from a heavy meat diet to Grape-Nuts." "There's a Reason." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true and full of human interest.

Nearly 94 and Still Preaching

Dr. David Tully

To few men is permitted such a long and serviceable life for the Master as to David Tully, D. D., of Media, Pa. He is nearing the close of his ninety-fourth year. He preaches every Sunday to a mission church he is nurturing at Highland Park and attends regularly the Monday morning ministers' meeting in Philadelphia. On Sunday, June 8, he preached the sermon at the dedication of Tully Memorial church, Sharon Hill, which he was instrumental in organizing and nurturing to self-support when he retired. He is the oldest living graduate of Princeton Theological Seminary and the "grand old man" of Chester Presbytery. It was highly appropriate and deserved that the new church at Sharon Hill, a valuable plant, should be named for him, although he protested against it. He is pastor emeritus of Media church

Gail Borden
EAGLE
BRAND
CONDENSED
MILK
THE ORIGINAL
The Best for Infant Feeding.
Send for Baby Book
BORDEN'S CONDENSED MILK CO., New York

Mennen's the Pioneer
Borated Talcum

Year after year, millions of babies are rubbed with Mennen's.
It is the original talcum, the oldest and safest on the market—the one most in demand, preferred by doctors and nurses for its known purity.
It prevents and relieves chafing, prickly heat, rash—all skin discomforts to which babies are subject.
On sale everywhere 25c or by mail postpaid

Mennen's Borated Talcum Toilet Powder
TRADE MARK
Sample postpaid for 4 cents
Gerhard Mennen Co., Newark, N. J.

The Way to Choose a School Is By Personal Observation

LAKE FOREST ACADEMY is located twenty-eight miles north of Chicago on the Chicago and Milwaukee Electric, the Chicago and Northwestern railroad and Sheridan Road, the automobile highway.

LAKE FOREST ACADEMY just commemorated its fifty-first Commencement. It has a record of fifty-five years of accomplishment. You will be interested in what this school has to offer.

If you cannot make a personal visit send for finely illustrated booklets to

ADDRESS HEADMASTER
Box I
LAKE FOREST, ILLINOIS

W. W. Kimball Company
CHICAGO, ILL.
Builders of PIPE ORGANS of TWO MANUALS or Larger
Kimball Pipe Organs are numbered among the world's greatest organs. Plans, Estimates, etc., furnished on application.

The Trade Mark "1847 Rogers Bros."
on Spoons, Etc., Is the Stamp of Quality

Readers will confer a favor on the publishers of The Continent by mentioning this paper when answering advertisements.

Helpful Talks on Investments

No Better Investment than a Farm Mortgage

BEVERLY H. BONFOEY

President Bonfoey Loan and Investment Company

SEASON and opportunity play important parts in investment. There are times—for example, such as have prevailed for the past six months—when high-class bonds are cheap; there are occasions, too, when standard stocks are unusually low. These provide the bargain opportunities for the investor, but many people believe that such opportunities and seasons apply only to stocks and bonds. As a matter of fact, they apply to practically all forms of investment; and for this reason it seems an opportune moment to call attention to farm mortgages, which are, when well selected, one of the safest mediums for the employment of savings or other funds. At the time this article is written the farm mortgage market is more widely accessible to the average investor than it has been for several years.

B. H. Bonfoey

One reason for this is the fact that the great life insurance companies, which have until now been the heaviest investors in farm mortgages, are, in the main, temporarily out of the field. This is not because they have lost faith in farm mortgages but simply because previous engagements for such mortgages are using up all their present available mortgage funds. Another reason is that the western farmer has been buying more land. Not all of this is speculation, either; for much of the newly acquired land, which makes the present mortgage crop possible, is in good tillable regions and is bought for the farmer's son.

It would be difficult to find a better security than a productive and prosperous farm. Land is the backbone of the world's wealth. Good land cannot shrink; it cannot be moved away; only neglect can impair it and it is more stable than stocks in time of panic and depression. The total of the increase in the value of our farms is like a wonder story. From 1900 to 1905 the value of our farm land increased by $6,130,773,076. The total value of our farms, including the buildings upon them, is more than $22,000,000,000.

Here, then, is real, tangible security. The problem that the investor confronts is to get the right kind of land behind the mortgage he buys. Though local conditions, of course, enter into this selection, the farm should meet the following general requirements.

1. The soil should be good.
2. The farm should be located within reasonable distance of a railroad, for transportation means accessibility to the markets.
3. It must be located in that section of the United States where the rainfall, as shown by government reports covering a long period of years, is sufficient to mature the average crop any given year.

The amount of money loaned on any kind of farm is a very important consideration. It is always best to have a good leeway—that is, a safe margin between the value of the property and the amount loaned. One point to be remembered in this connection—and it is a good one to keep in mind in any kind of mortgage transaction—is never to take the borrower's valuation of his property. The appraisal must be made by an outside and independent person. Experience has shown that it is never wise to lend more than 50 per cent of the farm valuation, exclusive of the value of the buildings on it.

In locating the ideal farm mortgage one must never take anything for granted. Precedent and vicinity count for nothing. Take two counties in a western state. In one of them the farms may be prosperous and the mortgages on them very valuable, and yet almost next door, in an adjacent county, there may be bad crops and no prosperity. Mortgages on these farms would scarcely be good investments. Climatic conditions often vary within a short distance and the character of the soil frequently changes within a very few miles. Thus it is evident that, in making the choice of a mortgage, as in any other kind of investment, the utmost caution is necessary and, what is even more important, a thorough investigation. Such investigation is always made by a reliable mortgage house.

What might be called the human side of farm mortgage investment is well worth explaining. A farm mortgage is always more desirable when the farmer who borrows is sober, industrious and conscientious. The loan is more valuable, too, when the proceeds are employed in upbuilding the farm or for the purchase of machinery that adds to its productiveness. This naturally makes the security behind the mortgage more valuable.

The average farm mortgage runs for five years, but many of them are renewed once and often twice. As a rule it may be said that the average life of the American farm mortgage is twelve years.

Now comes the highly important subject of yield. As in other forms of investment, this has undergone a change, because the mortgage map has undergone a change—prosperity has come to agricultural regions that once yielded but precarious livings. The farmer who formerly paid 8 or 10 per cent for money now pays considerably less. The very prosperous farmer who wants to borrow is like the successful railroad or corporation that goes into the market for funds; he does not have to pay a very high rate. There are farmers in Iowa, Illinois and Missouri who pay only 5 per cent on money loaned on their farms; yet their brethren in some parts of the west pay much more. Hence it is plain that there must be some variance in the returns on farm mortgages.

When one goes into the subject one finds that the higher the rate of interest the larger is the risk. This is the fundamental rule in all investment. The average return on a well-selected and productive farm is from 5½ to 6 per cent. The life insurance companies have averaged from 5 to 5½ per cent. They deal in large sums. The smaller the amount of the mortgage the more the borrower has to pay for it.

But how is the average investor to get the benefits of farm mortgage investment? He cannot personally afford to go to Kansas, Illinois, Missouri or Oklahoma to look over the field. He must buy it through some agency. Therefore this agency must be seasoned, proved and absolutely trustworthy. Much of the stability of farm mortgage investment depends

Farm Mortgages

We handle a special line of Farm Mortgages

These securities represent our selection from the offerings of the most conservative farm mortgage companies in the country.

We have personally investigated these companies and their securities.

No investment is safer than a sound farm mortgage and we place our experience at your disposal.

Farm Mortgages purchased through us are absolutely safe, and will return you

5 1-2% to 7% Net

ALL TITLES GUARANTEED

All papers covering the loan delivered to your bank for inspection, to be paid for upon acceptance.

Write for our special list of CHOICE FARM MORTGAGE LOANS.

A. W. KNAPP & CO.

526 Bank Chambers, :: Detroit, Mich.

Selected FARM LOANS

I offer only First Mortgage Farm Loans made by thoroughly reliable firms who have stood the Test of Time. I diversify as to climate, rate and crop yield. Interest and principal collected free.

Ask for Circular No. 101

G·F·CARSON

717 JEFFERSON BUILDING, PEORIA, ILLINOIS.

High Grade Farm Loans

Oklahoma Farm Mortgage Co., Oklahoma City U. S. A.

Our Mortgages Are Purchased by 8 Life Insurance Companies

Because They Meet the Three Important Conditions for the Satisfactory Investment—SAFETY, GOOD RATE AND PERFECT CONVENIENCE

Safety—Protected by highly improved real estate, in value never less than double the amount of loan, and in most cases largely exceeding this.

Rate 6% to 7%—We net the investor the excellent interest return of six to seven per cent, depending on the amount of loan, length of time, etc.

Convenience—Our mortgages cause absolutely no trouble or worry to the investor. We assume all responsibility, handling all details—collecting interest and principal and remitting in New York Exchange without cost. Our mortgages make a splendid investment not only for the large but the small investor. They are ideal for the minister's savings, for the widow, and for religious, educational, trust and other business institutions.

Our Experience—We have had many years' experience (over 20 years) in the placing of Real Estate Loans, and have always satisfied our clients in every particular. Not a loss to a single investor. We operate in the famous Black Waxy Belt of North Central Texas, which offers unusually desirable opportunities for real estate loans. We handle first liens only, secured by rich, highly developed farm lands or highly improved, income-producing city property. Always personally inspect security and never advance more than 50% of our own valuation.

Investigation Desired—We invite the fullest investigation of our personal character, financial standing and methods. We shall be pleased to furnish you both bank and clientele references in Fort Worth, St. Louis, Chicago, New York and other cities if desired.

If you have $500 and up available for investment write to us for information about the high-class mortgages which we have on hand ready for delivery. Send today for our list.

Address R. B. BISHOP, Vice-President and General Manager
Fort Worth National Bank Building

Reynolds Mortgage Co., FORT WORTH, TEXAS

upon the person or persons through whom the business is transacted.

One advantage of buying the mortgage is that you get with it the deed of trust or mortgage to the property and the abstract showing the title. Accompanying the mortgage is usually a statement made by the borrower in which he sets forth the valuation of the property, its location, output, improvements and, in fact, all necessary information about it.

For the investor who wants immunity from the fluctuations of the stock market and freedom from the uncertainties of corporate life the farm mortgage offers a splendid opportunity. He will have an unshakable security behind his money; but he will have this only when he makes his investment through a reputable, tried agency that has ample facilities for thorough investigation.

"The real estate mortgage," as Kellogg says, "has nothing to claim by way of affording excitement. It is a cool, calculating, serious investment proposition. It fits superbly the rational investor, serving to educate and train him in lines of excellency of judgment and conservatism. It refuses to be made a vehicle for the maddening speculation and travels strictly on its merits. It is a slow but certain plodder, declining to suffer any disturbance because of the speculator's clamoring. It invites a fine discrimination in its selection, and silently, without ostentation, performs the duty expected of it. It is a double benefactor, aiding its giver in the accumulation of further wealth and its owner in the realization of a sure and reasonable income. It respectfully declines to be gored by the bulls or chewed up by the bears of maddening speculation. It furnishes no red fire for the crazy promoter. Blessed is the man that hath a lot of the right kind of them."

Why Kansas Is a Leading Mortgage Field

C. F. PETTYJOHN
Of J. L. Pettyjohn and Company

KANSAS is a state practically 200 miles wide and 400 miles long, and to deal with it from the standpoint of mortgage investment I am going to eliminate the western third of the state, as it is not recognized by conservative mortgage bankers as being in the same class with the eastern part of the state.

C. F. Pettyjohn

The northeastern part of Kansas has been settled more than sixty years, which has given ample time for the study of conditions, so that now there is no question as to what crops are best for the soil. And this is a very essential thing, for the price of land is getting so high that a farmer has to study and try different methods, just as the business man does in managing his business. This is done a great deal more in the older counties than in the newer ones. Then, the class of farmers living in this section are of the highest type, which is one of the all important features of a good farm mortgage.

It is generally conceded that there is as much good literature in the way of magazines and farm journals coming through the mail to Kansas farmers as go to any other part of the world, so they are intelligent and thorough business men, which makes it possible for them to get better results from the soil than can those who are ignorant of the quality of the land and its possibilities.

Another feature in making desirable territory for the investment of money on farm lands is experience—experience of years. I feel that one or two years will not tell what the country will do in this respect, as nature has not seen fit to divide the rainfall evenly in any one section so that the land will get the same amount of water each year, and one familiar with this western country knows that this varies and that it is possible to enter a field where for a few years conditions have been favorable and the following two or three be very unfavorable. In other words, there are locations where climate goes to the extreme. This, however, is found less true in latitudes where corn is successfully grown, such as in eastern Kansas. In the list of all farm products corn is classed as king, producing more wealth to those sections of country where grown than any other farm product. Illinois and Iowa are regarded as the greatest corn states, yet the eastern one-third of Kansas alone produces as great a corn yield as Iowa or Illinois, and always will because its location is below the early frost line that endangers the corn states farther north. It is possible also always to grow the best clover and timothy, the greatest soil builder for corn growing.

The farmers of eastern Kansas, through the influences of agricultural colleges, are beginning also to grow a large amount of alfalfa, not only on the bottom land but upon the rich, strong upland. Alfalfa is a farm product that of itself will make any country rich, so the wealth of Kansas comes from corn, wheat, clover and alfalfa. These products will produce the finest cattle, horses, mules and hogs that go to market, and owing to mild winters, live stock needs less feed, thereby giving the farmers larger profits. These things better enable Kansas farmers to meet their obligations. Eastern individuals and bankers seek the fields that have given them the best results. For these reasons Kansas has become one of the leading mortgage fields.

About Texas Farm Mortgages

BY DAVID T. BOMAR
Of Broad and Bomar

THE DESIRABILITY of Texas farm mortgages as an investment depends entirely on the degree of intelligence, experience and integrity with which they are made.

The Texas field is second to none as a place to make farm mortgages, but experience and observation teach that the superiority of the field is not the most important factor that enters into the safety of the investment. The concurrence of a number of things that contribute to the attractiveness of the mortgage is of the greatest importance, viz., the inspection of the security, the use to which the money is to be put and the character and surroundings of the borrower, all of which have much to do with the ultimate repayment of the loan. To illustrate, I would prefer lending to an experienced farmer, living on his farm, 50 per cent of its value, to be used in paying off a purchase money note or in making required improvements, than to lend on the same land 35 per cent to a man who does not reside upon the land but is dependent on others to cultivate and use the land in such a way as to enable him to repay the debt.

Farm loans should never be made to any borrower where the lender does not believe that the loan will ultimately be repaid without foreclosure, even though he believes the security amply sufficient to pay the loan in case of foreclosure. The best test of whether or not these precautions have been exercised to such an extent as fully to protect the owner of the mortgage is to purchase the mortgage from experienced, seasoned people, who have a general knowledge of the country and character of the people, and who make the loans, in the first instance, with their own funds and guarantee their ultimate payment.

Much has been said about Texas homestead laws as being a detriment to the farm mortgage business. Under the constitution and laws of Texas a rural homestead consists of 200 acres and the head of the family has no power to create on the homestead a mortgage for any purpose other than to take up an existing purchase money lien or to make improvements thereon. Although this inhibition sometimes operates as a detriment to inexperienced persons engaged in the business, it is in no respect a detriment to experienced dealers in farm loans because no experienced dealer will, under any circumstances, make a loan on a homestead, except to take up and extend an existing

6%

July Investments to Net 6 Per Cent.

FUNDS available at this time should be invested to secure safety and the highest consistent rate of interest.

A-R-E Six's, the 10-year Gold Bonds of the American Real Estate Company, provide this combination. They are based on the extensive ownership of New York real estate, and have paid 6% for more than a quarter of a century, returning to investors more than $11,000,000 in principal and interest.

New York City real estate has increased steadily in value for nearly three centuries and creates millions of new wealth every year. The path of rising values has always extended northward, as the City grew and its transportation lines were built in that direction.

This Company's holdings are located along rapid transit lines, in the direct path of the City's growth, and in the extension of its business it offers to investors its 6% Gold Bonds, in these two convenient forms:

6% Coupon Bonds
For those who wish to invest $100, $500, $1000 or more for immediate income. Offered at par. Interest payable semi-annually by coupons.

6% Accumulative Bonds
For those who wish to save and invest systematically a part of their income. These Bonds are purchasable by annual instalments of $25 or more, which earn 6% compounded annually, and mature $1000 or more at a given time.

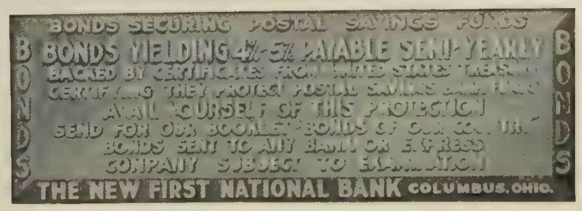
Printed matter and map of New York City, fully explaining these Bonds and the business on which they are based, will be sent on request.

American Real Estate Company
Founded 1888. Assets $27,202,824.19
Capital and Surplus $2,188,805.50
527 Fifth Ave. Room 642 New York

6 and % Sure 7

When you purchase from us a mortgage on Improved Georgia City or Farm Property you take as little chance as is humanly possible. You receive from 6 to 7 per cent and you can be sure of receiving it regularly. Our property appraisals are the work of successful experts. We are extremely careful in our estimates of the moral hazards. We protect your principal with ample security. Let us send you our list of loans and interesting literature. Address "Dept. F."
Sessions Loan & Trust Co., Marietta, Ga.

The safest investments from the viewpoints of
INCOME and SECURITY
are carefully selected
REAL ESTATE MORTGAGES
When made and guaranteed by experienced and financially responsible persons and corporations there is nothing better. For years we have made such loans in one of the best agricultural districts in America. Full information on request.
THE JEFFERSON TRUST COMPANY
McAlester, Oklahoma



4 Per Cent

BONDS SECURING POSTAL SAVINGS FUNDS
BONDS YIELDING 4%-5% PAYABLE SEMI-YEARLY
BACKED BY CERTIFICATES FROM UNITED STATES TREAS[illegible]
[illegible] THEY PROTECT POSTAL SAVINGS [illegible]
AVAIL YOURSELF OF THIS PROTECTION
SEND FOR OUR BOOKLET "BONDS OF OUR [illegible]"
BONDS SENT TO ANY BANK OR EXPRESS
COMPANY SUBJECT TO EXAMINATION
THE NEW FIRST NATIONAL BANK COLUMBUS, OHIO.

5 Per Cent

lien thereon, or to make improvements thereon for which a mechanics' lien can be created.

No corporation or firm engaged in the farm loan business is either any stronger or weaker than its management, and institutions engaged in this business that confine themselves to the making of legitimate loans, hedged about with all of the precautions necessary to the success of any well regulated business, need have no fear of ultimate failure. On the other hand, institutions engaged in such business which are anxious for large profits, and which in response to demands that come to every dealer make loans at high rates to speculators, or other persons not actually occupying the land, will ultimately, in times of depression, have trouble.

The South as a Desirable Mortgage Field

BY MOULTRIE M. SESSIONS

President Sessions Loan and Trust Company

THE QUESTION with the average investor today, seeking both security and fair return, is not "Shall I buy a farm mortgage?" It is "Where can I get the best farm mortgage, security and interest rate considered?"

I believe there is no safer field in the world today for investment in mortgages on farm lands than the South; and I know there is no section of the country where so certain a security combines with so satisfactory an interest rate.

Moultrie M. Sessions

The farmers of Geogia and the South are not indiscriminate borrowers; whenever they make a loan there is a good business reason for it. They are today in better shape financially than they have ever been, and while farm capital has doubled, farm mortgages have really diminished. When the Georgia farmer borrows money he does it to make an investment. A few years ago when mules were $75 to $100 and farm machinery was scarce the investment on the farm was far less than it is today; now the up-to-date farmer must not only have the latest and best farming machinery, but he must pay $200 to $300 for mules. He may want to pay up with a long time loan a balance due on his farm; he may want to expand and take on additional acreage, thereby increasing his income. There are many reasons that make the farm loan not only a convenience but a necessity if the farmer is to make progress and prosper.

Farm loans are made in the South upon a basis of 25 to 50 per cent of the appraised market valuation; and the rate is 6 and 7 per cent, depending upon the amount of the loan, compared to 5 and 6 per cent in other sections and 3 and 4 per cent on savings. Farm loans, mortgage or otherwise, made by nonresidents are not taxable in Georgia.

The value of a loan depends largely upon the stability and enhancement of the security. In 1900 the approximate investment in farm lands and improvements in the South was $5,262,279,000; in 1910 it was $10,961,865,000, an increase of 108.3 per cent, compared with an increase of 99.8 per cent in the entire United States. Increase in agricultural production was in similar ratio.

In the same ten-year period the value of Georgia's farm lands increased from $183,370,120 to approximately $450,000,000, not including live stock. Georgia farm lands which sold ten years ago at $10 and $25 an acre today readily bring on the market from $20 to $75, the same class of land which sells in the West for $100 to $200 an acre.

It is apparent from this rate of increase that the investor who buys a five-year first mortgage on a Georgia farm has a security worth from 25 to 50 per cent more, upon most conservative estimate, by the time the loan reaches maturity. The situation here is thus materially different from what it is in those sections where land values are already so high that appreciation is comparatively slow.

Development of natural resources in the South is still far behind that of eastern and central northern states. But the ratio of progress has increased, and this means a more rapid increase in general wealth than in other sections. It has been shown that with the same rate of progress made since 1880 the wealth of the South, now $28,000,000,000, in 1944 will reach the aggregate of $87,000,000,000, an increase of $2,000,000,000 a year. This is more readily understood when it is known that the South's cotton crop for the last thirty-three years was actually sold for over $5,000,000,000 more than the world's entire production of gold and silver for the same period. The South's cotton mills today consume 2,600,000 bales annually, as much as all the other mills in the United States put together; and the South is now spending $20,000,000 in new cotton mills.

Georgia's returned tax values are $850,000,000, an increase of more than $400,000,000, or nearly 100 per cent in ten years. This figure represents less than 35 per cent of the actual values in the state. Two-thirds of the 38,000,000 acres are tillable. The state has eight of the nine recognized grades of climate and grows sugar cane or barley with equal facility. The population, which increased 20 per cent in ten years, is adding every year to land values. Less than 2 per cent of the people are foreign born. Georgia cut a billion feet of timber last year. The annual mineral production is worth $6,000,000. Annual factory products exceed the total investment of $225,000,000 in factories. With $580,000,000 farm capitalization, including all features, Georgia's annual agricultural production is $269,220,000; while with nearly $2,000,000,000 farm capital Ohio's production is $388,485,000. With the same proportionate production to capital as Georgia, Ohio should make annual crops worth $950,000,000.

Is it any wonder that the eyes of the northern and eastern investors are turning toward the South? Is it any wonder that the large insurance companies of the East are coming here to lend large sums of their money on farms?

Reasons for Popularity of Oklahoma Mortgage

BY E. S. ELLIS

Vice-President Jefferson Trust Company

THAT the Oklahoma mortgage is especially popular is, we believe, based on sound economic reasons. This may be in part explained by the fact that Oklahoma is a new country, and as usual under such conditions there is a pressing need of money to help develop and improve, consequently there are more mortgages offered for smaller sums with higher interest rate than are now offered in the older states of Kansas, Missouri and Iowa. Today Oklahoma offers the same class of securities which were offered by these older states twenty-five years ago, but not now available there. This in a general way explains the reason and means merely that this is Oklahoma's day.

E. S. Ellis

But there are other reasons which lead us to believe that if opened to settlement contemporaneous with the states named Oklahoma would still be in the lead, that its securities would have the first call, as they have today.

Oklahoma has a marked advantage in its geographical location, giving it a very mild, equable climate, with long growing seasons, with an ample annual rain fall evenly distributed throughout the growing season. Plowing and other agricultural pursuits can be carried on every month in the year. It is a very healthful climate for man and beast, with enough winter to kill disease germs, without the rigors of the northern winters. Live stock is raised at a minimum of cost. The summers are pleasant—nights ideal for sleeping.

Oklahoma is especially favored with a large percentage of agricultural lands, which are still cheap compared with values in surrounding states. Less than one-half is in cultivation, but it is being improved as fast as men and money can do it. Values, too, are steadily increasing as the new country is opened up, thus making it certain that the margin of security back of mortgages made today will be wider five

The Quality Investment

The firm of J. L. Pettyjohn & Co. stands for the Quality Investment only—the investment that is bound to return both the investor's capital and interest.

The Quality Investment guarantees a peaceful mind—less profit, but a certainty that your money will be affected neither by panic, nor catastrophe, nor mismanagement.

This company deals in First Mortgages placed on highly improved farm lands in Eastern Kansas—a territory whose productiveness and consistency of crop yield have been tested throughout a period of many years.

We have operated in this one field for 35 years and have loaned over $25,000,000. We have confined our loans to this territory, because here we knew the investor was assured safety for his money.

We shall be pleased to tell you about our "Quality Investments." Best financial and clientele references.

WE GUARANTEE OUR MORTGAGES.

Address

J. L. PETTYJOHN & COMPANY
OLATHE, :: KANSAS

7% Atlanta 7%

Here are some of the features that make our First Mortgage Loans attractive.

1. 25 years experience without the loss of a penny.
2. Real Estate worth over two for one.
3. Abstract by Attorney representing YOU, showing a clear title.
4. Note with Coupons attached.
5. A Georgia Loan Deed.
6. Fire Insurance for at least the amount of the Loan, assigned as additional security.
7. A rental value that would more than carry the Loan under adverse circumstances.

Write for booklet.

REALTY TRUST COMPANY
ATLANTA, GEORGIA
Capital $600,000.00 - Surplus $400,000.00

Farm Mortgages As An Investment

WRITE to any leading banker or financial editor about the merits of well placed first farm mortgages.

They yield a higher rate of interest than many other forms of investment. They are absolutely dependable.

This is nowhere more true than in South Dakota, a fertile and prosperous section of the northwest. Returns average 5½ and 6%.

We have over $3,300,000 active loans on our books and a record of never having had an investor lose a dollar.

Nor have we ever been obliged to foreclose a first farm mortgage. No waiting for interest or principal.

Write for references and list of offerings.

G. W. HART, Pres., Merchants Bank
BRYANT, SOUTH DAKOTA

to seven years later, when they become due.

Oklahoma soil is rich and productive. It is now in its virgin strength. With the improved methods of agriculture now prevailing under information sent out from state and national agricultural departments and experimental farms, it is reasonable to expect that soils will be conserved and strengthened in Oklahoma instead of impoverished and depleted as in many of the older states where continuous crops and wastefulness were the rule.

Oklahoma produces with profit a wide diversity of crops. This is owing to climate and soil referred to above, in both of which this new commonwealth is so prodigally blessed. Wheat, oats and corn, the staple crops of the North, are grown as successfully as in any northern state, while no southern state excels Oklahoma in growing cotton, kafir, cow peas, peanuts and alfalfa. All fruits and vegetables are also easily raised in Oklahoma.

These are a few of the reasons for the popularity of the Oklahoma mortgage, which, from the viewpoints of income and security, stands at the top.

Twenty years ago in the month of June the writer drove over the counties of Logan, Oklahoma, Canadian and Kingfisher, in central Oklahoma, to see if it was a safe country in which to make mortgage loans. The time had come when the homestead settlers in these four counties could make proof of residence and improvement requisite to acquiring title, prior to which they could not sell nor mortgage their lands. Only here and there had a settler been able, for want of means, to do regular farming, for most of them had gone in without money or teams, but there were enough improved farms to convince the most skeptical of the wonderful fertility of these Oklahoma lands. The doubts he had before seeing were entirely overcome before spending many days there. He reported that it was the best country he had ever examined for mortgage loans or any other business, and he came from his home in Michigan through Illinois, Missouri and Kansas.

It was hard work and took a long time to make the Oklahoma mortgage move, but twenty years has brought the state into the front rank. Another twenty years will show a far greater improvement in material wealth and prosperity in this wonderful commonwealth, as well as a continuous growth in the popularity of the Oklahoma mortgage.

Easy to Buy Mortgages by Mail

BY A. MARTIN KINGKADE

Treasurer Oklahoma Farm Mortgage Company

MUCH has been said as to the desirability of farm mortgages as investments. People have written about their safety and their income. Investors have been advised to buy them. The advice is good, but with it should go some suggestions as to how to buy the right kind.

A. Martin Kingkade

All bonds are not desirable investments, merely because they are bonds. Most of those offered are, but a few are not. The same is true of the farm mortgage. The security behind it and the mortgage house making and recommending it are the essentials. Any investor can and should look into these things for himself, before parting with his money. But how is the average investor, the man in a far-off city, to do this? It is a comparatively easy matter in these days of modern business to look up the standing of a firm or an individual. A prospective investor can write to some bank in the town, or obtain a commercial agency report at a small cost. This will give the financial responsibility of the mortgage house. Find out the general reputation of the concern for honesty and fair dealing in the community. It is hardly possible to do business long without making a reputation of one sort or another.

Throughout the Middle West are mortgage houses, banks and trust companies which have for years made a specialty of handling farm mortgages. These people are well established,

Important Announcement

Realizing that I could serve my clients to better advantage by having my business incorporated and my main office at a point where I could give my personal attention to the greatest volume of business handled through the office, I decided to incorporate under the name of BONFOEY LOAN & INVESTMENT COMPANY. I have been operating in Oklahoma through a branch office, in charge of one of my sons, since 1905. The growth of the business made it advisable to consolidate the Missouri and Oklahoma offices, and accordingly THE BONFOEY LOAN & INVESTMENT COMPANY was incorporated with a hundred thousand dollars capital, fully paid up, with main office in Oklahoma City, Okla. My branch office at Kirksville, Mo., will still be maintained, and my Unionville, Mo., office will be conducted hereafter as a branch. The Missouri business will receive, however, the same careful attention that it has in the past. I have associated with me in this corporation several men of very high standing in Oklahoma and throughout the East.

This business was established by me in Unionville, Mo., in 1879. Since that time (a period of 34 years) I have loaned many thousands of dollars on farms in the Middle West for insurance companies, educational institutions, savings banks and private investors. During all that time no client of mine has ever lost a cent of principal or interest, or taken a foot of land under foreclosure.

I want to thank THE CONTINENT readers for their past business, and to assure them that any future business intrusted to me will have the same prompt and careful attention.

BEVERLY H. BONFOEY.

Farm Mortgages and Real Estate Notes

We offer first FARM MORTGAGES secured by highly improved agricultural lands worth over double the value of the mortgages. Safety of principal and interest are our first consideration. Our REAL ESTATE NOTES are a convenient form of security for the man or woman of small means. Denominations, $200 and up; yield 6 per cent; amply protected by first Farm Mortgages. Write for description in detail.

A Few of Our References: Ex-Governor Herbert S. Hadley, Jefferson City, Mo.; Ex-Governor J. W. Folk, St. Louis, Mo.; Dr. A. Ross Hill, President Missouri University, Columbia, Mo.; Fred O. Elson, Cashier National Bank of Unionville, Unionville, Mo.; S. A. McBurney, Manager of Agencies, Travelers Insurance Co., Hartford, Conn.; George S. Hooker, Watertown, N. Y.

NOTICE—Our Secretary, P. W. Bonfoey, will shortly make an extended trip throughout the East. Drop us a line if you would like to discuss investments with him personally. You place yourself under no obligation by so doing. Write us today.

BONFOEY LOAN AND INVESTMENT CO.
BEVERLY H. BONFOEY, President
OKLAHOMA CITY, - - - OKLAHOMA

Protected Farm Mortgages
NORTH DAKOTA

33 years Residence. 29 years Banking and Negotiating Farm Mortgages.

$3,000,000 SOLD

Without loss of a dollar interest or principal. This experience and moral obligation felt toward my patrons insures your protection.

WALTER L. WILLIAMSON,
Lisbon, North Dakota

6% Farm Mortgages with Government Guarantee that the title is Perfect and that the mortgage is a first mortgage, and this

COMPANY'S GUARANTEE

Against loss by prior liens, unpaid taxes, lapse of insurance, default in interest, or expenses of foreclosure in case of default of principal.

A MORTGAGE INVESTMENT AS CONVENIENT AS A REGISTERED BOND

in convenient Denominations—$500 upwards—and pay 6% interest semi-annually in New York or other par funds. Write us for full particulars. They will interest you, and will imply no obligation, whether you wish to invest or not. Our mortgages have 40 years of successful experience behind them.

ASSOCIATED MORTGAGE INVESTORS (Inc.)
KINGMAN N. ROBINS, Treasurer
Granite Building, Rochester, New York. Western Office, Calgary, Alberta, Can. New York, Boston, Montreal, Toronto.

Investments That Have Stood the Test

Our First Farm Mortgages, netting Six Per Cent collected and remitted free, have stood the test of time. For 30 years we have furnished these investments to the most conservative investors in all parts of the country, and during all of that time no investor has ever lost a dollar, principal or interest, by reason of such investment. When you invest your money in our mortgages you have an investment that has stood the test of time. Below we list a few of our offerings. Send for descriptive pamphlet "C" and complete list.

$1600—6%, No. 3924. The security is a 160 acre farm in McHenry County, N. D., situated convenient to first class markets. Every acre tillable with 85 acres now under plow. The soil is a heavy black loam over clay. Borrower is a Norwegian, lives with his family on the land and works it himself. Good set of buildings worth $1200. We value land without the buildings at $3200. Part of money borrowed is to be used for further improvements.

$1500—6%, No. 3921. Secured by a quarter section in Ward County, N. D. All of the land tillable with 120 acres under plow. The soil is a rich black loam over the usual clay. Buildings worth $1200, land $3500, total valuation $4700. The borrower is a German and this is his home.

$1000—6%, due Dec. 1, 1919. No. 3915. Covers a quarter section in Minnesota, situated within one mile of market. All of the land except possibly 10 acres tillable, although only a small portion under plow at this time. Best kind of soil. Small set of buildings. Value of land and improvements $3500 to $4000. Borrower is a Swede, lives with his family on this land and works it himself.

$2500—6%, due March 1, 1918. No. 3907. Secured by 200 acres in Aitkin County, Minn., located two miles from market in a first class section. All of the land tillable. 140 acres now under plow. Good heavy soil. Improvements consist of house, barn and granary worth $1000 to $1500 Value of land without buildings $6000. Part of money borrowed is to be used for further improvements.

$6500—6%, due Feb. 1, 1919. No. 3864. This is a mortgage on 560 acres in Minnesota, situated within four miles of good town. All of the land tillable. 160 acres under plow. Good soil. Small set of buildings. Value of security $20,000 00. Part of money borrowed is to be used for further improvements.

$1500—6%, due May 1, 1919. No. 3919. Secured by a half section in Sheridan County, Mont., within two miles of market in a well settled section. All of the land tillable with 125 acres now under plow. The borrower is a young German who lives on the land and works it himself. Small set of buildings. Value of land without improvements $5000. Part of money borrowed is to be used for further improvements

Highest References Furnished
Our Mortgages will meet the Requirements of the most conservative investors

E. J. LANDER & CO.
GRAND FORKS, :: N. D.

are morally and financialy responsible and have ample facilities for making and taking care of the investments they offer.

Investigate the securities that are offered. While it would be hard to find a better security than a productive farm in the hands of a prosperous farmer, still one must be sure that this is what he is getting. Though local conditions, of course, enter into the selection, the security should meet the following general requirements: The soil should be productive. The rainfall should be sufficient; government reports give this information. The neighborhood should be well settled; this will bring with it schools, churches, rural telephone lines and daily free mail delivery. The distance to a railroad town should not be too great; a convenient market and trading point adds to the value of the farm. The improvements, such as buildings, fencing, etc., should be sufficient for the farm.

Don't take anything but a first mortgage. There is nothing except taxes that can take preference over it. The mortgage house watches the records and sees that the farmer-borrower pays his taxes as they become due.

It is preferable that the farm be in the hands of the owner, rather than a tenant. If the property is the borrower's home, he has an added incentive to take care of his obligations. The moral hazard, the character of the borrower, is also an item worth considering. If he is shiftless and incompetent, he will neither make money for himself nor to pay his indebtedness. On the other hand, the progressive, industrious farmer is prosperous, dependable and prompt pay.

Accompanying each mortgage loan is a sworn statement by the borrower, describing his property and telling for what he intends using the money. Usually also a detailed description or report is prepared by the mortgage company. It has ample facilities for investigation, and each loan is personally inspected and the borrowers investigated. From these facts the investor can obtain a fair idea of the security behind the mortgage and the conditions surrounding the loan. If care has been used in the selection of the agency one can depend on its statement of facts.

Thousands of people all over the country are investing their funds in mortgages in this way through correspondence.

South Dakota Loans Are in Demand

BY G. W. HART
President Merchan s' Bank

PROBABLY no problem is more serious to the average investor than the question of the investing of savings, or other funds, so as to bring the maximum interest return combined with absolute safety. On account of the very satisfactory interest rate, 5½ and 6 per cent, investors are rapidly turning toward South Dakota for high-grade farm mortgages, and nowhere in the Northwest can more attractive loans be obtained than from eastern and central South Dakota, where the soil is very fertile and climatic conditions favorable. If carefully selected through a competent and reliable local broker, investments may be obtained which will not be affected by panic, adverse legislation or stock market fluctuations, with prompt payment of interest and principal assured.

G. W. Hart

South Dakota is a wonderful state, with broad, fertile prairies that are being rapidly settled by thrifty and desirable young farmers from Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa and from its own eastern counties. Land values are stable and show a noticeable tendency to advance steadily, a result of a constant demand from home, as well as from eastern buyers. Many of the farm mortgages offered are to thrifty South Dakota farmers who have succeeded beyond their expectations and borrow to make the first payment on an adjoining quarter section of land.

With a steadily increasing demand for farm

INVESTMENT SERVICE

Our farm mortgage investment service to customers means the careful supervision of every piece of property offered as security for farm loans, until interest and principal have been paid in full. It also means

1st. That every farm has been inspected by an impartial examiner.
2nd. That we guarantee the title to every piece of land securing our farm mortgages.
3rd. That we collect and remit principal and interest without charge.
4th. That we investigate the records each year to see that taxes are paid on land covered by our mortgages.
5th. That we attend to the renewal of insurance policies when necessary.

We make no charge to the investor for this service.

Write for our list of farm mortgages.

R. C. KITTEL & CO.
Casselton, :: North Dakota

FARM MORTGAGES bearing 6% interest, first liens on improved farms. Original papers held by the investor. Principal and interest GUARANTEED; interest payable at the Hanover National Bank, New York. Thousands of satisfied customers for references. We've been doing the same thing for TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS

The W. C. Belcher Land Mortgage Co.
Capital $320,000.00.
Fort Worth. - - Texas

FIRST MORTGAGE FARM LOANS

6% We offer only select first mortgages on improved Northeastern Oklahoma farms at 40% value of farm. Interest collected semi-annually and remitted investor without charge. SEND FOR BOOKLET. 6%

PARKER-WISE INVESTMENT CO.
VINITA, OKLAHOMA

3% or 7%

WHICH DO YOU GET FOR YOUR MONEY?

Savings Banks pay 3%. Farm Mortgages yield you 7% secured by never failing wheat land in Eastern Washington. Security double the amount of the loan. Mortgage and notes signed by farmer and wife. Abstract certified to by responsible Attorney. Nothing safer. Write me for particulars and references.

B. F. CULP, P. O. Box 493
Walla Walla, Washington

7% FARM MORTGAGES 8%

Title guaranteed. On choice farms in Panhandle and fertile valleys of Eastern New Mexico. No loan made for more than thirty per cent of value, nor closed until examined and approved by our experienced examiner who is an officer of Company. We collect and remit interest free. Larger loans drawn to net investors 7 per cent; small ones, 8 per cent. Write for sample application, references, etc.

The Union Mortgage Company, Clovis, New Mexico

6% NET GUARANTEED AS WELL AS BACKED BY 20 YEARS OF SUCCESS

Farm Mortgages sold by us net six per cent, and we guarantee their payment. Interest remitted the day due. Write today for booklet and references and ask your local banker to investigate us.

BROAD & BOMAR, Bankers, Ft. Worth, Tex.

TIME TESTED, PANIC PROOF

THE FARM MORTGAGE

When your money is invested in high grade First Farm Mortgages you need have no worry either as to your principal or your interest The improved farm cannot be affected by business depressions, fire or other accidents. I sell my loans to insurance companies, trustees of estates and individuals. Write today for my interesting booklet C.

Best of References Given on Request

GEO. R. FISH, Investment Banker
ARDMORE, OKLAHOMA

M. P. MÖLLER PIPE ORGANS

Builder of the large electric organs in Euclid Avenue Presbyterian Church, Cleveland, Ohio (2 organs); Russell Sage Memorial Presbyterian Church, Far Rockaway, N.Y., and Bedford Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, N.Y.; the three-manual organs in Westminster Presbyterian Church. Detroit, Mich., Presbyterian Church, Mt. Vernon, Ohio, and instruments in almost 200 other Presbyterian Churches alone. Specifications and estimates on application. For catalogues and particulars,

Address, M. P. MÖLLER,
HAGERSTOWN, :: MARYLAND

products and the constantly decreasing area of desirable agricultural land for settlement, there seems to be but one direction in which land values can go. For this reason the security behind a farm mortgage is constantly growing better and there is a noticeable awakening to the safety and desirability of a high-grade farm mortgage for investment of funds of private investors, savings banks and estates. Life insurance companies have long recognized the fact that farm mortgages stand preeminent among investments yielding the highest return with absolute safety, and many of them have been very active in this field for several years. One of these has about $7,000,000 invested in South Dakota farm mortgages. The investments of other companies range from several million dollars to a few hundred thousand dollars, but we are informed that such investments are uniformly satisfactory and the amounts set aside for such investments steadily increasing. A few months ago one of the largest insurance companies, after a careful investigation of the fertility of South Dakota soil, climatic conditions and class of loans obtainable, entered the state for investments, and we are informed that still another such company contemplates the same step in the near future.

The experience, wisdom and judgment of successful business men having in charge the investing of the millions of assets of insurance companies should give to the small investor confidence in carefully selected farm mortgages that insure absolute safety and an interest return of 5½ to 6 per cent, as compared with 3 to 4 per cent from savings banks and 4 to 5 per cent from investments in high-grade bonds. The positive assurance that there will be no loss frŏm depreciation of property, but that the margin of security will steadily increase, and both interest and principal payment be promptly met as due, also favor this form of investment. Investors may feel sure of such investments if made through a reliable broker dealing in eastern and central South Dakota farm mortgages. They can have not only the application and all papers in connection with the loan, but also the confidential report of the examiner sent to inspect the property.

Rains have put the soil and subsoil in excellent condition, and without doubt prospects for small grain are the best in years and a very general optimistic feeling prevails all over the state. Farmers are paying more attention to diversified farming and are rapidly learning and following better farming methods, receiving much encouragement and aid from business men and the state agricultural college, the movement resulting in better-farming associations in many of the counties.

A Forward Step in Religious Education

The Board of Publication has made arrangement for organizing a new department and assembling under it all the work of religious education now being done in the various departments of the board. This will result in unification out of which will come plans and textbooks that cannot fail to be of service. Five years ago, in answer to numerous overtures, Assembly's special committee on religious education was appointed. After three years of earnest work the committee found that its duties had so enlarged that the Board of Publication was asked to carry on its work in view of the relations which the board already sustained to the education of the youth of the church. For two years the board and Assembly's committee worked together in this field. The last Assembly recognized the board as its agency for the supervision of the religious education of the youth of the church and instructed the board to organize a new department of religious education and take up and carry on this work.

Conference Opens with 180 Sermons

The world's Christian citizenship conference, with representatives from all the principal countries in the world, is to be in session in Portland, Ore., June 29 to July 6. It opens with 180 sermons by visiting ministers from this and other countries in various pulpits of the city. Ten commissions that have been engaged for a year or more in making thorough investigations are also to report, from a distinctive Christian viewpoint, on the great moral problems of the age—such as intemperance, Sabbath desecration, the social evil, Mormonism, child labor, prison reform, capital and labor, immigration, peace and public education.

Protect Your Boys and Girls

By enlisting in the American Civic Reform Union crusade against white slavery, intemperance, gambling, cigarettes, polygamy and other evils.

Over 500 girls become white slaves each week in the United States; 75 per cent of our young men have had venereal diseases; 1,500 boys begin smoking cigarettes each day; intemperance kills over 100,000 a year; 130 divorces are granted daily; 9,000 murders are committed each year, and a very small percentage of murderers are convicted; polygamy has been revived in Utah by the Mormons; and the police protect vice and crime in many cities.

We are reaching thousands of good citizens each month by lectures, literature, correspondence and interviews and enlisting them in the crusade to compel the enforcement of existing laws and to obtain better laws. Our workers are experts who know how to search out and expose the leaders of vice and crime.

WE ARE SAFEGUARDING THOUSANDS OF GIRLS AND WOMEN BY EXPOSING THE METHODS OF VICE PROMOTERS

Through our legal department in New York we are furnishing free legal advice to reform workers in all parts of the United States.

We furnish expert investigators for reform campaigns.

We are promoting new laws to prevent the marriage of diseased men and women; to close vice resorts by injunction; to prevent the sale of cigarettes to minors; to send Mormon polygamists to jail, and to put white slave traders in the penitentiary.

MEMBERSHIP

You are earnestly urged to join the Reform Union and thus aid in this great campaign for the conquest of vice. The membership fee is $2 per year. Members are entitled to special help in improving conditions in their own town, consisting of legal opinions, plans, information and suggestions such as can be furnished by experts in reform work.

You may also have your choice of one of the following books as part of your membership advantage:

"White Slavery," 100 pp., illustrated, by Ernest A. Bell.
"Guide to Sex Instruction," 266 pp., illustrated, by Prof. T. W. Shannon.
"Ways That Win in Church Finance," 121 pp., by Rev. A. S. Gregg.
"Perfect Manhood," 140 pp., illustrated, by Prof. T. W. Shannon.
"The Fool and His Money," 328 pp., illustrated, exposing gambling, by Harry Brolaski, for twenty years a gambler.
"Letters of an Apostate Mormon to His Son," illustrated, exposing Mormonism and polygamy, by Hans P. Freece.
Or an American flag, bunting, sewed stripes, 3x5 feet.

FREE ON REQUEST—A picture, post card size, showing President Smith of the Mormon Church, his five wives and thirty-five children.

Send $2 for your membership fee and 50 cents for a year's subscription to "The American Searchlight," the Reform Union magazine. The book you indicate will be forwarded at once postpaid.

Describe conditions in your town and we will give you a plan for suppressing any evils that may exist.

Address AMERICAN CIVIC REFORM UNION
513 Caxton Building Rev. A. S. Cregg, Supt. Cleveland, Ohio

Again Honor Dr. and Mrs. Shaw

Chicago Church Extension Board's Testimonial Banquet a Representative Gathering—California's Greetings.

Dr. John Balcom Shaw and Mrs. Shaw, who go from Chicago to Los Angeles after their summer vacation, have been almost overwhelmed by the numerous testimonials tendered by their friends and associates. The dinner planned by the Chicago Church Extension Board and held at the Hotel La Salle, Chicago, June 19, was the crowning event. Two hundred people, representative of all departments of Chicago Presbyterianism, assembled to pay tribute to the guests of honor.

Among those participating in the program were Dr. E. H. Curtis, who presided; Dr. George N. Luccock, who succeeds Dr. Shaw as chairman of the Church Extension Board; Hon. John F. Voigt, Second church; Rev. George A. Kilbey, Christian Industrial League; Rev. Ernest A. Bell, Midnight mission; Mrs. H. H. Forsyth, Woman's Board of the Northwest, and President J. G. K. McClure, McCormick Seminary, all representing interests with which Dr. Shaw has been concerned. A brief but eloquent address by Dr. E. P. Hill, superintendent of church extension, was the last of a remarkable series of speeches. The closing prayer was offered by Rev. James Frothingham, Chicago Presbytery's veteran stated clerk.

Only a few of the messages from those unable to attend were read by Dr. George B. Safford, who also presented resolutions adopted by the Church Extension Board. They included greetings from Dr. Keigwin, pastor of West End church, New York, which Dr. Shaw developed into a splendid work during his six-year pastorate; from the board of the Presbyterian hospital; from Moderator John Timothy Stone, now in Scotland, and from Immanuel church, Los Angeles. The letter from Los Angeles was eloquent in its assertion of the great field awaiting Dr. Shaw there. At the suggestion of Dr. Shaw a return greeting was cabled Dr. Stone. The excellent Second church quartet sang two selections during the evening.

It was of no little significance that, while the evening's expressions emphasized the wide range of Christian work in Chicago that will miss the efficient leadership of Dr. and Mrs. Shaw, the positive note predominated. Chicago believes that Dr. Shaw will give to the Pacific coast a religious leadership that will have nationwide influence, and that the share of his gracious wife in the good works of the coast will be no less notable than it has been in New York and Chicago.

Choice 6%, 7% and 8% Washington Securities

Why be satisfied with 6% when you can purchase seasoned and high-grade Municipal Bonds, Tacoma First Mortgages, Farm Mortgages, Farm Mortgage Bonds, yielding 6-8%, convenient denomination, readily convertible, largely purchased throughout the country by Private Investors, Insurance Companies and Trust Companies? Courteous attention given to small as well as large orders.

M. G. HENRY, Banker, Fidelity Bldg., :: Tacoma, Washington

A declaration in behalf of honest advertising

[Extracts from the address adopted by the Associated Advertising Clubs of America at Baltimore.]

We believe in Truth, the corner stone of all honorable and successful business, and we pledge ourselves each to one and one to all to make this the foundation of our dealings, to the end that our mutual relations may become still more harmonious and efficient.

We believe in Truth, not only in the printed word, but in every phase of business connected with the creation, publication and dissemination of advertising.

We believe there should be no double standard of morality involving buyer and seller of advertising or advertising material. Governmental agencies insist on "full weight" packages, and "full weight" circulation figures. They also should insist on "full weight" delivery in every commercial transaction involved in advertising. We believe that agents and advertisers should not issue copy containing manifestly exaggerated statements, slurs, or offensive matter of any kind, and that no such statements should be given publicity. . . .

We believe that the elimination of sharp practices on the part of both buyer and seller of advertising and advertising material will result from the closer relationship that is being established, and that, in place of minor antagonisms, will come personal cooperation to the increased profit of all concerned, and the uplifting of the great and growing business of advertising.

We believe in upholding the hands worthy to be upheld, and we believe that each and every member owes a duty to this association of enforcing the Code of Morals based on Truth in Advertising, and Truth and Integrity in all the functions pertaining thereto.

ADVERTISING AGENTS—W. C. D'Arcy, Chairman.

AGRICULTURAL PUBLICATIONS—T. W. Le Quatte, Chairman.

DIRECTORIES—W. H. Lee, Chairman.

GENERAL ADVERTISERS—Wm. H. Ingersoll, Chairman.

MAGAZINES—R. G. Cholmeley-Jones, Chairman.

NEWSPAPERS—A. G. Newmyer, Chairman.

OUTDOOR ADVERTISING—O. J. Gude, Chairman.

PRINTING AND ENGRAVING — H. H. Cooke, Chairman.

RELIGIOUS PRESS—W. J. McIndoe, of The Continent, Chairman.

RETAIL ADVERTISERS—M. M. Gilman, Chairman.

TECHNICAL PUBLICATIONS—H. M. Swetland, Chairman.

TRADE PRESS—Charles G. Phillips, Chairman.

SPECIALTY ADVERTISING—Lewellyn E. Pratt, Chairman.

The most desirable of all Monumental Productions
SMITH GRANITE MONUMENTS
Our booklets, sent on request, will tell you why.
THE SMITH GRANITE CO., Westerly, R. I.

Theological Seminaries

THE SAN FRANCISCO
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
SAN ANSELMO, CALIFORNIA
OPENS SEPTEMBER 17th.

Located in one of the most beautiful suburbs of San Francisco, the city of the Panama Pacific Exposition in 1915.

Offers a complete theological curriculum, including English Bible, Missions, Religious Pedagogy, Sunday School Work, and Christian Sociology. A large range of electives. Address

President WARREN H. LANDON, D.D.

Half English, Half Foreign

American Tract Society's Free Distribution of Literature Reaches Both Native-Born and Immigrant—Italian Hymnal Ready.

The American Tract Society at its eighty-eighth annual meeting reported the distribution within the past year of a million and a half copies of Christian books and tracts in English and an equal number in foreign languages. The colporteurs of the society at Ellis island in New York harbor and at the port of Boston distributed to incoming immigrants Christian literature in thirty-three languages and dialects. A new Italian hymnal which was in preparation for more than two years is now being distributed and is expected to come into immediate use in all the evangelical Italian churches of the country. A new Spanish hymnal, which has been prepared by an interdenominational committee in the City of Mexico, is now in press and it will be ready for circulation in the coming year.

The literature which the society has put out free of cost within the year past is valued at approximately $20,000, and besides that it has appropriated $5,000 in cash to mission agencies in foreign lands for the preparation of Christian reading matter in the native vernacular. The Tract Society has now had a history of nearly ninety years, and in that time its free distributions have amounted to over $3,500,000.

The annual meeting reelected William Phillips Hall and Dr. John Henry Jowett as president and vice-president respectively, and President Woodrow Wilson and Governor Simeon E. Baldwin of Connecticut honorary presidents. The efforts of the general secretary, Dr. Judson Swift, to raise $500,000 toward reducing the mortgage on the Tract Society's skyscraper building in Nassau street, New York, were heartily commended by the annual meeting, since any reduction on the mortgage is equivalent to an increase of endowment which will extend the society's benevolent operations still further.

Motley Throng Hears Gospel

Noon Meetings in the Metropolis Attract Many—Wilbur Chapman in New York City—Warn Against Cigarette.

NEW YORK—'Twas the hottest June 16 in twenty-two years, so the paper said. And yet at noon, with the sun blazing down upon them, a crowd of men—and not a few women—stood in Union square for nearly an hour listening to song and exhortation and simple presentation of gospel truth at one of the daily meeting of the evangelistic committee of New York City. 'Tis a motley crowd that assembles there—an old Hebrew with long untrimmed whiskers stands unflinching as the speaker talks of Christ and Calvary; at his elbow a teamster in overalls, near by a young man in fashionable clothes, and an Italian woman, with head unprotected from the sun, dragging by the hand two small children; here stands a white-haired American woman, hatless, with raised umbrella; close to the speaker's platform a young mother with a lusty youngster in her arms remains as if glued to the spot. The minister preaches of a crucified Christ; there are hymns, then exhortation, and at the close hands are raised here and there for prayer—one, two, three, many, too many to count—and the meeting ends with prayer for all, and especially for those who have confessed their need of a Saviour.

An hour later much the same scene is enacted at Madison square. And downtown on Cedar street and at Bowling Green, and over on 10th avenue and 39th street, and near many shops in various parts of the city, the same "old, old story" is being told to eager groups of listeners of all ages and conditions.

HUNT NEW BOARD SECRETARY

The Board of Church Erection has appointed a committee to choose a new secretary in succession to Dr. Duncan J. McMillan. Dr. John S. Zelie, pastor of Crescent Avenue church of Plainfield, N. J., is chairman. It is known that Rev. William T. Jaquess of Detroit will be one of the possibilities first considered.

Rev. P. E. Erickson, assistant pastor of Fourth church, is president of the West Side Sunday School Association, and in appreciation of his service the association has paid his way

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

ILLUSTRATE YOUR SERMONS
Pastors! Write for Our Special Stereopticon Offer.
Detroit Stereopticon Supply Co., Detroit, Mich.

PEWS-PULPITS-S-S-SEATING
Write Today for Our "Catalog B /"
Authoritative Guide on Church Seating; valuable suggestions on designs, finishes, seating plans, etc. Send Floor Plan and state fully your requirements
Blackboards, School Supplies, Catalog B1
School Desks, Catalog B2
American Seating Company
218 S. WABASH AV. CHICAGO NEW YORK, BOSTON, PHILADELPHIA

HALLOWED HYMNS NEW and OLD
$25 per 100, not prepaid. 35 cents per copy by mail.
Returnable samples mailed to prospective purchasers.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York or Chicago

CHURCH PEWS
AND PULPIT FURNITURE
Globe Furniture Co., Ltd., 10 Park Place, Northville, Mich.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 28
THE C. S. BELL Co. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

MENEELY BELL CO
TROY, N.Y. AND
177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY.
BELLS

BELLS, PEALS, CHIMES
Send for catalog. Our bells made only of the best selected Copper and East India Tin. Famous for full rich tones, volume and durability. Guaranteed.
E. W. VANDUZEN CO., Prop'r Buckeye Bell Foundry (Established 1837). 559 E. Second St., CINCINNATI, O.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

CHURCH SEATING
HANEY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
"Noiseless" Cushioned Trays with a new Short Glass. Trays interlock. All glasses well spaced. Outfits sent on trial.
DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
20 East Randolph St., Dept. J2, CHICAGO.

George Kilgen & Son
BUILDERS OF HIGH GRADE
PIPE ORGANS
Best of References. ST. LOUIS, MO. Correspondence Solicited.

WEDDING INVITATION ANNOUNCEMENTS CALLING CARD FINE STATIONERY
Send for Samples
S. D. CHILDS & CO., 200 CLARK ST., CHICAG

Attractive Sunday Evening
With McIntosh illustrated sermons. Write for catalo
McIntosh Stereopticon Co.
37 Randolph Street :: Chicago, Illino

The Internationa
The most practical Com munion Service made.
Write us.
The International Churc
Supply Co.
3 Clinton Bldg, Columbus,

The Best Way
The use of the INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE has increased the attendance at the Lord's Supper in thousands of churches. It will do so for your church. Send for illustrated price list.
INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
107-109-111 S. Wabash Ave. Chicago

CHURCH FURNITURE
Chairs, Pulpits, Pews, Altars, Desks, Tables, Book Racks, Etc., direct from our factory to your church at wholesale prices. Ask for catalog 198-51
State fully your requirements and send floor plan.
DeMoulin Bros. & Co., Dept. 51, Greenville, Ill.

as a delegate to the world's Sunday school convention in Zurich.

West End church under the guidance of Dr. Keígwin has taken a leadership in the movement for eugenics which is attracting considerable public attention. A recent Sunday evening platform meeting on this theme was greeted with an exceptionally attentive audience.

A number of New York Sunday schools accepted the designation of Sunday, June 22, as anticigarette day, and gave some instruction to their pupils as to the harm of smoking cigarettes.

The feeling that reports as to the doctrinal soundness of the young men recently ordained to the ministry have been misrepresentative of true conditions has led New York Presbytery to appoint a committee to prepare a statement of the true state of the case. In pursuance of the resolutions offered and passed, Doctors E. W. Work, J. H. Jowett, George Alexander, and Messrs. F. A. Booth and T. W. Morris were appointed a committee to issue such a statement.

Will Confer at Olivet Camp

Discussion of Church Problems July 21-26—Begin Work on Addition to First Church Soon - Opportunity for Christian Women.

CHICAGO—The first conference to consider the church as a whole at Lake Geneva has been called for July 21-26 at Olivet camp, with Rev. N. B. Barr of Olivet Institute as presiding officer. Two addresses will be made each morning of the week by pastors of Chicago and elsewhere. Among the subjects to be discussed are "The Church and the City," the young people's problem and the spirit and method of the institutional church. Other subjects will deal with music, athletics, finances and the social message of the church. Among the speakers are Rev. D. D. Vaughn, Rev. B. F. Aldrich, Rev. F. L. Anderson, Dr. R. D. Scott and Rev. F. J. Martin.

A tablet in memory of Miss Wing, long a Sunday school teacher and a founder of the Adult Bible class movement, was unveiled in Third church last Sunday. Dr. Hardin, pastor, and Dr. G. L. Robinson had parts in the service.

Contracts were let this week for the remodeling of First church to add a gymnasium and lecture room to the west end of the building in addition to other changes. The work will cost $80,000. Dr. W. C. Covert, pastor, and his family are now occupying the new manse, next to the church, at 4108 Grand boulevard.

Special services were held in Edgewater church last Sunday evening in the nature of a farewell to Miss Elizabeth Logan, who will take up home mission work in Kentucky, and Miss York, who goes under the board to Guatemala to found a nurses' training school in Guatemala City. This accession to the mission forces is in addition to several other members of Edgewater church who are in mission or Christian association work.

A special train of Christian Endeavorers will leave Chicago July 3 for Los Angeles by way of Colorado to the international convention. Extensive plans have been made to capture the convention for this city in 1915 and the Chicago officers have received the cordial assistance of the Association of Commerce. The annual outing of the local union will be held June 28, the trip being by boat to Kenosha at 2 o'clock.

The campaign for members of the Wabash Avenue branch of the Y. M. C. A., the new building for colored men and boys, is progressing. Last Thursday the boys' rooms were opened with a special program.

It is announced by the organizer of the United Societies, the Chicago organization ready to take the part of the liquor element, that the women of the state are to be organized in a manner similar to the men's societies. They will be expected to vote along "liberal" lines. It has been suggested that the duty to vote will put a large obligation upon church women.

The gospel tent which has been put in the field by the Church Federation Council has had a very successful three weeks' campaign at the corner of 61st street and Vincennes avenue. This week the tent moves to Lawndale district, where five churches unite, including Millard Avenue Presbyterian, of which Rev. B. G. Jackson was installed pastor June 25.

Alumni Pledge Balance Needed

Washington and Jefferson College Gets Big Endowment—Jeanette Dedicates New Church—Citizenship Conference Speakers Preach.

PITTSBURG—At a special meeting of the alumni of Washington and Jefferson College, in connection with commencement exercises June 18, it was announced that the $500,000 endowment had been obtained. There was still $40,000 needed to secure the $100,000 from the Rockefeller fund, and 400 of the alumni agreed to give that amount. A telegram was sent by the trustees to the state legislature declining state aid for the college. The degree of LL. D. was conferred on Vice-President Thomas R. Marshall, Judge S. L. Mestrezat of the Pennsylvania supreme bench, Andrew A. Adams of Indianapolis, chief justice of the appellate division of the supreme court of Indiana, and Dr. Watson McMillan Hayes, president of Shantung University, China.

Several of the speakers at the world's Christian citizenship conference, Portland, Ore., stopped off in Pittsburg and spent a few days visiting the city. Dr. Armeaug Haigazian of Konia was the guest of Dr. J. T. McCrory and preached in Eighth Street Reformed church in the morning and in Third church in the evening. Dr. Charles Merle D'Aubigne of Paris, secretary of the Central Society of Evangelization of France, and pastor of the Neuilly Reformed church in Paris, was the guest of Chancellor S. B. McCormick and delivered the address to the graduating class of the University of Pittsburg June 18.

First church of Jeannette dedicated a $37,000 church building June 15. The sermon was preached by Dr. James H. Snowden. A fraternal meeting was held in the afternoon and pastors from Greensburg, Irwin and Jeanette brought greetings. On dedication Sunday $10,000 was raised by the pastor, Dr. W. L. McClure, leaving an indebtedness of $9,000. Two weeks' services are being held leading up to communion. Dr. McClure has been pastor for nearly ten years. P. W. SNYDER.

Seattle Shows Big Advances

New Church for Colored People—Want Assembly in 1915 — Survey of Western Part of State Is Thorough.

SEATTLE—This presbytery comprises five counties on Puget sound. Seattle is the center of Presbyterianism in a large territory. There has been a steady growth in members and strength and influence in Seattle Presbytery for several years—there being at present on the roll the names of sixty-eight ministers, with a church membership of 8,500 and a Sunday school membership of 6,500. At a meeting June 9 Dr. M. A. Matthews made his report of the Atlanta Assembly, which was received with cheers. Presbytery voted unanimously and enthusiastically to indorse the action of voting section 22 of the last Assembly in inviting the Assembly of 1915 to meet in Seattle.

Great strides have been made in church extension the past year. Grace church was organized in December with fifty-five charter members. There are now over seventy members, and steps have been taken to obtain a lot for building purposes. E. A. Johnson, D. D., of Wilmington, Del., is the leader of this church among the colored people.

There is a move on foot to unite Lake Union church with Wallingford mission—the latter a branch of First church. There are now over 125 names for membership on the petition, about equally divided between the two churches. A lot has been selected and money raised to secure it and a committee is appointed to work out all the details of the organization.

Rev. Frank Edgar Mason, recently graduated from Princeton Seminary, is taking up a new field assigned to Presbyterians by the council at Port Angeles in Clallam county. A petition for the organization of a church with twenty-five members and a subscription of $500 on the field are already secured and a flourishing Sunday school is doing effective work.

The Home Missions Council of western Washington is doing an important work. Reports have been obtained from over 1,100 school districts and these places have all been apportioned to the care of the denomination best able to handle them. W. O. FORBES.

PRESBYTERIAN TRAINING SCHOOL
of Chicago
for Christian Workers
Organized in 1908 by the Board of Church Extension of the Presbytery of Chicago

Don't miss that line "for Christian Workers." That's what the Presbyterian School is for—to train Christion Workers.

A Christian Worker is one who works for Christ.

Personal acquaintance with Him and such admiration for His plans and ambitions as lead to a passion to help Him, to work for Him and under His guidance, must be the result of our training or we fail.

A Church Worker is one who works for the Church.

If we send out only those who can do the work of the Church, or whose ambition it is to work for the Church, our product is not all it ought to be.

To equip Christian workers who shall bring to the pastor's aid knowledge of methods and ability to handle and put people to work is part of the task of the Presbyterian Training School.

We want to correspond with women whom God is inclining to take up such work and with people who want to help them.

Address H. B. McAFEE, Director
210 East 50th Street
Chicago, Ill.

Present Day Theology
By
WASHINGTON GLADDEN

A BOOK FOR THE PEOPLE

God and Man
Sin and Salvation
The Incarnation
Forgiveness
Nature and the Supernatural
Heaven and Hell
The Atonement
The Life Everlasting

Cloth $1.00 Postage 10 cents

Sold at all Bookstores

McCLELLAND & CO., COLUMBUS, OHIO

YOU CAN REACH THE PEOPLE'S HEARTS THROUGH SONGS!
Use the best, they cost no more and you will get better results with the same effort.
GREAT REVIVAL HYMNS
Arouse intense interest and enthusiasm. That's why your church can adopt no better collection. Let us send you a copy, postpaid, for examination.
THE RODEHEAVER COMPANY
Publishers of Songs for Men, Chorus Collection, Solos, Duets, etc.
12-14 W. Washington St., :: CHICAGO

Mineral Baths

PERMANENT RELIEF FROM RHEUMATISM
AND A SPLENDID PLACE TO
REST AND RECUPERATE

Mr. Rader Is Near Break-Down

Resigns from Largest Church in San Francisco —Plan Renewed Sunday School Activity—Bible College Successful.

SAN FRANCISCO—The most surprising news in religious circles of the bay cities for a long while is the announcement of the resignation of Rev. William Rader from the pastorate of Calvary church to take effect Aug. 1. Mr. Rader has been pastor of Calvary for six years. He has held other pastorates here and in Oakland. He has preached in theaters and edited newspapers and taken a leading part in settling labor and graft disputes. He addresses a thousand people every Sunday from the pulpit of Calvary church, which is the largest Presbyterian church in San Francisco, and recently was selected for General Assembly's accommodation when plans were on foot to invite that body for 1915. Although still in the later forties, Mr. Rader has been feeling the physical and nervous strain of his strong leadership, and during the last few months has received several premonitions of nervous breakdown. He was taken seriously ill on the eve of the last communion and Dr. Hugh Gilchrist occupied his pulpit on that occasion. Since then his pulpit has been supplied. Presbytery has been called for June 30, when the action of the congregation, which met June 25, will be considered. It is presumed that after a long rest Mr. Rader will be able to resume work.

Presbytery has asked the Board of Sabbath School Work to appoint a Sunday school missionary for San Francisco.

The first year of the San Francisco Bible College closed June 16. President Hugh W. Gilchrist, D. D., presided at a first commencement, where all the classes were represented. Over 100 students have taken courses the first year. The faculty numbers seven.

Work of the Boards Remembered

Many Bequests by Colton Will—Pastor Opens Downtown Office to Give Free Advice and Counsel to the Troubled.

PHILADELPHIA—The late J. Milton Colton of Abington left bequests totaling about $250,000 to religious causes. On a four-acre lot opposite the Presbyterian church and old York road, donated by him, is to be erected a Y. M. C. A. building at a cost not to exceed $30,000. Young women are to share in its use and a room set apart for the use of women interested in the welfare of Abington. A fund is left the trustees of the church, the income to be used in the employment of a janitor, who shall keep the church open each day for meditation and prayer. Other parts of the bequest go to the Presbyterian Orphanage for maintenance and repair of the "Colton Memorial cottage"; to the Presbyterian Home for Widows and Single Women for maintaining the "Roberts Memorial annex"; to the trustees of Philadelphia North Presbytery for missionary work among foreigners, with special reference to the Italian work in Germantown, and to the Boards of Foreign and Home Missions to pay the salaries of missionaries, Relief of Disabled Ministers, Publication and Sabbath School Work and temperance.

Rev. Zed H. Copp, pastor of Cohocksink church, has announced his intention to establish a bureau in an office building in the center of the city, to which he will invite those having various troubles and difficulties to come and make them known and obtain free counsel and advice. Prior to coming to this city, in Washington, D. C., he made a similar experiment.

A movement to enforce Sunday closing of stores has been organized by pastors of Protestant denominations in the southern part of the city where the population is largely foreign-born. The ministers will also seek the cooperation of undertakers in an effort to do away with Sunday funerals.

Lafayette College has conferred the degree of LL. D. upon Cheesman A. Herrick, an elder in Mount Airy church and president of Girard College.

At the commencement of the Berean Manual Training and Industrial School Dr. Matthew Anderson principal, the address was by Dr. John Dixon, secretary of the Board of Home Missions, New York. There were also brief addresses by Doctors L. Y. Graham and F. J. Collier.

W. P. WHITE.

From Various Fields

New Jersey

Dr. James McLeod will lay down his pastorate at Cape May with the summer season. He has spent forty-five years in the ministry.

Efforts are being made to extend the mission work among colored people of Atlantic City. West Jersey Presbytery at its recent meeting commended this activity.

Dr. D. W. Lusk of Newark has been asked to become superintendent to missions of New Jersey. For the past three years he has been superintendent of the extension work of Newark Presbytery.

James F. Riggs, Jr., was ordained to the ministry June 19 in Brick church, Orange, where his father has been pastor for many years. The sermon was preached by Dr. Charles C. Albertson of Lafayette Avenue church, Brooklyn, where the young minister has been called to serve as assistant. Other parts of the ordination were taken by the father's copresbyters and pastoral neighbors.

Iowa

Dr. E. A. Bess, for several years pastor of First church, Clinton, will become university pastor at Iowa City this fall. Dr. Bess has been chairman of synod committee on education and is a trustee in Lenox College and president of the board of Dubuque German College and Seminary. Iowa City church is being enlarged to afford facilities for work among the university students.

Dedication of Cross Lanes church, near Bernhart, occurred June 22 under the direction of Dr. J. F. Hinkhouse. Among those who took part in the program, which was divided into services morning, afternoon and evening, were Rev. Scott W. Smith, Cedar Rapids; Rev. W. W. Montgomery, Fairfield; Rev. T. K. Holliday, Brookville, and Dr. A. R. Montgomery, Ottumwa. Music was furnished in the evening by a boys' band from Fairfield. This rural church has been built up to a large degree during the past year. Sunday school is held every week with preaching services every fortnight. The social life of the church is well organized and the edifice has been rebuilt.

Indiana

A number of former pastors of First church, Muncie, participated in the exercises incident to the seventy-fifth anniversary of the founding of the church June 11 to 15. Among the former ministers were Rev. George A. Beattie, Atlanta, Ga.; Dr. William Henry Oxtoby, Philadelphia; Rev. George A. Little, Alexandria; Rev. Frank H. Hays, Wabash, and Dr. Harry Noble Wilson, St. Paul, Minn. Former members who returned for the exercises included two sets of brothers, who are ministers: C. O. Shirey, Fort Wayne; N. Clifford Shirey, Kansas; W. E. Shirey, Chicago; W. B. Shirey, Carrollton, Ill.; S. W. Huffer, Portland, Ind., and Charles Huffer, Albion, Mich.

Washington

Plans are being made for the erection of a memorial monument to Dr. Henry H. Spaulding, the companion of Marcus Whitman to Oregon in 1837. Dr. Spaulding established six churches among the Nes Perces Indians. The synods of the Northwest will be asked to join in this memorial this fall. An account of some of the early activities of Dr. Spaulding by Rev. J. A. Laurie will appear in an early issue of The Continent.

TWO UNIT CHURCH

Complete Church

HARRY W. JONES
Minneapolis, Church Architect Minnesota.

The Winona Bible
CONFERENCE PROGRAM

includes William Jennings Bryan; Gipsy Smith and Campbell Morgan, who will both be present throughout the entire conference; Moderator John Timothy Stone, Dr. Mark Matthews, John Willis Baer, William E. Biederwolf, W. A. Sunday, Bishop Hughes, Dr. Hinson, Camden M. Cobern, Dr. Roberts, George R. Stuart, Dan Crawford, the noted African missionary, John Balcom Shaw, Marion Lawrance, and many other distinguished speakers. You will want to hear all of them.

Conference dates August 22 to 31
Assembly dates June 29 to August 21

Write for program and full information to

REV. SOL C. DICKEY, D. D., Director,
Winona Lake, Indiana

Away from the beaten track.
Come to the Adirondacks.

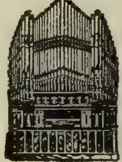
TAKE
The Delaware & Hudson
Gateway to a Summer Paradise.

"The D&H" Breathe the tonic air—air fragrant of spruce and balsam. Seek seclusion if you wish, or congenial company—or a combination of both. Give these beautiful mountains a chance to rest you—to invigorate you.

Hundreds of places to stay—charges to suit every inclination—all described in detail in one of the most practical books a summer tourist could possibly have. It is called "A Summer Paradise." Send six cents postage and a copy will be mailed to you.

A. A. HEARD, G. P. A., Albany, N. Y.

TRAVEL TO
THE C. E. CONVENTION
ON A SPECIAL TRAIN
Enjoy all the advantages of private cars, congenial companionship and freedom from responsibility at a
LOWER PRICE
than you must pay to travel with the crowds. Booklet with complete information from
THE REX TOURS, Marquette Building



PIPE AND REED ORGANS
AND PIANOS
Pure, sweet tone. Superior quality. Attractive styles. We sell direct at factory prices. Write, stating which catalog is desired.
HINNERS ORGAN CO., PEKIN, ILL.

Olivet Camp
REV. NORMAN B. BARR, :: Superintendent

A Presbyterian outing center. Beautifully situated on famous Lake Geneva. Tents and cottages for boarding and Housekeeping. Send for booklet to

J. M. HESTENES, Camp Manager
WILLIAMS BAY, :: WISCONSIN

Schools and Colleges Complete Year

H. Wallace Stevens of Metropolis, Ill., has been elected principal of Union Academy, Anna, Ill., following the resignation of F. W. McClusky, who goes to Blackburn College.

At the recent commencement of Syracuse University the degree of S. T. D. was conferred upon Rev. Albert C. Fulton of First church and upon Rev. Thomas Albert Fenton of Fourth church, Syracuse, N. Y.

Colorado, Arkansas, Iowa, Texas, Illinois and Missouri were among the states represented by the graduates of Forest Park University, St. Louis, Mo. The commencement exercises included musical and literary recitals by the graduates.

Coe College, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, graduated thirty-one on June 11. President Linn of Buena Vista College and Rev. W. A. Littell of First U. P. church, Paterson, N. J., received the degree of D. D. Colonel J. T. Darling of Chicago received the degree of LL. D. Dr. W. H. Wray Boyle of Lake Forest, Ill., gave the commencement address.

President Albert R. Hill of the University of Missouri delivered the commencement address at Wabash College. There were sixty-two graduates, the largest class ever graduated there. The class of 1862 held a reunion and one member who went to war before graduation received his B. A. this June, fifty-one years late.

Dr. Willis Edwards Parsons has resigned the presidency of Parsons College, Fairfield, Iowa, after nine years of successful work. During his administration five new buildings have been erected, $87,000 added to the endowment and nearly $100,000 more pledged. President Parsons's resignation came as a complete surprise and the trustees have urged him to retain his connection in some form with the college, but he has not yet announced his plans.

Commencement at Park College, Parkville, Mo., began June 15, with the baccalaureate address by President L. M. McAfee. President McAfee's service of thirty-three years to the college is closed with this commencement. He is the last of the sons of John A. McAfee, founder of the college, to leave the institution. The graduating class numbers forty-seven and is the largest in the history of the college. Two of the men go to China as teachers under the Foreign Board.

Commencement exercises at Muskingum College, New Concord, Ohio, concluded the most successful year in the history of the institution. The College Board has made plans for the raising during the year of a building and endowment fund of $300,000 in addition to the $100,000 which the president is raising for the erection and endowment of the Muskingum-Guernsey library. The graduating class this year numbers forty-nine, which is the largest in the history of the college. Five of these young people sail for foreign fields.

Carroll College has just closed the best year in its history. Commencement day exercises were of an unusually high order. The address was by Dr. Edgar P. Hill of Chicago. Degrees were given to twenty-four graduates and the honorary degree of D. D. was conferred upon Rev. T. S. Johnson of Beaver Dam, Wis., an alumnus of Carroll and for many years a trustee. The degree of LL. D. was conferred upon Dr. Hill. It is not often that this degree is conferred by the college and it was a complete surprise to Dr. Hill, whose son Howard was a member of the graduating class.

Commencement festivities at Milwaukee-Downer College began June 13, when thirty-two were graduated from Milwaukee-Downer Seminary. The program consisted of musical numbers and the reading of essays. Friday evening the graduating recital of the music department took place. The baccalaureate service was held at St. Paul's church Sunday evening, Rev. Holmes Whitmore preaching. The senior class presented a masque, "The Quest of Truth," written by a member of the class, Tuesday. That evening a banquet was given in honor of H. L. Chapman, who this year completes his twenty-fifth year as college treasurer. On commencement day Dr. Fred Newton Scott, professor of rhetoric at the University of Michigan, spoke on "Books That Wear and Books That Wear Out." The completion of the $10,000 lecture endowment fund raised by the Milwaukee-Downer Club was announced.

Occidental College graduated twenty-eight at the last commencement exercises to be held on the campus at Highland Park. The removal of the college to Eagle Rock will take place during the Christmas vacation. That date will complete twenty-five years of the life of this institution. Of the latest graduates thirteen have signified their intention to devote their lives to distinctively Christian work. The trustees announced the completion of the $500,000 quarter-centennial fund one month ahead of time and oversubscribed by $10,000. Another campaign for half a million was started three months ago. The degree of LL. D. was conferred on Rev. Robert J. Burdette and that of D. D. upon Rev. Joseph A. Stevenson, pastor at Santa Ana, Cal.

Half of the new endowment fund of $400,000 has been raised during the past year according to announcement by President John Scholte Nollen of Lake Forest College. In connection with the graduation exercises the degree of D. D. was conferred on Rev. Henry Marcotte, '93, pastor of Westminster church, Portland, Ore., and the degree LL. D. upon Rev. Clifford W. Barnes, president of the Chicago Sunday Evening Club. The graduation exercises of Lake Forest Academy and Ferry Hall were merged in part with those of the college. Dr. W. S. Plumer Bryan of Chicago addressed the graduates of Ferry Hall. Thirty-seven young men and women were graduated from the college.

Bellevue (Neb.) College June 6-11 graduated fourteen from the college of arts and scienes and twenty-two from the teachers' college and normal school. All of the principal addresses of the week were made by alumni. The baccalaureate sermon was by Rev. Charles F. Baskerville, '06, vice-president of the college. James Oastler, D. D., '97, of Milwaukee, Wis., delivered the commencement oration. Superintendent A. F. Fisher, '05, of the Aurora public schools; Theodore Morning, D. D., '96, of Independence, Iowa, and Rutherford R. McWhorter, '03, also took part. William Kirke Guthrie, San Francisco, Cal.; R. Cooper Bailey of Crookston, Minn., and Theodore Morning received the degree of D. D.

Clergy and Laity

Rev. David S. Tappan, Jr., of the Tainan mission, at home on furlough, may be addressed at Circleville, Ohio.

Professor Franklin W. Hoskins, the famous authority on Arabic from Syrian Protestant College at Beirut, has arrived in New York to spend his summer vacation in this country.

Bellevue College, Neb., honored Rev. R. Cooper Bailey, Ph. D., of Crookston, Minn., by conferring upon him the honor of D. D. Dr. Bailey was for many years identified with the work of Nebraska City Presbytery and left that state only last March.

It is announced from Japan that Rev. Daniel Crosby Greene, a missionary of long service in that country under the American Board, has been added to the list of Christian leaders who have been honored by the mikado with the Third Order of the Rising Sun. Mr. Greene receives this honor in spite of his having publicly criticised Japanese legal procedure as shown in the Korean trials and elsewhere.

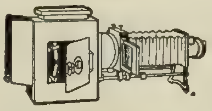
Dan Crawford, the English missionary to Africa, who, as The Continent recently stated, has attracted tremendous popular interest in Great Britain during the season just past, is planning to spend the autumn and early winter in America. W. R. Moody of East Northfield has charge of Mr. Crawford's time and is making dates for his missionary speeches. From America, about midwinter, Mr. Crawford will go to Australia, and then return to Africa.

Dr. Arthur Judson Brown of the Foreign Mission Board, who has been a doctor of divinity from Lake Forest College since 1891, received the degree anew this year at Yale University, along with Bishop Boyd Vincent of Ohio and Rev. Joseph Hopkins Twichell of Hartford, Conn. Dr. Twichell, like Albert Barnes, has repeatedly refused academic degrees, but retiring after a service of forty years in the Yale University board of trustees, could not prevent his former colleagues from giving him the honor against which he had so often protested. At the same commencement Yale made President John Grier Hibben of Princeton a doctor of laws. He likewise had had the same degree before, receiving it from Lafayette in 1907.

Religious Features at Chautauqua

Mrs. Helen B. Montgomery will be leader of the institute on foreign missions at Chautauqua, N. Y., July 28 to Aug. 2. This is one

"Give us tracts we can read" Poles and Bohemians at a Sunday baseball game in Chicago recently approached a worker distributing tracts printed in English and asked for religious literature in their own tongue. To reach people of other races who are ready to study Christianity, as well as to interest those who scoff, men are needed who speak the fatherland tongues. Training such men is the peculiar work of Dubuque German College and Seminary. The races of Europe and Asia and Spanish America are well represented in our student body. The Americans of tomorrow must be Christianized. Will you show your interest in this problem by asking us for details of our work? Address Dubuque German College and Seminary. C. M. Steffens, D D., President, Dubuque, Ia



For Sale or Rent. Get our Summer Offer. Stereopticons and Magic Lanterns. new and second hand, at reasonable prices on monthly payments. Large stock of attractive religious and other lecture sets to rent.
C. M. STEBBINS, 1028 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.

OPEN AIR
Exhibition

STEREOPTICONS
A Great Soul-Winning Campaign for the Summer Months. Indoors or outdoors.
The Christian Lantern Slide & Lecture Bureau
30 W. LAKE ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

SLIDE RENTING. STEREOPTICONS. NEW METHOD & SUBJECTS. CHURCHES REDUCED RATES.
MOORE-HUBBELL & CO. 713 MASONIC TEMPLE · CHICAGO

WANTS AND HELPS

Rates for classified advertising, Three Cents a Word, including the address. If desired a "box" address may be used, responses being sent to THE CONTINENT and forwarded to advertiser.

CASH MUST ACCOMPANY ORDER

MISCELLANEOUS

TEN MINUTES AND LESS THAN FOUR CENTS WILL bring good returns if you invest them in a letter giving the names and addresses of men and boys who have come to Chicago to live. The Presbyterian Brotherhood will be the connecting link between them and the nearest church. Write to Dr. Francis M. Fox, 509 S. Wabash ave., Chicago.

ORGANIST DESIRES POSITION. LOCAL SINGERS developed for choir. Good salary. Address A, care of Continent.

LADY OF EXPERIENCE DESIRES POSITION AS church worker. City preferred. "W," The Continent, 156 Fifth ave., New York City.

REAL ESTATE

FOR SALE—ARKANSAS BARGAIN; 98½-ACRE FARM, 3 miles from R. R. town: 20 acres in cultivation, more tillable; a lot of merchantable timber; small orchard; 2-room house, barn, well, etc.; worth 15 per acre; $6 per acre cash buys it now; no trades. Ringland, McAlester, Okla.

HEALTH RESORTS

PENNOYER SANITARIUM (ESTABLISHED 1857), Chicago suburb, Northwestern Railway. Grounds (100 acres) fronting Lake Michigan. Modern, homelike. For rest, recreation, treatment. Booklet. Address Pennoyer Sanitarium, Kenosha, Wis.

of the institutes which will be held in connection with the assembly this summer. The school of religion, with courses in Bible, church history, Sunday school and religious education, will be held July 7 to Aug. 15. An institute for ministers and Christian workers will follow Aug. 17-23.

There will also be conferences on home missions and other phases of religious work. Among the speakers who will be present are Moderator John Timothy Stone, Bishop Vincent, Dean Shailer Mathews, Rev. A. C. Hill of London, Professor Graham Taylor, Dr. G. Campbell Morgan and Rev. Charles Stelzle.

Calendar and Record

Presbytery Meetings

Logansport—Brookston, July 2, 3 p. m.

Ordinations

Otsego—C. C. Bransby, June 12.
San Francisco—D. S. Davis.
Sioux Falls—George C. Sprague.

Resignations

Florida—St. Augustine: Alfred S. Badger.
Illinois—Danville: Jon A. Ward.
Iowa—Bellevue: F. W. Weatherwax.
Kansas—Concordia: J. G. Hilton.
Kentucky—Paducah Kentucky Avenue: W. G. Lang.
Missouri—Tarkio: S. B. Alderson.
Ohio—Zanesville Forest Avenue: Theodore Crowl; Xenia: C. G. Martin; West Carrolton: M. R. Baer.
Pennsylvania—Sharpsville: T. L. Rynder; Bedford: R. W. Illingworth.

Calls

California—Tomales: D. S. Davis.
Colorado—Ignacio: A. J. Rodriguez.
Florida—St. Augustine Flagler Memorial: B. B. Bigler, Racine, Wis.
Illinois—Peoria First: David E. Williamson, Rockford; Earlville: Robert R. Gyles; Metropolis: J. D. Harley.
Indiana—Kendallville; M. P. V. Yeaman, Harrodsburg, Ky.
Iowa—Wapello: C. W. Sydman, La Harpe, Kan.; Bloomfield: F. W. Weatherwax, Bellevue.
Kansas—Wichita West Side: Frank Burns, Florida, N. Y.
Kentucky—Madisonville: J. F. Schieffelin.
Minnesota—Kirkhoven and Murdock: G. A. Halzinger, Hinckley.
Missouri—Grant City: N. M. Tatum.
Nebraska—Bridgeport: George F. McDougall, Orleans; Alexandria: George C. Kersten, Blue Hill.
New Jersey—Paterson Second: Hugh B. MacCauley; Woodbury Heights: George J. Becker.
New York—Albany West End: Louis Mayle, Grovesland.
Ohio—Plain City: T. L. Rynder, Sharpsville, Pa.
Texas—Lone Oak: R. C. Hartman; Grand Prairie: J. W. Willbanks.
Utah—Salt Lake City First: D. L. Edwards, Grand Junction, Colo.

Installations

Illinois—Metropolis: J. D. Harley, June 18; Cobden: E. Craven, June 4.
Missouri—St. Joseph Calvary: E. J. Nickerson, June 17.
New York—Margaretville: C. C. Bransby, June 12; Hamden: Harvey E. Kilmer, June 17.
Ohio—Worthington: W. B. Hindman, May 8; Hicksville: A. E. Stockham, June 17.
Washington—Spokane Fourth: C. R. Scafe, June 6.

Supplies Arranged

Ohio—Columbus Nelson Memorial: F. A. Wilber.

Vacant Pulpits

Iowa—Castle Grove: Rev. Scott W. Smith, Cedar Rapids.
Minnesota—Foley.
Missouri—Hopkins.

Accessions

California—Los Angeles Westlake, 10, June 1, W. D. Landis.
Idaho—Hollister, 5, June 8, D. J. Treiber.
Illinois—Chicago Endeavor, 35, June 15, Emmett P. Day.
Indiana—Hopewell, 12, June 15, J. B. Ferguson; Indianapolis Grace, 5, June 8, A. C. V. Skinner.
Iowa—Guthrie Center, 23, June 15, J. C. Orth.
Kansas—Holton, 13, June 15, S. A. Fulton; Belle Plaine, 12, Thomas Price.
Minnesota—Foley, 19, June 15, W. H. Kearns and T. M. Findley.
New York—Brooklyn Bay Ridge, 7, June 1, C. T. Edwards.
Ohio—Athens, 13, June 8, H. M. Thurlow; Springfield First, 43, June 8, George M. Rourke.
Oklahoma—Stroud, 6, May 11, E. F. S. Darby; Perry, 7, June 15, S. H. Parvin.
Pennsylvania—Philadelphia Richardson Memorial, 22, June 8, O. G. McDowell; Center 7 and North Liberty 11, Butler Presbytery, June 1, S. C. Ehler.
South Dakota—Plankinton, 5, May 25, E. Van Ruschen.
Washington—Larene, 5, June 15, F. Tonge.

Change of Address

Mealy, J. M.—Glenwillard to Sewickley, Pa.
Valdez, V.—Ranches of Taos to Taos, N. M.
Van Ruschen, Edward—White Lake to Plankinton, S. D.

Obituary

Death notices will be inserted at the rate of one cent a word. PAYMENT MUST BE SENT WITH THE NOTICE. Those who ask their pastor to write such notices should be careful to hand him the money to forward with the copy.

PATTERSON—James Ramsey Patterson, a Christian layman, philanthropist, and member of the Presbyterian church, died at his home in Oxford, Ohio, June 5. He was the son of Dr. A. O. and Marie Speer Patterson. His father and his maternal grandfather were ministers. He made public profession of his faith in Christ during his college life in 1857. He was graduated from Miami University in 1858, and also received the degree of LL.D., from that institution in 1912. He was appointed a trustee in the University in 1899, and continued in this official relation until the close of his life. He was a devoted and consistent Christian who ordered his life by the word of God, in which he fully and implicitly believed. He was a useful citizen, a loyal friend and a kind, lovable, courteous gentleman. He was generous in his gifts to many worthy causes, and was a true friend to his fellow men. The rich esteemed him, and the poor rise up and call him blessed. He never married. Two sisters, Miss Alice C. Patterson and Mrs. Virginia P. Bishop, are the survivors of his father's family. He lived and died Christianly, and will be long and greatly missed.

INDEX TO VOLUME XLIV

January 2 to June 26

Authors—
Anderson, Homer 180
Arnold, Frank R........ 17
Ballantine, W. G........ 523
Bates, Katharine Lee........ 895
Baxter, John H........ 284
Beard, Frederica........ 43
Beeman, Jean Mateer........ 432
Bennett, Martha........ 287
Berger, Emma V........ 828
Bingham, L. L........ 16
Bird, Charlotte........ 637
Bonar, Horatius........ 431
Bowman, Frances........ 49
Brainard, Maurice Wishard........ 432
Brodie, Andrew Melrose........ 355
Brooks, Jennie........ 863
Bruton, Grace........ 396
Byron, May........ 79
Camp, Pauline Frances........184, 496
Carson, William T........ 178
Cary, Alice........ 716
Cassell, John........ 178
Chambers, M. B........ 179
Christian, Margaret Rees........ 149
Clark, Herma N........429, 757
Colby, Fred Myron........ 253
Coleman, George W........ 426
Coleman, William Hoyt........ 179
Colson, Ethel........16, 183, 389, 465, 566
Cooke, William B........ 393
Covert, William C........ 247
Coyle, Robert Francis........ 490
Dale, Otis Grant........ 248
Day, Cora S........ 79
Denniston, Augustus........ 179
Dodd, Ira Seymour........ 754
Donaldson, John B........ 11
DuBois, Gussie Packard........ 392
Elliott, Dorothy........ 149
Ellis, William T........75, 144, 171, 249, 280, 321, 461, 563, 597, 672, 821
Ellis, Willis A........ 861
Eltzholtz, John W........ 44
Faris, Paul Patton........ 788
Fisher, Margaret Frances........ 404
Fiske, A. S........ 142
Foresman, Rebecca B........ 17
Foss, Sam Walter........ 113
Fox, Frances Margaret..80, 287, 496, 601, 678
Frank, Ruth Marian........ 637
Fraser, J. B........ 817
Gebhard, Elizabeth L........ 148
Gibbs, Jessie Wiseman........ 460
Gilder, Richard Watson........ 678
Gonzalez, Juan Ortz........ 524
Graves, Marian G........ 895
Grenfell, Wilfred T........390, 428
Hall, Frederick........ 466
Hardy, Mary Earle........ 717
Harmer, Frances........465, 678
Harrison, Margaret........ 156
Harsh, Griffith........ 149
Hartshorne, Cornelia Marjorie........ 397
Hawley, Helen A........ 48
Hayn, Marion E........ 864
Hill, Edgar P........ 459
Hillis, Mrs. Newell Dwight........320, 598
Holmes, Mabel Dodge........ 175
Holmes, Margaret........ 253
Holmes, Richard S........14, 46, 77, 111, 147, 180, 219, 251, 285, 322, 359, 394, 430, 464, 493, 529, 609, 680, 718, 758
Houghton, Louise Seymour........ 401
Howe, N. M........ 252
Huey, Maude Morrison........ 791
Hunter, Stanley A........ 77
Huntington, Helen F........ 864
Illinois Pastor, An........ 713
Jenkins, Hermon D........ 753
Jennings, W. Beatty........ 142
Jessup, Henry W........ 891
Johnson, Anne Porter........ 361
Johnston, Ruth Hall........ 896
Jowett, J. H........42, 107, 175, 246, 314, 389, 458, 523, 595, 670, 751, 858
Kirkwood, Edith Brown........531, 639
Knobel, Elizabeth........ 532
Leonard, Priscilla........ 789
Lewis, Gertrude Russell........ 286
Live Veteran, A........ 712
Livingstone, David 317
Loomis, May Brown........110, 600
Mahon, Anne Guilbert........ 431
Maust, Genevieve........ 397
McAfee, Cleland B........ 562
McAfee, J. Ernest........ 143
McClure, James G. K........ 74
McCrae, Lee........113, 360, 429, 829
McKelvy, Alex H........ 178
McSurely, Ella Glenn........ 790
McQuilkin, Harmon H........ 176
Merrill, William Pierson........10, 214, 354
Meulendyke, J........ 179
Milner, Duncan C........ 250
Montgomery, D. W........ 859
Montgomery, Helen Barrett........218, 527
Moore, Helen Ratcliffe........790, 827
Moore, Rebecca Deming........ 830
More, Helen G........ 397
Morris, Agnes W........ 178
Morris, R. H........ 42
Morse, Herman N........ 752
Ogilvie, Charles L........ 492
Packard, Winthrop........ 640
Palmer, Samuel S........ 562
Pardoe, Hiles C........ 180
Paterson, William P........ 318
Patterson, Ada........ 491
Phillips, Louise M........ 360
Pierce, Cora Banks........ 180
Price, Elizabeth........495, 756
Riley, James Whitcomb........ 361
Rippey, Sarah Cory........114, 253, 323, 466
Ross, G. A. Johnston........ 11
Russell, James Elmer........ 713
Safford, Elisha........ 754
Schaff, David S........ 565
Scollard, Clinton........ 465
Seelye-Miller, Rose........ 89
Sharpe, John........ 79
Shaw, Alexander........ 178
Shelley, Henry C........ 714
Shewmaker, W. O........ 635
Smith, Herbert H........45, 146, 787
Smith, Mary Randall........ 79
Smith, Nora Archibald........532, 567
Speer, Robert E........315, 89
Stelzle, Charles........281, 78
Stelzle, Hope Ingersoll........ 46
Stevenson, Robert M........ 59
Stone, John Timothy........279, 82
Thaxter, Celia........ 22
Urban, Alice........ 22

Underwood, John Curtis 495
vanDyke, Tertius 391
Verkuyl, Gerrit 12, 526
Ware, E. N. 539
Weston, Harriett 13
Wheeler, Kathryn C. 396, 717, 896
White, William P. 179, 725
Wicher, Edward A. 634
Wight, E. Van Dyke 727
Wilson, Calvin Dill 108
Winant, Ruth G. 324, 716
Wright, George W. 592
Young, S. Hall 215

Contributed Articles—

Abraham Lincoln and Liquor, Milner 250
According to God's Plans, Day 79
Advertising a City from Its Vice, Ellis 461
Against the Wind and Wave, Josyln 846
Alaskan "Mush" to Presbytery, Young 215
Alice and Her Bunnies, Griffith 149
"All Around America"—
  Yellowstone National Park 357
  Glacier National Park 525
  On the Top of Canadian Divide 823
Are You Doing York Part? McCrae 113
Are You Playing on Top of the Keys? Hillis 320
As Grandmother Would Have Wished it, Price 756
At the New York Capital, Denniston 179
Awaiting the Transforming Touch, Holmes 175
Beloved Memory of a Righteous Man, Speer 890
Benjy and Betty's Easter Plan 221
Benjy and Betty's Easter Plan—Prize Winning Endings 397
Betterment Through Kindliness, McCrae 429
Big Sister to a City's Girls, The, Smith 45
Black Uncle's Song Made a Preacher 638
Boy and the Near-Boy, Smith 532, 567
Boy I Know, A, Foresman 17
Bradford Horton, Man, Holmes 14, 46, 77, 111, 147, 180, 219, 251, 285, 322, 359, 394, 430, 464, 493, 529, 609, 680, 718, 758
Brightening Hospital Hours, Gebhard 148
Buddhist Finds a Heart of Peace, Faris 788
Buffalo Bill as Santa Claus, Brainard 432
Bunny and Bunnette, Ford 149
By Canoe in the Philippines 567
"Call" to Cut Stone, A 74
Canadian Presbyterians in Congress, Fraser 817
Can Rich and Poor Meet Together in Church? Stelzle 786
Can We Move God? Wicher 634
Cap'n Job's Surprise, Moore 830
Case of Government-Supported Sectarianism, Verkuyl 526
Case of Substitution, A, McSurely 790
Center for the Praying Group, A, By an Illinois Pastor 713
Change the Man First of All, Coyle 490
Child Gentleman a Man Failure? Kirkwood 639
City Laymen at Work on the Rural Problem, Verkuyl 12
Comrades—the Girl and Her Mother, Hillis 598
Contrast in Human Kind, A, McCrae 360
Cooperation in Ohio Town, Sharpe 790
Cosmopolitan Pastor at the Nation's Capital Ellis 75
Cosmopolite: His Service and His Religion, A, Ellis 821
Court of Peace, The, Gibbs 460
Devotion the Vital Thing, Stone 279
Earnestness, Benignity and Fairness, White 179
Easter Winds, The, Colson 389
Edith's Every-Day Book, Howe 252
Editor Who Commands the Battleships, Ellis 597
Efficiency in Service, Berger 246
Eleventh-Hour Celebration, An, Moore 790
Emily's "Bosom Sin," Johnston 896
Epidemic of Lay Preaching in Kansas, An, Brodie 355
"Extra Money" Versus the Sabbath of the Worker, Smith 787
Father Bird and the Chippies' Nest, Packard 640
Filipino Flagellantes of Passion Week, Cooke 393
Finding the Missionary Horse, Donaldson 11
For a Sunny Day, Harmer 678
Girl Burden-Bearers of India, Huntington 864
Glimpse of the Great Trial at Seoul, A 463
Godfather of an Idea, The, Smith 146
Gratitude of Spot, The, Hayn 864
Great in His Humbleness, Cassell 178
Helping Our Brother of the Mills, Wilson 108
Hero Exiles of the Purple Island, Eltzholtz 44
Hide-and-Seek, Knobel 532
"Holy War"; An Exploded Bugaboo, Ellis 249
How Bobbie Acted His Part, Bowman 49
How He Cheered an Invalid, McKelvy 178
How John Chinaman Has Turned About, Ogilvie 492
How People Can Make Preacher, Beatty 14
How Robert Got a Zebra, Lehners 679
How Runty Pig Got Even, Huey 791
How Rural Poverty Hurts the Church, Morse 752
How Toggles Made It Rain, Hall 466
How "Ze-Brah" Got Its Stripes, Bird 679
"I Am a Man of Thirty" 427
"If I Were in His Place——" Colson 16
Imperiled Christians of Turkey, The, Ellis 171
Influence of Political Life on Character, Palmer 562
Intermediate Catechism, The, Schaff 565
In the Douglas Debates, Carson 178
In the Footsteps of Francis Makemie, Ellis 672
In the Icy Sea—with God Near, Grenfell, 390, 428
In the Trying Days of '62, Chambers 179
"I Shall Open a Path . . . or Perish"—David Livingstone, 1813-1873, Speer 315
